BOURTON, a tything in the parish and hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Great Farringdon, containing 275 inhabitants.

BOURTON, a hamlet in the parish, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, 1½ mile (E.) from Buckingham, containing 50 inhabitants.

BOURTON, a chapelry in the parish and liberty of GILLINGHAM, Shaston (West) division of the county of DORSET, 2½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Mere, containing 813 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BOURTON (BLACK), a parish in the hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 5½ miles (S. S. E.) from Burford, containing 336 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BOURTON upon DUNSMOOR, a parish in the Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Dunchurch, containing, with the tything of Draycot, 322 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £19. 17. 3½., and in the patronage of J. Shuckburgh, Esq.

BOURTON (FLAX), county of SOMERSET.—See FLAX-BOURTON.

BOURTON (GREAT and LITTLE), a chapelry in that part of the parish of CROPREY which is in the hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (N.) from Banbury; containing 441 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael. A free school, in which upwards of thirty children are instructed, is endowed with land devised by Mr. Thomas Gill, in 1666, producing a net income of £23 per annum.

BOURTON on the HILL, a parish partly in the upper division of the hundred of TWEEKSBURY, and partly in the upper division of the hundred of WESTMINSTER, county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Moreton in the Marsh, containing 354 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Moreton in the Marsh annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of the Rev. Dr. Warneford. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. Sir Thomas Overbury, an ingenious writer in the reign of James I., who was poisoned whilst a prisoner in the Tower, was born here, in 1581.

BOURTON on the WATER, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S.S.W.) from Stow on the Wold, containing, with the chapelry of Clapton, 876 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Lower Slaughter annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £27. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of Robert Croome, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a modern edifice, having a tower at the western end, rising from a rustic basement, with Ionic pilasters at the angles, and surmounted by a balustrade, urns, and cupola; within the church is a colonnade of the Ionic order. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The Roman Fosse-way passes through the parish; and about a quarter of a mile from the village there is a square intrenchment, where coins, and other relics of the Romans, have been discovered; a paved aqueduct was formerly visible on one side of it.

BOURTONHOLD, a hamlet in the parish, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, containing 553 inhabitants.

BOUSTEAD-HILL, a township in the parish of BURGH upon the SANDS, ward and county of CUMBERLAND, 7½ miles (W. N.W.) from Carlisle, containing 80 inhabitants.

BOVENY (LOWER), a chapelry in the parish and hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (W.) from Eaton, containing, with Upper Boveny, 202 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

BOVERIDGE, or BEVERIDGE, a tything in the parish of CRANBORNE, in that part of the hundred of CRANBORNE which is in the Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 1½ mile (N.N.E.) from Cranborne, with which the population is returned. An almshouse for three persons has been founded and endowed here by some member of the family of Hooper, whose descendants retain the right of appointing the inmates; there is also a small stipend for a chaplain.

BOVEY (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of TEINGBRIDGE, county of DEVON, 1½ mile (S.W. by S.) from Moreton-Hampstead, containing 603 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £22. 10. 5., and in the patronage of T. Smith and J. Pidsley, Esqrs., surviving trustees of Viscount Courtenay. The church is dedicated to St. John. This place was formerly of greater importance; its lords exercised the power of inflicting punishment for capital crimes. The vicinity is noted for mines of tin, which are worked to a considerable extent. A fair for cattle is held on the Monday next after Midsummer-day. Ten children are instructed for £11 per annum, the produce of sundry bequests for that purpose.

BOVEY-TRACEY, a parish in the hundred of TEINGBRIDGE, county of DEVON, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Chudleigh, containing 1685 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £26. 2. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, contains some interesting monuments. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. A charity school, in which twenty-four children are instructed, is endowed with about £40 per annum, arising from land purchased with the aggregate amount of various benefactions. Bovey Tracey is under the superintendence of a portreeve and a bailiff, the latter of whom is chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor, and, having filled the office of bailiff, is appointed, at the expiration of the period, to that of portreeve. Here are manufactories for earthenware on an extensive scale: Indiho, once a priory, and subsequently a private mansion, was, in 1772, enlarged and converted into a manufactory. Coal is obtained in this district, but it is of an inferior quality, and is divided into two species, distinguished as stone coal and wood coal, the latter, thought to be composed of a fibrous vegetable substance, presenting the appearance of charred wood. Antimony is also found to an inconsiderable extent. Bovey-Heathfield is an extensive tract lying below the level of the sea, by which it is supposed to have been formerly covered. A canal extends hence to the river Teign, at Newton-Abbots, a distance of five miles and a half, by means of which coal, sea-sand, and lime, are brought hither, and Bovey coal and pipe and potters' clay are conveyed away. The Stover railway also passes in the vicinity. A market and a fair were granted to the lord of the manor, in 1259; and fairs for cattle are still held on Easter-Monday, Holy Thursday, and the first Thursdays in July and November.

BOVINGDON, a chapelry in the parish of HEMEL-HEMPSTEAD, hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, 4½ miles (W. by N.) from King's Langley, containing 954 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

BOW, or NYMETT-TRACEY, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, county of DEVON, 7½ miles (W. by N.) from Crediton, containing 872 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £19. 8. 9., and in the patronage of J. Marshall, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. A market and a fair were granted to Henry Tracey, lord of the manor, in 1258; the former has been discontinued, but fairs for cattle are held on the third Thursday in March, Ascension-day, and November 22nd. John Gould, in 1682, endowed a school with £8. 10. per annum, and a house for the use of the master, who instructs ten children gratuitously.

BOW, or STRATFORD le BOW, a parish in the Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from London, containing 2349 inhabitants. This place derives its name "Stratford" from an ancient ford over the river Lea, on the line of the Roman stratum, or road from London to Durokitum (Layton in Essex). It is said that Matilda, queen of Henry I., passing this dangerous ford, narrowly escaped being drowned, and consequently ordered a bridge to be erected, from the arched form of which the village received the adjunct to its name. This bridge, which is supposed to have been the first of its kind erected in the kingdom, is by some referred to the time of Alfred the Great, whose arms are carved on the central stone: it consists of three groined arches, of which the central arch is considerably larger than the rest, and, from its inconvenient narrowness, a wooden platform has been constructed on the outside of one of the parapets, for the accommodation of foot passengers. The village is pleasantly situated; the streets are paved, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with water by the East London Company's works. The manufacture of porcelain, formerly carried on to a considerable extent, has been discontinued; and the fair annually held at Whitsuntide has, within the last few years, been entirely suppressed. Bow is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held in Whitechapel, for the recovery of debts under 40s.: three headboroughs and a constable are annually appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. By an act of parliament passed in 1730, it was made a separate parish, having been severed from that of Stepney, to which it was previously a chapelry. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, by whom an addition has recently been made to the stipend of the rector. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was founded in the reign of Henry II.; it is an ancient structure, partly in the Norman, and partly in the early English, style of architecture, with a low square tower, having a small turret at one of the angles: the east window is ornamented with the figures of Moses and Aaron, and of the twelve Apostles, in stained glass. The churchyard being too small, a new burying-ground is nearly completed, under an act obtained in the 6th of George IV. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists; the latter, though belonging to the congregation in this place, is situated within the parish of Bromley St. Leonard. The free school was founded in 1613, by Sir John Jolles, who endowed it for thirty-four boys of this parish and that of Bromley St. Leonard: it is under the superintendence of the Drapers' Company: the school-house, which is situated in the churchyard, has been lately rebuilt. Another school for fifty boys was founded, in 1701, by Mrs. Prisca Coburne, who endowed it with houses and lands at that time producing £40 per annum; but, from the increased value of the property, the income, on the expiration of the present leases, will amount to £500 per annum: a school-room has been built for one hundred children of each sex, the school being under the inspection of the rectors of St. Mary, Stratford le Bow, and four adjoining parishes. A National school is supported by subscription. Sir John Jolles also founded and endowed almshouses for eight poor people; and there are other charitable bequests for the relief of the poor.

BOWDEN (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Market-Harborough, containing, with the town of Market-Harborough, 2834 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The river Welland bounds the parish on the south, and a branch of the Union Canal passes near the village. There are two trifling endowments for the instruction of poor children, one given by John Durrad, in 1723, and the other by the Rev. Robert Atkins.

BOWDEN (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of ROTHWELL, county of NORTHAMPTON, $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile (E. S. E.) from Market-Harborough, containing, with the hamlet of Little Oxenden, 314 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £15. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Barlow. The parochial school has a small endowment.

BOWDEN'S-EDGE, a township in the parish of CHAPEL en le FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Chapel en le Frith, containing 1093 inhabitants. This township is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BOWDON, a parish in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the market-town of Altrincham, the chapelry of Carrington, and the townships of Agden, Ashley, Baguley, Bollington, Bowdon, Dunham-Massey, Hale, Partington, and Timperley, and containing 7442 inhabitants, of which number, 433 are in the township of Bowdon, 1 mile (S. W. by S.) from Altrincham. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £24, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is an ancient structure on an elevated site, the churchyard commanding an extensive and pleasing panoramic view of the surrounding country; it was annexed to the See of Chester, by Henry VIII., on the dissolution of Birkenhead priory, to which it had been given by Hamon de Massey, the fifth of that name: the rectorial tithes are leased by the bishop to the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, who, as lord of the ancient barony of Dunham-Massey, appoints four churchwardens for the parish. Mr. Edward Vawdrey, about the year 1600, gave £4 per annum toward the endowment of a grammar school: the school-room was rebuilt at the expense of the parishioners, about 1670, and again in 1806, with a convenient house for the master. A charity school has also been built, and is supported by subscription. The Earl of Warrington, in 1754, gave £168. 6. for educating and apprenticing children, and for the relief of the poor. There is also a school for boys at Scamons Moss, and another for boys and girls at Littleheath, founded and endowed by the late Mr. Thomas Walton. A Roman road passed through the parish.

BOWER-CHALK, a parish in the hundred of CHALK, county of WILTS, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Wilton, containing 358 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the consolidated vicarage of Broadchalk and Alvediston, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and 200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

BOWERS-GIFFORD, a parish in the hundred of BARSTABLE, county of ESSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Rayleigh, containing 221 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £25, and in the patronage of John Curtis, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. This parish is bounded on the south by Holly and East havens, which afford a navigable communication with the Thames.

BOWES, a parish (formerly a market-town) in the western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Boldron, Bowes, and Gillmonby, and containing 1438 inhabitants, of which number, 1095 are in the township of Bowes, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Greta-Bridge. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £1500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of T. Harrison, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, contained, in the time of Camden, a hewn slab, bearing an inscription dedicatory to the Roman emperor Adrian, and at that time used for the communion table. From this and other circumstances, particularly its situation on a military way, and the discovery of an aqueduct, on a late enclosure of waste land, Bowes evidently occupies the site of a Roman station, which antiquaries identify with the Lavatis of Antonine. At the time of the Conquest here were the remains of a town, which had been destroyed by fire. A castle was built soon afterwards by Alan, first earl of Richmond, on the elevated site of the Roman fort, and there are still considerable remains of the building and its intrenchments. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Bowes, consisting principally of one street, three quarters of a mile in length, is bleakly situated on the verge of Stanemoor, and on the banks of the river Greta. The market, which was on Friday, and a fair on the 1st of October, have dwindled into insignificance. A free grammar school was founded, about 1693, by William Hutchinson, Esq., who assigned for its support an estate now producing £258 per annum, for which all children within the parish are entitled to gratuitous instruction. This place is interesting as the scene of Mallet's pathetic ballad of Edwin and Emma, a youthful pair in humble life, who, thwarted in their mutual attachment, died of grief, and, according to the parish register, were interred in the same grave, March 15th, 1714. At the distance of about two miles there is a natural bridge across the river Greta, called God's bridge, formed by a rude arch of limestone rock, sixteen feet in the span, and twenty broad at the top, along which carriages usually pass.

BOWESDEN, a hamlet in the parish of LOWICK, eastern division of GLENDAL ward, county of NORTH-UMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Wooler. The population is returned with the parish. A sepulchral urn was turned up by the plough, several years ago, at Bowesden-Hollins; and in the year 1800, some workmen, in levelling a barrow in the neighbourhood, discovered two inverted urns, containing calcined human bones.

BOWLAND, a joint township with Leagram, in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 9 miles (W.) from Clitheroe, containing, with Leagram, 370 inhabitants.

BOWLAND-FOREST (HIGH), a township in the parish of SLAIDBURN, western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, containing 237 inhabitants. Here was anciently a forest, but the greater part of it has been enclosed; the office of master-forester has long been in the tenure of the family of Parker, of Browsholme Hall, an adjoining manorial residence.

BOWLAND-FOREST (LOW), a township in the parish of SLAIDBURN, western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, containing 360 inhabitants.

BOWLING, a township in the parish of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. by W.) from Bradford, containing 3579 inhabitants. The spinning of worsted, and the manufacture of worsted goods, are extensively carried on in this township, in which there are also some iron-works. Bowling Hall, an ancient and stately mansion, was the head-quarters of the Earl of Newcastle, during the siege of Bradford, in 1642.

BOWNESS, a parish in the ward and county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Anthorn, Bowness, Drumburgh, and Fingland, and containing 1920 inhabitants, of which number, 471 are in the township of Bowness, $12\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Carlisle. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £21. 13. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$; and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The village stands on a rocky promontory, commanding a fine view of the Solway Frith, on the coast of which it is situated, and occupies the site of the Roman station Tunnocellum, where, according to the Notitia, a marine cohort (cohors prima Ælia Classica) was placed. At the distance of about a mile was the western extremity of the Picts' wall, vestiges of which are conspicuous in various parts of the parish, as well as of Gabrosentum, another Roman station. Coins and various other relics of the Romans, among which was an image of the god Terminus, have been discovered; and from the foundations of houses and streets which cultivation has exposed to the view, this place has evidently been of greater extent than it is at present. The ship canal from Carlisle terminates near the village. Thomas Pattinson, in 1785, gave £610, directing the interest to be applied for the instruction of children belonging to this and some neighbouring parishes, which has been accordingly done.

BOWNESS, a village in the parish of WINDERMERE, KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 9 miles (W. N. W.) from Kendal. The population is returned with the township of Undermilbeck. This village is agreeably situated on the eastern shore of Windermere lake, in a district abounding with picturesque scenery, and is the principal place in the parish, the church of which stands within it. A few fishing vessels, and several pleasure boats are kept here; and there is some traffic in slate and charcoal. A small customary market, principally for butchers' meat, is held on Wednesday: a fair, formerly on the 18th of October, has been discontinued. A free school has been established by subscription among the inhabitants of Applethwaite and Undermilbeck, who, about 1637, erected a school-house, placing the institution under four trustees and ten feoffees; the endowment, arising from land, is about £50 a year.

BOWOOD, a tything in the parish of NETHERBURY, hundred of BEAMINSTER-FORUM and REDHONE, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Beaminster. The population is returned with the parish.

BOWOOD, a liberty in the parish and hundred of CALNE, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Chippenham, containing 63 inhabitants.

BOWTHORP, a joint township with Menthorp, in the parish of HEMINGBROUGH, wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, East riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Selby. The population is returned with Menthorp.

BOWTHORPE, a parish in the hundred of FORNBOROUGH, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Norwich. The population is returned with Bawburgh. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was, at the beginning of the seventeenth century, used as a storehouse for grain; but, by a decree in Chancery, obtained in 1635, it was restored to its original purpose. The living was formerly a rectory, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of the College of St. Mary in the Fields, at Norwich, who, in 1522, petitioned the bishop for its reduction to a curacy; since the restoration of the church, in 1635, the living has been a donative, to which the Rev. E. Frank presented in 1791.

BOX, a parish in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, 7 miles (S. W. by W.) from Chippenham, containing 1336 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £15. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. W. W. Horlock. The church is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket. An extensive bed of freestone of a peculiar quality exists here, called Bath stone, from the circumstance of the greater part of the city of Bath having been built with stone obtained in quarries about a mile to the east of the village. The stone, which is dug up in blocks of various sizes, is conveyed in wagons to Bath, and thence by the canal to Bristol, from which port it forms a considerable article of exportation to almost every part of the empire. At a short distance north of the village, which is beautifully situated in a rich valley, through which passes the great road from London to Bath, are two mineral springs, one strongly impregnated with neutral salts, the other clear and sparkling, and containing a very large proportion of sulphur and carbonic acid. A lodging and boarding house, pump-room, and other buildings, were erected here some time since, and the place called Middle Hill Spa; but the speculation proved unsuccessful, and the buildings are now let as private lodgings. On Cherry Court farm, north of the spa, and about four miles from Bath, a variety of Roman coins was dug up in 1813, indicating that a large Roman villa once existed on the spot where they were discovered. A charity school has an income of nearly £30 a year, the produce of various benefactions; the master has also a house and garden.

BOXFORD, a parish in the hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Newbury, containing, with the tything of Westbrook, 563 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BOXFORD, a parish partly in the hundred of COSFORD, but chiefly in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, 16 miles (W. by S.) from Ipswich, containing, with the hamlet of Hadleigh, 944 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Two fairs are held, one on Easter-Monday, and the other on the 21st of December.

BOXGROVE, a parish in the hundred of Box and STOCKBRIDGE, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Chichester, containing 868 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £9. 5. 5., and in the patronage of the Duke of Richmond. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Blase, is a cruciform structure, and was the conventual church of an Alien priory, subordinate to the abbey de L'Essay in Normandy, the gross revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was £145. 10. 2.; there are other remains of the buildings, part of which have been converted into dwelling-houses. In 1740, Mary, Countess Dowager of Derby, granted in trust some land and a rent-charge of £140 a year, for the erection and endowment of almshouses for twelve women, and a dwelling-house for a schoolmaster, who, with the aid of one of the alms-women, was to teach six boys and six girls, who are also clothed: two other children are clothed and educated under an endowment now producing £13 a year, given by Mr. Eliz. Nash, in 1716; and two are taught under an endowment by Barnard Frederick, in 1752. In addition to the almshouses, two schoolrooms have been built, in which these children, together with others from the adjacent parishes, amounting in all to about one hundred of each sex, are instructed, the additional expense being defrayed by subscription.

BOXLEY, a parish in the hundred of MAIDSTONE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Maidstone, containing 1166 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £12. 19. 2., and in the patronage of the King and the Dean and Chapter of Rochester alternately. The church is dedicated to All Saints. This parish is noted for the manufacture of paper of a superior quality; two of the mills, called the Old Turkey mills, are remarkable for the extent of the buildings, the machinery, and the excellence and regularity of the arrangements: prior to the decay of the clothing trade they were used as fulling-mills, but in 1739 were purchased by Mr. James Whatman, and have ever since been appropriated to their present purpose. An abbey of Cistercian monks was founded, in 1146, by William d'Ipres, Earl of Kent, who subsequently assumed the cowl at Laon in France. Henry III.

granted to the society the privilege of holding a weekly market, and the abbot was summoned to parliament in the reign of Edward I. Edward II. resided here during the siege of Leeds castle, at which time he signed a charter for the citizens of London. At the dissolution, the revenue was estimated at £218.19.10.; and the site, with a portion of the estates, was granted to Sir Thomas Wyatt, the poet. The abbey contained a celebrated rood, which, together with the image of St. Rumbald, was taken away, and publicly destroyed at St. Paul's cross, in 1538: there are still some remains of the buildings. An extensive rabbit-warren, part of the possessions of the abbey, lies beneath the chalk hill; and there was another near Penenden heath (about half of which is in this parish), but it has been brought into cultivation. A small stream, which rises just below the church, runs through the village, and is stated to petrify wood with an incrustation resembling brown unpolished marble.

BOXTED, a parish in the Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 5 miles (N.) from Colchester, containing 793 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £7.13.9., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The navigable river Stour runs on the northern side of this parish.

BOXTED, a parish in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, 5½ miles (N.E.) from Clare, containing 196 inhabitants. The living is a rectory not in charge, consolidated with that of Hartest, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich.

BOXWELL, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Wootton under Edge, containing, with the chapelry of Leighterton, 297 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £23.4.9½., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Huntley. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There are quarries of freestone within the parish, which is intersected by the river Froome. A nunnery here is stated to have been destroyed by the Danes; the possessions were subsequently annexed to the abbey of Gloucester.

BOXWORTH, a parish in the hundred of PAPWORTH, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6½ miles (N.E. by N.) from Caxton, containing 317 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £18.12.3½., and in the patronage of George Thornhill, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains a monumental bust of Dr. Saunderson, F.R.S., the blind professor of mathematics at the University of Cambridge; he died, and was buried here, in 1759.

BOYAT, a tything in the parish of OTTERBOURNE, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON. The population is returned with the parish.

BOYCUTT, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, though locally in the hundred and county of Buckingham, 3 miles (N.W. by W.) from Buckingham. The population is returned with Stowe.

BOYLSTONE, a parish in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 7½ miles (S.) from Ashbourn, containing 330 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6.0.2., and in the patronage of John Toples, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BOYNTON, a parish in the wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, 2½ miles (W. by N.) from Bridlington, containing 123 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese, of York, rated in the king's books at £7.14.2., and in the patronage of Sir W. Strickland, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. On an eminence, south of Boynton Hall, is a lofty building, which was erected by the late Sir George Strickland, Bart., the upper story of which is encircled by a colonnade, and it commands very extensive land and sea views.

BOYTON, a parish partly in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, but chiefly in the hundred of STRATTON, county of CORNWALL, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Launceston, containing, with the hamlet of Northcott, 489 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. G. Prideaux. The Bude and Launceston, or Tamar, canal crosses the parish. A fair is held annually on the 5th of August. The old mansions of Bradridge and Beardon have been converted into farm-houses. Between this place and North Tamerton there is an ancient thatched building, called Hornacott Chapel, now occupied by a labourer.

BOYTON, a parish in the hundred of WILFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 3¼ miles (W.S.W.) from Orford, containing 284 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5.12.1., and in the patronage of the trustees of the late Mrs. Mary Warner. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The river Alde runs through the parish, and communicates with Butley creek or Eye. An almshouse was built in 1743, and liberally endowed by Mrs. Warner, for six men and six women: this number has been lately increased to sixteen, each having two apartments, a garden, and an allowance of 7s. a week, with a suit of clothes and one chaldron of coal yearly.

BOYTON, a parish in the hundred of HEYTESBURY, county of WILTS, 3 miles (S.E.) from Heytesbury, containing, with the township of Corton, 284 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £27.17.3½., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BOZEAT, a parish in the hundred of HIGHAM-FERRERS, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5½ miles (N.) from Olney, containing 754 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Strixton consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £10 per annum private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Earl Spencer. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BRABOURNE, a parish in the franchise and barony of BIRCHOLT, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Ashford, containing 599 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Monk's Horton consolidated, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains numerous ancient and interesting monuments. At Brabourne-Lees there is a rabbit-warren, the rabbits in which are noted for their flavour. Extensive barracks, both for cavalry and infantry, were erected here a few years ago. A fair for toys and pedlary is held on the last day in May.

BRACEBOROUGH, a parish in the wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Market-Deeping, containing 198 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

BRACEBRIDGE, a parish in the liberty of the city of LINCOLN, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Lincoln, containing 155 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £3. 9. $9\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Penrose. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Edward Wells, in 1604, bequeathed a house and land for the instruction of poor children.

BRACEBY, a parish in the soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Falkingham, containing 97 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, united to that of South Grantham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

BRACE-MEOLE, a parish within the liberty of the borough of SHREWSBURY, county of SALOP, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Shrewsbury, containing 1348 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of Mrs. Bather. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Shrewsbury house of industry, a noble and spacious building, stands in this parish.

BRACEWELL, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 9 miles (W. by S.) from Skipton, containing 176 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £2. 9. $9\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £1200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Grantham. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There are quarries of limestone in the parish. On the summit of two eminences, Howber and Gildersber, are vestiges of military works, stated by tradition to have been constructed by Prince Rupert's forces, on their march through Craven, in 1664. A brick mansion, formerly belonging to the family of Tempest, is in ruins.

BRACKEN, a township in the chapelry of KILN- WICK, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Great Driffield, containing 30 inhabitants. This was formerly a populous village, and contained a chapel, the cemetery belonging to which remains undisturbed.

BRACKENBOROUGH, a chapelry in the parish of LITTLE GRIMSBY, wapentake of LUDBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Louth, containing 54 inhabitants.

BRACKENFIELD, a chapelry in the parish of MORTON, hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Alfreton, containing 353 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

BRACKENHILL, a township in the parish of ARTHURET, Eskdale ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Longtown, containing 441 inhabitants. In this township is the small hamlet of Easton, which anciently gave name to a parish, long since included within the parishes of Arthuret and Kirk-Andrews upon Esk.

BRACKENHOLME, a joint township with Woodhall, in the parish of HEMINGBROUGH, wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, East riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Howden, containing, with Woodhall, 90 inhabitants. It occupies a pleasant site near the river Derwent.

BRACKENTHWAITE, a township in the parish of LORTON, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Keswick, containing 140 inhabitants. The neighbourhood abounds with beautiful scenery, being picturesquely diversified with the lakes Loweswater, Crummock, and Buttermere, and the lofty mountain Grassmoor: lead-ore has been obtained in the township.

BRACKLEY, a borough, market town, and parish, in the hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, 20 miles (S. W. by S.) from Northampton, and 64 (N. W. by W.) from London, containing 1851 inhabitants. This place derives its name from the Anglo-Saxon Bracken, signifying fern, with which the neighbourhood formerly abounded: it was a Saxon burgh of considerable importance, but was greatly injured by the Danes. In the reign of John, Saher de Quincy, Earl of Winchester, joined the confederate barons at Stamford, who marched to Brackley, whence they sent a remonstrance, setting forth their grievances to the king, who was then at Oxford. In the reign of Henry III., two splendid tournaments were held, on a plain called Bayard's Green, near the town. Edward II., who conferred many privileges upon Brackley, made it a staple town for wool; and, in the reign of Edward III., having become famous for its trade, it sent three representatives, as "Merchants Staplers," to a grand council held at Westminster. In the reign of Henry VIII., the plague raging violently at Oxford, the fellows and scholars of Magdalene College removed to this town, and resided in an hospital founded by Robert le Bossu, Earl of Leicester, about the middle of the twelfth century, of which there are considerable remains, the chapel, with a broad low tower on the north-west side, being still entire. The town is on the border of Buckinghamshire, and is situated on the declivity of a hill, near a branch of the river Ouse, which has its source in the immediate vicinity: it is divided into two portions, New Brackley and Old Brackley; the latter, which is the smaller division, is without the limits of the borough. The principal street, nearly a mile in length, extends from the bridge up the acclivity of the hill, and contains many good houses, which are mostly built of stone: there is an abundant supply of water. The inhabitants are chiefly occupied in the making of bobbin lace, and boots and shoes. The market is on Wednesday: the fairs, principally for horses, horned cattle, and sheep, are on the Wednesday after February 25th, the second Wednesday in April, the Wednesday after June 22nd, the Wednesday after October 11th (a statute fair), and December 11th, which is a great fair for cattle and wearing apparel. The government, by charter of incorporation confirmed and extended in the seventh of Edward II., is vested in a mayor, six aldermen, and twenty-six burgesses: the mayor is appointed by the lord of the manor, and sworn into office at his annual court leet, which is also a court baron and port-mote, on the Monday after September 29th, when two constables, two thirdboroughs, and other officers, are also chosen. The aldermen are selected from among the burgesses, the mayor and the lord of the manor each nominating one candidate, whose election is decided by a majority of the rest: the burgesses are chosen from householders residing in New Brackley only, by the whole body, as vacancies occur. The corporation have power to hold a court of record for the recovery of debts under £20, but do not exercise it; and the mayor is not vested with magisterial authority, the town being wholly within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. The elective franchise was conferred in the first of Edward VI., since which time the borough has returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, in number thirty-three, who are principally in the interest of the Marquis of Stafford: the mayor is the returning officer. The town-hall, a handsome building in the centre of the town, supported on arches, under which the market is held, was erected in 1706, by Scroop, Duke of Bridgewater, at an expense of £2000.

Brackley comprises the parishes of St. Peter and St. James, which, though ecclesiastically united, are distinct as regards civil affairs. The living is a consolidated vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £19. 1. 6., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Stafford. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient building, with a low embattled tower; it contains a Norman font of curious design. St. James', formerly a parochial church, is now a chapel of ease to the vicarage of St. Peter. Mr. Welchman bequeathed £10 per annum to the minister, for performing evening service in the chapel every alternate Sunday. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded, about the year 1447, by William of Wainfleet, who endowed it with £13. 6. 8. per annum, for ten boys of the parishes of St. Peter and St. James, which sum is paid by the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford, to whom the site of the ancient hospital was granted at the time of its dissolution: there is a house for the master, who has a salary of £18 per annum, and the profits of some land attached to the school. A National school for boys was established, and is supported, by subscription. Almshouses for six aged widows were founded by Sir Thomas Crewe, in 1633, and endowed with a rent-charge of £24, which was increased in 1721, by his descendant, Nathaniel, Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, with an additional rent-charge of £12. The site of a castle, built by one of the Norman barons, is still called the Castle hill. Samuel Clarke, an eminent orientalist, and one of the coadjutors of Walton in publishing the Polyglott Bible, was born here, in 1623.

BRACON-ASH, a parish in the hundred of HUMBLEYARD, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Wymondham, containing 260 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of T. T. Berney, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

BRADBORNE, a parish comprising the chapelry of Atlow in the hundred of APPLETREE, and the chapelries of Ballidon and Brassington, the township of Aldwark, and the hamlet of Lea-Hall, in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Ashbourn, and containing 1313 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £8. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The church, which is in Wirksworth hundred, is dedicated to All Saints. The parish abounds with limestone. Tissington Hall was garrisoned for the king by its owner, Col. Fitz-Herbert, in 1643. Bradborne is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BRADBURY, a township in the parish of SEDGEFIELD, north-eastern division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Durham, containing 152 inhabitants. Mr. Cade, the antiquary, considered the name of this place to be a corruption of Brimesbury, where King Athelstan encamped in 937, when he gained a decisive victory over the Danes: but it is more probable that this battle was fought at Bramby in Lincolnshire. Here was formerly a chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Nicholas, of which there are no vestiges: the curate's house is still standing. In this township is a place called the Isle, environed by two branches of the Little Skerne; it is a distinct manor, comprising two farms.

BRADBY, a chapelry in the parish of REPTON, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, 3 miles (E.) from Burton upon Trent, containing 302 inhabitants. The living is a donative, annexed to the perpetual curacy of Repton, at which place the inhabitants marry and bury. Near the church is the site of an ancient baronial mansion, which was fortified by royal license in the year 1300; but its materials are supposed to have been used by the first Earl of Chesterfield, in the erection of a residence, which he fortified and garrisoned for the king, in 1642. After a short defence it was captured by a strong detachment sent by Col. Gell, and was taken down in 1780. A school for teaching and clothing thirty boys, and another for thirty girls, were established and supported by the late Earl and Countess of Chesterfield, and are still continued. Bradby is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BRADDEN, a parish in the hundred of GREEN'S NORTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Towcester, containing 185 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £14. 6. 8., and in the patronage of C. Ives, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

BRADENHAM, a parish in the hundred of DESBOROUGH, county of BUCKINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from High Wycombe, containing 220 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 3. 9., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. Hicks, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph. Catherine Pye, by deed dated in 1713, gave land for the instruction of children in this and four other parishes.

BRADENHAM (EAST), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from East Dereham, containing 340 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Thomas Oxley, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is composed of flint and stones.

BRADENHAM (WEST), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from East Dereham, containing 385 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 1. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is an ancient edifice built of flint.

BRADESTON, a parish in the hundred of BLOKFIELD, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Acle, containing 142 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Strumpshaw united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Woodward. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. This parish is bounded on the south by the river Yare. Three Roman urns, containing calcined bones, were found in digging a sand-pit near the site of a demolished church.

BRADFIELD, a parish in the hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, 8 miles (W.) from Reading, containing 946 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £19. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. H. Stevens. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. A monastery was founded here by King Ina, before 699, but nothing further is recorded of its history.

BRADFIELD, a parish in the hundred of TEN-DRING, county of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Manningtree, containing 822 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Mistley, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £12. 13. 4., and endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The navigable river Stour flows along the northern part of this parish. A fair is held on the last Monday in July. Sir Harbottle Grimston, Master of the Rolls under Charles II., and an eminent writer on the law, was born here; he died in 1683.

BRADFIELD, a parish in the hundred of TUNSTED, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from North Walsham containing 195 inhabitants. The living, consisting of one mediety, is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £3. 15. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Suffield. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. The other mediety is a donative annexed to the vicarage of Thorpe-Market.

BRADFIELD, a chapelry in the parish of ECCLESFIELD, northern division of the wapentake of STRAF-FORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Sheffield, containing 5298 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Ecclesfield. This chapelry lies in a mountainous part of the county, and is surrounded by uncultivated and barren moors. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Many of the inhabitants are employed in different branches of manufacture connected with the trade at Sheffield. Fairs are held on June 17th and December 9th. An estate, called the Feoffees' estate, produces about £172 per annum, which is chiefly applied in repairing the chapel, and in defraying those local expenses for which a rate is usually imposed. A school at Lower Bradfield is endowed with a house (in which the master resides), a croft, and a garden, besides a rent-charge of £10, for which eighteen children are instructed. There is a school at Bolterstone, endowed with about £40 per annum and a house occupied by the master, chiefly from a bequest by John Hodgkinson, in 1780, for the free instruction of all children within the chapelry. The school at Onesacre has an endowment of about £14 per annum and a residence for the master, who teaches sixteen children gratuitously.

BRADFIELD (ST. CLARE), a parish in the hundred of THEDWESTRY, county of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Bury St. Edmund's, containing 201 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 4. 7., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Davers. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BRADFIELD (ST. GEORGE), a parish in the hundred of THEDWESTRY, county of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (S. E.) from Bury St. Edmund's, containing 409 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Rushbrook annexed, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £11. 17. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Bristol. Thomas Sparke, in 1721, gave property for the gratuitous instruction of four children.

BRADFIELD-COMBUST, a parish in the hundred of THEDWESTRY, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.)

from Bury St. Edmund's, containing 146 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 19. 7., endowed with £200 royal bounty; and in the patronage of the Rev. H. Hasted. The church is dedicated to All Saints. This is the birthplace of Arthur Young, the celebrated writer on agriculture, and author of various miscellaneous works.

BRADFORD, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Holsworthy, containing 384 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £13. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Trustees of Bampfild's Charity. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Rev. William Bickford, in 1745, gave a small endowment for the instruction of six poor children.

BRADFORD, a township in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by S.) from Manchester, containing 95 inhabitants.

BRADFORD, a township in the parish of BAMBROUGH, northern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.-S. E.) from Belford, containing 48 inhabitants.

BRADFORD, a township in the parish of BOLAM, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 12 miles (W. S. W.) from Morpeth, containing 48 inhabitants.

BRADFORD, a parish in the hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Taunton, containing 525 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10. 17. 6., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Burridge. The church is dedicated to St. Giles.

BRADFORD, a parish in the wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the market town of Bradford, the chapelries of North Bierley, Hawarth, Heaton, Horton, Shipley, Thornton, and Wilsden, and the townships of Allerton, Bowling, Clayton, Eccleshill, and Manningham, and containing, at the census of 1821 (since which time the population has considerably increased), 52,954 inhabitants, of which number, 13,064 were in the town of Bradford, 34 miles (S. W.) from York, 10 (E. S. E.) from Leeds, and 196 (N. N. W.) from London. This place derives its name from a ford on the river Aire, at the western extremity of the town. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the inhabitants embraced the cause of the parliament, and on two occasions repulsed a detachment of the royal troops, sent against them from the garrison at Leeds. Sir Thomas Fairfax coming afterwards to their assistance, with eight hundred infantry and sixty cavalry, the Earl of Newcastle, with a powerful army, invested the town, and attempted to storm it in several places. After a vigorous defence, in which he had spent all his ammunition, Fairfax offered to capitulate; but the earl refusing the conditions, he, with about fifty of his horse, cut his way through the lines of the royalists, and escaped. The town is pleasantly situated at the junction of three beautiful and extensive vallies; the streets, though narrow, are well paved, and lighted with gas, under an act obtained in the 3rd of George IV., subject in its conditions to one passed in the 43rd of George III., for paving, lighting, watching, and improving the town and neighbourhood. The houses, mostly of stone, and roofed with brown slate found in the neighbourhood, are handsome and well built; and the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water, conveyed by pipes from a fine spring at the distance of three miles. The air, though sharp, is very salubrious; and the neighbourhood abounds with pleasing and picturesque scenery. Assemblies are held in rooms in the Exchange, a handsome building of freestone, recently erected, and containing also a subscription news-room and a library. Music meetings of the Philharmonic Society are held monthly in the Exchange buildings. Bradford is in the centre of the manufacturing districts, and the inhabitants are employed principally in the manufacture of woollen cloth, worsted stuffs, and cotton goods, in the spinning of worsted yarn, and in making ivory and horn combs. The neighbourhood abounds with coal and iron-stone; and about three miles to the south-east of the town are iron-works on a very extensive scale. A branch of the Leeds and Liverpool canal has been brought to this place, and affords great facility to its commerce. The market is on Thursday: the market-house is a handsome stone building, enclosing a spacious area for the sale of provisions and various kinds of merchandise. Fairs are held on June 17th and the two following days; December 9th and the two following days, for pigs; and March 3rd and 4th, for cattle, &c. The town is within the jurisdiction of the magistrates for the West riding; two constables are appointed annually at a vestry meeting held in the parish church; a court of requests is held under an act passed in the 33rd of George III., for the recovery of debts under 40s.; and a court for the recovery of debts under £5, within the honour of Pontefract, on the Wednesday in every third week. The court-house is a handsome stone building in Darley-street. The Midsummer quarter sessions for the West riding are held in the Piece-hall, a spacious building in Kirkgate, divided into two apartments, one of which, besides being used for holding the courts, is for the exhibition and sale of stuffs and other articles of manufacture, which are deposited in the other.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of Richard Fawcett, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient structure in the decorated style of English architecture. Christ-church, a chapel of ease erected in 1814, by parliamentary grant, is a neat building in the decorated style, with a low tower crowned with pinnacles. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school, founded in the reign of Edward VI., and richly endowed, was rebuilt by act of parliament, in 1818: it is a spacious and handsome edifice, with a neat house for the master, and a library for the use of the students. The management is vested in thirteen governors resident in the town and neighbourhood; and, by a charter of Charles II., bearing date October 10th, 1662, the Archbishop of York was constituted visitor. This is one of the twelve schools that have the privilege of sending candidates for Lady Elizabeth Hastings' exhibitions at Queen's College, Oxford. The dispensary, a large handsome building was, erected and is supported by voluntary contributions. The learned and eloquent Dr. John Sharp, Archbishop of York in the reign of William III., was born at Bradford, in the year 1644.

BRADFORD (GREAT), a market town and parish in the hundred of BRADFORD, county of WILTS, 8 miles (S.E.) from Bath, 31½ (N.W.) from Salisbury, and 102 (W. by S.) from London, containing, with the chapelries of Atworth, Holt, Winsley with Limpley-Stoke, and South Wraxall, and the tything of Leigh-Wooley, 10,23 inhabitants. This place, from a ford over the river Avon, was called by the Saxons Bradenford, of which its present name is a contraction. During the Octarchy, a battle took place here, between Cenwalh, King of the West Saxons, and a formidable party of his own subjects, who had rebelled against him, under the command of his kinsman Cuthred, when the latter were defeated with great slaughter. In 706, Aldhelm, Bishop of Sherborne, founded an abbey at this place, which he dedicated to St. Lawrence, and which, after its destruction by the Danes, was rebuilt and converted into a nunnery, by Ethelred, who annexed it to a larger establishment of the same kind at Shaftesbury, in 1001. The town is beautifully situated on the acclivity of a steep hill, forming part of a line of eminences on the northern side of the river Avon, over which are an ancient bridge of four, and a modern bridge of nine, arches, both affording a most agreeable prospect. The view of the town, which consists of three regular streets ranged above each other at different elevations on the side of the hill, is strikingly picturesque: the houses, built of stone, are in general handsome, and many of them elegant; and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs. Various designs have recently been carried into effect for the improvement of the town: some of the streets have been widened, and considerable alterations have been made for the furtherance of business. A book society and a news-room have been recently established, and are well supported. The principal branch of manufacture is that of woollen cloth, which is said by Leland to have flourished in the reign of Henry VIII., particularly that composed of the finer kind of Spanish and Saxony wool, for the dyeing of which the water of the river is peculiarly favourable. There are numerous factories, affording employment to many men, women, and children, in the town and neighbourhood. Ladies' cloth, kerseymere, and fancy pieces, are also manufactured to a considerable extent. Scribbling-mills and spinning-jennies were introduced about forty years since, and their adoption in the several factories excited great discontent among the workmen, several lives having been lost in the disturbances that ensued. The Kennet and Avon canal, which affords an increased facility of conveyance to various parts of the kingdom, and has contributed to the advancement of its prosperity, passes close to the town, and a commodious wharf has been constructed on its bank. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are on Trinity-Monday, and on the day after St. Bartholomew's day; the latter is held at Bradford-Leigh, a hamlet in the parish.

Bradford sent members to parliament in the 28th of Edward I., but since that time it has made no return. The petty sessions are held here alternately with Trowbridge; and a court of requests for the recovery of debts under £5, the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundreds of Bradford, Melksham, and Whorwells-down, is held, under an act passed in the 47th of George III., every third Tuesday, alternately with Trowbridge and Melksham. A small oratory on the south-western side of the bridge, formerly belonging to the monastery of St. Lawrence, has been converted into a place of confinement for offenders, previously to their committal to the county gaol. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £10. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a spacious handsome structure; it suffered greatly from fire in 1742, and has undergone extensive repair; the windows contain some modern stained glass, and the altar is embellished with a good painting of the Last Supper; within are several stately monuments of marble. There are two places of worship each for Baptists and Independents, and one each for the Society of Friends, those in the connexion of the late Countess of Huntingdon, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. A free school for sixty boys is endowed with an estate at Holt, purchased with £250 given by Mr. Francis Smith; and with the dividends on £240 three per cents., given in 1805, by Mr. John Shawbridge, who also bequeathed £400 in the same stock, directing the interest to be distributed annually, in crowns and half-crowns, among the poor. There are two almshouses, one founded by Mr. John Hall, for aged men, the other for aged women; they are supposed to have been an appendage to the monastery, of which, and also of other religious establishments formerly existing here, there are still some slight remains. Many curious fossils have been found in the quarries adjoining the town.

BRADFORD (WEST), a township in that part of the parish of MITTON which is in the western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWECROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (N.) from Clitheroe, containing 564 inhabitants. Thomas Tarrant, in 1721, bequeathed a rent-charge of £10 for instructing poor children of the township.

BRADFORD-ABBAS, a parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, 3½ miles (W.S.W.) from Sherborne, containing 533 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with which the rectory of Clifton-Mabank was consolidated in 1824, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. 11., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Anglesey. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Rev. William Preston, in 1738, gave £14 per annum for the endowment of a charity school; and, in 1781, Mark West and William Read gave property producing an equal amount, for the same purpose.

BRADFORD-PEVERELL, a parish in the hundred of GEORGE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 3½ miles (N.W. by W.) from Dorchester, containing, with Muckleford, 277 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £11. 2. 11., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of Winchester College. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The village is situated on the line of a Roman road; and there are several tumuli in the vicinity, some of which, on being opened, were found to contain urns, burnt bones, and various other relics of the Romans.

Corporate Seal.

BRADING, a parish (formerly a market town) in the liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7 miles (E. by S.) from Newport, and 95 (S.W.) from London, containing 2023 inhabitants. This place, formerly of considerable importance, as appears from its being styled "the King's town of Brading" in the legend of its common seal, probably received name from the haven, at the upper end of which it is situated. Brading haven, a tract of marshy ground, nearly nine hundred acres in extent, is covered by the sea at every tide; so that at high water small vessels can approach the town, for unloading which a quay has been constructed. Repeated attempts have been made to exclude the sea by an embankment, and Sir Hugh Middleton, the projector of the New River, had nearly effected this, when, during a wet season, the works, which had been raised at an expense of £7000, were completely destroyed by a spring tide. The town consists principally of one long street, the houses in which are irregularly built; the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water from public wells. Fairs are held on May 1st and September 21st. The government, by charter of incorporation granted prior to the reign of Edward VI., is vested in a senior and a junior bailiff, a recorder, and thirteen jurats, assisted by a town-clerk, who is also steward: the bailiffs are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The town-hall is a very small building; the lower part is used as a prison and for the market. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is one of the most ancient in the kingdom, being said to have been built in 704, by Wilfrid, Bishop of Chichester, who here baptized his first converts to Christianity: it is a spacious structure, with a tower, and some remains of Saxon architecture are preserved in the nave, though it has undergone many alterations in other parts; at the extremity of each aisle there is a small chapel. A chapel has been recently built at Bembridge, a hamlet in this parish: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Brading. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A National school, in which about sixty children are instructed, is supported by subscription. Knight's charity supplies seven poor men annually with a suit of clothes each. In this parish is Sandown fort, a regular quadrangular fortification, flanked by four bastions, and encompassed by a ditch: it was constructed in the reign of Henry VIII., on a level with the beach, and, having been greatly neglected after the rise of the English Navy, was repaired during the late war, and is now the most considerable fortress in the island. In the American war the garrison sustained attacks from several privateers, and drove them off.

BRADLE, a tything in the parish of CHURCH-KNOWLE, hundred of HASILOR, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET. The population is returned with the parish.

BRADLEY, a tything in the parish of CUMNER, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, 5 miles (N.N.W.) from Abingdon, containing 5 inhabitants.

BRADLEY, a township in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Malpas, containing 78 inhabitants.

BRADLEY, a parish in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 3½ miles (E. by S.) from Ashbourn, containing 320 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 19. 9½, and in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small ancient structure. Within the parish is a chalybeate spring, but it is not much used.

BRADLEY, a tything in that part of the parish of CREDITON which is in the western division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, 2½ miles (N. E.) from Crediton, with which the population is returned.

BRADLEY, a tything in the parish of WOTTON under EDGE, upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, ½ a mile (W. S. W.) from Wotton under Edge, with which the population is returned.

BRADLEY, a hamlet in the chapelry of HOLT, parish of MEDBOURNE, hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, 2½ miles (N. N. W.) from Rockingham. The population is returned with Holt. A small priory of Augustine canons was founded here, in the reign of John, by Robert Bundy, or Burnaby, the revenue of which, at the time of the suppression, was £20. 15. 7.

BRADLEY, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (S. W.) from Great Grimsby, containing 78 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Sir John Nelthorpe, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. George. The children of this parish are entitled to instruction at Laceby school, founded and endowed by Sarah Stamford, in 1720.

BRADLEY, a parish situated in a detached portion of the hundred of OVERTON, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Alton, containing 100 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., and in the patronage of J. Blackburn, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Bradley is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

BRADLEY, a chapelry in the parish of FLADBURY, middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, 6½ miles (E. S. E.) from Droitwich, containing, with the hamlet of Stock, 208 inhabitants.

BRADLEY (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of RISBRIDGE, county of SUFFOLK, 6½ miles (N. by E.) from Haverhill, containing 487 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £17. 1. 5½., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Dublin and others. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BRADLEY (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of RISBRIDGE, county of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (N. by E.) from Haverhill, containing 31 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5.0.10., and in the patronage of F. Dickens, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BRADLEY (LOWER and UPPER), a township in the parish of KILDWICK, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWXCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 2½ miles (S. S. E.) from Skipton, containing 506 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BRADLEY (MAIDEN), a parish partly in the hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, county of SOMERSET, but chiefly in the hundred of MERE, county of WILTS, 5½ miles (N. by W.) from Mere, containing 620 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Fairs are held on April 25th and September 21st. An hospital for poor leprous women, under the superintendence of some Secular priests, was founded by Manasseh Biset, about the close of the reign of Stephen, or the beginning of that of Henry II. About 1190, Hubert, Bishop of Salisbury, changed the Seculars into a prior and canons of the Augustine order; the revenue, at the time of the dissolution, was £197. 18. 8.

BRADLEY in the MOORS, a parish in the western division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Penkridge, containing, with the liberties of Billington and Woollaston, part of Alstone, Brough, and Rule (the three last having been heretofore deemed extra-parochial), and part of Apeton, 723 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Thomas Anson, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school is of early and obscure foundation: the endowment arises from land producing about £130 per annum, of which £107 are assigned as a salary to the master, and £23 to the mistress of a preparatory school on Dr. Bell's plan, each of whom has a house and a small plot of ground rent-free: these schools are free for all children within the parish, the boys being received into the grammar school as soon as they can read in the New Testament.

BRADLEY in the MOORS, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Cheadle, containing 84 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Shrewsbury: the inappropriate rectory is rated in the king's books at £17. 11. 8. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BRADLEY (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, county of WILTS, 2½ miles (S.) from Trowbridge, containing, with the chapelry of Southwick, 2615 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £209 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of Winchester College. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. An elegant chapel, called Christchurch, has been lately erected on Road hill, at one extremity of the parish, by the present vicar, Dr. Daubeney, Archdeacon of Sarum, aided by voluntary subscriptions and a grant from the commissioners for building and enlarging churches; it is endowed with £1200 private benefaction, £3400 parliamentary grant, and is in the patronage of the Vicar of North Bradley. The Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels have also granted £1000 for the erection of seven hundred additional sittings, of which five hundred and fifty are free. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Frome, which here separates Wiltshire from Somersetshire, and is intersected by a small stream, called Bradley river.

BRADLEY (WEST), a parish in the hundred of GLASTON-TWELVE-HIDES, county of SOMERSET, 4½ miles (E. S. E.) from Glastonbury, containing 114 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of East Pennard, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells.

BRADLEY-FIELD, a hamlet in the chapelry of UNDERBARROW, in that part of the parish of KENDAL which is in KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (W.) from Kendal. The population is returned with Underbarrow.

BRADMORE, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, county of NOTTINGHAM, 6½ miles (S.) from Nottingham, containing 410 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Bunny, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York. The church was destroyed by fire, and has not since been rebuilt: the steeple remains.

BRADNINCH, a parish (formerly a borough and market town), having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Hayridge, county of DEVON, 8 miles (N.E.) from Exeter, and 170 (W.) from London, containing 1511 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Braineis, was of some importance in the time of the Saxons: in the reign of John it received many privileges, which were increased by Henry III., and in the reign of Edward III. it was annexed to the duchy of Cornwall. In this and in the preceding reign it sent representatives to parliament, from which, on account of its poverty, it was excused in the reign of Henry VII., on the payment of a fine of five marks. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I. it suffered considerably, from its proximity to Exeter, and was alternately in the possession of the royalists and the parliamentarians. In the year 1665, the town was almost destroyed by fire. It is pleasantly situated on an eminence, environed by hills on all sides except the south and south-west, and consists principally of neatly thatched and white-washed cottages. The woollen trade was formerly carried on, but little now remains; the principal branch of manufacture at present is that of paper, for which there are three mills, affording employment to sixty or seventy of the inhabitants. Iron-ore has been found in the neighbourhood, but works have not yet been established. The market has been discontinued; but small fairs are held on May 6th and October 2nd. The government, by charter of incorporation granted by Reginald, Earl of Cornwall, and renewed and enlarged by James I. and II., is vested in a mayor, recorder, twelve masters, and twenty-four inferior burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, two serjeants at mace, a high constable, and four inferior constables. The mayor is chosen on St. Thomas' day, by the corporation at large, from among the twelve masters, who nominate two of their own body to that office; the mayor, the late mayor, and the recorder, are justices of the peace for the borough. The corporation hold a court of session quarterly: the mayor's court, for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held monthly; and courts leet and baron for the duchy are also held here. The guildhall is a small building, possessing no claim to architectural notice. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £300, and a messuage worth £400, private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church, dedicated to St. Disen, is an ancient structure, with a tower and other portions of later date; the chancel is separated from the nave by a richly carved oak screen. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Bradninch gives the title of baron to the dukes of Cornwall, who are styled Barons of Braines.

BRADNOP, a township in that part of the parish of LEEK which is in the northern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Leek, containing 489 inhabitants, many of whom are employed in the copper mines in the vicinity.

BRADON (NORTH and SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 3½ miles (N. by E.) from Ilminster, containing 32 inhabitants. The living is a sinecure rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £5. 4. 4½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont. The church, now desecrated, was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. Adjoining this parish was one called Goose, or Gouiz, Bradon, now depopulated, and the church and other buildings entirely destroyed.

BRADPOLE, a parish in the hundred of BEAMINGSTER-FORUM and REDHONE, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 1½ mile (N. N. E.) from Bridport, containing 926 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 1½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The inhabitants formerly interred their dead at Bridport, but, by a composition made in 1527, they were allowed to inter in their own churchyard, on paying annually a small acknowledgment to the rector of Bridport.

BRADSHAW, a chapelry in the parish of BOLTON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (N. E.) from Bolton le Moors, containing 713 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Bolton le Moors. A collection of books given by Mrs. Isherwood, for the use of the inhabitants, is kept in the chapel. Here are extensive bleaching grounds. A school for the education of poor children has lately been erected. Bradshaw Hall was the property and residence of John Bradshaw, who presided at the trial of the unfortunate monarch, Charles I.

BRADSHAW-EDGE, a township in the parish of CHAPEL en le FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 1½ mile (W.) from Chapel en le Frith, containing 1708 inhabitants.

BRADSTONE, a parish in the hundred of LIFTON, county of DEVON, 4½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Launceston, containing 115 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. 2., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Nun.

BRADSTONE, a hamlet in the parish, and upper division of the hundred, of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 2½ miles (E. N. E.) from Berkeley, containing 152 inhabitants.

BRADWELL, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3½ miles (E. by S.) from Stouy-Stratford, containing 271 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 11. 0½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The sum of £13. 13. is applied annually in relieving the poor, and towards instructing six or seven children.

BRADWELL, a township in the parish of SANDBACH, hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Sandbach, containing 282 inhabitants.

BRADWELL, a hamlet in the parish of HOPE, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 4½ miles (N. N. E.) from Tideswell, containing 1130 inhabitants; who are chiefly engaged in the lead and calamine works in the vicinity, the manufacture of these articles being carried on to a considerable extent. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Unitarians. Elias Marshall, in 1765, assigned a small portion of land, now producing £3 per annum, for which five children are educated gratuitously. About the year 1807, a huge natural excavation, called the Chrystallized Cavern, was discovered: it is approached by a narrow entrance, leading to a spacious area, the sides of which are lined with chrystallizations of singular beauty, and its separate parts are recognised by different names, such as the Grotto of Paradise, the Grotto of Calypso, Music Chamber, &c. Bradwell is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday; for the recovery of debts under 40s. A place called the Castle, near the junction of the Noe and the Bradwell water, is supposed to have been the site of a Roman station, which comprised a square area, measuring three hundred and ten feet by two hundred and seventy: several Roman remains have been found.

BRADWELL, a parish in the hundred of MURFORD and LOTHINGLAND, county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (S. W.) from Great Yarmouth, containing 272 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £28. The King, by reason of lunacy, was patron in 1810. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. Breydon water is navigable on the northern side of this parish.

BRADWELL ABBEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3½ miles (E. S. E.) from Stony-Stratford, containing 20 inhabitants. A priory of Black monks, dedicated to St. Mary, was founded, about the time of Stephen, by Meinfelin, Baron of Wolverton, originally as a cell to the monastery at Luffield, the revenue of which, in the 23rd of Henry VIII., was £53. 11. 2.: the site is now occupied by a farm-house.

BRADWELL juxta COGGESHALL, a parish in the hundred of WITHAM, county of ESSEX, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Great Coggeshall, containing 317 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Rev. M. J. Brunwin. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

BRADWELL near the SEA, a parish in the hundred of DENGIE, county of ESSEX, 12 miles (E.) from Maldon, containing 904 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £48, and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Schreiber. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle, has a tower surmounted by a lofty spire. The parish lies at the mouth of the Blackwater river, which forms its northern boundary; the North sea is on the east, near which stand the remains of an ancient chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, now converted into a barn. Camden considers the Saxon city Ithan-cestre to have stood at or near this place, and identifies it also with the Roman station Othona, where the Numerus Fortensium, under a commander styled Count of the Saxon shore, was stationed, in the decline of the Roman empire. Upwards of £100, half of it arising from land given by Dr. Buckeridge, is applied annually toward the support of schools in this parish.

BRADWOOD-WIDGER, a parish in the hundred of LIFTON, county of DEVON, 6 miles (N. E.) from Launceston, containing 748 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BRADWORTHY, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, 7½ miles (N. by W.) from Holsworthy, containing 978 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Pancrasweek annexed, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £25. 5. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BRAFFERTON, a township in the parish of GREAT AYCLIFFE, south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 4½ miles (N. by E.) from Darlington, containing 263 inhabitants. The Methodists erected a meeting-house about 1814; and a school-room was built by subscription, in 1823, which has been endowed with £12 per annum by the Diocesan Society.

BRAFFERTON, a parish comprising the township of Thornton-Bridge in the wapentake of HALLIKELD, the township of Brafferton in the wapentake of BULMER, and the township of Helperby, locally in the same wapentake (but included within the liberty of St. Peter of York, in the East riding), North riding of the county of YORK, and containing 832 inhabitants, of which number, 178 are in the township of Brafferton, 4 miles (N. E.) from Boroughbridge. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 15. 6., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The village of Brafferton lies on one side of the road, and that of Helperby on the other; a school on Dr. Bell's plan is connected with both, and is supported chiefly by subscription.

BRAFIELD on the GREEN, a parish in the hundred of WYMERSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Northampton, containing 424 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Little Houghton, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 6½. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

BRAILS, a parish in the Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Shipston upon Stour, containing 1233 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £25, and in the patronage of J. Bailey, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. George. Here is a manufactory for livery shag, plush, &c. A free school was endowed, in the 23rd of Elizabeth, with an annuity of £8. 1. 8., which was augmented by Barnabas Bishopp and others, in the 18th of James I.; the annual income is £64. 8. 2., for which the school is unlimitedly free for poor children: the school-room was rebuilt in 1819.

BRAILSFORD, a parish in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 7½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Derby, containing 724 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £9. 19. 2., and in the patronage of Earl Ferrers. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BRAINTFIELD, a parish in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBANS, though locally in the hundred of Hertford, county of HERTFORD, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Hertford, containing 232 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. E. Bouchier. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. According to Matthew Paris, this was the first ecclesiastical preferment held by the celebrated Thomas à Becket; a small pond near the parsonage-house still bears his name.

BRAINTREE, a market town and parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, 11 miles (N. by E.) from Chelmsford, and 40 (N. E.) from London, containing 2983 inhabitants. This place is described in Domesday-book under "Raines," including also the village of "Raine," to which it was at that time a hamlet, and from which it was separated in the reign of Henry II. Owing to its situation as a great thoroughfare on the road leading from London into the counties of Suffolk and Norfolk, it is supposed to have derived considerable benefit from the numerous pilgrims who passed through it, on their way to the shrines of St. Edmund, at Bury, and Our Lady of Walsingham: the population having consequently increased, it was made a market town in the reign of John. The bishops of London formerly had a palace here, but there are no remains of it. In the early part of the reign of Elizabeth, the Flemings, fleeing from the persecution of the Duke of Alva, settled at Braintree, and introduced the manufacture of woollen cloth. The town, pleasantly situated on an eminence, consists of several streets irregularly formed and inconveniently narrow; the houses are in general ancient, and many of them are built of wood. The woollen trade has given place to the manufacture of silk, which is carried on extensively. The market is on Wednesday: the fairs are on May 7th and October 2nd, each for three days. The government was formerly vested in twenty-four of the principal parishioners, who in 1584 were styled "governors of the town, and town magistrates;" but this body has been dissolved, and the county magistrates now hold a petty session here for the division every Wednesday. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £12. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Olmins. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a spacious structure, erected on the summit of a mount, apparently the site of an ancient camp; it is principally in the later style of English architecture, with a tower in the early English style, surmounted by a shingled spire of later date: it was enlarged in the reign of Henry VIII., the expense having been defrayed out of the proceeds of three plays performed in the church, of which some curious particulars are recorded in the parish register. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Methodists. A school was founded in 1702, by James Coker, Esq., a native of the town, who endowed it with a farm at Stoke, near Nayland, producing £10 per annum, for the instruction of ten boys. John Ray, a writer on natural history, was educated in this school. In the reign of Charles I., Henry Smith, Esq., alderman of London, who is said, from the habit of going about like a beggar accompanied by his dog, to have obtained the appellation of "Dog Smith," bequeathed £2800 for the relief of the poor of Braintree, and the adjoining parishes of Henham and Toxling. In conformity to his direction, that sum was invested in the purchase of an estate at Tolleshunt D'Arcy, in this county, producing a rental of £350 per annum. About half a mile from the town are the ruins of a very ancient church, formerly the parish church, consisting of the east wall of the chancel, in which are three very narrow lancet-shaped windows; and in the town and neighbourhood Roman coins and sepulchral urns have been frequently discovered.

BRAISEWORTH, a parish in the hundred of HARTISMERE, county of SUFFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Eye, containing 170 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 8. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Earl Cornwallis.

BRAITHWAITE, a township in that part of the parish of CROSTHWAITE which is in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Keswick, containing 214 inhabitants. The village lies at the foot of Winklatter-Fell, the summit of which, gained by a steep ascent of two miles and a quarter, embraces prospects of a most sublime character. A woollen manufactory is carried on; and lead mines have been worked in the township.

BRAITHWAITE, a detached hamlet in that part of the parish of ST. MARY, CARLISLE, which is in LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Heskett-Newmarket. The population is returned with the hamlet of Middleseugh.

BRAITHWELL, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Braithwell and Bramley, and containing 739 inhabitants, of which number, 438 are in the township of Braithwell, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Doncaster. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £7. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. James. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The school owes its foundation to Mr. John Bosville: in 1818, the Rev. Thomas Bosville gave £250 for the instruction of ten children: the income is £10. 10. per annum, and there are fourteen children on the foundation. Twenty-two human skeletons, supposed to be those of Roman soldiers who fell in battle with the Brigantes, and an urn, that probably contained the ashes of a Roman general, were discovered some years ago, in a field here, in which a variety of Roman coins has also been found at different periods.

BRAKES, a township in the parish of LEINTWARDINE, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, containing 125 inhabitants.

BRAMBER, a borough (formerly a market town) in the hundred of STYNING, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (E. S. E.) from Steyning, and 50 miles (S. by W.) from London, containing 98 inhabitants. This place was formerly noted for a castle built by the descendants of William de Braiose, upon whom it was bestowed by William the Conqueror. In the reign of Edward III., this castle was garrisoned by John de Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, for the protection of the town and shore from the expected attack of the French, who were hovering off the coast. The town is situated on the river Adar, which is navigable for small vessels; and, though formerly of considerable extent and importance, consists at present only of a few miserable hovels: there is neither trade, market, nor fair. It is a borough by prescription, and returned members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I.; after that time it frequently omitted, and was occasionally represented in conjunction with Steyning till the 7th of Edward IV., since which it has regularly continued to return two representatives. The right of election is vested in the occupiers of burgage tenements paying scot and lot, in number about twenty: the constable is the returning officer. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Buttolphs united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a small ancient edifice, much mutilated, but containing some fine portions in the Norman style of architecture, with a low square tower. The ancient and once formidable castle occupied a quadrilateral area, six hundred feet in length, and three hundred in breadth, surrounded by a wide and deep moat: the remains consist principally of part of the entrance gateway, some detached portions of the walls to the north-west, the mount whereon stood the keep, and a noble window in the range that contained the state apartments: the prevailing style of architecture is the Norman.

BRAMCOTE, a chapelry in the parish of ATTENBOROUGH, southern division of the wapentake of BROXTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Nottingham, containing 441 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Attenborough, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York. The Nottingham canal passes through the chapelry. Coal is obtained on the moor.

BRAMCOTT, a hamlet in the parish of BULKINGTON, Kirkby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 4 miles (S. E.) from Nuneaton, containing 35 inhabitants.

BRAMDEAN, a parish in the hundred of BISHOP'S SUTTON, Alton (North) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S. by E.) from New Alresford, containing 232 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £8. 14. 9½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Simon and St. Jude. Bramdean is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

BRAMERTON, a parish in the hundred of HENSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, 5½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Norwich, containing 184 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of Robert Fellowes, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Rev. William Berney, in 1715, bequeathed £100 for the instruction of children, or the relief of the poor.

BRAMFIELD, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, 2½ miles (S. S. E.) from Halesworth, containing 630 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. Two sums, each of £3. 10. per annum, are applied for the instruction of twelve poor children; one was given by Eliz. Archer, in 1716, and the other in 1704, by Thomas Neale, whose widow, in 1725, assigned an almshouse for the reception of four poor persons.

BRAMFORD, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (W. N. W.)

from Ipswich, containing 855 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Burstall united, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13. 3. 9., endowed with £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Stow-Market and Ipswich canal crosses this parish.

BRAMHALL, a township in the parish of STOCKPORT, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Stockport, containing 1359 inhabitants. The lord of this manor, in conjunction with the lords of the manors of Bredbury, Brinnington, and Norbury, has, from time immemorial, appointed the churchwardens of the parish. The manorial mansion is a curious ancient edifice of timber and brick, plaistered over, standing on elevated ground: at the south-east angle is the domestic chapel, apparently of the time of Richard III., having a flat panelled roof, and a considerable quantity of painted glass in the windows, and containing several deceased members of the family of Davenport.

BRAMHAM, a parish partly in the liberty of ST. PETER OF YORK, East riding, but chiefly in the upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding, of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Bramham and Clifford, and containing 1987 inhabitants, of which number, 970 are in the township of Bramham, 4¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Wetherby. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. 6., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A battle was fought here, in 1408, between Sir Thomas Rokeby, sheriff of Yorkshire, and the Earl of Northumberland, in which the earl was defeated and slain, and by which the possession of the crown was secured to Henry IV. There are visible remains of the ancient Watling-street on Bramham moor, a mile north of the village: from the middle of this moor is an extensive prospect of a well-cultivated district, which abounds also with freestone, limestone, and coal. A fund of £11 per annum, arising from land purchased by various charitable bequests, is appropriated for the instruction of six children, four from the township of Bramham, and two from that of Clifford.

BRAMHOPE, a township in that part of the parish of OTLEY which is in the upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 3½ miles (E. S. E.) from Otley, containing 366 inhabitants. The school is endowed with an allotment of land producing £9 per annum, awarded to it on the enclosure of the common, for which the master instructs the children of the inhabitants on easier terms.

BRAMLEY, a parish in the hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (N. by E.) from Basingstoke, containing 455 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £7. 3. 6½., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BRAMLEY, a chapelry in the parish of SHALFORD, first division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, county of SURREY, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Guildford, containing 707 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is partly in the early style of English architecture, with a chapel on the south side. The Arun and Wey Junction canal crosses this chapelry.

BRAMLEY, a chapelry in the parish of ST. PETER, within the liberty of the town of LEEDS, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Leeds, containing 4921 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £10 per annum private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Leeds. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the clothing business; and there are spacious and celebrated stone and slate quarries within the chapelry. Land producing an average rental of £21 was assigned, on the enclosure of the common, for the education of sixteen boys in the school at Leeds: having become a subject of dispute in Chancery, the income has, for the last few years, been applied in payment of the costs, but will soon be made available to the benefit of the institution. Another allotment was set apart, producing £6 per annum, for the instruction of six female children.

BRAMLEY, a township in the parish of BRAITHWELL, southern division of the wapentake of STRAFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (E.) from Rotherham, containing 301 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BRAMPFORD-SPEKE, a parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, 4½ miles (N. by E.) from Exeter, containing 303 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The river Exe forms the western boundary of this parish.

BRAMPTON, a parish in ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the market town of Brampton, and the townships of Easby and Naworth, and containing 2921 inhabitants, of which number, 2448 are in the town of Brampton, 9½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Carlisle, and 305 (N. by W.) from London. According to Camden, this was the Roman station Bremetenracum, which some modern writers have fixed at Old Penrith. The town sustained extensive damage during the wars of Edward II., of which, as well as of its earlier importance, it still exhibits evident marks. It is situated between the rivers Irthing and Gelt, about one mile south of the former, and two and a half from the point where they unite, and about one mile south of the Picts' wall, in a deep narrow vale embosomed in hills. It consists of two principal streets irregularly built: the houses, excepting a few of modern erection, are generally of mean appearance; the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The only branch of manufacture is that of gingham, in which nearly seven hundred individuals are employed: there are two public breweries. The railway between Newcastle and Carlisle passes a mile and a half to the south; and the late Earl of Carlisle extended a railway from the collieries at Tindal Fell to Brampton, by which coal and lime are brought hither in abundance; in which traffic about one hundred persons are employed. The market is on Wednesday, and is well supplied with corn, admitted toll-free: fairs are held annually on the 20th of April, the second Wednesday after Whitsuntide, the second Wednesday in September, and the 23rd of October, for horned cattle, horses, and sheep. The county magistrates hold a petty session every alternate Wednesday; and courts leet and baron for the barony of Gilsland are held, at Easter and Michaelmas, in the town-hall, a neat octagonal edifice, with a cupola, erected by the Earl of Carlisle, in 1817, on the site of the former hall, in the market-place, the lower part being formed into a piazza, under which butter, eggs, poultry, &c., are sold on the market-day. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Earl of Carlisle. The present church was built, in 1788, out of the chapel and four tenements of an almshouse, and with the materials of the old church, dedicated to St. Martin, the chancel of which is still remaining on the southern bank of the river Irthing, about a mile west of the town, being only used for the performance of the funeral service for those who are interred in the cemetery: the new church was greatly enlarged in 1827, at an expense of £1800, on which occasion the Rev. Mr. Ramshay, vicar, presented the parish with six bells and an organ, and now pays the salaries of the organist and the ringers: he also, on every alternate Sunday, gives one shilling to each poor person attending divine service. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Presbyterians. A National school, built by the Earl of Carlisle, in 1817, is supported by voluntary contributions: an infant school was established in 1825. Edward, Earl of Carlisle, built an hospital for six aged men and as many women, in 1688, to each of whom he assigned £5 per annum, besides fuel, and, by will dated in 1691, bequeathed £500 to purchase lands for its endowment; but this benevolent purpose was never carried into effect. The hospital was taken down to make room for the enlargement of the church, at the east end of which a room has been built, and is used for a grammar school; the master receives an annuity of £5 from the present earl.

Two miles east of Brampton, and about a mile south of the river Irthing, commanding a fine view of the vale of St. Mary, through which that river flows, is Naworth castle, the ancient baronial seat of the lords of Gilsland, the earliest notice of which occurs in the 18th of Richard II. The walls, including two large square towers in the front, besides others at the angles, enclose a quadrangular area, each side being forty paces in length: the entrance is through an embrasured gateway. The hall, seventy or eighty feet in length, and of proportionate width and height, displays all the magnificence of feudal grandeur, and is embellished with portraits, brought from Kirk-Oswald castle, of the kings of England prior to the union of the houses of York and Lancaster. The chapel, to which there is a descent of several steps, is very ancient, and is decorated with paintings of the patriarchs and kings of Israel and Judah; the pulpit and stalls are of carved oak. The apartments of Lord William Howard, the terror of the moss-troopers in the reign of Elizabeth, are still preserved, with their ancient furniture: they consist of a bed-room, an oratory, and library containing several books and manuscripts, some of them bearing his autograph, and an account of the foundation of Glastonbury abbey by Joseph of Arimathea: the approach to these apartments is by a very narrow winding staircase, secured by doors of amazing strength. The dungeons of the castle, which were the prison for the barony, are still in their original state: they consist of three cells underground, and one above, and the strong iron rings to which the prisoners were chained are still remaining. To the north-east of Brampton is a high conical hill, called the Mote, from the summit of which, now planted with trees, a most extensive view of the surrounding country is obtained: at some distance from the base there are vestiges of an intrenchment, and a breastwork of considerable strength. It is supposed to have been a Danish encampment, or probably a place of security for the removal of property in case of invasion, as, from the steepness of the acclivity, a small number of men on the summit might overpower an assailing multitude. At present it forms a link in the chain of telegraphic communication between the northern parts of England and the southern parts of Scotland. To the south of the town is a fine quarry of freestone, where the Romans obtained part of the materials for building the great wall, vestiges of which are still visible; and on the rocky banks of the Gelt are some Roman inscriptions, of the time of Agricola, one of whose legions was stationed near Brampton.

BRAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Chesterfield, containing 2632 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A new church, or chapel, is about to be erected in the eastern part of the parish, by subscription, and a grant from the parliamentary commissioners. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The parish abounds with coal and iron-stone, and the casting of iron is carried on to a limited extent: the manufactory of pottery-ware is conducted on a larger scale. There is a canal from Chesterfield to Gainsborough. A national school, used also as a Sunday school, has been established, for which the erection of a new school-room is contemplated: it is also intended to form a similar institution in connexion with the new church.

BRAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Huntingdon, containing 1064 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 1. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Brampton in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, with a fine south porch, enriched with elegant tracery. Samuel Pepys, Esq., secretary to the Admiralty in the reign of Charles II. and James II., and elected President of the Royal Society in 1684, was born here; his Memoirs, comprising his diary from 1659 to 1669, with a biographical sketch by Lord Braybrooke, were published, in two vols. 4to., in 1825.

BRAMPTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of TORKESEY which is in the wapentake of WELL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Gainsborough, containing 98 inhabitants.

BRAMPTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Aylsham, containing 145 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of R. Marsham, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, has a tower circular at the base and octangular above. From several urns containing calcined bones, this is conjectured to have been the place of interment of the Roman station at Burgh, on the opposite side of the river Bure, which is here navigable.

BRAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of CORBY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Market-Harborough, containing 113 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £21. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BRAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Halesworth, containing 255 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Rev. N. T. O. Leman. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BRAMPTON, a township in the parish of LONG MARTON, EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Appleby. The population is returned with the parish.

BRAMPTON (CHAPEL), a parish in the hundred of NOBOTTLE-GROVE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Northampton, containing 213 inhabitants. The church has long been demolished.

BRAMPTON (CHURCH), a parish in the hundred of NOBOTTLE-GROVE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Northampton, containing 179 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £25. 19. 7., and in the patronage of Earl Spencer. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, and contains a large circular font: the stairs of the rood-loft and some ancient benches remain.

BRAMPTON (LITTLE), a joint township with Rod and Nash, in that part of the parish of PRESTEIGNE which is in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD. The population is returned with Rod.

BRAMPTON en le MORTHEN, a township in the parish of TREETON, southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Rotherham, containing 136 inhabitants.

BRAMPTON-ABBOTS, a parish in the hundred of GREYTREE, county of HEREFORD, 1 mile (N.) from Ross, containing 158 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Courts leet and baron are held here annually. The river Wye forms a boundary of this parish.

BRAMPTON-BIERLOW, a chapelry in the parish of WATH upon DEARNE, northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (N. by W.) from Rotherham, containing 1263 inhabitants. It stands on the line of the Dove and Dearne canal, in a district containing several iron-foundries, one of which, called Milton Furnace, is on a very extensive scale. George Ellis, in 1711, bequeathed the greater part of his estate for pious and charitable uses, and the trustees acting under the will erected, in 1818, a spacious building, at an expense of £865, for the instruction of boys and girls on Dr. Bell's plan: the master is allowed a salary of £63 per annum, and the mistress one of £15; and the sum of £12 is also paid annually to the master, from a bequest of £300 made by John Higson, in 1814. The remainder of Ellis' charity is applied in relieving the poor, and in apprentice fees.

BRAMPTON-BRYAN, a parish comprising the lordship of Stanage in the hundred of KNIGHTON, county of RADNOR (WALES), and the townships of Brampton-Bryan and Boresford with Pedwardine, in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, and containing 341 inhabitants, of which number, 101 are in the township of Brampton-Bryan, 5½ miles (E.) from Knighton. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 11. 0½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Barnabas, sustained considerable damage in the parliamentary war, during one of the sieges of the castle, which was eventually burnt by the royalists, and now lies in ruins, consisting chiefly of an arched gateway flanked by two circular towers, and fragments of the outer walls. About a mile from the church is Cornwall Knoll, on the summit of which are vestiges of a camp anciently occupied by the brave Caractacus, now overgrown with oak trees. Fairs for horned cattle, sheep, &c., are held on May 6th and August 5th. A school is endowed with property given by the Hon. Edward Harley, in 1720.

BRAMSHALL, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of TORMONSLow, county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Uttoxeter, containing 189 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £4. 3. 9., and in the patronage of Lord Willoughby de Broke. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. A Sunday school is supported by subscription.

BRAMSHAW, a parish partly in the hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, county of WILTS, but chiefly in the northern division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, New Forest (East) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6½ miles (N. N. W.) from Lyndhurst, containing 726 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BRAMSHILL (GREAT), a tything in the parish of EVERSLEY, hundred of HOLDSHOTT, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1½ mile (N. W. by N.) from Hartford Bridge, containing 187 inhabitants.

BRAMSHILL (LITTLE), a tything in the parish of EVERSLEY, hundred of HOLDSHOTT, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, containing 10 inhabitants.

BRAMSHOTT, a parish in the hundred of ALTON, Alton (North) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (W. by N.) from Haslemere, containing, with the hamlet of Liphook, 1006 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £18. 9. 2., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small cruciform edifice, principally in the early English style, with a low tower surmounted by a spire. At Liphook, fairs for the sale of live stock are held, on the first Wednesday in March and June 11th.

BRAMWITH (KIRK), a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (W. by S.) from Thorne, containing 252 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £12. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BRANCASTER, a parish in the hundred of SMITHDON, county of NORFOLK, 4½ miles (W. N. W.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 770 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £24, and in the patronage of the Duke of Beaufort. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here was the Roman station Brannodunum, at which an eminent commander, styled Count, or Earl, of the Saxon shore, presided over a troop of Dalmatian cavalry, for the defence of the coast against the Saxon invaders. The castle and station occupied about eight acres of ground, a little westward from the village, where numerous coins, vessels, and other relics have been found. A considerable portion of the materials was removed on the erection of a very extensive malt-house, called pre-eminently the great malt-house, three hundred and twelve feet in length, and thirty-one in breadth, adjoining a quay, or staith for ships, and all appearance of the station has been obliterated by the ploughshare. A free school and two almshouses were built by Robert Smith, about the close of the sixteenth century, and endowed with land by his sister: twenty-five boys are instructed, thirteen from this parish, and the rest, in equal numbers, from Thornham, Titchwell, and Burnham-Deepdale: the almshouses now accommodate four poor widows.

BRANCEPETH, a parish in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, comprising the townships of Brancepeth, Brandon with Byshottles, Crook with Billy-Row, Hedley-Hope, Hemlington-Row, Stockley, and Willington, and containing 1905 inhabitants, of which number, 539 are in the township of Brancepeth, 4½ miles (S. W.) from Durham. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £60. 10. 5., and in the patronage of R. E. D. Shaftoe, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Brandon, is a fine cruciform edifice, highly decorated within: the chancel is stalled and wainscoted with oak carved in tabernacle work, and has an ornamented ceiling: there are several monuments to the memory of deceased members of the family of Nevill, the ancient noble owners of Brancepeth castle, which stands a little to the south-west of the village: the old castle was almost wholly pulled down by the late Matthew Russel, Esq., who erected the present magnificent edifice on its site. Brancepeth is supposed to be a corruption of Brawn's path, from the number of wild boars that roamed throughout the district, for the purpose of chasing which, Richard III., when Duke of Gloucester (who was maternally descended from the Nevill family), frequently repaired hither. There are some coal-works and stone-quarries in the parish, also medicinal springs of a vitriolic and sulphureous kind.

BRANDESTON, a parish in the hundred of LOES, county of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (S.W.) from Framlingham, containing 458 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., and in the patronage of William Field, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BRANDISTONE, a parish in the hundred of EYNSFORD, county of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (E.S.E.) from Reepham, containing 91 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 12. 8½., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

BRANDON, a joint township with Byshottles, in the parish of BRANCEPETH, north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 3½ miles (W.S.W.) from Durham, containing, with Byshottles, 609 inhabitants. The village is occasionally called East Brandon, to distinguish it from a farm-hold within the township, bearing the name of West Brandon. Here is a paper-manufactory. On the summit of Brandon hill is an oblong mount, or tumulus, supposed to have been either the site of a beacon, or the burial-place of some departed hero.

BRANDON, a township in the parish of EGLINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8½ miles (S.S.E.) from Wooler, containing 118 inhabitants.

BRANDON, a market town and parish in the hundred of LACKFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 40 miles (N.W.) from Ipswich, and 78 (N.N.E.) from London, containing 1770 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the vicarage of Wangford annexed, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £20. 18. 1½., and in the patronage of the Representatives of the late Admiral Wilson. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The town lies on the southern bank of the Little Ouse, or Brandon river, which forms the northern boundary of the county, and is here crossed by a neat stone bridge, about a mile from which goods are laden and unladen for conveyance, by means of that river, to and from the Isle of Ely. Imbedded in a stratum of chalk, a mile westward from the town, lie continuous strata of the finest flint, of which gun-flints are made here in abundance, and conveyed to various parts of the kingdom: on the hills, within one hundred feet from the surface, are seven different strata of flint, separated by as many layers of pipe-clay. In addition to the trade in gun-flints there is considerable traffic in corn, malt, coal, timber, iron, bricks, tiles, &c.; and there are some extensive rabbit-warrens in the neighbourhood, that contribute to the supply of London. The market is held on Thursday, and there are fairs on February 14th, June 11th, and November 11th. A rent-charge of £30, given by Robert Wright, is applied to the instruction of children belonging to Brandon, Downham, Wangford, and Weeting; and a fund of £13 per annum was bequeathed, in 1664, by Joanna, widow of John Wright, for keeping the school-room in repair, and for the relief of the poor of Brandon, Downham, and Wangford. Brandon Camp, a square earthwork guarded by a single trench and a rampart, is supposed to have been the Bravinium of the Romans, and to have been occupied by Ostorius Scapula previously to the decisive victory which he obtained over the brave Caractacus. The Duke of Hamilton and Brandon takes his English title from this place.

BRANDON, a joint hamlet with Bretsford, in that part of the parish of WOLSTON which is in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 6 miles (E.S.E.) from Coventry, containing, with Bretsford, 351 inhabitants.

BRANDON (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N.N.W.) from Wymondham, containing 236 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 3. 9., and in the patronage of F. R. Reynolds, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BRANDBURTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Brandsburton and Moor-Town, and containing 591 inhabitants, of which number, 562 are in the township of Brandsburton, 8½ miles (N.E.) from Beverley. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £24. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the later style of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This is a thriving village: fairs are held on May 14th, and every alternate Wednesday throughout the year. Petty sessions take place every Thursday at the Cross Keys Inn. The sum of £24 is annually paid to a schoolmaster for teaching seventeen children. In 1601, the manor was assigned in trust to the lord mayor and aldermen of London, by Lady Dacres, for the benefit of Emanuel Hospital, Westminster, founded for old maids and bachelors.

BRANDS-FEE, a liberty partly in the parish of HITCHENDEN, hundred of DESBOROUGH, and partly in the parishes of GREAT and LITTLE MISSENDEN, hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3½ miles (N.N.E.) from High Wycombe. The population is returned with the parishes.

BRANSBY, a township in the parish of STOW, wapentake of WELL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (N.W.) from Lincoln, containing 75 inhabitants.

BRANSBY, a parish in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (E.N.E.)

from Easingwold, containing, with Stearsby, 277 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 8. 11½., and in the patronage of Thomas Smith, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BRANSCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of COLYTON, county of DEVON, 4½ miles (E.) from Sidmouth, containing 773 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £18. 15. 10. The church is dedicated to St. Winifred. Here are extensive quarries of freestone.

BRANSDALE (EAST SIDE), a township in the parish of KIRKBY-MOORSIDE, wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, 11 miles (N. W.) from Pickering, containing 455 inhabitants.

BRANSDALE (WEST SIDE) a township : h at part of the parish of KIRKDALE which is in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, 11 miles (N. by W.) from Helmsley, containing 286 inhabitants.

BRANSFORD, a chapelry partly in the parish of POWICK, but chiefly in that of LEIGH, lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, 4½ miles (W. S. W.) from Worcester, containing 264 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BRANSGORE, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, New Forest (West) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6 miles (N. E. by N.) from Christchurch, with which the population is returned. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Christchurch. The chapel was built in 1823, at the expense of £2800, defrayed by the parliamentary commissioners: it is a neat edifice, in the later style of English architecture, with a tower and spire, and contains four hundred and sixty-two free sittings.

BRANSON, a township in that part of the parish of BURTON UPON TRENT which is in the northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from Burton upon Trent, containing 412 inhabitants.

BRANSTON, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 8 miles (N. E. by N.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 282 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The church is dedicated to St. Guthlake.

BRANSTON, a parish in the liberty of the city of LINCOLN, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (S. E.) from Lincoln, containing 702 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18. 17. 11., and in the patronage of the Rev. P. Curtois. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BRANTHAM, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Manningtree, containing 358 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of East Bergholt annexed, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £25. 10., and in the patronage of J. Rowley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The river Stour, which here branches off in two directions, is navigable on the southern side of the parish.

BRANTHWAITE, a township in the parish of DEAN, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 6 miles (S. W.) from Cockermouth, containing 355 inhabitants. There is a meeting-house for Methodists. Several years ago, a considerable quantity of a ferruginous kind of limestone, called catscalp, was obtained here, and sent to the iron-works at Clifton and Seaton, but this branch of trade has ceased. There are quarries of white freestone, a woollen-manufactory, a paper-mill, and two corn-mills, in the township.

BRANTINGHAM, a parish comprising the township of Thorpe-Brantingham, in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, and the chapelry of Ellerker in the wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, East riding of the county of YORK, and containing 423 inhabitants, of which number, 174 are in the township of Thorpe-Brantingham, 1½ mile (S. E. by E.) from South Cave. The living is a discharged vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Howdenshire, rated in the king's books at £12. 9. 2., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BRANTON, a township in the parish of EGLINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Wooler, containing 111 inhabitants. The Presbyterians have a meeting-house here.

BRANTON-GREEN, a joint township with Upper Dunsforth, in that part of the parish of ALDBOROUGH which is in the upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 3½ miles (S. E.) from Aldborough. The population is returned with Upper Dunsforth.

BRANXTON, a parish in the western division of GLENDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9¼ miles (N. W.) from Wooler, containing 253 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. In June 1524, a skirmish took place between Lord Fowberry, at the head of one hundred cavalry, and a party of Scottish infantry, who, in number about five hundred, crossed the Tweed, for the purpose of plundering traders resorting to Berwick fair, but they were driven back with considerable loss. In Branxton West-field, about half a mile north-west of the village, stands an unhewn pillar of basalt, commemorative of the battle of Flodden, which was fought in the adjoining parish of Ford, in 1513. The Rev. Percival Stockdale, a miscellaneous writer of considerable merit, but of eccentric habits, was born here, in 1733, during the incumbency of his father.

BRASHFIELD, a hamlet in the parish of MITCHELMERSH, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, containing 284 inhabitants.

BRASSINGTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of BRADBORNE which is in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, 3½ miles (W. by N.)

from Wirksworth, containing 629 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The chapel exhibits various styles of architecture, from the Norman to the later English. A plot of land was given by Mr. Thurston Dale, in 1742, now in the occupation of a schoolmaster, for which he instructs twelve children.

BRASTED, a parish partly in the hundred of WESTERHAM, but chiefly in the hundred of CONSHATH, lathe of SUTTON at HOME, county of KENT, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Seven-Oaks, containing 970 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the exempt deanery of Shoreham, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £22. 6. 8. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. The parish is divided into Brasted-Upland and Brasted-Weald, and connected with it is a district called Brasted-Ville, not dependent on any hundred, having a high constable of its own. The rivers Eden and Darent flow through the parish. A fair is held annually on Holy Thursday.

BRATTLEBY, a parish in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (N. N. W.) from Lincoln, containing 157 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 10., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, has been rebuilt, but part of the ancient walls still remain.

BRATTON, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of WESTBURY, county of WILTS, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Westbury, containing, with Hawkeridge and Haywood, 1295 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Bratton Castle is a strong Danish encampment, where the Danes, after their defeat by the Saxons, held out fourteen days. On the slope of the hill beneath it is the figure of a horse, cut out, as tradition relates, by the troops of Alfred, in memory of the victory which they obtained on Eddington down: several fragments of military weapons have been dug up in the vicinity of this earthwork.

BRATTON (ST. MAUR), a parish in the hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, county of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (W. N. W.) from Wincanton, containing 80 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £5. 4. 7., and in the patronage of T. and G. Messiter, Esqrs. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

BRATTON-CLOVELLY, a parish in the hundred of LIFTON, county of DEVON, 8 miles (W. S. W.) from Oakhampton, containing 705 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £21. 5. 2½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. On an eminence about three miles northward is Broadbury Castle, an ancient earthwork defended by a single vallum and fosse.

BRATTON-FLEMING, a parish in the hundred of BRAUNTON, county of DEVON, 5½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnstaple, containing 490 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £29. 15. 5., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. At Nightacott, in this neighbourhood, are six upright stones, the supposed remains of a Druidical circle.

BRAUGHIN, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of BRAUGHIN, county of HERTFORD, 10 miles (N. E.) from Hertford, and 28 (N.) from London, containing 1228 inhabitants. This place, in the Norman survey called Brachinges, and by the Saxons Brooking, from the streams and meadows in its vicinity, was anciently a town of considerable importance, and a demesne of the Saxon kings: by some historians it is supposed to have been a Roman station, and the remains of a camp may still be distinguished. The town is pleasantly situated on the small river Quin, near its confluence with the Rib, and still exhibits traces of its former greatness. The market, which was granted in the reign of Stephen, has been discontinued, but a fair is held on Whit-Monday and the following day. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £19. 13. 4., and in the patronage of E. Harvey, Esq. and others. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome and spacious edifice, with a square embattled tower surmounted by a spire: on the north side of the chancel is a building, formerly the sepulchral chapel of the Brograve family, now divided into a school-room and a vestry-room. There is a place of worship for Independents. The school has a small endowment; and a National school for forty girls is supported by subscription. Mr. Jennings gave a rent-charge of £6. 13. 4., of which twenty shillings is applied to the repair of the bridges, and the remainder to charitable uses; he also gave a cottage, with an orchard containing one acre, for the residence of an aged couple, on condition that they should take care of the trees, in order that the fruit should be distributed annually among the poor, by the minister and churchwardens. Near the churchyard is an old house, now occupied by poor families, which was formerly fitted up for the reception of a poor couple on their marriage: it contained a furnished kitchen, a large hall for the celebration of a marriage feast, and a chamber for a bridal bed and furniture. There is also an almshouse for aged widows, who are at present nominated by Mr. Bonest, of Stonebury. On a lofty eminence to the south of the village are the remains of an ancient encampment, of which part of the vallum and fortifications may be traced; the form is quadrilateral, and the area contains nearly forty acres; the south-western angle is rounded, and on the north it is defended by a triple rampart: near it is a wood, called Camp wood.

BRAUNCEWELL, a parish in the wapentake of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (N. N. W.) from Sleaford, containing 77 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united with the vicarage of Anwick, and the rectory of Dunsby, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 8. 11½. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BRAUNSTON, a parish in the hundred of FAWSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (N. W.) from Daventry, containing 1236 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £31. 2. 11½., and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Jesus College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a spacious handsome edifice, with a fine octagonal crocketed spire, one hundred and fifty feet high. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The Grand Junction and Oxford canals unite in this parish. Near the upper extremity of the village is an ancient cross, the shaft of which is composed of a single block of stone, eleven feet high. William Makepeace, in 1733, gave land, now producing about £30 a year, which, together with voluntary contributions, is applied towards the support of a National school. A considerable portion of this lordship is held by the following tenure:—on the death of a copyholder, his widow is obliged to appear at the succeeding manorial court, and there present a leathern purse containing a groat, whereby she becomes tenant for life, subject to a renewal of her appearance every court day. Dr. Edward Reynolds, Bishop of Norwich, and an able polemical writer, was curate of this parish for several years.

BRAUNSTON, a parish in the soke of OAKHAM, county of RUTLAND, 2½ miles (S. W.) from Oakham, containing 423 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Hambleton, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a small endowment for the instruction of twenty children, given by Augustine Burton, in 1614.

BRAUNSTONE, a chapelry in the parish of GLENFIELD, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 2½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Leicester, containing 214 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BRAUNSTONE-FRITH, a liberty in the parish of GLENFIELD, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Leicester, containing 10 inhabitants.

BRAUNTON, a parish in the hundred of BRAUNTON, county of DEVON, 5½ miles (W. N. W.) from Barnstaple, containing 1699 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £16. 3. 6½. The church is dedicated to St. Brannock, from whom the parish is supposed to derive its name. There is a meeting-house for Independents. A free school was founded by the Rev. William Chaloner, in 1667, to which Arthur Acland, Esq., in 1690, gave land, now producing £75 a year: the children are instructed on the Madras system. There is also a charity school with a small endowment, the gift of Nicholas Beare, in 1751. The parish, which contains several villages, is bounded on the west by the Bristol channel, and has the navigable river Torr on the south, at the mouth of which there is a lighthouse, in addition to another structure of the same kind in the parish. A small tract of land here, formerly covered by the sea, is considered the richest in the county: some of the lands descend to younger sons, and a widow is entitled to a lifehold interest in her husband's inheritance so long as she preserves her widowhood. Within the parish are the remains of several ancient chapels.

BRAWBY, a township in the parish of SALTON, within the liberty of St. Peter of York, East riding, though locally in the wapentake of Ryedale, North riding, of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (N. W.) from New Malton, containing 188 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BRAWITH, a joint township with Knayton, in that part of the parish of LEAK which is in the wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, 3½ miles (N. N. W.) from Thirsk. The population is returned with Knayton.

BRAXTED (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of WITHAM, county of ESSEX, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Witham, containing 508 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has some Norman remains. There is a place of worship for Independents. A priory of Black canons, in honour of St. Nicholas, was founded at Tip-tree, in this parish, in the time of Edward I., which, at the time of its dissolution, had a revenue of £22. 6. 4.

BRAXTED (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of WITHAM, county of ESSEX, 1 mile (E.) from Witham, containing 117 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Francis Capell, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is an ancient edifice, with a circular chancel.

BRAY, a parish in the hundred of BRAY, county of BERKS, comprising the divisions of Bray, Touchen, Water-Oakley, and a part of the town of Maidenhead, and containing 3159 inhabitants, of which number, 961 are in the division of Bray, 1¼ mile (S. E.) from Maidenhead. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £25. 4. 4½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a spacious edifice, with a tower on the south side. Bray is, by some, considered to occupy the site of the Roman station Bibracte. A custom prevails in the principal manor in this parish, agreeably to which, in default of male heirs, lands are not divided among females of the same degree of kindred, but descend only to the eldest. Bray now forms part of the royal demesne, being included within the liberty of Windsor Forest, and enjoys some privileges, among which is exemption from toll in the adjacent market town. A court leet is held annually. Fuller, in his "Worthies," relates a story of a vicar of this parish, who unhesitatingly conformed to every change of religion that took place during the reigns of Henry VIII. and his three immediate successors, being steady in the exercise of one principle only, which was to live and die "Vicar of Bray." A school for the instruction of twenty boys was founded by William Cherry, Esq., who endowed it with £500, to which Townley Ward, Esq. gave £100 three per cents.: the annual income is £34. 10., and the master has a rent-free residence. Jesus Hospital was founded, in 1627, by William Goddard, Esq., for forty poor persons, six of whom must be free of the Fishmongers' Company, under whose governorship it is placed: each of the inmates is allowed eight shillings per month. Attached to the hospital is a chapel, in which divine service is regularly performed. Sir John Norris also gave eighteen tenements, which are assigned rent-free to the poor.

BRAY (HIGH), a parish in the hundred of SHERWILL, county of DEVON, 6 miles (N. by W.) from South Molton, containing 278 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £14. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown by reason of lunacy. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BRAYBROOK, a parish in the hundred of ROTHWELL, county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Market-Harborough, containing 379 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £23. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Luke Young, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A small endowment for the instruction of poor children arises from two bequests of £50 each, one by John Mapletoft, in 1684, and the other by Samuel Hawes, in 1722. Braybrook gives the title of baron to the family of Neville-Griffin.

BRAYDON, a hamlet in the parish of PURTON, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Cricklade, containing 70 inhabitants.

BRAYFIELD (COLD), a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Olney, containing 80 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Lavendon, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BRAYTOFT, a parish in the Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Spilsby, containing 179 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18. 3. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

BRAYTON, a joint township with Aspatia, in the parish of ASPATRIA, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 9 miles (N. N. E.) from Cocker-mouth. The population is returned with Aspatia.

BRAYTON, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Barlow, and the townships of Brayton, Burn, Gateforth, Hambleton, and Thorpe-Willoughby, and containing 1489 inhabitants, of which number, 252 are in the township of Brayton, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. W.) from Selby. The living is a discharged vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Selby, rated in the king's books at £7. 14. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Hon. E. Petre. The church, dedicated to St. Wilfrid, exhibits various styles of architecture; the tower is Norman, surmounted by an octagonal lantern, from which rises a lofty spire, in the later English style; the south doorway, and the arch leading into the chancel, are Norman, highly enriched; the chancel is in the decorated, and the nave in the later, English style. Part of the parish is skirted by the river Ouse, and a canal, connecting that river with the Aire, passes through the centre of it. A rent-charge, of £5 was given by the Rev. Thomas Morritt, towards the support of a school.

BREADSALL, a parish in the hundred of APPLETREE, though locally in that of Morleston and Litchurch, county of DERBY, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Derby, containing 544 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coven-try, rated in the king's books at £28. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir G. Crewe, Bart. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a large handsome structure with a lofty spire: on the south side of the chancel is a monument to the memory of Erasmus Darwin, the poet, physician, and botanist, who died here in 1802. The Little Eaton canal and railway pass through the parish. John Hieron, a nonconformist divine of considerable celebrity, was incumbent of this parish from 1644 to 1662. A school-room was erected on the waste, in 1788, at the expense of Sir Henry Harpur, and some of the parishioners; it is endowed with £10. 8. per annum, arising from a bequest of £200 by the Rev. John Clayton, in 1745, for which seventeen scholars are taught reading. Here was anciently a house of friars hermits, afterwards converted into a small priory for monks of the Augustine order, the entire revenue of which, at the dissolution, was not more than £13. 0. 8.: it is supposed to have been founded by some member of the family of Dethick.

BREAGE, a parish in the hundred of KERRIER, county of CORNWALL, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Helston, containing 3668 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacies of Cûry, Germoe, and Gunwalloe annexed, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £33, and in the patronage of the Crown. The parish, which is contiguous to the English channel, contains a celebrated tin mine, called Wheal-Vor. There is a small endowment, arising from various benefactions, for the support of parochial schools. On Tregonin hill are vestiges of a circular encampment.

BREAMORE, a parish and liberty in the New Forest (West) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Fordingbridge, containing 549 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the patronage of the Duke of Manchester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Avon is navigable on the eastern side of this parish. A priory of Black canons, dedicated to St. Michael, was founded by Baldwin de Redveris, and his uncle Hugh, about the end of the reign of Henry I.; at the time of its suppression, the establishment consisted of a prior and nine canons, and the revenue amounted to £200. 5. 1.

BREANE, a parish in the hundred of BEMPSTONE, but locally in the hundred of Brent with Wrrington, county of SOMERSET, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Axbridge, containing 86 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 0. 5., and in the patronage of R. Hooper, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Bridget. This parish has Uphill bay and the Bristol channel on the north, Berrow bay on the west (on the margin of which the village lies), and the river Axe on the east. The sea, in 1825, broke through a natural barrier of sand hills, and inundated a part of it, doing considerable damage to property. Breane Down is an elevated peninsula, extending a mile into the sea, and strikingly conspicuous from various parts of the surrounding country. A great quantity of samphire is gathered on the shore, and pickled previously to being conveyed to the inland towns.

BREARTON, a township in that part of the parish of KNARESBOROUGH which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Knareborough, containing 226 inhabitants.

BREASON, a chapelry in the parish of SAWLEY, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.S.E.) from Derby, containing 579 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Risley, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Sawley in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael.

BRECCLES (LITTLE), a hamlet in the parish and hundred of SHROPHAM, county of NORFOLK. The population is returned with the parish. This was anciently a distinct parish, the living of which was a rectory, but it was finally annexed to Shropham before 1332. The church has long been demolished.

BRECKENBROUGH, a joint township with Newsam, in that part of the parish of KIRBY-WISK which is in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (W.) from Thirsk. The population is returned with Newsam.

BRECKLES, a parish in the hundred of WAYLAND, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S.E. by S.) from Watton, containing 140 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. 11., endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir R. Gardner, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, has a tower circular at the base and octangular above.

BREDBURY, a township in the parish of STOCKPORT, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from Stockport, containing 2010 inhabitants. The Peak Forest canal passes in the vicinity.

BREDE, a parish in the hundred of GOSTROW, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, 6 miles (E.N.E.) from Battle, containing 902 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £12. 10. 5., and in the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Hele. The church, dedicated to St. George, is principally in the later style of English architecture. The parish is bounded on the south by Brede channel, over which there is a bridge. Here is a foundry for cast-iron.

BREDENBURY, a parish in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 3 miles (W.N.W.) from Bromyard, containing 62 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £2. 1. 10½., endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Charles Dutton, Esq.

BREDFIELD, a parish partly in the hundred of LOES, but chiefly in the hundred of WILFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.W. by W.) from Wickham-Market, containing 402 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BREDGAR, a parish in the hundred of MILTON, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.W. by S.) from Sittingbourne, containing 508 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of Sir E. Dering, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is partly of Norman architecture, and, prior to the dissolution, had a small college attached to it. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Eight children are instructed in reading by a schoolmistress, for £5 per annum, arising from an investment in land of £100 given by William Thatcher, in 1718.

BREDHURST, a parish in the hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.S.E.) from Chatham, containing 134 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and in the patronage of the Rector of Hollingbourn. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, consists only of one aisle and a chancel, with a tower, surmounted by a low spire: a small ruinous chapel, formerly the burial-place of the family of Kemsley, adjoins it. The ancient village is said to have stood a short distance off, near a wood, where there are several wells visible.

BREDICOT, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Worcester, containing 37 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £3. 18. 1½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The church is dedicated to St. James.

BREDON, a parish comprising the chapelry of Norton, and the hamlets of Bredon, Hardwick with Mittons, Kinsham, and Westmancote in the middle division, and the chapelry of Cutsdean in the upper division, of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, and containing 1239 inhabitants, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Tewkesbury. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the rector, rated in the king's books at £72. 11. 0½., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Keysall. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, has some specimens of Norman architecture, and contains, among other monuments, one to the memory of Dr. Prideaux, who was dismissed from the bishoprick of Worcester during the parliamentary war. The river Avon flows past this parish, and separates it from Gloucestershire on the west. From the summit of Bredon hill there is a pleasing view of the vales of Evesham and Cotswold, including the winding course of the Severn. About the commencement of the present century, a fissure opened in the rock in the side of this hill, nearly two hundred yards long, fifteen feet wide, and of unequal depth: the top of the hill is crowned by a Roman encampment, with a double trench. William Hancocke, in 1718, gave land, the rental of which is applied in instructing, clothing, and apprenticing twelve boys. There is an almshouse for eight poor females. Bredon was given by Ethelbald, King of Mercia, previously to the year 716, to his kinsman Eanulph, in order that he might found a monastery here, in honour of St. Peter, which, previously to the Conquest, was annexed to the bishoprick of Worcester. At Mitton, in this parish, are the ruins of a chapel.

BREDWARDINE, a parish in the hundred of WEBTREE, county of HEREFORD, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.N.W.) from Hereford, containing 379 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. T. Spurdens. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. On the banks of the Wye, about two miles above Moccas, are the ruins of Bredwardine castle.

BREDY (LITTLE), a chapelry in that part of the parish of LONG BREDY which is in the hundred of UGGSOMBE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Dorchester, containing 126 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael. Here is a large quarry, from which the stone for erecting Winterborne abbey was obtained. The river Bride, or Brede, has its source in a small lake here, called Bride Head, near which is a Druidical circle of stones. A Sunday school is supported by Robert Williams, Esq., at whose expense the children are also clothed.

BREDY (LONG), a parish in the hundred of EGGERTON, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 8 miles (W.) from Dorchester, containing 291 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £19. 12. 1., and in the patronage of R. Williams, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BREEDON, a parish in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Ashby de la Zouch, comprising the chapelries of Worthington and Staunton-Harrold, the hamlets of Tongue and Willson, and the liberty of Newbold, and containing 2630 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 2. 8., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Stamford and Warrington. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Hardulph, stands on the summit of an elevated limestone rock, at the foot of which lies the village, where are considerable lime-works. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Breedon is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. By deed, in 1736, Francis Commins gave £300 towards the support of a school for boys; and Eliz. Commins £583. 1. $4\frac{1}{2}$., for a school for girls. A cell for Black canons was founded, soon after 1144, by the prior and monks of St. Oswald, at Nosthall, to whom the church and some lands here had been given by Robert Ferrers, Earl of Nottingham; its revenue, at the dissolution, was £25. 8. 1.: the church which belonged to it is now the parochial church.

BREEM, a chapelry in the parish of NEWLAND, hundred of ST. BRIAVELLS, county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Blakeney, containing 417 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Hereford, and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Newland. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, has lately received an addition of one hundred and twenty sittings, eighty of them free, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels gave £100. Twelve children are taught reading for £2. 10. a year, being the interest of £50 given by Mrs. Gough.

BREIGHTMET, a township in the parish of BOLTON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Great Bolton, containing 963 inhabitants. In 1739, William Hulton gave land for the erection of a school-house, which was built in 1750: it is endowed with £10 per annum, being the interest of £200 given by William Baguley, in 1725, and £10 per annum arising from a tenement and land given by an unknown benefactor, for which twenty-nine children are taught reading.

BREIGHTON, a township in the parish of BUBWITH, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Howden, containing 179 inhabitants. The village lies on the eastern bank of the river Derwent, opposite to the ferry of Menthorpe.

BREINTON, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Hereford, containing 259 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £1. 10. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The school has a small endowment.

BREMILL, a parish in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Chippenham, containing, with the chapelry of Foxham, 1443 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Highway annexed, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £15. 15., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a venerable and interesting edifice, with a massive square tower, adorned with battlements and pinnacles: between the aisle and the chancel is a handsome and entire rood-loft, beautifully carved; the chancel contains several monuments, and in the churchyard are numerous epitaphs written by the present vicar, the Rev. Mr. Bowles, the poet, who, in 1827, published an historical description of this parish. He has also partially altered and embellished the parsonage-house, to assimilate it to the architectural style of the church, and tastefully disposed the garden and pleasure grounds. At the hamlet of Studley, in this parish, was a Roman station, supposed by Mr. Bowles to have been an outpost to the more important station of Verlucio, the site of which has been ascertained, by Sir Richard Colt Hoare, to be near Wanshouse, about four miles distant: numerous coins, chiefly struck in the reign of Constantine, and British earthenware, have been dug up. The Roman road Watling-street passed through the parish, and in the vicinity is the course of the ancient rampart Wansdike. Avebury, a celebrated British temple, supposed to have been raised in honour of the chief Celtic deity, Teutates, and Tan-hill and Silbury, two lofty eminences appropriated to the performance of their pagan rites, are situated within a short distance: on Tan-hill a fair is held annually on August 6th. There is a Moravian establishment at Tytherton, in this parish. Maud Heath, in 1478, gave land and houses in trust for keeping in repair an ancient paved footway between Bremhill and Chippenham, the produce of which being greater than the outlay, a considerable fund has accumulated. On the summit of Wick hill is an upright stone bearing an inscription commemorative of the bequest, and on an eminence near Chippenham is another, these being the two extremities of the road. Midway, on the banks of the Avon, is a more interesting monument, with a sundial, on the sides of which are monitory inscriptions in Latin, which have been translated into English verse by Mr. Bowles. Near the church are the ivy-mantled remains of a portion of the tenements belonging to the grange of the abbot of Malmesbury. The ancient mansion of the Hungerfords here has been converted into a farm-house.

BREMILHAM, a parish in the hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Malmesbury, containing 25 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £4. 1. 8., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lady Northwich.

BRENCHLEY, a parish in the hundred of BRENCHLEY and HORSEMONDEN, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 4½ miles (N.) from Lamberhurst, containing 2264 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £12. 18. 9., and in the patronage of G. Courthope, Esq. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient cruciform structure, built chiefly of sand-stone, with a lofty tower. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A rent-charge of £3 was given by John Porter, in 1763, for which five poor children are taught by a schoolmistress.

BRENDON, a parish in the hundred of SHERWILL, county of DEVON, 15½ miles (E.) from Ilfracombe, containing 275 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £9. 4., and in the patronage of Sir A. Chichester, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Brendon.

BRENKLEY, a township in the parish of PONTESLAND, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7½ miles (N. by W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, containing 37 inhabitants.

BRENT (EAST), a parish in the hundred of BRENT with WRINGTON, county of SOMERSET, 4½ miles (W. S. W.) from Axbridge, containing 820 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £30. 11. 3., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Methodists. This appears to have been the scene of various military transactions at an early period: on the summit of a lofty conical hill, termed Brent Knoll, are vestiges of a large double intrenchment, of an irregular form, within which, and at the base of the hill, Roman coins, fibulae, urns, heads of spears, and other Roman relics, have been found. The West Saxons are also supposed to have occupied this position, in their contests with the Mercians; and it is related that Alfred subsequently defended himself here against the Danes. A plot of ground to the south retains the name Battleborough, probably from some battle having been fought upon it. Cornua ammonis and other fossils have frequently been found. Here was anciently a cell to the abbey of Glastonbury.

BRENT (SOUTH), a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of STANBOROUGH, county of DEVON, 7½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Ashburton, containing 1401 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £29. 14. 4½., and in the patronage of the Rev. George Baker. The church is dedicated to St. Patrick. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The manor anciently belonged to the abbot of Buckfastleigh, who possessed the power of inflicting punishment for capital crimes. The river Avon pursues its course for six miles through the parish: there were formerly tin-works on Brent moor, but they have ceased operation. The market was held on Friday, but it has fallen into disuse: there are fairs for cattle on the last Tuesday in April and September. A court leet and a court baron are held for the manor. About fifty poor children are taught reading, for an annual sum of £13. 4., arising from land given by John Wilcocks, and subsequently by Thomas Acland, in 1733.

BRENT (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of BRENT with WRINGTON, county of SOMERSET, 6 miles (S. W. by S.) from Axbridge, containing 764 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £25. 17. 8½., and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A fair for cattle was formerly held on Old Michaelmas-day.

BRENT-ELEIGH, or ELY, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, 1½ mile (E. by S.) from Lavenham, containing 298 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Robert Frost, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary: at the end of the chancel an apartment was built by Dr. Colman, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, in which he placed a collection of useful books for a parochial library. Edward Colman, Esq., a member of the same family, assigned, in 1730, an almshouse comprising twelve apartments, with a small endowment, for six widowers and six widows. Henry III. granted permission to hold a market here, but it has long been discontinued.

BRENTFORD, a market town comprising Old Brentford, in the parish of EALING, Kensington division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, and New Brentford, in the parish of HANWELL, hundred of ELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Hyde-Park Corner, on the great western road. New Brentford contains 2036 inhabitants, and the population of Old Brentford is returned with Ealing. This place, anciently called Brainforde, takes its name from an ancient ford on the small river Brent. In 1016, Edmund Ironside having compelled the Danes to raise the siege of London, pursued them to this place, where they were routed with great slaughter. A chapter of the Order of the Garter was held at Brentford in 1445; and in the 25th of Henry VI., an hospital, for a master and several brethren, of the Nine Orders of Angels, was founded in a chapel beyond the bridge, at the western end of the town, anciently known as West Brainford: the revenue appears to have been £40, and the site was granted to Edward, Duke of Somerset, in the 1st of Edward VI. In 1558, six Protestants were here burnt at the stake, on account of their religious tenets. In the parliamentary war during the reign of Charles I., this place was the scene of a battle between the contending parties; the royalists, though victorious, were obliged to retire from the field, by the sudden arrival of a strong reinforcement to the enemy from London. For his services in this battle, which took place on the 12th of November, 1642, Patrick Ruthen, Earl of Forth, in Scotland, was created an English peer, by the title of Earl of Brentford, which title was subsequently conferred, by William III., upon Mareschal Schomberg, who accompanied him to England at the Revolution. Several skirmishes also took place, in 1647, between the royal guards stationed here and the parliamentary troops quartered at Hounslow. The town consists principally of one street, upwards of a mile in length, partly paved, and lighted with gas under an act of parliament obtained in 1825. The river Thames, on which are several wharfs, separates it from Kew Gardens on the south; and over this river, at the eastern extremity of the town, is a handsome stone bridge leading to Kew: the Brent, uniting the Grand Junction canal with the Thames, crosses it on the north, and over this is a neat stone bridge, erected by the county in 1825, replacing one of great antiquity, which was at one time supported by a toll levied upon Jewish passengers exclusively. In Old Brentford is a large malt-distillery, an extensive brewery, and a soap-manufactory, which afford employment to many of the labouring poor; but the chief trade of the town is derived from its situation on the great western road, and from the union of the Grand Junction canal with the Thames. The market is on Tuesday; and fairs are held on May 17th, 18th, and 19th, for cattle, and September 12th, 13th, and 14th, for toys and pedlary.

The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session for the division every alternate week: the township of New Brentford is within the manor of Boston, but consists only of customary freeholds. A court of requests for the recovery of debts under 40s., the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundreds of Elthorne and Spelthorne, is held here during the summer half year, and during the winter at Uxbridge. The parliamentary elections for the county take place at New Brentford, it being the county town. The living of New Brentford is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rector of Hanwell. The chapel, dedicated to St. Lawrence, with the exception of the tower, was rebuilt of brick in 1762; annexed to it is a house for the residence of the minister. The chapel of Old Brentford, dedicated to St. George, was rebuilt in 1770, by subscription: it is a chapel of ease to the vicarage of Ealing. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. A charity school for boys, established by subscription in 1703, was endowed by Lady Capel, in 1719, with the twelfth part of an estate, yielding at present £37. 10. per annum: the endowment, enlarged by subsequent benefactions, produces an annual income of £143. 7. 6. The charity school for girls is endowed with benefactions producing about £145 per annum: there is also a National school, supported by subscription. Mrs. Mary Spencer, in 1658, gave a rent-charge of £6 for apprenticing children; for which purpose also, in 1692, Lord Ossulston bequeathed £100, producing £5. 14. per annum. Several human skeletons have at various times been dug up in the neighbourhood.

BRENTINGBY, a chapelry partly in the parish of THORPE-ARNOLD, and partly in the parish of WYFORDBY, hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Melton-Mowbray. The population is returned with Wyfordby. The chapel is dependent on the church of Thorpe-Arnold. The Melton-Mowbray and Oakham canal crosses the chapelry.

BRENTOR, a parish in the hundred of TAVISTOCK, county of DEVON, 4 miles (N.) from Tavistock, containing 151 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, occupies the summit of a lofty isolated rocky eminence, and serves as a land-mark for vessels entering Plymouth harbour. The small river Lid runs through this parish, in which there is also a fine sheet of water, called Stowford lake. Here are mines of manganese.

BRENTWOOD, a chapelry (formerly a market town) in the parish of SOUTH WEALD, hundred of CHAFFORD, county of ESSEX, 11 miles (S.W.) from Chelmsford, and 18 (E.N.E.) from London, on the road to Norwich, containing 1423 inhabitants. The name, which is of Saxon origin, signifies a burnt wood; the woods which previously occupied the site having been burnt down. The town is pleasantly situated on a commanding eminence, and consists principally of one street, the houses in which are, in general, ancient and irregularly built: the inhabitants are supplied with excellent water from wells. Races take place occasionally on a common near the town. There are cavalry barracks at Warley, about a mile and a half distant. The market has been discontinued: the fairs are on July 18th and October 15th, for cattle. Courts leet and baron are held occasionally by the lord of the manor of South Weald. Petty sessions for the division take place here every Thursday. The assizes were formerly held here: part of the old town-hall, which is still remaining, has been converted into a butcher's shop, and part into a blacksmith's shop. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of London, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Christopher Thomas Tower, Esq. The chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a small ancient edifice, partly in the early, and partly in the later, style of English architecture: within is a rude image of its tutelar saint, carved in wood. There is a meeting-house for Independents. The free grammar school was founded and endowed, in 1537, by Sir Anthony Browne, Knt., and is open to all boys residing within three miles of Brentwood: the income arising from the endowment is £1452. 7. per annum, which, according to the intention of the founder, is paid to the master, subject to an allowance of £10 per annum each to five alms-persons, and to the expense of keeping the school premises and almshouses in repair: the school is under the direction of a patron, the master, and two guardians. An exhibition of £6 per annum to Caius College, Cambridge, was founded by Dr. Plume, with preference to Chelmsford, Brentwood, and Maldon.

BRENZETT, a parish partly in the hundred of ALOESBRIDGE, but chiefly in the liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Romney, containing 238 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 11½., and in the patronage of J. D. Brockman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Eanswide. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BREOCK (ST.), a parish in the hundred of PYDER, county of CORNWALL, 1 mile (W. S. W.) from Wade-Bridge, containing 1225 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £41. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Sir W. Molesworth, Bart. The river Camel flows on the northern and eastern sides of the parish, and is navigable as far as Wadebridge, where there is a fine bridge of sixteen arches over it, and a canal has been projected to extend the navigation to Bodmin. There is a cromlech on the summit of an eminence in this parish, which commands an extensive view of the coast.

BREREHURST, a hamlet in the parish of WOLSTANTON, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 714 inhabitants.

BRERETON with SMETHWICK, a parish in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Sandbach, containing 624 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £7. 0. 5., and in the patronage of James Royds, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a stately structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a roof of carved oak; it was formerly a chapel of ease to the church at Astbury, but was made parochial, and endowed with the tithes of Brereton and Smethwick, in the reign of Henry VIII.; it contains several monuments of the Lords Brereton and the Smethwick family. There is a place of worship for Calvinistic dissenters. Fairs for cattle are held in the second weeks in April and November. The sum of £20 per annum, arising from two farms, was given by Mr. Jupson, for the benefit of the poor.

BRESSINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of DISS, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Diss, containing 702 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was rebuilt, with the exception of the chancel, in 1527, having been commenced some time previously by Sir Roger Pilkington, Knt., lord of the manor. Conduit meadow, in this parish, is so called from a spacious conduit, now in a ruinous state, constructed by Sir Richard de Boyland, to supply some baths, and an extensive moat which encompassed his grounds.

BRETTY, county of DERBY.—See BRADBY.

BRETFORTON, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of BLACKENHURST, county of WORCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Evesham, containing 451 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £6. 5., endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £1100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. Dr. Timbrill. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

BRETHERTON, a township in the parish of CROSTON, hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, 10 miles (N. N. E.) from Ormskirk, containing 748 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A free school was built, in 1654, at the expense of Mr. James Fletcher, who endowed it with £230, to which various donations have since been added: the annual income is now about £112, for which the boys and girls within the township are taught reading gratuitously.

BRETSFORD, a joint hamlet with Brandon, in that part of the parish of WOLSTON which is in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Coventry. The population is returned with Brandon.

BRETENHAM, a parish in the hundred of SHROPHAM, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Thetford, containing 50 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was, with the parsonage-house, burnt down in 1693, but the nave of the former was rebuilt soon after.

BRETENHAM, a parish in the hundred of COSFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Bileston, containing 280 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £11. 3. 11½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. This was probably the site of the Roman station Combretonium; though some have endeavoured to fix it at Brettenham in Norfolk, where some Roman coins have been found.

BRETTON (MONK), a chapelry in the parish of ROYSTON, wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (N. E.) from Barnesley, containing 916 inhabitants. A Cluniac monastery, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was founded at the commencement of the reign of Henry II., the revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., amounted to £323. 8. 2. An almshouse, comprising six tenements, was founded, as it is thought, by Dame Mary Talbot, in 1654; the inmates are appointed by the agent of Sir George Wombwell, Bart., who allows 50s. annually to each, and repairs the buildings.

BRETTON (WEST), a chapelry partly in the parish of GREAT SANDALL, lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, but chiefly in the parish of SILKSTONE, wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Barnesley, containing 518 inhabitants. The chapel is dependent on the church at Silkstone.

BREWARD (ST.), or SIMONWARD, a parish in the hundred of TRIGG, county of CORNWALL, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bodmin, containing 554 inhabitants,

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Brard. Within this parish are the lofty hills, Rough Tor (by contraction Rowtor) and Brown Willy, from the summits of which there is a view of the English and Bristol channels.

BREWHAM (NORTH and SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of BRUTON, county of SOMERSET, containing 989 inhabitants, of which number, 389 are in North Brewham, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.), and 600 in South Brewham $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.), from Bruton. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, has been enlarged by the addition of one hundred and ninety-eight sittings, one hundred and forty of which are free, and towards defraying the expense the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels granted £130. In the churchyard is the shaft of an old cross. The parish takes its name from the river Brew, which rises here. A chapel formerly stood at North Brewham, the remains of which have been converted into a barn.

BREWHAM-LODGE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Bruton. It consists only of one estate, comprising nearly eight hundred acres, and acquired its extra-parochial privileges from having been one of King John's hunting seats, in memory of whom, a wood in the vicinity retains the name of King's wood: it is now the property, by purchase, of that eminent antiquary, Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. The river Brew has its source at the distance of about half a mile. A tower, called Alfred's tower, was erected by Henry Hoare, Esq. in commemoration of a victory obtained here by that prince over the Danes: it is a triangular brick building, one hundred and fifty-five feet in height, surmounted at each angle by a turret, one of which is surrounded by a gallery: over the entrance is an inscription recording the good qualities and noble exploits of that renowned monarch. About half a mile toward the north-east there is a small oval encampment, called Jack's Castle, which is thought to be of Danish construction: human bones, spears' heads, and urns containing the ashes of burnt bones, have been dug up in the neighbourhood, which was the scene of various conflicts between the Saxons and the Danes.

BREWHOUSE-YARD, an extra-parochial liberty, in the southern division of the wapentake of BROXTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, containing 90 inhabitants.

BREWOD, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, comprising the townships of Brewod, Bishop's Wood, Hide with Wooley, Kiddermore-Green, and Park-Lanes, and the liberties of Chillington, Coven, and Somerford, and containing 2762 inhabitants, of which number, 2263 are in the township of Brewod, $10\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Stafford. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of Lichfield, rated in the king's books at £6. 17. 8. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious and handsome edifice, in the later style of English architecture, with a fine spire; it has recently received an addition of five hundred and sixty sittings, three hundred and seventy-two of which are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £250 towards defraying the expense. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. Brewod, formerly a market town, is pleasantly situated on a branch of the Penk, about a mile south of the Watling-street, and consists of several ranges of houses: it is paved, and well supplied with water from springs. The market, formerly held on Friday, has been discontinued, and the ancient market-house pulled down, though butter and eggs are still exposed for sale, on that day, on its site: a fair for live stock is held on the 19th of September. A branch of the Peak Forest canal communicates with this place, and an act has been lately obtained for constructing a new canal. Here is a small manufactory for stock locks. Brewod is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held at Wolverhampton, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. Courts leet and baron are held annually. The free grammar school is supposed to have been founded by Dr. Knightley, whose endowment, increased by subsequent benefactors, now produces about £412 per annum. Dr. Hurd, Bishop of Worcester, who, with other distinguished persons, was educated here, appropriated, in the year 1800, two houses for the benefit of the school, one of which was for the usher; at this period also the trust was renewed, and new regulations were adopted by the trustees and visitors. In 1827, it received a bequest of £1000 four per cents., pursuant to the will of R. Hurd, Esq., of Worcester, one-half for augmenting the master's stipend, and the remainder for repairs. It is free for the reception of children unlimitedly: the system of education is strictly classical, but there is an English free school in connexion with it; and a National school is supported by subscription. A bank for savings has been established. A small Benedictine nunnery, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, is first noticed in the time of Richard I.: at the dissolution its clear revenue was only rated at £11. 1. 6. Chillington Hall, a noble mansion in this parish, is approached by a fine avenue of trees, nearly two miles long, in a direct line: there are two Roman Catholic chapels on the estate, one at Birch, and the other at Black-Ladies. In the neighbourhood are two mineral springs, now disused.

BRIAVELL'S (ST.), a parish in the hundred of St. BRIAVELL's, county of GLOUCESTER, 8 miles (W. by S.) from Blakeney, containing 1112 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Lidney, in the archdeaconry of Hereford, and diocese of Gloucester. The church is a small cruciform edifice, principally in the Norman and early English styles of architecture. This is a place of considerable antiquity, having given name to the hundred. Milo, Earl of Hereford, built a castle here in the reign of Henry I., as a frontier fortress against the Welch: the north-western front, including two circular towers, now used as a prison for the hundred, is all that remains. It is nominally under the superintendence of a governor, whose office is a sinecure: the site of the original edifice is surrounded by a moat. Edward II. granted the inhabitants a charter for a weekly market, which has long been disused, and exempted them from the payment of toll throughout the kingdom: they still enjoy the right of cutting wood in the forest of Dean, which they form into hoops and other articles, and send to Bristol. There are several coal-works in the vicinity; and a court is held for regulating matters in dispute among the miners.

BRICETT (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bildeston, containing 290 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary and St. Lawrence. A priory for Augustine canons was founded, about 1110, by Ralph Fitz-Brien, in honour of St. Leonard, the possessions of which, on the suppression of Alien priories, were given by Henry VI. to the Provost and Fellows.

BRICETT (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Needham-Market, with which the population is returned. The living, a discharged rectory, has been united to the rectory of Ofton since 1503, when the church fell into decay: it is endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and is in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich.

BRICKENDON, a liberty in that part of the parish of ALL SAINTS, HERTFORD, which is in the hundred of HERTFORD, county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Hertford, containing 647 inhabitants.

BRICKHILL (BOW), a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (E.) from Fenny-Stratford, containing 438 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of John and T. R. Ward, Esqrs. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Many of the females in this and the adjoining parish are employed in making lace. Charles Purrett, in 1633, gave a portion of land for the benefit of the poor, and for teaching and apprenticing poor children; eight boys are instructed gratuitously. The Roman Watling-street passes through the parish.

BRICKHILL (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by S.) from Fenny-Stratford, containing 558 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18. 2. 11., and in the patronage of P. D. Pauncefort, Esq. and others. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists.

BRICKHILL (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Fenny-Stratford, containing 485 inhabitants. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, as impropiator of the rectory, which is rated in the king's books at £9. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. At an early period Brickhill was a place of considerable importance, and in the reign of Elizabeth it was a market and assize town, the assizes having been held here in 1639: the gallows stood on a heath, about half a mile distant. The market has been discontinued, but a fair is held on the 18th of October. Fine specimens of sulphate of lime have been found in the vicinity. There is an endowment of £5 per annum, for which twelve boys are taught to read.

BRICKLEHAMPTON, a chapelry in the parish of St. Andrew, Pershore, upper division of the hundred of Pershore, county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Pershore, containing 156 inhabitants. The curacy, annexed to the vicarage of St. Andrew, Pershore, is in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, and rated in the king's books at £2. 14. 2. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael.

BRIDEKIRK, a parish in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Bridekirk, Great Broughton, Little Broughton, Dovenby, Papcastle with Goat, Ribton, and Tallentire, and containing 1694 inhabitants, of which number, 144 are in the township of Bridekirk, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Cockermouth. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £10. 13. 4., endowed with £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. D. B. Dykes, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Bridget, from whom the parish takes its name, is an ancient edifice, principally in the Norman style, containing a singular font, which, according to Camden, was brought from the Roman station at Papcastle: it exhibits in rude relief various designs symbolical of the serpent and the forbidden fruit, the expulsion of Adam and Eve from Paradise, the baptism of Christ, &c.; likewise a Runic inscription which has been variously interpreted by different antiquaries. There are quarries of limestone and white freestone within the parish. Sir Joseph Williamson, secretary of state in the reign of Charles II.; and Thomas Tickell, the poet and essayist, born in 1696, were natives of this place, each during the incumbency of his father.

BRIDE (ST.) WENTLLOOG, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of WENTLLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Newport, containing 193 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Coedkernew united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £4. 18. 1½., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Llandaff. The parish is bounded on the east by the river Usk, and on the south by the Bristol channel. Here is a lighthouse.

BRIDE'S (ST.) NETHERWENT, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of CALDICOTT, county of MONMOUTH, 7 miles (E. S. E.) from Cacrlleon, containing, with the hamlet of Llandeenny, 185 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 3., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. Matthews, Esq.

BRIDDLESFORD, a hamlet in the parish of ARRETON, liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Newport. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel.

BRIDESTOWE, a parish in the hundred of LITTON, county of DEVON, 6 miles (S. W.) from Oakhampton, containing 787 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Sourton annexed, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £32. 17. 11., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Bridget. Fairs for cattle take place on the second Wednesday in June, and July 29th. A court baron is occasionally held here.

BRIDFORD, a parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Moreton-Hampstead, containing 491 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £13. 15., and in the patronage of Sir L. V. Palk, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, has an elegant rood-loft and screen, and a richly carved pulpit.

BRIDGE, a parish in the hundred of BRIDGE and PETHAM, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Canterbury, containing 432 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Patricbourne, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is principally in the Norman style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Little Stour runs through the parish.

BRIDGEHAM, a parish in the hundred of SHROPHAM, county of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (W. by S.) from East Harling, containing 294 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £11. 1. 0½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BRIDGEMERE, a township in the parish of WYBUNBURY, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 7 miles (S. E.) from Nantwich, containing 233 inhabitants.

Arms.

BRIDGENORTH, a borough and market town, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Stottesden, county of SALOP, 20½ miles (S. E.) from Shrewsbury, and 140 (N. W.) from London, containing 4096 inhabitants, but including the liberty of Romsley in the parish of Alveley, and part of the parish of Quatford, 4345.

This place, anciently called Brugia, Brug, and (including Little Brug) Bruges, derives its name from a bridge over the river Severn, built by the Saxons, which, after many sanguinary conflicts with the Danes, they finally destroyed, to prevent the future incursions of these marauders. Upon the erection of a new bridge, about a mile and a half to the north of the former, it obtained the appellation of Brug North, whence its present name is deduced. Bridgenorth is supposed to have been founded by Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred the Great; it was afterwards enlarged by Robert de Belesme, Earl of Shrewsbury, who erected, or probably rebuilt, the castle, and fortified the town with walls and six strong gates, some portions of which are still remaining. On the earl's rebellion against his sovereign, Henry I., in 1102, the town and castle were besieged, and, after an obstinate defence, were surrendered to the victorious monarch, who gave them to Hugh de Mortimer, which grant was confirmed by Stephen; but it appears to have been little more than nominal, since that king appointed "Præpositi," or provosts, to collect the revenue for the crown. Mortimer having risen in rebellion against Henry II., that monarch laid siege to the castle, and nearly demolished it, and in this state it lay until the reign of John: he afterwards confirmed to the inhabitants all the privileges and franchises which they had enjoyed under Henry I. In 1216, King John passed a day in this town, on his march to Worcester, where he was soon afterwards interred. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., Bridgenorth, being a royal garrison, was, in 1646, attacked by the parliamentarians, whose infantry forced an entrance on the south side of St. Leonard's churchyard, that part being not so well defended as the rest of the town, and a sharp skirmish ensued. Another party of them broke through a narrow defile in the rock leading to the north gate, where many of their men were killed, not only by the fire of the garrison, but by great stones rolled down upon them from the summit of the rock. The infantry having gained an entrance through the churchyard, opened the gates to the cavalry, and the royalists retiring into the castle, set fire to the town, which was nearly consumed. The parliamentarians having made the church of St. Leonard their magazine, the royalists planted cannon on the round tower of the castle, and setting fire to the church, the flames spread to an adjoining college, and entirely consumed it. The castle was now closely invested, but being strongly fortified both by nature and art, it sustained a siege of three weeks without receiving any material injury. The besiegers, despairing of success, had begun to undermine the rock on which it was built, when the garrison, having exhausted all their ammunition, capitulated on honourable terms, and retired to Worcester.

The town is most romantically situated on the banks of the river Severn, which divides it into two parts, called the Upper and the Lower Town. The Upper Town is built on the summit and steep acclivities of a rock, rising abruptly to the height of one hundred and eighty feet from the western bank of the river, and presents an appearance singularly picturesque. Crowning the summit of the rock, at the southern extremity, are the small ruins of the square tower of the castle, declining considerably from the perpendicular line, and the handsome modern church of St. Mary Magdalene; and at the northern extremity is the venerable church of St. Leonard, with its lofty square embattled tower, adorned with pinnacles. About half-way between the churches, and forming a conspicuous object, is the reservoir, a capacious flat square tank, supported on lofty pillars of brick, and assuming at a distance the appearance of a handsome portico. On the side of the rock rising from the river are several successive tiers of detached houses, many of them handsome modern buildings, the chimneys of the lower tier being below the foundation of the next upper tier, in regular gradation from the base of the rock to its summit. These are intermixed with caverns and rude dwellings excavated in the rock, with brick window and door-cases in front, and interspersed with gardens, shrubberies, and lofty trees. A road for carriages winds round the rock, and a nearer approach is afforded to foot passengers by several flights of steps, of almost perpendicular ascent, formed of pebbles, and secured by a framing of iron-work, leading through the rock into the interior of the town. A wider road for carts, from the several wharfs on the quay, has been constructed on the north side of the bridge. The walk round the castle hill is defended by a palisade, and commands a most extensive view of the surrounding country, which abounds with picturesque scenery, being richly diversified by cultivated fields, well-watered meadows, wood-crowned eminences, and barren rocks. Several streets, containing handsome well-built houses, lead from the church into the High-street, parallel with which are others of a similar character. Over the river is a handsome stone bridge of six arches, leading into the Lower Town, the streets in which contain some modern and several ancient houses. Among the latter is Canhall, an antique structure in the Elizabethan style, wherein Prince Rupert resided, in 1642, when he addressed a letter to the jury empannelled for the choice of town officers, entreating them "to select such men for their bailiffs as were well affected to his Majesty's service." The town is partially paved, and the inhabitants are supplied with soft water raised by machinery from the river into the reservoir in the Upper Town, and thence conveyed by pipes into their houses; and with spring water brought from Oldbury, at the southern extremity of the town, into several public conduits. The public library, in St. Leonard's churchyard, a handsome octagonal brick building lighted by a dome, was founded by the Rev. Mr. Stackhouse, to whose memory a marble tablet has been erected over the fire-place: it has been extended by subscription from a theological to a general library, and contains more than four thousand volumes. The theatre, a neat and commodious edifice of stone, was erected in 1824, on part of the site of the ancient moat of the castle, accidentally discovered; this being from thirty to forty feet deep, it became necessary to build strong piers, and to turn arches, to form a foundation: it is opened every alternate week for three months during the winter. The races are held in July, but they are not so well supported as formerly, the course having become damaged by being divided by moveable fences, and let out to different tenants during the interval.

The trade principally arises from the navigation of the river, which affords every facility for the transit of goods, and has made this town a thriving inland port: many vessels are built, and a great quantity of malt of very superior quality, and of grain, is sent to various parts of the country. The iron trade has greatly declined, but nails are made to a small extent: a large carpet-manufactory has been lately established, and there is a considerable manufactory for tobacco pipes. The market, held on Saturday, is abundantly supplied with wheat, barley, and beans, to the growth of which the land in the neighbourhood is particularly favourable: the fairs are on the Thursday before Shrove-Tuesday, and the nearest Thursday to March 15th, for horned cattle and sheep; May 1st, a pleasure and statute fair; June 30th, for wool and cattle; August 2nd, for lamb's wool and cattle; September 15th, for cattle, sheep, and cheese; October 29th, a great fair for salt butter, cheese, hops, and nuts; and December 15th, a large fair for cattle and general merchandise.

The government, by a succession of charters from the reign of Henry I. to that of James II., is vested in two bailiffs, a recorder, deputy-recorder, twenty-four aldermen, forty-eight common council-men, two chamberlains, and two bridge-masters, assisted by a town-clerk, two serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The bailiffs, who are justices of the peace, and the senior of whom acts as coroner for the borough, are chosen, on the 21st of September, from among the aldermen not having served that office for three years preceding, by a jury, who are sworn not to eat or drink till they have made choice of proper persons; this oath has frequently compelled them to long abstinence, and, in 1739, subjected them to fast for seventy-four hours. The aldermen are chosen, as vacancies occur, either from the common council-men, or from such of the burgesses as have filled the offices of chamberlain and bridge-master two years previously, who are thus qualified to become either common council-men or aldermen. The recorder, who holds his office for life, appoints the deputy-recorder, who must be a barrister; all other officers are appointed by the bailiffs and burgesses in common council assembled. The freedom of the borough is inherited by birth; acquired by servitude for seven years and a fine of £1; by residence, paying scot and lot and a fine of £5; and by purchase, on paying a fine of £10. The corporation hold a court of petty session every alternate Monday, at which the bailiffs preside; and on the same day, a court of record, for the recovery of debts to any amount, is held by the bailiffs and deputy-recorder: as lords of the manor, they also hold courts leet in May and October, at which the town-clerk presides as their steward. The borough received the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., and from that time has continued to return two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in all the burgesses, whether resident or not; the bailiffs are the returning officers. The town-hall, erected about the year 1646, is a spacious building of timber frame-work and plaister, supported on pillars and arches of brick, forming a covered area for the use of a market; above this is a large room, wherein the public business of the corporation is transacted, besides two smaller apartments, in one of which the several courts are held.

Bridgenorth comprises the parishes of St. Mary Magdalene and St. Leonard, which, with Claverley, Bobbington, Alveley, and Quatford, are within the jurisdiction of the court of the royal peculiar of Bridgenorth, belonging to Thomas Whitemore, Esq. The living of St. Mary Magdalene's is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £1500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of T. Whitemore, Esq. The church, formerly the chapel belonging to the castle, and exempted by King John from all ecclesiastical jurisdiction, was made parochial in the 4th of Edward III., and rebuilt of freestone in 1792: it is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style of architecture, with a lofty tower, surmounted by a cupola; the interior is divided by two ranges of lofty pillars of the Ionic order, supporting the roof. The living of St. Leonard's is also a perpetual curacy, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £700 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of T. Whitmore, Esq. The church, formerly collegiate, was erected in 1448, on the site of a structure raised in the reign of Richard I.: it was originally a very magnificent and spacious edifice, comprising seven different chapels, the arches leading into which from the present nave, and now walled up, are still discernible. It suffered greatly while in the possession of the parliamentarians, during the civil war, and now consists only of a nave, one aisle, and a chancel; the last, parted from the nave by a screen, is used only as an entrance: its modern ceiling still exhibits vestiges of the ancient roof of pannelled oak, and some of the corbels on which its supporters rested are still remaining on the walls. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents.

The free grammar school, founded in 1503, by the corporation, in whom the management is vested, is supported partly by an endowment of £34, and partly by contributions from the corporation and others, producing about £160 per annum, which is paid to the master: it has three exhibitions to Christ Church College, Oxford, founded by Mr. Careswell, in 1689, who endowed eighteen in that college, for the benefit of six free grammar schools of this county; viz., four for that of Shrewsbury, three for that of Bridgenorth, four for that of Newport, three for that of Shiffnall, two for that of Wem, and two for that of Donnington, in the parish of Wroxeter. The management of the augmented property, which is chiefly in land situated near this town, has, since 1741, been vested in the court of Chancery; and, in 1820, the estate, including property in the funds, produced an annual income of nearly £1500, subject to certain deductions. The sums allowed to the exhibitors, according to successive decrees of the court, are £60 to each under-graduate, £70 to each under-graduate being a commoner, £21 to each bachelor of arts, £60 to each bachelor of arts resident, and £27 to each master of arts, leaving a considerable surplus at the end of the year. The Blue-coat charity school, kept in an old castellated brick building, over an archway at the northern extremity of the town, which was one of the ancient gates, was established in 1720, and is supported partly by a small endowment arising from benefactions vested in the funds, and partly by subscription; there are thirty boys in this establishment, nominated by the subscribers in rotation, who are clothed annually, and, on leaving the school, receive £4. 2. as an apprentice fee, and £2 for clothing. There is also a national school, supported by subscription, in which two hundred boys and one hundred and fifty girls are instructed.

The hospital in St. Leonard's churchyard, for ten aged widows, who have an apartment and £10 per annum each, was founded, in 1687, by the Rev. Francis Palmer, rector of Sandby in Bedfordshire. The almshouses in Church-lane, endowed with estates producing £158 per annum, under the direction of the corporation as trustees, are for twelve widows of burgesses, who have each an apartment, two shillings and sixpence per week, with occasional additions, according to the state of the funds. At the southern extremity of the High-street, is part of an arch which formed the entrance to the castle, also some portions of the walls, which enclosed an area of fourteen acres; and at the northern extremity of the town, on the western bank of the river, are the remains of a convent of Grey friars, which have been converted into a malt-house: the great hall, or refectory, is still nearly in its pristine state: the pannelled oak ceiling, the stone fire-place, and many of the windows, though the lights are stopped with plaister, are still in entire preservation. About a quarter of a mile south of the Lower Town was an ancient hospital for lazars, converted, in the reign of Edward IV., into a priory, and now a private mansion. In making the shrubberies to the north of the house, in 1823, thirty-seven bodies were discovered lying in rows, within eighteen inches from the surface, having evidently been buried in winding sheets and without coffins; they were in good preservation, the teeth still retaining their enamel: some slight vestiges of the church may be traced in the walls of the out-buildings. There are remains of several fortifications in this neighbourhood, it having been the scene of frequent battles between the Saxons and the Danes. About a mile south of the town, on the eastern bank of the river, is a large mount, with a trench on all sides except the west, on which it is defended by a rocky precipice overhanging the Severn, where Robert de Montgomery had a strongly fortified palace. About half a mile eastward lay the ancient forest of Morfe, which, in Leland's time, was "a hilly ground, well wooded; a forest, or chase, having deer," and for which a forester and steward were appointed from the time of Edward I. to that of Elizabeth. The brother of King Athelstan is stated to have passed the life of a hermit here, and a cave in a rock, still called the Hermitage, is supposed to have been his solitary abode. On a portion of this tract are five tumuli in quincunx, under some of which the remains of human skeletons have been discovered. The sylvan features of the place have long since disappeared, and the whole, comprising between five and six thousand acres, was enclosed in 1815. Dr. Thomas Percy, Bishop of Dromore in Ireland, and compiler of "Reliques of Ancient English Poetry," was born here, in 1728.

BRIDGE-RULE, a parish comprising East Rule in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, and West Rule in the hundred of STRATTON, county of CORNWALL, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Holsworthy, containing 436 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £14, endowed with £800 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. T. H. Kingdon. The river Tamar flows past this place, over which there is a bridge; and from this bridge, together with the manor having been held by Ruald, or Reginald, soon after the conquest, Bridge-Rule derives its name. The church stands in that part of the parish which is in Devonshire: the part that is in Cornwall is intersected by the Bude and Launceston canal.

BRIDGE-SOLLERS, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Hereford, containing 58 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £8. 10., endowed with £260 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir J. G. Cotterell, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BRIDGFORD (EAST), a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Nottingham, containing 768 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £19. 8. 6½., and in the alternate patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford, and J. Musters, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is pleasantly situated on the eastern bank of the Trent, near the spot where was anciently a ford, and where there is now a ferry. Here was the ancient Margidunum of the Romans, numerous relics of which people have been discovered in the vicinity, particularly gold, silver, and brass coins of various emperors. At a place called Castle Hill, on the Fosse-road, which passes through the parish, a Roman fibula, in good preservation, was found in 1828. There is an abundance of a fine species of gypsum in the parish. A charity school is supported by subscription.

BRIDGFORD (WEST), a parish partly in the southern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, but chiefly in the northern division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, county of NOTTINGHAM, 1½ mile (S. S. E.) from Nottingham, containing, with the hamlet of Gampston, 310 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £16. 14. 2., and in the patronage of J. C. Musters, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. At each of the hamlets of Basingfield and Gampston is a place called Chapel Yard, the supposed sites of ancient chapels. The Trent forms the northern boundary of the parish, which is intersected by the Grantham canal. The Rev. William Thompson, late rector, endowed a school with £30 per annum, of which the rector and patron are perpetual trustees.

BRIDGHAMPTON, a tything in the parish of YEOVILTON, hundred of SOMERTON, county of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (E. N. E.) from Ilchester, containing 105 inhabitants.

from Walter de Douay, one of William's followers, on whom it was bestowed at the time of the Conquest, and was thence called "Burgh Walter" and "Brugge Walter," by which names, both signifying Walter's burgh, or borough, it is designated in various ancient records. William de Briwere, to whom it was granted in the reign of Henry II., built a castle in the following reign, combining the strength of a fortress with the splen-BRIDG-WATER, a port, borough, market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the northern division of the hundred of Petherton, county of SOMERSET, 35 miles (S. W.) from Bristol, 20 (W. S. W.) from Wells, and 137 (W. by S.) from London, containing 6155 inhabitants.

This place derived its name

dour of a baronial residence, and obtained from King John the grant of a market and a fair. He founded the hospital of St. John, for a master, brethren, and thirteen poor persons of the order of St. Augustine, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £120. 19. 1½. He also constructed the haven, and began to erect a stone bridge of three arches over the river Parret, which was completed by Sir Thomas Trivet, in the reign of Edward I. His son William founded a monastery for Grey friars, about 1230, and dedicated it to St. Francis. The barons, during their revolt against Henry III., took possession of the town in 1260. In the parliamentary war, the inhabitants embraced the royal cause, and the castle was garrisoned by the king's forces. In this castle, on account of its being strongly fortified, and abundantly supplied with ammunition, the inhabitants of the surrounding district deposited their money, plate, and other articles of value, as in a place of security. The parliamentarians under Fairfax soon afterwards invested the town, and laid close siege to the castle, which was resolutely defended, till the town having been fired on both sides of the bridge, the garrison capitulated on terms of personal indemnity, and surrendered the fortress, with all the treasure in it, and one thousand prisoners, into the hands of the enemy. The castle, which had sustained considerable damage during this siege, was demolished in 1645; the sally-port and some detached portions of the walls are all that now remain. In the reign of James II. the inhabitants favoured the pretensions of the Duke of Monmouth, who, on his arrival from Taunton, was received with great ceremony by the corporation, and proclaimed king. He remained for some time in the town, and having from the tower of the church reconnoitred the royal army encamped on Sedgemoor, he rashly resolved to hazard the battle that terminated so fatally to his ambition. His adherents in the town suffered severely for their attachment to his cause, under the legal severity of Jeffreys, and the military executions of Kirke.

The town is pleasantly situated in a well-wooded and nearly level part of the county, the view being bounded on the north-east by the Mendip hills, and on the west by the Quantock hills: the river Parret divides it into two parts, connected with each other by a handsome iron bridge of one arch. The western part is particularly clean: the streets are spacious, well paved, and lighted; the houses, chiefly of brick, are uniform and well built; and there is an ample supply of excellent water from springs. The eastern part, termed Eastover, is inferior in appearance to the western; though very great improvement has been effected in both of late years. The foreign trade consists in the importation of wine, hemp, tallow, and timber; but the trade of the port is principally coastwise. Coal is brought free of duty from Monmouthshire and Wales, and is conveyed into the interior of the county by a canal to Taunton. The quay, which has been recently improved, is accessible to ships of two hundred tons' burden, and is furnished with every appendage requisite for the convenience of commerce: the number of vessels belonging to the port, according to the return in 1828, is forty-five, averaging sixty-two tons' burden. The principal source of employment is the making of bricks for general use; scouring-bricks, composed of a mixture of clay and sand deposited by the river within a limited distance of the bridge, beyond which it is unfit for the purpose ; and a peculiar kind of brick, resembling Bath stone, of various sizes, from the ordinary dimensions to the largest size in which that stone is used : for this and the scouring-bricks patents have recently been obtained. The market days are Tuesday, for vegetables ; Thursday, principally for corn and cattle ; and Saturday, the general market for provisions : the market-house, lately erected, is a handsome building, surmounted with a dome and lantern, and having a semi-circular portico of the Ionic order. The fairs are on the first Monday in Lent, July 24th, October 2nd (which continues for three days, the first being noted for the sale of linen and woollen cloth, cattle, and general merchandise), and Dec. 27th.

The government, by charter of incorporation granted in the reign of John, and subsequently enlarged and confirmed by Edward IV., Elizabeth, and Charles II., is vested in a mayor, recorder, two aldermen, two bailiffs, or sheriffs, and eighteen burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, three serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor and bailiffs are chosen annually, but the rest usually hold their offices during life : the mayor, recorder, and aldermen, are justices of the peace within the borough and parish. The freedom is inherited by the eldest sons of freemen, and acquired by servitude and gift ; among the privileges which it conveys is the freedom of all ports in England and Ireland, except those of London and Dublin. The corporation hold quarterly courts of sessions for the trial of all offenders, except those accused of capital crimes, and courts of record for the recovery of debts to any amount. The summer assizes, alternately with Wells, and the summer sessions for the county, are held here. The judges' mansion is a handsome modern edifice, containing apartments for the judges, the borough court-rooms, and a room for the grand jury. The borough prison contains distinct departments for debtors and criminals ; the latter are only confined there previously to trial, or to their committal to the county gaol. The borough first sent representatives to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has continued to return two members : the right of election is vested in the inhabitants resident within the borough properly so called, paying scot and lot, the number of whom is about four hundred : the mayor is the returning officer.

The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Chilton-Trinity united, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £11. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient and handsome structure, with a square embattled tower and a lofty spire : it has a rich porch in the decorated style of English architecture, and the altar is embellished with a fine painting of the Descent from the Cross, found on board a captured French privateer, and presented to the parish by the Hon. A. Poulett, member for the borough. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodist and Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded in 1561, and endowed by Queen Elizabeth with £6. 13. 4. per annum, charged on the tithes of the parish, to which two donations of £100 each were added : it is under the control of the corporation, who appoint the master, and the inspection of the bishop of the diocese : four boys are instructed gratuitously in English and the classics. A school, now conducted on Dr. Bell's system, was founded by Mr. John Morgan, in 1723, and endowed with ninety-seven acres of land : the management is vested in the corporation, the archdeacon of Taunton, the vicar of Bridg-water, and others, who, in 1816, erected a school-room, and a house for the master : there are thirty scholars, some of whom are clothed. A school was also founded, in 1781, by Mr. Edward Fackerell, who endowed it with the dividends on £3000 in the three per cent. consols., and the rents of three messuages, producing together an annual income of £174, for clothing, educating, and apprenticing the children and grandchildren of certain relatives named in his will, and so many other children as the funds might allow : the provisions of the will were afterwards restricted, by the court of Chancery, to the children of his relatives, the number of whom, at the last report, had increased to thirty : the management, by the testator's will, is vested in trustees, whose accounts are periodically audited by a master in Chancery. Almshouses, originally endowed by Major Ingram, of Westminster, with £18 per annum, are now appropriated to the poor of the parish, and the endowment is distributed among poor widows not receiving parochial relief. The infirmary, a commodious building, was established in 1813, and is supported by subscription. Admiral Blake was born here, in 1599, and received the rudiments of his education in the free grammar school. Bridg-water confers the title of earl on the family of Egerton.

BRIDLINGTON, a parish in the wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the sea-port and market town of Bridlington, the chapelries of Grindall and Specton, the townships of Buckton, Hilderthorp, and Sewerby with Marton, and the hamlet of Easton, and containing 5034 inhabitants, of which number, 4275 are in the town of Bridlington with Quay, 38 miles (E. N. E.) from York, and 201 (N.) from London. This place was chiefly remarkable for an extensive priory of Augustine canons, founded in 1106, by Walter de Gaunt, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary, which, from its vicinity to the sea, being exposed to injury from the vessels of the enemy, was, by permission of Richard II., defended by fortifications, the only remains of which are an arched gateway, with a room over it occasionally used as the town-hall, and underneath are some cells used as a temporary prison. The priors for many years enjoyed extensive privileges, granted by the popes ; but in 1537, its last prior, William Wolde, being executed for treason, the priory was forfeited to the Crown : its revenue, at the dissolution, was £682. 15. 9. In 1643, the queen of Charles I., bringing a supply of arms and ammunition from Helvoetsluys, narrowly escaped the squadron under the command of Admiral Batten, who had been stationed to intercept her, and who, on her landing at this place, entered the bay with two of his ships and cannonaded the town. In 1779, a desperate naval fight took place off the coast, between the noted Paul Jones and two British ships of war, when, after a sanguinary conflict, the former was victorious.

The town is pleasantly situated on a gentle acclivity, about a mile from the sea, and consists principally of one long street intersected by some smaller ones, irregularly formed and inconveniently narrow: the houses are in general ancient and of mean appearance: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. About a mile to the south-east is Bridlington Quay, forming in itself a small, handsome, and well-built town, consisting of one spacious street, leading directly to the harbour. This part of the town is much frequented for sea-bathing, and contains hot and cold baths conveniently fitted up for the accommodation of visitors. About a quarter of a mile from the Quay is a chalybeate spring, in much repute for its medicinal properties; and, in the harbour, an ebbing and flowing spring was discovered in 1811, that furnishes an abundant supply of fresh water.

The quay, on which is the custom-house, affords an agreeable promenade; and the two piers forming the harbour, stretching out a considerable distance into the ocean, command extensive prospects, especially the northern pier, from which are fine views of Flamborough Head and Bridlington Bay. The harbour, which is defended by two batteries, one on the north, and the other on the south, side of the town, affords a secure retreat to numerous coasting vessels that shelter there during contrary winds; and the bay, protected from the north-west winds by the coast, and from the north winds by the promontory of Flamborough Head, offers safe anchorage for ships in gales of wind from those points. The port is a member of the port of Hull, and the number of vessels belonging to it, according to the return of 1829, is forty, averaging one hundred and fifty-five tons' burden; the number of vessels that entered inward and cleared outward, in 1826, was nine British and nineteen foreign, besides several engaged in the coasting trade. There is a small manufactory for hats: the trade in corn and malt, formerly flourishing, has declined since the opening of the Driffield canal to Hull; there are several windmills for corn, and a steam-mill for grinding bones. The market is on Saturday; and fairs for cattle, linen, and woollen cloth, &c., are held on the Monday before Whitsuntide and October 21st.

The living is a perpetual curacy, with the rectory of Argam united, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church is part of the ancient edifice belonging to the priory, formerly a magnificent structure, of which the two towers at the western end have been made level with the nave, and the chancel and transepts destroyed. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school for twenty boys was founded by Mr. William Hustler, in 1637, and endowed with a rent-charge of £40, to which a considerable donation in land was added by William Bower, in 1670, for teaching twelve other children: a charity school for girls was endowed in 1671, and a National school, for two hundred children of both sexes, is supported by subscription. Numerous fossil remains have been found here; and in the vicinity the head of an enormous elk was discovered, the extremities of the horns being more than eleven feet apart. Sir George Ripley, a celebrated alchymist of the fifteenth century, author of a treatise on the philosopher's stone, and who, in the earlier part of his life, was a canon of Bridlington; William de Newburgh, an eminent historian in the reign of King John; John de Bridlington, prior of the monastery, and author of "Carmina Vaticinalia," who died in 1379; and Richard Boyle, Earl of Burlington, a great patron of the fine arts, whose title was derived from this place, and became extinct at his death in 1753; were natives of Bridlington.

BRIDPORT, a sea-port, borough, market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Whitchurch-Canonicorum, Bridport division of the county of Dorset, 14½ miles (W.) from Dorchester, and 134 (W. S. W.) from London, on the high road to Exeter, containing 3742 inhabitants. This place takes its name from the river Bride, or Brit, which falls into the sea at the harbour, about a mile and a half to the south of it. It was a town of some importance in the time of Edward the Confessor, and is mentioned in Domesday-book as having a mint and an ecclesiastical establishment. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., it was garrisoned by the parliament, but not being a place of much strength, was alternately in the possession of each party. In 1685, it was surprised by some troops in the interest of the Duke of Monmouth, under Lord Grey, which were defeated by the king's forces, and twelve of the principal insurgents were afterwards executed. The town is situated in a fertile vale surrounded by hills, having on the west the river Bride, or Brit, and on the east the river Asker, over which are several bridges; these rivers unite a little below the town. It is chiefly formed by three spacious streets, containing many handsome modern houses, and is well paved, and lighted with elegant lamps, adapted to the future introduction of gas; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water.

The trade of the port consists principally in the importation of hemp, flax, and timber, from Russia and the Baltic, and timber from America and Norway; there is also a considerable coasting trade, by which the adjacent towns are supplied with coal from Wales and the collieries in the north of England, and with other articles of general consumption. Many coasting vessels, particularly smacks, for the trading companies of Scotland, are built at this port, and are highly esteemed for strength, beauty, and fast sailing. The harbour is situated at the bottom of the bay, which is formed by the headlands near Portland on the east, and Torbay on the west. An act for restoring and rebuilding it was obtained in the 8th of George I., the preamble to which recites that by reason of a great sickness that had swept away the greatest part of the wealthy inhabitants, and other accidents, the haven became neglected, and was choked with sand, and the piers had fallen into ruins: the work was begun in 1742, and, by the expenditure of large sums, great improvement was made. Another act was obtained in 1923, in which, and the three succeeding years, upwards of £19,000 have been expended, in enlarging the basin, and filling the piers with masonry, so that the harbour is now perfectly safe and commodious. The number of vessels belonging to the port is from twenty to thirty, of from eighty to one hundred and thirty tons' burden each. The principal articles of manufacture are nets, lines, small twine, girth-webbing, cordage, and sail-cloth for the use of the home and colonial fisheries, particularly for those of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, in which ten thousand persons are generally employed in the town and neighbourhood. In the reign of Henry VIII., the cordage for the whole of the English navy was ordered to be made at Bridport, or within five miles of it exclusively. The markets are on Wednesday and Saturday: fairs are held on April 6th and October 11th, for horses, horned cattle, and cheese, and there is a smaller fair on Holy Thursday.

The government, by charter of incorporation originally granted by Henry III., confirmed by Richard II., Henry VIII., and Elizabeth, and renewed and extended by James I. and Charles II., is vested in two bailiffs, a recorder, deputy-recorder, and fifteen burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, two sergeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The bailiffs, who, with the late bailiffs, are justices of the peace within the borough (which is co-extensive with the parish), are chosen at Michaelmas, by the burgesses; the recorder, deputy-recorder, and town-clerk, are chosen by the corporation, subject to approval by the king. The corporation hold a court of session once a year, a court of record for the recovery of debts under £20 every third Monday, and a court leet annually. The elective franchise was conferred in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time the borough has regularly returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, and non-resident members of the corporation living within ten miles of the borough, of which latter the number is limited to five; the whole number of electors is about two hundred and fifty: the bailiffs are the returning officers. The town-hall is a handsome brick building faced with Portland stone, containing, in the upper story, a court for the borough sessions, a room for the grand jury, and a council-chamber; it was erected in 1786, on the site of the ancient chapel of St. Andrew, in the centre of the town, by an act of parliament, under which the town is paved and lighted: there is also a prison for the confinement of debtors.

The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £10. 12. 3½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Ilchester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious cruciform structure, chiefly in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre, and crowned with pinnacles: within are many interesting monuments, among which is an altar-tomb of William, son of Sir

Corporate Seal.

Eustace Dabrigecourt, of Hainault, related to Queen Philippa. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The free school was founded and endowed, in 1708, by Daniel Taylor, one of the Society of Friends: the management is vested in trustees appointed by the members of that society, resident in Bridport and its vicinity. There is also an almshouse, founded by the same individual in 1696. Mr. Robert Bull, in 1730, left £200, directing that of the interest, £4 per annum, should be given for the instruction of twelve children, and £3 to twelve poor men; and a portion of the rent of eight acres and a half of land, purchased by the corporation, with money vested in them as trustees, is appropriated to the maintenance of a school. Turtle stone and cornua ammonis are found in the neighbouring quarries, and copperas stones on the beach, about four miles west of the harbour. Bridport confers the titles of baron and viscount on the family of Hood.

BRIDSTOW, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of WORMELOW, county of HEREFORD, 1½ mile (W. N. W.) from Ross, containing 541 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £9. 3. 11½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. The church is dedicated to St. Bridget. Wilton castle, the ruins of which constitute an interesting object on the western bank of the Wye, in this neighbourhood, was anciently the baronial residence of the noble family of Grey, who assumed their title from this place: it was burnt by order of the royalist governor at Hereford, during the parliamentary war, and the walls are now overspread with ivy.

BRIERDEAN, a township in the parish of EARS-DON, eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTH-UMBERLAND, 6½ miles (N. N. E.) from Newcastle, containing 52 inhabitants. There are quarries of excellent freestone, and a colliery in the township: here are also the ruins of a strong fortress.

BRIERLY, a township in the parish of FELKIRK, wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnesley, containing 452 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BRIERLY-HILL, a chapelry in the parish of KING'S SWINFORD, northern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, 2½ miles (N. N. E.) from Stourbridge. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of the Rector of King's Swinford. The chapel was erected in 1767.
The vicinity abounds with collieries and iron-works on a large scale; and steam-boilers, and various other heavy articles in iron, are made here.

BRIERSCLIFFE, a joint township with Extwistle, in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (N. E.) from Burnley, containing, with Extwistle, 1407 inhabitants.

BRIERTON, a township in the parish of STRANTON, north-eastern division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 8½ miles (E. N. E.) from Stockton upon Tees, containing 21 inhabitants.

BRIGG, county of LINCOLN.—See GLANDFORD-BRIDGE.

BRIGHAM, a parish in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the borough and market town of Cockermouth, the chapelries of Buttermere, Embleton, Mosser, and Setmurthey, and the townships of Blindbothel, Brigham, Eaglesfield, Gray-southen, and Whinfell, and containing 6037 inhabitants, of which number, 390 are in the township of Brigham, 2 miles (W.) from Cockermouth. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £20. 16. 0½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church, dedicated to St. Bridget, is an ancient structure, with an elegant decorated window in the south aisle, a curious circular one in the same style, and a monumental arch, richly canopied: it stands on the southern bank of the Derwent, about half a mile from the village, which is situated on an eminence commanding a richly diversified prospect, and contains some respectable dwelling-houses. Bassenthwaite, Buttermere, Crummock, and Loweswater lakes, and the rivers Derwent and Maron, form the boundaries of the parish, which is also intersected by the river Cocker: it contains quarries of limestone, freestone, and blue slate, and a mine of coal. The surface is hilly, but the eminences are now chiefly under cultivation, the waste lands having been enclosed. Brigham is within the honour of Cockermouth, and the copyhold tenants attend at the court of dimissions held there at Christmas, and at the court leet held at Easter and Michaelmas, belonging to the Earl of Egremont, as lord paramount. On the enclosure of the common a small parcel of land was allotted towards endowing the school.

BRIGHAM, a township in the parish of FOSTON upon WOLDS, wapentake of DICKERING, East Riding of the county of YORK, 5½ miles (S. E.) from Great Driffield, containing 103 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BRIGHOUSE, a joint township with Hipperholme, in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Huddersfield. The population is returned with Hipperholme. This village, which of late years has risen into a considerable state of prosperity, and is now rapidly thriving, is situated on the banks of the Calder. The manufacture of woollen goods, and the spinning of cotton and worsted, together with various other trades for the supply of the inhabitants, are extensively carried on; and considerable facility for the transmission of goods is afforded by the Calder and Hebble navigation, which pass through it. At a place called Cromwell Bottom, within a short distance, are some quarries of stone, the produce of which is sent to various parts of the surrounding country. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A fair is held at Brighouse on the day after Martinmas day.

BRIGHTHAMPTON, a hamlet partly in the parish of BAMPTON, and partly in the parish of STANDLAKE, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 4½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Witney. The former part contains 97 inhabitants, and the population of the latter is included with Standlake.

a sea-port, market town, and parish, in the hundred of WHALESBONE, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, 30 miles (E.) from Chichester, and 54 (S.) from London, containing 24,429 inhabitants, according to the census of 1821, since which time the population has very much increased. This place, in the Saxon language termed Brighthelmstun, in Domesday-book Bristlemeston, and now, by contraction, generally Brighton, is supposed to have taken its name from the Saxon bishop, Brighthelme, who resided in the vicinity. It was anciently a fortified town of considerable importance, and by some antiquaries is supposed to have been the place where Cæsar landed on his invasion of Britain; this opinion has probably been suggested by the quantity of Roman coins found in the town, the vast number of human bones, of extraordinary size, which has been discovered for nearly a mile along the coast westward, and the traces of lines and intrenchments, in the immediate vicinity, bearing strong marks of Roman construction. From a fortified town it was, by successive encroachments of the sea, reduced to an inconsiderable village; and, soon after the Conquest, was inhabited principally by fishermen: it was frequently assaulted by the French, who, in the reign of Henry VIII., plundered and burnt it. As a protection against their future attacks, fortifications were erected, which were subsequently repaired and enlarged by Queen Elizabeth, who built a wall with four lofty gates of freestone for its better defence. After the fatal battle of Worcester, Charles II. retired in privacy to this place, whence he embarked for France. In the year 1665 and 1669, an irruption of the sea destroyed a considerable part of the town, and inundated a large tract of land adjoining; and in 1703, 1705, and 1706, the fortifications were undermined, and many houses destroyed by tremendous storms and inundations, that threatened its annihilation. In the reign of George II., Brighton began to rise into consideration as a bathing-place, from the writings of Dr. Russel, a resident physician, who recommended the sea-water here, as containing a greater proportion of salt than that of other places, and therefore more efficacious in the cure of scrofulous and glandular complaints: its progress was accelerated by the discovery of a chalybeate spring, in 1760, the water of which being successfully administered as a tonic, in cases of infirm or debilitated constitutions, made it the resort of invalids from all parts of the country: and it ultimately obtained the very high rank which it now enjoys as a fashionable watering-place, and its grandeur and importance, under the auspices of his late Majesty, George IV., who, in 1784, when Prince of Wales, erected a magnificent palace here, now the occasional residence of King William IV. and Queen Adelaide.

The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence rising gently from a level called the Steyne, supposed to have been the line of the ancient Stayne-street, or Roman road from Arundel to Dorking, and adjoining a bay of the English channel, formed by the promontories of Town Seal.

Beachy Head and Worthing Point : it extends for two miles from east to west, and is sheltered by a range of hills on the north and north-east, and by the downs on the west. Its form, including the more recent additions, is quadrangular: the streets, which are spacious, and intersect each other at right angles, are well paved, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water. The houses in the older part of the town are dissimilar in form and of inelegant appearance; those in the modern part are more uniform, and many of them elegant: these are chiefly situated on the cliffs, commanding extensive views of the sea, and comprise on the eastern cliff, the Royal Crescent, the buildings on the New Steyne, the Marine Parade (extending from the New to the Old Steyne), the Pavilion Parade, and the houses on the Old Steyne (including two splendid hotels and a handsome library); and on the western cliff, Cannon-place (near which a magnificent hotel is now being erected), Bedford-square, Regency-square, and Brunswick-square and terrace, ranges of elegant houses, in front of which last is an esplanade, an extensive and fashionable promenade. On the road from Lewes are, Hanover Crescent, the area of which is tastefully laid out, Richmond Terrace, the buildings on the North Steyne; and to the east, Dorset-gardens, with a pleasure-ground in front, in which are two octagonal temples: on the London road are some neat houses in the cottage style, York-place, and St. George's-place, a handsome row of houses with circular fronts. Kemp Town, to the east, built by Thomas Read Kemp, Esq., is a splendid range of buildings, occupying three sides of a spacious quadrangle, to the extremity of each of which a row of houses of similar appearance has been added: from the area, which is elegantly disposed into pleasure-grounds, is a descent through an arch, leading down to the beach. The Pavilion, begun in 1784, and completed in 1827, by his late Majesty, is a magnificent structure in the oriental style of architecture, on the model of the Kremlin at Moscow. Toward the sea, the view of which is excluded by the buildings called Castle-square, it has a handsome stone front, of two hundred feet in length, with a circular building in the centre, surmounted by a lofty dome supported on pillars, and connected with it on the west is the royal chapel, consecrated in 1822, and capable of accommodating one thousand persons. Behind the Pavilion are the royal stables, a circular structure appropriately designed in the Arabian style, surmounted with a dome of glass, which, reflecting the rays of a meridian sun, produces an extraordinary and singularly beautiful effect; on the east side of the quadrangle, in which they are situated, is a racquet-court, and on the west a riding-house.

The hot and cold sea-water, vapour, and shower baths have been constructed with every regard to the convenience of the invalid: those at the New Steyne hotel are supplied with water raised from the sea, to the height of six hundred feet, by an engine, and conveyed through a tunnel excavated in the rock. The chalybeate spring, about half a mile west of the old church, is enclosed within a neat building, in the cottage style; the water, which deposits an ochrous sediment, has been found very beneficial in restoring infirm habits, and is in high repute: and the spa affords every variety of mineral water artificially prepared. The hotels, inns, and lodging-houses, are in every gradation of style, from the most sumptuous and luxurious elegance to the simpler accommodations of domestic privacy, adapted to the rank and habits of the numerous visitors; and the various shops are richly stored with every article of luxury or use. There are four public libraries, replete with choice works of every description: assemblies are held at the hotels, in which are elegant and spacious rooms, superbly fitted up. The theatre, a handsome building erected in 1807, is open for the season, during the recess of the London patent theatres, and has the assistance of the best metropolitan performers. The races, which continue for four or five days, are held on the down, the first week in August. The royal gardens to the north of the town, including a spacious cricket-ground, are appropriated to various amusements: the park and the South Downs afford pleasant and extensive rides. The Old Steyne is adorned with a fine statue of George IV., by Chantrey; and comprises the North and South Parades and several other pleasant walks: the promenade commences after the heat of the day has subsided, and continues till night, the royal military band being occasionally in attendance.

The suspension chain pier, constructed in 1821, at an expense of £30,000, under the superintendence of Captain Brown, R.N., to facilitate the landing and embarkation, forms also a favourite promenade, one thousand two hundred feet in length, and fourteen feet in breadth: on the pier-head, which, in a transverse direction, is sixty feet long and twenty feet broad, are seats protected from the rain and shaded from the sun by a large awning. The foundation of this noble and ingenious structure consists of massive piers formed by clusters of piles driven ten feet into the rock, over which are carried strong chains of iron, securely fastened at one end to the shore, and at the other to the pier-head, having a dip of eighteen feet between the piers: from these chains descend perpendicular rods of iron connected by bars, and firmly bolted into the platform suspended beneath; below the pier-head are tiers of galleries, with flights of steps for the convenience of landing or embarking at any state of the tide. The Esplanade, one thousand two hundred feet long and forty feet wide, connects the chain-pier with the Steyne. Among the many recent improvements is the formation of a carriage road over the beach, thus connecting the cliff road with the Marine Parade. There are barracks for infantry in the town, and for cavalry at the distance of a mile on the road to Lewes. The artillery barracks on the western cliff, where there is a battery of heavy ordnance for the defence of the beach, are now used as dwelling-houses: a wall has been raised on the eastern side of the town, to protect it from the encroachment of the sea.

Numerous packets and steam-vessels sail from this place to Dieppe, whence the route to Paris is not only ninety miles shorter than that from Calais, but passes through Rouen and a finer part of the country; and a few vessels discharge their cargoes of coal and light goods on the beach. The principal branch of trade is that of the fishery, in which about one hundred boats are employed: the mackerel season commences in April, and the herring season in October: soles, turbot, skate, and other flat fish, are also taken in great quantities, and sent to the London market. The making of nets and tackle for the fishermen, the materials of which are brought from Bridport, affords employment to a portion of the inhabitants. In the intercourse between Brighton and London, numerous coaches are employed daily. The market was established by act of parliament, in 1773: the principal market is on Thursday, but there are daily markets for the supply of the inhabitants: the fairs are on Holy Thursday and September 4th. A new and commodious market-house was built on the site of the old workhouse, in 1829. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold meetings every Monday and Thursday; but the direction of police and parochial affairs is entrusted, under an act of parliament, to a corporate body of one hundred and twelve commissioners, who are elected by the inhabitants paying scot and lot from among themselves, and who go out septennially by rotation; they appoint a town-clerk, surveyor, collectors of tolls and duties, police officers, criers, and watchmen: a constable, eight headboroughs, and other officers are chosen annually at the court leet for the hundred. A town-hall, more suited to the character and importance of the place than the former, which has been taken down, is now being rebuilt on the site of the old market-house.

The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of West Blatchington consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £20. 2. 1½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a spacious ancient structure, partly in the decorated, and partly in the later style of English architecture, standing on the summit of a hill, one hundred and fifty feet above the level of the sea, and having a square tower, which serves as a land-mark to mariners; within are, a fine screen of richly carved oak, and an antique font brought from Normandy in the reign of William the Conqueror, embellished with sculptured representations of the Last Supper, and of the miracles of our Saviour. St. Peter's is an elegant structure in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower, erected in 1827, partly by grant from the parliamentary commissioners, and containing one thousand and nineteen free sittings; it is a chapel of ease to the church of St. Nicholas. The chapel royal in North-street, the chapels of St. James and St. Mary in St. James' street, St. Margaret's in Cannon-place, St. George's near Kemp Town, and Trinity chapel in Ship-street, are all connected with the establishment. There are two places of worship for Particular Baptists, three for Independents, and one each for the Society of Friends, those in the connexion of the late Countess of Huntingdon, Huntingdonians, Methodists, and Scotch Seceders; also Bethel chapel, in connexion with the Mariners' Friend Society, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a synagogue. There are numerous free schools for the instruction of poor children, the principal of which are the school in Gardener-street, for clothing and educating girls, founded in 1811, and endowed with £7100, by Swan Downer, Esq.; the Blue-coat school in Ship-street, for clothing and instructing boys, to which William Grimmet, Esq., in 1768, bequeathed £1932. 10. 10.; the school near Russel-street, for the children of fishermen; the orphan school, on the western road: the National, Infant, and Sunday schools, supported by subscription, to which the Countess of Gower, Mr. George Beach, Mr. Anthony Springett, and others, have been severally benefactors; and the Union charity school in Middle-street, supported by the several congregations of dissenters. The county hospital, a spacious and commodious building, on an eminence near the East Downs, is well regulated, and liberally supported by subscription: the dispensary is supported by annual subscription, and there are also six almshouses for aged widows. On White Hawke hill, near the race-course, on which a signal-house has been erected, are the remains of an encampment, having a narrow entrance on the north, where it is defended by a double intrenchment: and on Hollingsbury hill, a second station for signals, about two miles north of the town, are vestiges of a large circular encampment, in which are several tumuli. In 1750, an urn, containing one thousand silver denarii, of the emperors from Antoninus Pius to Philip, was found near the town; and in the immediate vicinity are numerous remains of altars and other Druidical monuments.

BRIGHTLING, a parish in the hundred of NETHERFIELD, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, 4 miles (S. W.) from Battle, containing 641 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. B. Hayley. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is principally in the later style of English architecture. Mary Herbert, in 1728, gave £200, which, aided by other benefactions, now produces £10 per annum, for which eleven girls are instructed; and there is a fund kept in reserve for the future erection of a school-room.

BRIGHTLINGSEA, a parish in the hundred of TENDRING, county of ESSEX, 9 miles (S. E.) from Colchester, containing 1528 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £17. 0. 5., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church, which is situated about a mile and a half from the village, is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parish constitutes a peninsula, formed by the estuary of the river Colne on the west, and that of a smaller river on the east. There is a trifling endowment for parochial schools.

BRIGHTSIDE-BIERLOW, a township in that part of the parish of SHEFFIELD which is in the northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (N. E.) from Sheffield, containing 6615 inhabitants. Here are large iron-works, and the manufacture of table knives, scythes, &c., is carried on extensively. A school at Grimesthorpe was established about 1762, and rebuilt, with a house for the master, in 1802; it is endowed with £15. 10. per annum, for which the master teaches twelve children.

BRIGHT-WALTHAM, county of BERKS.—See WALTHAM (BRIGHT).

BRIGHTWELL, a parish in the hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, 2½ miles (W. N. W.) from Wallingford, containing, with the hamlets of Mackney and Slade-End, 546 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £44. 17. 11., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church, dedicated to St. Agatha, contains, among other monuments, one to the memory of Thomas Godwyn, D.D., author of a treatise on the Jewish and Roman antiquities, who died rector of this parish in 1642. There is a meeting-house for dissenters. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Thames, and on the south by the Tadsey. Here was anciently a castle, which, in 1153, was given up by Stephen to Henry II., then Duke of Normandy, after the treaty of peace concluded between him and Matilda at Wallingford, and probably soon afterwards demolished, for its site is not even known, though conjectured to have been within the moat where the manor farm-house now stands. Frances Riggins, in 1726, left a small annuity for the instruction of children, and for supplying the poor with bread. The Bishop of Winchester, as lord paramount, holds a court annually.

BRIGHTWELL, a parish in the hundred of CARLFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Ipswich, containing 73 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Foxhall annexed, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £15 per annum private benefaction, £1000 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir John G. Shaw, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BRIGHTWELL-BALDWIN, a parish in the hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Tetsworth, containing, with the tything of Cadwell, 286 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £18. 16., and in the patronage of W. White, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. At a place called Bushy-Leas, between this and Chalgrave, a curious glass vessel, surrounded by twelve Roman sepulchral urns, was anciently dug up.

BRIGHTWELL-PRIOR, a chapelry in the parish of NEWINGTON, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Tetsworth, containing 44 inhabitants.

BRIGNALL, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 1 mile (S. W. by W.) from Greta-Bridge, containing 216 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £8. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A school was established here, in 1817, by J. B. S. Morritt, Esq., who allows £15 per annum for its support.

BRIGSLEY, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Great Grimsby, containing 94 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 4. 4., and in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

BRIGSTOCK, a parish in the hundred of CORBY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 22 miles (N. E.) from Northampton, containing 1037 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Stanion annexed, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £11. 7. 3½., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Cleveland. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, has some Norman remains amidst various alterations of later date; the tower is of very rude workmanship, and plastered. There is a small endowment for parochial schools. By a custom that prevails in the manor, if any man die seized of copyhold lands or tenements which have descended to him in fee, his youngest son inherits; but if they have been purchased by him, they descend to the eldest son.

BRILL, a parish in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Thame, containing 1060 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Boarstall annexed, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £15 per annum private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir J. Aubrey, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Here was a palace belonging to the kings of Mercia, which was a favourite residence of Edward the Confessor, who frequently came hither during the hunting season to enjoy the pleasures of the chase in Bernwood Forest. After the Conquest, Henry II., attended by his Chancellor, Thomas à Becket, kept his court here in 1160 and 1162; and Henry III. in 1224. In 1642, a garrison, which was stationed here for the king, was attacked by a detachment of the parliamentary forces, under the patriotic Hampden, but they were repulsed with considerable loss: the royalists, on the capture of Reading in the ensuing year, evacuated this place. A fair, granted to Sir John Molins in 1346, is held annually on the Wednesday next after Old Michaelmas-day. A free school has an income of about £25 per annum, arising principally from an endowment by John Pym, in 1637. Here are also almshouses with a small endowment for poor widows, given by Alice Carter, widow, in 1591. A hermitage, dedicated to St. Werburgh, anciently stood in the vicinity.

BRILLEY, a chapelry in the parish of KINGTON, hundred of HUNTINGTON, county of HEREFORD, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Hay, containing 506 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

BRIMFIELD, a parish in the hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, 5 miles (W.) from Tenbury, containing 532 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford.

BRIMHAM, a hamlet in the chapelry of HARTWITH, parish of KIRKBY-MALZEARD, lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (W.) from Ripley. The population is returned with Hartwith. Brimham Craggs, an assemblage of rocks covering about forty acres of ground, are thought, from their singular position, to have been thrown together by some extraordinary convulsion of the earth; the spot is also supposed to have been chosen for the performance of the sacred rites of the Druids, from the appearance of altars, rock-idols, rocking-stones, and other rude symbols.

BRIMINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Chesterfield, containing 629 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Chesterfield. The chapel was rebuilt in 1808. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Chesterfield canal passes through the chapelry.

BRIMPSFIELD, a parish in the hundred of RAPSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Painswick, containing 348 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with that of Cranham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £9. 12. 1. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. An Alien priory of Benedictine monks, subordinate to the abbey of St. Stephen, at Fountenay in Normandy, anciently existed here, but of its foundation and history little is known, and the only relic of it is in the name of an adjoining field. Here was also a castle, but every vestige of it has disappeared, except the moat which surrounded it. The Roman Ermin-street passed along the northern side of the parish.

BRIMPTON, a parish in the hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Newbury, containing 464 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of Mrs. Cove. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. At the period of the Norman survey there were two churches in the parish, and remains of an ancient ecclesiastical edifice are visible at a farm-house, about half a mile from the present church. The Knights Hospitallers appear to have had an establishment here in the time of Henry III.

BRIMPTON, a parish in the hundred of STONE, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Yeovil, containing 125 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 7., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Thomas S. Horner, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BRIMSLADE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, containing 110 inhabitants.

BRIMSTAGE, a township in that part of the parish of BROMBORROW which is in the lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Great Neston, containing 141 inhabitants.

BRIND, a joint township with Newsham, in the parish of WRESSEL, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Howden. The population is returned with Newsham.

BRINDLE, a parish in the hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Chorley, containing 1574 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £12. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a small edifice. The work-house, about a mile from the village, was formerly appropriated to the reception of pauper lunatics, and the idle and refractory poor from other townships; but since the erection of the county asylum at Lancaster, it has been open for the poor of any township, the inhabitants of which choose to contribute toward its support, and there are now about eighty townships thus incorporated. The free school, supposed to have been founded by Peter Burscough, has an endowment of £16. 16. a year, arising from various benefactions, and is open unlimitedly for poor children.

BRINDLEY, a township in the parish of ACTON, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Nantwich, containing 167 inhabitants.

BRINDLEYS, an extra-parochial liberty, in the Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Howden, containing 7 inhabitants.

BRINGHURST, a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, comprising the chapelry of Great Easton, and the townships of Bringhurst and Drayton, and containing 735 inhabitants, of which number, 102 are in the township of Bringhurst, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Rockingham. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 15., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

BRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Kimbolton, containing 164 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacies of Bythorn and Old Weston united, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £34. 3. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Clare Hall, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of NOBOTTLE-GROVE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from Northampton, containing 874 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £40, and in the patronage of Earl Spencer. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains some fine monuments to the memory of deceased members of the Spencer family, among which is that of Henry Spencer, first Earl of Sunderland, killed at the battle of Newbury, in 1644. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Althorp, in this parish, which was formerly more populous, now contains only the noble mansion of Earl Spencer, to whom it gives the inferior title of viscount.

BRININGHAM, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Holt, containing 282 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of Mrs. Mary Reeve. The church is dedicated to St. Maurice.

BRINKBURN (HIGH WARD), a township in the parish of LONG FRAMLINGTON, eastern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Morpeth, containing 197 inhabitants. Brinkburn, including also the Low Ward, was anciently extra-parochial, but has been annexed to the parish of Long Framlington. Here are extensive strata of limestone, and a rich mine of coal. A priory for Augustine canons was founded, in the time of Henry I., by Osbertus Colatarius, in honour of St. Peter: the establishment, at the time of the dissolution, consisted of ten religious, and the revenue was rated at £77. It was beautifully situated within a curvature of the river Coquet, which flows close to the walls, and now forms an interesting assemblage of ruins, consisting of the tower of its cruciform church, a small spire, a dormitory, and part of the outer walls, together with some fine pillars and arches, exhibiting various specimens of Norman architecture. On the hill above the priory are traces of a Roman town, in connexion with a military way; and the foundations of the piers of a Roman bridge across the river are plainly discernible when the water is low. Brinkburn Grove is thought to have been the spot where the Romans offered up devotions and sacrifices to their god Jupiter.

BRINKBURN (LOW WARD), a township in the parish of LONG FRAMLINGTON, eastern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, containing 55 inhabitants.

BRINKBURN (SOUTH SIDE), a township in that part of the parish of FELTON which is in the western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9 miles (N. N. W.) from Morpeth, containing 25 inhabitants.

BRINKHILL, a parish in the hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (N. N. W.) from Spilsby, containing 119 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of R. Cracroft, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Philip. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In a stratum of blue clay in the village are found veins of barren marcasite, a great quantity of which, after a heavy shower of rain, is usually washed down by a rill that runs near.

BRINKLEY, a parish in the hundred of RADFIELD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 3½ miles (S. by W.) from Newmarket, containing 317 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. This parish is entitled to the fifth part of an estate, producing in the whole £100 per annum, given by Mrs. Elizabeth March, in 1729, for the instruction of children.

BRINKLOW, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 6 miles (N. W.) from Rugby, containing 757 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £17. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here was formerly a castle belonging to the family of Mowbray, and subsequently to that of De Stuteville: to a member of the latter, King John granted permission to hold a weekly market at this place. The Oxford canal crosses the parish, and in its course through it is twice intersected by the Roman Fosse-way, on the line of which there are some traces of an encampment. The interest on £100, given by the Rev. William Fairfax, in 1761, is applied to the instruction of poor children.

BRINKWORTH, a parish in the hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, 4½ miles (W. N. W.) from Wootton-Bassett, containing, with the tything of Grittenham, 1216 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £23. 9. 2., and in the patronage of Lord Holland. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is an endowment of about £5 per annum for teaching children.

BRINNINGTON, a township in the parish of STOCKPORT, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Stockport, containing 2124 inhabitants.

BRINSOP, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, 5½ miles (N. W.) from Hereford, containing 107 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. The church is dedicated to St. George.

BRINSWORTH, a township in that part of the parish of ROTHERHAM which is in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 2½ miles (S. S. W.) from Rotherham, containing 225 inhabitants.

BRINTON, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (W. S. W.) from Holt, containing 221 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Thornage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 11. 4. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BRISCO, or BIRKSCEUGH, a township in that part of the parish of ST. CUTHBERT, CARLISLE, which is in CUMBERLAND ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 3½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Carlisle, containing 308 inhabitants. There are two establishments for printing calico on the banks of the river Petterill, in this township. The first wheat that grew in the county was produced here, about the year 1700.

BRISLEY, a parish in the hundred of LAUNDITCH, county of NORFOLK, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from East Dereham, containing 362 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Gateley annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 7. 8½., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

BRISLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of KEYNSHAM, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Bristol, containing 1216 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the patronage of Lieutenant-General Popham. The church, dedicated to St. Luke, has recently received an addition of two hundred and sixty-five sittings, one hundred and forty of which are free, and towards defraying the expense the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels granted £900. The river Avon forms the north-eastern boundary of this parish. Brislington House is an asylum for lunatics, lately erected by Edward Long Fox, M.D., who first introduced the classification of patients in such establishments: the buildings are of brick, with stone copings, and comprise a spacious central edifice, with detached wings, extending in front four hundred and ninety-five feet, and having a neatly disposed shrubbery: they are fire-proof, all the parts usually constructed of wood in other buildings being in this, with the exception of a few doors and windows in the central house, made of iron, or some other incombustible material. Attached to the establishment are warm and other baths, a bowling-green, five-a-court, and similar sources of recreation; and upon the estate are other houses, remote from the principal edifice, where patients may be accommodated with servants, and keep whatever establishment their friends choose. A variety of Roman coins was found in an adjoining field in 1829. A chapel, dedicated to St. Anne, was founded by one of the lords de la Warre, in the northern part of the manor, but there are not any vestiges of it.

Barton-Regis, and form the suburbs of Bristol, nearly 90,000. This place, called by the Britons Caer Brito, and supposed to have been the Abona, or Trajectus, of Antonine, notwithstanding the various conjectures of antiquaries, probably derives its name from the Saxon Brito-stow. In 1063, Harold set sail from this port for the subjugation of Wales; and soon after the Conquest, his sons, attempting to overthrow the government of William, made an assault upon Bristol, but were defeated by the inhabitants. At that time an extensive traffic in English slaves was carried on here, which was abolished by William, at the intercession of Archbishop Lanfranc. In 1089, Geoffrey, Bishop of Coutance, taking part in a confederacy against William Rufus, for the purpose of raising his elder brother Robert to the throne, assembled his forces here, and fortified the town with walls, portions of which still remain; and in the struggle between Stephen and Matilda, the Earl of Gloucester, having taken possession of the city for the empress, built a castle, into which she retired on her escape from Arundel, at that time besieged by her opponent. Stephen having been soon after taken prisoner, was confined in this castle, and, by Matilda's order, loaded with chains, till he was released by the capture of the earl, for whom he was exchanged. In 1142, Prince Henry, afterwards Henry II., being brought from Normandy on a visit to his mother, was placed at Bristol, under the protection of the Earl of Gloucester, where he remained for four years, and received part of his education. Edward I. kept the festival of Christmas here in 1285, where he held a council; and during the war between Edward II. and the barons, Henry de Willington and Harry de Mumford, who had been taken prisoners, were executed here, in 1322. Edward III., in 1353, removed the staple for wool from the several towns in Flanders to England, and, among other places, to this city, which, in consequence, rapidly grew into importance as a place of trade; and, in 1373, he erected it into a separate county, under the designation of the "City and County of the City of Bristol," the limits of which extend by water from Tower Haritz to Kingsroad, thence along the south side of the Bristol channel to the Holmaes (the scene of the retirement of Gildas, the early historian

BRISTOL, a city and county of itself, and a considerable port, situated near the mouth of the Bristol channel, and between the counties of Gloucester and Somerset, 34 miles (S. W. by S.) from Gloucester, 12 (N. W.) from Bath, and 118 (W.) from London, containing 52,889 inhabitants, but including the out-parishes, which are in the hundred of of Britain), and eastward to Denney island, and back to Kingroad; by land, about five miles on the side next the county of Gloucester, and nearly three on that next the county of Somerset. In 1399, the Duke of Lancaster, afterwards Henry IV., besieged the city with a powerful army, and, on its surrender, sentenced the governor, Scroop, Earl of Wiltshire, Sir Henry Green, and Sir John Bushy, to be beheaded; and in the same year, by an act of parliament, he exempted the city, by "land and water," from the jurisdiction of the Lord High Admiral. In 1471, the Duke of Somerset, the Earl of Devonshire, and other nobles in the interest of the House of Lancaster, entering into a confederacy against Edward IV., assembled their forces here, and were greatly assisted by the inhabitants, who were attached to the Lancastrian cause, in their attempts to replace Henry VI. upon the throne. Henry VII. visited Bristol in 1485, on which occasion the citizens, to evince the greater respect, appeared in their best apparel; but the king thinking their wives too richly dressed for their station, imposed a fine of twenty shillings upon every citizen who was worth £20. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the city was garrisoned by the parliamentarians, who appointed Nathaniel Fiennes governor. The king, sensible of the importance of the place, endeavoured to gain possession of it by means of his partisans within the town; but their proceedings having been discovered, Alderman Yeomans and Mr. Bouchier were hanged as traitors, by order of the governor. In 1643, Prince Rupert closely invested the city, which surrendered on the third day; and the king arriving soon after, remained for some days, and attended divine service in the cathedral on the following Sunday. Bristol continued in the possession of the royalists for nearly two years; but after sustaining a vigorous assault with incredible valour, the garrison capitulated to Fairfax, and Cromwell soon after ordered the castle and the fortifications to be demolished.

The city is pleasantly situated in a valley surrounded by hills, near the confluence of the rivers Avon and Frome, and, from the circumstance of many of the houses being built on the acclivities of the hills, and from its circular form, has been thought to bear a striking resemblance to ancient Rome. The old town, which forms the nucleus of the present city, consists of four principal streets, diverging at right angles from the centre, and intersected by several smaller streets. The houses in the interior of the town are mostly ancient, being built of timber and plaister, with the upper stories projecting; but in the exterior parts are spacious streets and squares, containing houses uniformly built of stone and brick, and possessing a high degree of elegance. The town is well paved, lighted with gas, and amply supplied with excellent water from springs, and from public conduits in convenient situations, of which, the conduit in Temple-street is ornamented with a fine figure of Neptune, and enclosed by an iron palisade. A handsome stone bridge of three wide arches over the Avon, which flows through the town, was completed in 1768, on the site of a former one, connecting the northern with the southern part; and over the river Frome is a drawbridge of two arches of stone, the platform being turned by machinery, to admit the passage of ships. The theatre, said to have been admired by Garrick for its just proportions and arrangement, was built by Mr. Powell, in 1766, and is opened during the winter season by the Bath company of performers. Assemblies are occasionally held in a fine suite of rooms in Princes-street, composing a handsome edifice with pillars of the Corinthian order; and equestrian performances formerly took place in the circus, a commodious building in Limekiln-lane. The city library, a handsome stone edifice, ornamented with sculptured literary emblems, contains an extensive collection of books, besides a valuable assortment of fossils given to it by the Rev. Mr. Calcott. The Philosophical Institution, a neat building with a Grecian portico, contains two reading rooms, a theatre in which lectures on the various branches of science are periodically delivered, a laboratory, a philosophical apparatus, a museum, a room wherein casts from the Elgin marbles are deposited, and a room for the exhibition of paintings. There is also a Mechanics' Institution. The Exchange, in Corn-street, erected about the year 1760, by the corporation, at an expense of more than £50,000, is a spacious and elegant structure, one hundred and ten feet in length, and of proportionate breadth, with a rustic basement, in the centre of which are handsome columns of the Corinthian order, forming the principal entrance, and supporting a pediment, bearing in the tympanum the king's arms, finely sculptured: this edifice is not used as an exchange, but principally for the corn market: the merchants, notwithstanding the ample accommodation it affords, having invariably transacted their business in the open street, till the year 1811, when the Commercial Rooms were erected. These buildings, to which the entrance from the street is by a portico of four pillars of the Ionic order, contain several apartments for the despatch of business, and a reading-room: the principal hall, sixty feet in length, forty feet wide, and twenty-five feet high, is lighted by a circular lantern, twenty-one feet in diameter, and crowned with a handsome dome supported by twelve caryatides. The post-office is a neat building of freestone, to the west of the Exchange.

Bristol is represented by Malmsbury as having been, so early as the reign of Henry II., a "wealthy city, full of ships from Ireland, Norway, and every part of Europe, which brought to it great commerce." It carries on an extensive trade with the West Indies, North and South America, and the countries bordering on the Baltic and Mediterranean seas. The principal articles of importation are sugar, rum, coffee, tobacco, wine, German wool, timber, and turpentine; those exported consist chiefly of the produce of the manufactories within the town and neighbourhood: it has also a very extensive coasting trade, besides considerable intercourse with Ireland. The number of ships belonging to it, according to the return in 1829, was three hundred and sixteen, the aggregate burden of which amounted to forty-nine thousand five hundred and thirty-five tons. In the year 1826, the number of vessels entered inwards from foreign ports was, three hundred and thirty-four British, and sixty foreign; and the number cleared outwards, two hundred and seventy-seven British, and thirty-five foreign: and the amount of duties paid at the custom-house, during the same year, exceeded a million sterling. In the following year, the number of coasting vessels entered inwards was five thousand one hundred and eighty-six, of which seven hundred and thirty-one were from Ireland. Within the last few years a considerable reduction has been made in the local dues of the port, the previous high rate of which, compared with those of Liverpool and other places, being considered to operate injuriously to its interests. The port was materially enlarged and improved in 1247, by diverting the course of the river Frome into another channel, but was still subject to great inconvenience, from vessels being obliged to wait for spring tides, before they could sail out of the harbour. It was further improved in 1803, by changing the course of the Avon, and damming up its former channel, to form an extensive floating-dock, communicating, by means of reservoirs, with the river and the quay, to which vessels have access at any time, and from which, at every high tide, they may sail directly into the channel. Over this new course of the Avon two handsome iron bridges have been erected: the entire work was completed in 1809, at an expense of more than £600,000. The quay, extending for more than a mile along the banks of the Avon and Frome, and secured by a strong brick wall, coped with stone, is accessible to ships of any burden, and conveniently adapted to the despatch of business. Immediately behind it, in a spacious square, in the centre of which is an equestrian statue of William III., in the Roman costume, are the mansion-house, the custom-house, and the excise-office, which are not entitled to architectural notice. On the banks of the river Avon, a little below the town, are several dock-yards, where ship-building is carried on to a considerable extent. The principal articles of manufacture are brass, copper, zinc, spelter, patent shot, lead, leather, floor-cloth, china, glass, glass bottles and glass ware of every kind (for which there are fifteen furnaces), and the celebrated stone ware: the brass and copper works here are the most extensive in England, and the zinc is considered superior to that made in any other place. There is an extensive pin-manufactory, wherein, exclusively of several hundred adults, two hundred children are employed; and there are several sugar refineries, breweries, distilleries, and iron-foundries, for the supply of all which, abundance of coal is brought into the town, from the collieries in the neighbourhood. An act has lately been obtained for the construction of a rail-road from Coal Pit Heath, in the county of Gloucester, to Bristol. The market days are Monday, for fish; Tuesday, for corn, hay, and straw; Wednesday, for general provisions, fish, cheese, and hides; Thursday, for corn, cattle, and hides; Friday, for hay and straw; and Saturday, for general provisions and hides. The principal market-place forms a spacious quadrangle; one side is occupied by the back of the exchange, forming a rustic arcade, over which is a pediment ornamented with the city arms and surmounted by a handsome turret. St. James' market-house, and the Welch market-house, are neat and convenient buildings. Fairs, each continuing eight days, on the first two of which there is a considerable show of cattle, are held on March 1st and September 1st. A spacious market-place for cattle has recently been opened without the town, at an expense of £10,000: it occupies an area four hundred feet square, along the sides of which are pent-houses for fat cattle, sheep, pigs, &c. The area is formed into divisions for lean cattle, store sheep, and pigs, and showing-ground for horses: in the centre of the princial entrance is a commodious freestone residence for the clerk of the market, containing also apartments for drovers, farmers, &c.

The government, by charter of incorporation granted by Henry III., and confirmed and extended by Edward III., Queen Elizabeth, Charles II., and finally by Queen Anne, who made the election of the officers independent of royal control, is vested in a mayor, a high steward (who is usually a nobleman), a recorder (who must be a barrister of five years' standing), two sheriffs (who are also bailiffs of the ancient hundred), twelve aldermen, one for each of the twelve wards into which the city is divided, and twenty-eight common council-men, assisted by a town-clerk (who must be a barrister of three years' standing), a chamberlain, vice-chamberlain, two coroners, a sword-bearer, a water-bailiff, a clerk of the markets, eight serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor is chosen annually on the 4th of September, from among those who have served the office of sheriff; the sheriffs are chosen annually from the common council-men, and the aldermen from those who have served the office of mayor. The freedom of the city is inherited by the sons of freemen, obtained by marriage with the daughter of a freeman, by servitude, by purchase, or by presentation. The mayor, recorder, and aldermen are justices of the peace for the city and county of the city. The corporation hold a court of session quarterly, a court of assize in April, and a court of Nisi Prius, in which one of the judges on the western circuit presides. A court, called the Tolzey court (from having been anciently held at the place where the king's tolls, or dues, were collected), is held by prescription every Monday, under the sheriffs (in their character of bailiffs of the hundred), aided by a steward, who must be a barrister of three years' standing; its jurisdiction extends over the whole of the county of the city, and on the river down to the Flat and Steep Holmes, below Kingsroad, thirty miles from the city; and it takes cognizance of all actions for debt, and other civil actions, to an unlimited amount, arising within the city: it also holds pleas of ejectment, and issues processes of attachment on the goods of foreigners sued for debt. A branch of this, similar in all its proceedings and jurisdiction, is the court of pie-powder, held for fourteen days in the open air, in the Old market, commencing on the 30th of September, and during this period the proceedings in the Tolzey court are suspended. A court of conscience is held under commissioners, every Monday, pursuant to an act passed in the 1st of William and Mary, for the recovery of debts under 40s. A court of requests, under an act of the 56th of George III., is also held every Monday under commissioners, for the recovery of debts above 40s., and under any amount for which an arrest on mesne process may by law take place: its jurisdiction extends over "the city and county of the city of Bristol, and the liberties thereof, and the several parishes and out-parishes of Clifton, St. James, and St. Paul, and St. Philip and Jacob, and the tything of Stoke Bishop, in the parish of Westbury upon Trym, in the county of Gloucester, and the parish of Bedminster, in the county of Somerset." The guildhall is a very ancient building, recently fronted with stone; it is decorated with the arms of Edward VI., those of his present majesty, and a statue of Charles II. In the north wing is a small chapel, dedicated to St. George, founded in the reign of Richard II., by William Spicer, a former mayor. The new council-house, for the transaction of civic affairs, is an elegant edifice of freestone, of the Ionic order, with a handsome portico and balustrade, and ornamented with a figure of Justice over the pediment, on one side of which are the royal arms, and on the other those of the city. Merchants' hall, Coopers' hall, and others, formerly belonging to the different trading companies, and many of them handsome buildings, are now appropriated to private uses. The gaol, erected in 1820, is a spacious and well-arranged quadrangular edifice of stone; at the entrance is a lodge for the turnkey, and in the centre of the court-yard is the governor's house, communicating by means of cast-iron bridges, with the four wings of the prison, one containing rooms for forty-three male and forty-three female debtors of the first and second classes, and others for fifty of the lower class, with an infirmary for females, and two cells and a day-room for female convicts under sentence of death; the other wings are for felons, and are arranged with a due regard to classification, and to cleanliness, exercise, and health: the buildings are warmed by pneumatic stoves, and are amply supplied with water raised from a spring by a tread-wheel worked by the prisoners. The house of correction, which is also well arranged and under good regulation, is situated on the bank of the river Frome, in the parish of St. John. Lawford's Gate prison, without the city, is appropriated to that part of the suburbs lying in the county of Gloucester. The elective franchise has been exercised since the 23rd of Edward I.: the city returns two members to parliament. The right of election is vested in the freemen at large, in number about six thousand: the mayor is the returning officer.

Bristol is the seat of a diocese, the jurisdiction of which extends over the city and county of the city, the greater part of the county of Dorset, and a few parishes in the county of Gloucester: it was separated from the diocese of Salisbury, and raised into a see in 1542. The establishment consists of a bishop, dean, six prebendaries, six minor canons, a deacon, subdeacon, and other officers. The cathedral, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was formerly the Collegiate Church belonging to a priory of Black canons, founded by Robert Fitzharding, in 1148, and raised into an abbey in the reign of Henry II., the revenue being, at the dissolution, £767. 15. 3. It is a venerable and highly finished cruciform structure, with a lofty square embattled tower rising from the centre, strengthened with buttresses and crowned with pinnacles; it contains portions in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture, in all of them exhibiting specimens of the purest design and most elaborate execution. The nave was destroyed during the parliamentary war: the roofs of the choir and transepts, all of equal height and finely groined, are supported on clustered columns, richly moulded; and the remaining parts, from the striking beauty of their details, afford evidence of the grandeur of the interior when entire. At the entrance into the choir is an empannelled screen, ornamented with carvings of the minor prophets; and in several small chapels of exquisite beauty are many interesting monuments, among which may be noticed those of Robert Fitzharding, and of several of the abbots and bishops; of Mrs. Draper, the eulogized Eliza of Sterne; Lady Heaketh, celebrated by Cowper; and the wife of the Rev. William Mason, with a beautiful epitaph written by that poet. The chapter-house, a spacious edifice highly enriched, in the latest style of Norman architecture; part of the cloisters, in the later English style; and the episcopal palace, in repairing which, in 1740, a dungeon was discovered, containing human bones and several instruments of torture, are still remaining: the entrance gateway, in the lower part of the Norman style, and in the upper part of the later style of English architecture, is in a state of excellent preservation.

The city comprises the parishes of All Saints, St. Augustine, Christ Church, St. Ewin, or Owen, St. John the Baptist, St. Leonard, St. Mary le Port, St. Mary Redcliffe, St. Michael, St. Nicholas, St. Peter, St. Stephen, St. Thomas, and St. Werburgh, besides Temple parish, and part of the parishes of St. James, St. Paul, and St. Philip and St. Jacob, all within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop; there is also the extra-parochial ward of Castle Precincts, which has no church, and is exempted from all ecclesiastical assessments. The living of All Saints' is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £4. 3. 4., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church, to which a tower was added in 1716, is a very ancient structure; the interior is a fine specimen of the early style of English architecture, and contains a magnificent monument, by Rysbrack, to the memory of Edward Colston, Esq., an eminent philanthropist, and a great benefactor to the city. The living of St. Augustine's is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter. The church, which was built about the year 1480, combines various portions in the early, with several in the later, style of English architecture. The living of Christ Church parish is a discharged rectory, with that of St. Ewin's united, rated in the king's books at £11. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The church is a handsome modern edifice in the Grecian style, with a lofty tower of two stages, decorated with light columns and pilasters, and surmounted by an octangular turret and spire. The living of St. John the Baptist's is a discharged rectory, with which that of St. Lawrence was consolidated in 1578, rated in the king's books at £7. 4. 7., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The church is a handsome edifice, chiefly in the later style of English architecture. The living of St. Leonard's is a discharged vicarage, with that of St. Nicholas united, rated in the king's books at £34. 1. 1., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter. The living of the parish of St. Mary le Port is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £7, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The church is a very ancient structure in the early style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. The living of St. Mary's Redcliffe is a discharged vicarage, annexed to Bedminster, rated in the king's books at £12. 6. 3. The church was founded in 1376, by Simon de Burton, mayor, and, after the damage it sustained from a violent storm, in 1445, that blew down two-thirds of the spire, it was extensively repaired by William Cannynge, Esq. It is a spacious and magnificent cruciform structure, with a lofty and finely proportioned tower at the west end, surmounted by the remaining part of the spire, which has not been rebuilt. The interior exhibits a continued series of the richest specimens, in every variety, from the early to the later style of English architecture; the roof is elaborately groined, and supported on finely clustered columns of singular delicacy, and deeply moulded arches of graceful elevation; all the proportions are grand, and all the details rich and exquisitely finished: the beautiful east window has been blocked up with paintings, which, though from the pencil of Hogarth, cannot atone for the destruction of a feature so essential to the unity of effect that this splendid structure is calculated to produce; and the organ, which has been removed to the west end of the nave, is supported by a heavy mass of modern masonry, by no means harmonising with the character of the building. At the intersection is a fine brass eagle, formed of the refuse from the pin-manufactory, and presented by the proprietor of that establishment. The north porch, which is entirely in the decorated style, is exquisitely beautiful; and the Lady chapel, now used as a school-room, is a fine specimen of the later style. In this church are two monuments to the memory of Mr. Cannynge, who is considered as its second founder; one bearing his effigies in magisterial robes, surmounted by a rich canopy; the other representing him as Dean of Westbury, having been promoted to that dignity on entering into holy orders towards the close of his life. The remains of Sir William Penn, father of William Penn, founder of Pennsylvania, are deposited here. The living of St. Michael's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The church is a neat structure in the ancient style of English architecture, with a very old tower. The living of St. Nicholas' is a discharged vicarage, with that of St. Leonard's united, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The church is a neat plain modern edifice in the ancient style of English architecture; the interior forms a spacious area undivided by pillars: in the crypt is a handsome monument to the memory of Alderman John Whiston, who represented the city in four successive parliaments. The living of St. Peter's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. 6., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation: the church is a very ancient and venerable structure, and though so frequently repaired as to leave little of the original building, it still retains much of its character and interest. Richard Savage, whose talents and sufferings have equally excited the admiration and the sympathy of the public, was interred in this church. The living of St. Stephen's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £16, endowed with £1900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown: the church, founded in 1470, by John Shipward, Esq., mayor, is a very handsome structure in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty and beautiful tower, crowned with light pierced battlements and turrets, and a porch, the details of which are exquisitely rich. The living of Temple parish is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £3. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation: the church, founded by the Knights Templars, in 1145, is a spacious edifice, partaking of the late Norman and early English style of architecture, with a fine tower, declining considerably from the perpendicular, disunited from the body of the church by the vibration caused by ringing the bells. The living of St. Thomas' is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Bedminster, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells: the church, founded in the twelfth century, was rebuilt in 1793; it is a handsome structure in the later style of English architecture. The living of St. Werburgh's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown: the church, founded in 1190, and, with the exception of the tower, which was added to it in 1385, rebuilt in 1761, is in the later style of English architecture; it is highly ornamented within, and contains a handsome monument to the memory of Robert Thorne, founder of the grammar school. In this church, the Litany was first celebrated in English, in 1543. The living of St. James' is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation: the church, anciently collegiate, was made parochial in 1347, when the tower was added: the interior contains some fine portions in the Norman style of architecture, particularly a curious circular window. Robert, Earl of Gloucester, founder of the ancient priory of St. James, to which the church belonged, and Eleonora, niece of King John, who is said to have been forty years confined in Bristol castle, are supposed to lie interred in this church. The living of St. Paul's is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The living of the parish of St. Philip and St. Jacob is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation: the church, founded in the twelfth century, is a spacious and handsome structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a lofty square embattled tower. St. Mark's, commonly called the mayor's chapel, in College-green, formerly collegiate, is a small edifice containing elegant specimens of the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture, with a beautiful tower; the altarpiece, which has been recently restored, contains some handsome niches in the later style, and fine tabernacle work; and to the east of the tower is a small chapel, now used for a vestry-room, with a ceiling of fan tracery of exquisite workmanship: divine service is performed every Sunday morning, by the mayor's chaplain. A new church has been erected in the parish of St. Philip, by grant from the parliamentary commissioners. There are several episcopal chapels, the principal of which are, Foster's chapel, in Steep-street, Colston's chapel, on St. Michael's Hill; Trinity chapel, a neat building in the later English style; and Great George-street chapel, a handsome structure in the Grecian style of architecture, with a portico of the Doric order: besides a chapel for French Protestants. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, those in the connexion of the late Countess of Huntingdon, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Moravians, Scotch Seceders, Swedenborgians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics, besides two synagogues.

The free grammar school was founded, in 1352, by Robert Thorne, who bequeathed £1000 for that purpose, which sum, together with several houses and some land belonging to the dissolved hospital of St. Bartholomew, was appropriated to its erection and endowment, and various benefactions having since been made, it now possesses five hundred and ninety acres of land and some houses: it is open to the sons of all freemen within a mile of the liberties of the city, and is under the management of the corporation, who appoint a head-master and a second master, each with a salary of £80 per annum, the head-master having also a good house, with the privilege of taking boarders: it has several exhibitions, and two small fellowships at St. John's College, Oxford. The grammar school in College-green is attached to the cathedral, for the instruction of the choristers by one of the minor canons of that establishment. The free grammar and writing school, in the parish of Redcliffe, was founded by letters patent granted in the 13th of Elizabeth, and endowed by Alderman Whiston and others, with annuities amounting to £21: it is under the management of twelve incorporated governors. Queen Elizabeth's hospital, founded in 1586, by John Carr, an opulent citizen, whose endowment of it, increased by subsequent benefactions, produces about £2400 per annum, is under the management of the corporation, and is appropriated to the clothing, maintenance, and education of forty boys. The free school in St. Augustine's parish was founded, in 1708, by Mr. Edward Colston, who endowed it for the clothing, maintenance, and education of one hundred boys; it is under the inspection of trustees, agreeably to the directions of the founder. In this school Chatterton was maintained for seven years, and within that period is thought to have composed several of his poems. The free school in Temple parish, originally supported by subscription, was endowed with £80 per annum by Mr. Edward Colston, who erected the school-house in 1711, for clothing and instructing forty boys, but the number has been reduced to thirty. The Merchants' Hall school was founded, in 1738, by Dame Susannah Holworthy, and endowed by her and other benefactors, for the instruction of forty boys in grammar, arithmetic, and geography, ten of whom are also taught navigation. The Merchants' Society, in part of whose hall the school is held, provide mathematical instruments, charts, and books, and pay a master. £80 per annum. The school in Pile-street, for clothing and teaching forty boys of the parishes of Redcliffe and St. Thomas, is supported partly by an endowment of £20 per annum, by Mr. Edward Colston, and partly by subscription: the income is about £170 per annum, part of it being appropriated in apprenticing a small number of the boys. The Red Maids' school was founded in 1627, and endowed by Alderman Whiston, for the clothing, maintenance, and instruction of forty girls. A school in Temple parish is endowed with a permanent fund sufficient for the clothing and instruction of forty girls. There is also a school for thirty boys, children of Protestant dissenters, who are educated and partly clothed: the buildings occupy three sides of a quadrangle in Stoke's Croft, the centre containing the school and house for the master, and the wings being used as almshouses for twelve aged persons. A school is supported by the Wesleyan Methodists, and endowed by an unknown benefactor with £700, for the clothing and instruction of thirty girls.

Trinity hospital, or almshouses, for ten aged men and thirty-six poor women, is of very ancient foundation: the original endowment, increased by successive benefactions, produces at present £790 per annum. The premises consist of two separate ranges of buildings, on opposite sides of Old Market-street, to one of which is attached a neat chapel for the use of the alms-people. Foster's almshouses, in Steep-street, were founded and endowed, in 1492, by John Foster, merchant, for fourteen aged persons; the revenue is at present about £330; they are firmly built of stone, and have a small chapel annexed. Temple hospital was founded and endowed, in 1613, by the Rev. Dr. White; its revenue, which has since been progressively improving, amounts at present to upwards of £600, and the number of the inmates has been increased to twenty-four: the premises consist of two parallel ranges of buildings, connected at one end by a wall, the area forming a garden for the use of the alms-people. Two almshouses, both stone structures, one in Temple-street, containing twelve tenements, and the other in the old market-place, containing sixteen apartments, were founded and endowed, in 1679, by Alderman Stevens: the endowment, consisting of three hundred and fifty-four acres of land, produces at present £750 per annum. The merchants' almshouses, in King-street, were founded by John Welch and other mariners, in the 4th of Elizabeth, and comprise thirty-one tenements, at present occupied by nineteen seamen and twelve women. Colston's almshouses, on St. Michael's Hill, were founded and endowed, in 1696, by Mr. Edward Colston, for twelve aged men and twelve aged women: the present income is about £300 per annum; the premises contain twenty-four apartments. Mrs. Sarah Ridley founded an almshouse in 1716, which she endowed with £2200, for five decayed bachelors and five decayed maids; the endowment was augmented by Mr. John Jocham, with £1000, and, with subsequent benefactions, produces at present an income of £155 per annum. The almshouses in Milk-street, were founded by Mrs. Elizabeth Blanchard, in 1722, who endowed them for five aged persons; the income is £95 per annum: there are also several others of minor importance. The revenue arising from all these various charitable endowments amounts to nearly £17,000 per annum. The infirmary, the great medical and surgical school for the western counties, is conducted on a plan of truly beneficent liberality, and embraces every possible case of calamity or disease; it was opened for the reception of patients in 1786, and is nobly supported by donations and voluntary subscriptions. The building, to which a new wing has been recently added, at an expense of £10,000, is spacious and well arranged, and in an open and healthy situation. The asylum for the indigent blind of both sexes, from all parts of the kingdom, who are instructed in basket-making, and in other trades suited to their situation, is a valuable institution supported by subscription. The dispensary, the hospital for diseases of the eye, the asylum for female orphans, the refuge society, the penitentiary, and numerous other charitable and benevolent institutions, are extensively patronised and liberally supported. At Clifton, about a mile from the city, are the celebrated hot wells, noticed in the account of that place.

Of the ancient fortifications, the tower gateway, a plain arch at the end of John-street, and St. John's gate, under the tower of St. John's church, decorated with statues and much ornamented, are all that remain. There are partial remains of some of the numerous religious houses anciently existing in the city and its immediate vicinity, comprised in the buildings of the schools and charitable institutions that have been established by the corporation and other individuals, into whose possession they were transferred at the dissolution. Of these the principal were, a priory of Benedictine monks, to the north-east of the city, founded by Robert, Earl of Gloucester, in the latter part of the reign of Henry I., or the beginning of that of Stephen; a nunnery to the north of the city, founded in the reign of Henry II., by Eva, widow of Robert Fitzharding, of which she was prioress, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £21. 11. 3.; St. John's hospital, on the road to Bath, founded in the reign of King John, the revenue of which was £51. 10. 4.; St. Catherine's hospital, founded in the reign of Henry III., by Robert de Berkele, the revenue of which was £21. 15. 8.; St. Lawrence's hospital, for lepers, founded in the reign of Henry III.; an hospital dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and St. Mark, founded in 1229, by Maurice de Gaunt, the revenue of which was £140; a house of Black friars, by the same founder, who also erected a college of calendaries; a house of Grey friars, founded in 1234; a house of White friars, founded in 1267, by Edward I., when Prince of Wales: an establishment for Augustine friars, founded in the reign of Edward II., by Simon and William Montacute; and Trinity hospital, near Lawford-gate, founded by John Barstable, in the reign of Henry V.

This city is distinguished as the birthplace of many eminent characters, among whom may be noticed Sebastian Cabot, who first discovered the continent of North America, in 1498; Hugh Elliot, who discovered Newfoundland, in 1527; William Grocyn, Greek Professor at Oxford in the beginning of the sixteenth century;

Tobias Matthew, Archbishop of York; Rev. Mr. Calcott, author of a treatise on the deluge; Sir William Draper, who distinguished himself by his epistolary replies to the strictures of Junius; Admiral Sir William Penn; the Rev. John Lewis, author of the Life of Wickliffe, History of the Translations of the Bible, &c.; the poet Chatterton; Mrs. Mary Robinson, from the sweetness of her poetry called the British Sappho; Edward Colston, merchant, who died in 1721; and Richard Reynolds, one of the Society of Friends, and a proprietor of the iron-works at Colebrook-dale, both distinguished for their munificent charities; and Thomas Edward Bowditch, the African traveller. Bristol gives the titles of earl and marquis to the family of Hervey.

BRISTON, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Holt, containing 789 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of H. Thomas Jones, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Thomasine Scamler, in 1667, bequeathed £110 for teaching and apprenticing children.

BRITFORD, a parish in the hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, county of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Salisbury, containing, with the hamlets of East Harnham and Longford, 713 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £13. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a spacious cruciform structure, with a central tower: it contains a tomb which has afforded matter of controversy among writers, some considering it to be the tomb of the Duke of Buckingham, who was beheaded by Richard III., whilst others reject the opinion. A stream in this parish was cut for a canal in the reign of Charles II., to form a line of communication with Christchurch, in the county of Southampton; but, owing to the shifting of the sand, it was never completed.

BRITWELL, a liberty in the parish and hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (N. W.) from Eton. The population is returned with the parish.

BRITWELL-SALOME, a parish in the hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Tetworth, containing 192 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £6. 19. 2., and in the patronage of Mrs. Stopes. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

BRIXHAM, a sea-port, market town, and parish, in the hundred of HAYTOR, county of DEVON, $27\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Exeter, and 198 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 4503 inhabitants. This town, at which William, Prince of Orange, landed on the 5th of November, 1688, is pleasantly situated near the southern extremity of Torbay, on the west side; it is irregularly built, but contains many good houses, several of which are erected on the cliffs projecting above the harbour. The inhabitants are amply supplied with water; the air is salubrious, the environs pleasant, and its vicinity to the well-frequented bathing-place, Torquay, renders it desirable as a place of residence. This port, which is a member of the port of Dartmouth, carries on a considerable coasting trade, in which one hundred and twenty vessels, of from sixty to one hundred and fifty tons' burden, are employed. The harbour, consisting of two basins, communicating with each other, is safe and commodious; the outer basin has been recently formed, by the erection of a second pier, at the expense of £5300, raised by the inhabitants. During spring tides the water rises to the height of twenty-four feet at the pier-head. There are one hundred and five vessels, of from twenty to forty-five tons' burden, and sixty-four smaller boats, engaged in the fishing trade, which is carried on to a considerable extent: the fish caught are chiefly turbot and soles, for the supply of the London, Bath, and Exeter markets. The trade of the town has derived considerable increase from this being the rendezvous of men of war, which lay in their supply of water at this port: a considerable number of shops has been established on the shore, for the sale of slops and other articles. There are some extensive quarries of marble in the vicinity. The market days are Thursday and Saturday, established under the authority of an act of parliament passed in 1799: it is in contemplation to erect a new market-house. The fair is on Whit-Tuesday and the two following days.

The parish is divided into Higher and Lower Brixham: the living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Churston-Ferrers and Kingswear annexed, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £52. 15., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and situated in Higher Brixham, is an ancient structure, containing some interesting monuments, among which is the cenotaph of the late Judge Buller: it has lately received an addition of eight hundred sittings, seven hundred of them free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £700 for that purpose. The chapel at Lower Brixham was erected by subscription among the inhabitants, aided by a grant of £1200 from the parliamentary commissioners; it is a neat building, in the English style of architecture, and contains three hundred free sittings. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. A National school, founded by the society, has been incorporated with an older establishment, endowed in 1634, and also in 1692: the master has a house and garden, with a salary of about £60 per annum: two school-rooms have been built near his dwelling, by subscription, wherein about four hundred children of both sexes are instructed. At Higher Brixham is Lay Well, the water of which ebbs and flows about nine times in an hour; the variation is about an inch and a quarter. Some ancient coins were found, in 1730, on Bury Head, which is said to have been the site of a Roman fortress.

BRIXTON, a parish in the hundred of PLYMPTON, county of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Earl's Plympton, containing 854 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church first received the right of sepulture from the prior of Plympton, in 1478. The river Yealm is navigable on the south of this parish. In 1677, several elm plants were put in the ground by Edward Fortescue, Esq., in order that, when arrived at maturity, the trees might be cut down for the benefit of the poor, their places to be supplied by fresh plants.

BRIXTON, a parish in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Newport, containing 686 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated in the king's books at £32. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In 1814, the Rev. Noel Digby conveyed an estate in trust, for the establishment of a school for the education of twenty children, to be chosen from this parish and the parish of Mottistoun: the income is £20 a year.

BRIXTON, a district in the parish of LAMBETH, eastern division of the hundred of BRIXTON, county of SURREY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. This is one of the most agreeable suburbs connected with the metropolis, and is divided into two parts, North Brixton and Brixton Hill: it consists principally of a line of road leading from Kennington to Streatham, upwards of two miles in length, on each side of which are ranges of neat and well-built houses, with others in detached situations surrounded by small shrubberies: it is within the limits of the new police act, and is lighted with gas. Brixton is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests for the borough of Southwark, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. A church, dedicated to St. Matthew, and consecrated in June 1824, has been erected, pursuant to an act of parliament, whereby the extensive and populous parish of Lambeth has been divided into five districts, Brixton being one, each of which, on the decease of the present incumbent of Lambeth, will be constituted a distinct parish and benefice: it is in the Grecian style of architecture, with a tower at the east end, and a handsome portico supported by four fluted columns of the Doric order at the west, and contains one thousand nine hundred and twenty-six sittings, of which one thousand and twenty-two are free: the expense of its erection amounted to £15,192. 9., which was defrayed by the commissioners for building new churches and chapels: attached to it is a spacious burial-ground. The living is a district incumbency, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. At Denmark Hill, in this district, there is also a chapel, dedicated to St. Matthew. There are three places of worship for Independents, and one for Wesleyan Methodists. Near the church is a National school, in which about two hundred boys and one hundred and twenty girls are instructed; it was erected in 1826, at an expense of £1200, and enlarged in 1829, at an expense of £366. 13. 10. An infant school was established in 1825. In Acre Lane is Trinity Asylum for aged females, founded and endowed by Thomas Bailey, Esq., in 1824: the building comprises twelve neat tenements; each inmate is entitled to £10 per annum, and twelve sacks of coal. All candidates for admission must be possessed of £20 per annum, and not less than fifty-seven years of age; and it is indispensable that they should believe in the doctrine of the Trinity. Mrs. Mary Bailey, his widow, has invested the sum of £2000 towards founding, in connexion with the above, an asylum for the education and maintenance of the orphans of gospel ministers and others. On Brixton Hill stands the house of correction for the county of Surrey, the tread-mill in which, completed in 1821, was the first established: the number of prisoners committed in 1828, according to the return made for that year, amounted to one thousand three hundred and forty.

BRIXTON-DEVERILL, a parish in the hundred of HEYTESBURY, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Warminster, containing 153 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £19. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The river Willey runs through the parish.

BRIXWORTH, a parish in the hundred of ORLINGBURY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Northampton, containing 927 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £14. 15. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Chancellor in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curious and interesting edifice, exhibiting much of the original Norman structure, varied by alterations of a more recent date, in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture: it is built with red unhewn rag-stone, in small sizes, and the arches are turned, and most of them covered, with courses of bricks similar to the Roman bricks, or tiles, that have been discovered in Roman works in this country. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A fair is held annually on the Monday next after Ascension-day. Thomas Roe, in 1665, gave by deed a rent-charge of £10, for teaching ten poor children of this parish, and ten of the parish of Scaldwell.

BROADCAR, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of SHROPHAM, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from East Harling. The population is returned with the parish. This place, which appears to have been anciently a distinct parish, was united to Shropham previously to the reign of Edward III. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, has long been desecrated.

BROAD-CHALK, a parish in the hundred of CHALK, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Wilton, containing 706 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Alyediston, and united to the vicarage of Bower-Chalk, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £27. 14., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Here are several vestiges of antiquity, the principal of which are, an encampment including nearly six acres, and a barrow called Gawen's Barrow.

BROAD-CLIST, county of DEVON.—See CLIST (BROAD).

BROADFIELD, a parish in the hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Buntingford, containing 23 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Cottered, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. The church is desecrated.

BROADFIELD, a tything in the parish of WRINGTON, hundred of BRENT with WRINGTON, county of SOMERSET, containing 426 inhabitants.

BROADGATE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (N. W.) from Leicester, containing 10 inhabitants. Here are the ruins of a fine old mansion once belonging to the noble family of Grey of Groby, of which was the accomplished and unfortunate Lady Jane Grey, who was born here, in 1537.

BROADHEMBURY, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of HAYRIDGE, county of DEVON, 5 miles (N. W.) from Honiton, containing 892 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £16. 17., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The manor formerly belonged to the abbot of Dunkeswell, who obtained for it the grant of a market and fair; the former has long been discontinued, but the latter is still held for cattle on the 30th of November. At the village of Carswell, in this parish, was a small monastery, subordinate to the priory of Montacute. In 1725, the Rev. John Burrough gave £40 for the further support of a schoolmaster, the interest on which, together with £10 a year paid out of the great tithes of Awliscombe, is appropriated to the instruction of twenty children. The Rev. Augustus Montague Toplady, the celebrated defender of the Calvinistic principles of the church of England (whose works were collected together, after his death, in 6 vols. 8vo), was vicar of this parish.

BROADHEMPSTON, county of DEVON.—See HEMPSTON (BROAD).

BROADHOLME, a hamlet in the parish of THORNEY, northern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, 11 miles (E. by N.) from Tuxford, containing 57 inhabitants. A small Premonstratensian nunnery was founded here in the latter part of the reign of Stephen, by Agnes de Camville, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £16. 15. 2.

BROADMAYNE, a parish in the hundred of GEORGE, but locally in that of Culliford-Tree, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 3½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Dorchester, containing 277 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of West Knighton annexed, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £15. 4. 2., and in the patronage of D. Urquhart, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Martin.

BROADOAK, a parish in the hundred of WEST, county of CORNWALL, 6½ miles (W.S.W.) from Liskeard, containing 235 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated, in 1742, with the rectory of Bocomnoc, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 4. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BROADSTAIRS, a small sea-port and hamlet in the parish of St. PETER, hundred of RINGSLOW, or Isle of THANET, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Ramsgate, and 75 (E.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. This place, anciently called Bradstow, exhibits many vestiges of its former importance; and though subsequently reduced to an inconsiderable village, inhabited only by a few fishermen, it has lately risen into celebrity as a place of fashionable resort for sea-bathing, and is visited in the season by many respectable families, for whose accommodation several new buildings have been recently erected: warm baths, arranged with every requisite appendage, have also been constructed. There are two public libraries, an assembly-room, and an excellent hotel. Leading down to the shore is a stone arch, or portal, with walls built of flint, in which were gates and a portcullis, with a drawbridge attached to it, erected to protect the inhabitants from the incursions of privateers: above the arch is the following inscription,—“York gate, built by George Culmer, A. D. 1540, repaired by Sir John Henniker, Bart., 1795.” At a short distance from the gate stood a chapel, in which was placed an image of the Virgin Mary, to whom it was dedicated, in passing which all vessels lowered their topsails, as a mark of reverence. The pier, which is accessible only to vessels of small burden, was constructed in the reign of Henry VIII., for the safety of the craft employed in the fishing trade, once considerable: it is built of wood, and though an act of parliament passed, in the 32nd of George III., for the improvement of the harbour and the pier, the trade had decreased so much that its provisions were never carried into effect. The principal source of employment at present is ship-building, and that is on the decline. Fairs for toys, &c. are held on April 8th and July 10th.

A chapel was erected by subscription in 1828, the minister's stipend being derived from the rents of the seats. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. At Kingsgate, in the vicinity, is the Bead House, built in the form of a chapel, now appropriated to the entertainment of parties of pleasure; the sea having undermined the cliff, part of the house has been taken down, the same fate, in all probability, awaiting the remainder. Near the cliff is a rude ancient building, erected on the larger of two tumuli; named Hackend on, or Hackingdown banks, where a desperate battle is said to have taken place, in 853, between the Saxons and the Danes; to the memory of those who fell in it a tablet was inscribed by Henry, Lord Holland, who erected the building. These tumuli being opened, in 1745, were found to contain graves of an oblong form, and not more than three feet in length, excavated in the solid chalk, and covered with flat stones, and in them were many large human bones, in a perfect state; in one were found three urns of coarse earthenware. Near Broadstairs is an opening through the cliff to the shore, formerly called Bartholomew's Gate, through which Charles II., accompanied by the Duke of York, passed on landing here, in 1683, on his passage from London to Dover; this has since been called Kingsgate, and the event is recorded by a Latin inscription, in letters of brass, on one side of the gate; on the other is an inscription in Saxon characters. In the vicinity are several curious buildings, erected by the late Lord Holland, as ornaments to his grounds at this place, where he had a villa, built on the model of that belonging to Cicero, at Baix: among them are the temple of Neptune, with an appropriate inscription, Arx Ruochim; a small castle, in imitation of those built by Henry VIII., for the protection of the coast; Harley tower; Whitfield tower, erected on the highest spot in the isle; Countess' fort; and an edifice originally intended for a mews, but now a handsome dwelling-house. Between Broadstairs and Kingsgate is the North Foreland, the most eastern point of England, and supposed to have been the Roman station Cantium, mentioned by Ptolemy, on which a lighthouse was erected in 1683. Coal was burnt here till 1794, when patent lamps, with magnifying lenses of twenty inches diameter, were introduced by the corporation of the Trinity House; the expense of maintaining this light, which may be seen at the distance of twenty or thirty miles, is defrayed by a duty of twopence per ton on English, and fourpence per ton on foreign, vessels. In 1795, a signal-house was erected near this spot, where a lieutenant and two midshipmen were stationed during the war: a telegraph was also constructed here in 1813, and one on the steeple of the church at St. Peter's, forming the commencement of a line of communication with the Nore, which was kept up till the proclamation of peace with France.

BROADWARD, a township in the parish of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by E.) from Leominster, containing, with Brierley, Eaton, Hemmor, Stretford and Wharton, 321 inhabitants.

BROADWAS, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, though locally in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Worcester, containing 272 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £10. 9. 2., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. The river Teme runs through the parish.

BROADWATER, a parish in the hundred of BRIGHTFORD, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, 1 mile (N.) from Worthing, containing, with the sea-port and market town of Worthing, 3725 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £36, and in the patronage of William Kemp, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome cruciform edifice, with a central tower and chapels attached, in which latter are several interesting monuments: it is partly Norman, and partly in the early style of English architecture, and has lately received an addition of three hundred and nineteen sittings, two hundred and thirty-four of which are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £230 towards defraying the expense.

BROADWAY, a parish in the hundred of CULIFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Melcombe-Regis, containing 282 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Bincombe annexed, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 15. 2½., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

BROADWAY, a parish in the hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Ilminster, containing, with the tything of Capland (part only of which is in this parish), 396 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £1000 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £1500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. William Palmer, D.D. The church is cruciform, and in the cemetery are the remains of a cross. The name was given as being descriptive of the situation of the few scattered huts which were constructed, at an early period, along each side of a broad path leading through what was then the forest of Roche, or Neroche, so denominated from a Roman encampment, called Roche, or Rachiche, Castle, on the edge of Blackdown hill. The manufacture of serge, narrow cloth, drugget, duroy, &c., formerly prevailed to some extent, but has fallen into decay. An almshouse is endowed with about £21 per annum, for the support of seven poor men, who are appointed by the minister and parochial officers.

BROADWAY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, being the southern extremity of the county of WORCESTER, 5 miles (S. E.) from Evesham, containing 1382 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £10. 17. 6., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Miss Eliz. Mills. The church is dedicated to St. Eadburgh. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. Thomas Hodges, in 1686, gave land for the instruction of poor boys, directing the overplus to be applied in purchasing books and clothes, or in apprenticing them. In the neighbourhood are quarries of good freestone.

BROADWELL, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Stow on the Wold, containing 296 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £23. 11. 10½., and in the patronage of J. H. Leigh, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Paul. The Roman Fosse-way crosses this parish.

BROADWELL, a parish in the hundred of BAMP- TON, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Burford, containing, with the chapelry of Holwell, and the hamlet of Filkins, 820 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Kelmscott annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £8. 14. 4½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of E. F. Colston, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

BROADWINSOR, a parish and liberty in the Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Beaminster, comprising the tythings of Childhay, Deberford, and Drimpton, and containing, with Little Winsor, which is in Redhone hundred, 1387 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £15. 8. 9. The King, for that turn, was patron in 1828. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is an endowment of about £31, given by Robert Smith, in 1725, for the instruction of children.

BROADWOOD-KELLY, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Hatherleigh, containing 389 inhabitants.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £19. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Hole.

BROADWOOD-WIDGER, county of DEVON.—See BRADWOOD-WIDGER.

BROBURY, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Hay, containing 79 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. William T. Spurdens. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BROCKDISH, a parish in the hundred of EARSHAM, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Harleston, containing 385 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of William Wigney, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BROCKENHURST, a chapelry in the parish of BOLDRE, eastern division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, New Forest (East) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Lymington, containing 818 inhabitants. The village is of Saxon origin, and is mentioned in Domesday-book under the name Broceste, wherein it is stated to contain a church: this edifice, which is a chapel of ease to Boldre, stands on an artificial mound, and, though somewhat disguised by subsequent alterations, exhibits various portions of early Norman architecture, and contains a large and curious antique font. Henry Thurston, in 1745, gave property, now producing £24 per annum, for the instruction of children; this sum, together with voluntary contributions, is applied to the support of a school on Dr. Bell's plan. The surrounding scenery is of an interesting character: Watcombe House, in Brockenhurst Park, was for three years the residence of John Howard, the philanthropist. Various tumuli are dispersed over a heath, called Sway common, on the south-west of the village; some of them lie within the area of an intrenchment on the brow of a hill, a short distance south-east of Setley wood; and two have a regular fosse and vallum.

BROCKHALL, a parish in the hundred of NO-BOTTLE-GROVE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (E.) from Daventry, containing 69 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of the Trustees of T. L. Thornton, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is principally of Norman and early English architecture, with some parts in the later style. The Grand Junction canal, after being crossed by the Roman Watling-street, intersects the parish on the western side.

BROCKHAMPTON, a joint tything with Knowle, in the parish and hundred of BUCKLAND-NEWTON, Cerne subdivision of the county of DORSET, 12 miles (N. by E.) from Dorchester, containing, with Knowle, 195 inhabitants.

BROCKHAMPTON, a hamlet in the parish of BISHOP'S CLEEVE, hundred of CLEEVE, or BISHOP'S CLEEVE, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N. by W.)

from Cheltenham, containing, with Southam, 248 inhabitants.

BROCKHAMPTON, a chapelry in the township of NORTON, parish of BROMYARD, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bromyard. A free chapel was built here about thirty-two years ago, the right of presentation to which belongs to John Barneby, Esq.

BROCKHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of GREYTREE, county of HEREFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Ross, containing 116 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Hereford, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The village lies on the eastern bank of the river Wye; and a little to the north of it are the remains of a Roman encampment, with a double trench.

BROCKHAMPTON, a tything in the parish of NEW-INGTON, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Wallingford, containing 92 inhabitants.

BROCKHOLES, a joint chapelry with Grimsargh, in the parish of PRESTON, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Preston. The population is returned with Grimsargh.

BROCKLEBANK, a joint township with Stoneraise, in the parish of WESTWARD, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Wigton, containing, with Stoneraise, 621 inhabitants.

BROCKLESBY, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Caistor, containing, with the hamlet of Little Limber, 256 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Yarborough. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A monastery of the Premonstratensian order, in honour of St. Mary and St. Martial, was founded at Newsham, in this parish, by Peter de Gousla, in 1143, which, at the dissolution, had a revenue of £114. 1. 4.

BROCKLEY, a parish forming, with the parish of Kingston-Seymour, a detached portion of the hundred of CHEWTON, county of SOMERSET, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Axbridge, containing 173 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. 4., and in the patronage of J. H. S. Piggot, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. Lead-ore exists in the eastern part of the parish, and there are numerous basaltic columns, similar to those forming the Giant's Causeway, in Ireland.

BROCKLEY, a parish in the hundred of THINGOE, county of SUFFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Bury St. Edmund's, containing 276 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. D. Sprigge. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. Thomas Sparke, in 1721, bequeathed a rent-charge of £6 for the education of children.

BROCKMANTON, a township in the parish of PUDDLESTONE, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Leominster. The population is returned with the parish.

BROCKSFIELD, a township in the parish of EMBLETON, southern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Alnwick, containing 28 inhabitants.

BROCKTON, a township in the parish of BASWICH, eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Stafford, containing 255 inhabitants. A school here is endowed with £6. 6. per annum, arising from land, for the instruction of nine children.

BROCKWORTH, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Gloucester, containing 386 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 3. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mr. Price. The church is dedicated to St. George. This parish is crossed by the ancient Ermin-street.

BRODSWORTH, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Doncaster, comprising the townships of Brodsworth with Pickburn, and Scansby, and containing 417 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Here are quarries producing a superior kind of limestone. A free school was founded, in 1696, by D'Arcy Wentworth, for ten children, for whose gratuitous instruction the sum of £10 is annually paid out of the Brodsworth estate. This estate belonged to the late Peter Thellusson, Esq., and is now vested in trustees, according to the singular will of that gentleman, who directed that the greater part of his immense property should be allowed to accumulate, and, at a future fixed period, in default of a male heir, be applied towards discharging the national debt. The late Mrs. Thellusson assigned an annual income of £4. 4., for which six girls are instructed by a schoolmistress.

BROGDEN, a township in the parish of BARNOLDWICK, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWXCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Skipton, containing 233 inhabitants.

BROKENBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Malmesbury, containing 262 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Westport, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BROKENHAUGH, a township in the parish of WARDEN, north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Hexham, containing 155 inhabitants.

BROMBLOW, a quarter in that part of the parish of WORTHEN which is in the hundred of CHIRBURY, county of SALOP, containing 317 inhabitants.

BROMBORROW, a parish (formerly a market town) partly in the lower, but chiefly in the upper, division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Great Neston, containing, with the township of Brimstage, 446 inhabitants. The living is a donative belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £1200 royal bounty: the lord of the manor is impropriator of the great tithes. The church, dedicated to St. Barnabas, is a small edifice, with a low wooden tower containing some specimens of early Norman architecture. The learned editor of the Saxon Chronicle has enumerated this among the places which, from the similarity of name, may claim to be the scene of the decisive action fought at Brunanburgh, in 937, between the Saxons under Athelstan, and the Danes under Anlaf and Constantine, in which the latter were defeated, and pursued for two days with great slaughter. A monastery was founded at this place, then called Brimesburgh, by Ethelfleda, the celebrated Countess of Mercia, about 912, which was demolished previously to the Conquest, subsequently to which period the manor was given by Ranulph de Gernons, Earl of Chester, to the monks of the abbey of St. Werburgh, to whom Prince Edward, when Earl of Chester, granted a license to hold a market here weekly on Monday, and a fair annually on the eve, festival, and morrow of St. Barnabas; but these have long been discontinued. The courts belonging to the abbey were occasionally held in the manor-house, which was one of those directed by the charter of Earl Ranulph to be kept in a state of security and convenience for that purpose. The parish is bounded on the east by the river Mersey.

BROMBY, a township in the parish of FRODINGHAM, eastern division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 128 inhabitants.

BROME (SOUTH), a chapelry in the parish of ALL-CANNINGS, hundred of POTTERNE and CANNINGS, county of WILTS, $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile (S. E.) from Devizes. The chapel is dedicated to St. James.

BROMEHOUME, a hamlet (formerly a market town) in the parish of BACTON, hundred of TUNSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (E. by N.) from North Walsham. The population is returned with the parish. A priory for Cluniac monks, dedicated to St. Andrew, was founded in 1113, by William de Glanvill, and for some time subsisted as a cell to the monastery at Castle-Acre. Henry III., accompanied by a retinue of the nobility, was here in the eighteenth year of his reign, five years previously to which he had granted the monks license to hold a market weekly on Monday, and a fair annually on the festival of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. The income of the monks was greatly augmented by numerous rich offerings which were presented to a cross, stated to have been made out of the wood composing the cross on which our Saviour was crucified, brought hither by an English priest, who officiated at the emperor's chapel at Constantinople: the revenue, at the dissolution, amounted to £144. 19. 1.

BROMESWELL, a parish in the hundred of WILFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Woodbridge, containing 185 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 15. 7½., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund.

BROMFIELD, a parish comprising the townships of Blencogo and Dundraw in CUMBERLAND ward, and the chapelry of Allonby, and the townships of Bromfield with Crookdake and Scales, Langrigg with Mealrigg, and West Newton, in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, and containing 2017 inhabitants, exclusively of 603 sailors employed in registered vessels, of which number, 363 are in the township of Bromfield with Crookdake and Scales, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Wigton. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £82, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church is dedicated to St. Kentigern. This parish lies on the shore of the Solway Frith. A free grammar school, situated in the churchyard, was founded by Richard Osmotherley, in 1612, and endowed with £10 a year, for the instruction of fifteen poor children belonging to Bromfield and Langrigg: the endowment was subsequently augmented by a donation of £100 from a member of the family of Thomlinson. In 1805, Mr. Thomlinson, another member of the same family, bequeathed £1400, to be divided among certain schools in this county, one-fourth of which was assigned to this school, which is now free for the children of all parishioners: the income is nearly £40 per annum. In a field belonging to the vicar the site of Mungo castle is visible.

BROMFIELD, a parish in the hundred of MUXSLOW, county of SALOP, comprising the chapelry of Halford, and the townships of Bromfield and Dinehope, and containing 674 inhabitants, of which number, 540 are in the township of Bromfield, 3 miles (N.W. by W.) from Ludlow. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Earl of Powis. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is part of a larger conventual church that belonged to a Benedictine priory, founded as a cell to the abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester, about 1155, on the site of a college of prebendaries, or Secular canons, of earlier foundation: its revenue, at the dissolution, was £78. 19. 4.: a small portion of the ruins is included within the grounds of Oakley Park.

BROMFLEET, a township in the parish of SOUTH CAVE, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of York, 4½ miles (S.W.) from South Cave, containing 142 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BROMHALL, a township in the parish of WRENBURY, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 3¼ miles (S.S.W.) from Nantwich, containing 196 inhabitants.

BROMHAM, a parish in the hundred of WILLEY, county of BEDFORD, 3½ miles (W.N.W.) from Bedford, containing 298 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church, dedicated to St. Owen, contains some handsome monuments to deceased members of the families of Trevor and Dyne. The village lies on the banks of the river Ouse, over which there is a bridge: it is recorded that the channel of this river, from some unknown cause, was left so bare of water in 1399 and in 1648, that persons walked in it to the distance of three miles. Here is a mineral spring, but it is in disuse.

BROMHAM, a parish in the hundred of POTTERNE and CANNINGS, county of WILTS, 4 miles (N.W.) from Devizes, containing 1357 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £12. 16. 0½., and in the patronage of Dr. Starkey. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, contains a mural tablet to the memory of Henry Season, M.D., the projector and author of a well-known almanac, and, in an ancient chapel at the east end, several monuments of deceased members of the Baynton family. There are places of worship for Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists. The lordship belonged to Harold, Earl of the West Saxons, and afterwards king of England. Remains of a Roman bath, together with some tessellated pavement, were discovered in a field near the site of Bromham Hall, in 1767. Here is an almshouse for the support of six poor persons, to which Sir Henry Baynton, in 1614, gave land producing £20 per annum; this sum is yearly paid by the lord of the manor. Dr. George Webb, consecrated Bishop of Limerick in 1634, and esteemed one of the most effective preachers of that age, was a native of Bromham, which was also the birthplace of the Rev. John Collinson, author of the History and Antiquities of the County of Somerset, and other works on antiquarian and topographical subjects, who died in 1796. About two miles to the north, and close to the line of the Roman road from London to Bath, in Spye Park, the property and occasional residence, in the reign of Charles II., of the celebrated wit and poet, John Wilmot, Earl of Rochester.

BROMLEY, a market town and parish in the hundred of BROMLEY and BECKENHAM, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 10 miles (S.E.) from London, on the road to Tonbridge, containing 3147 inhabitants. This place, supposed to have derived its name from the quantity of broom with which the neighbourhood abounds, was, in the eighth century, given by Ethelbert, King of Kent, to the bishops of Rochester, in whose possession it has remained, with very little interruption, till the present time. The episcopal palace had become so ruinous in 1184, that Gilbert de Glanville was obliged to expend a considerable sum in repairing it. In this palace was found the plot of a conspiracy, of which Spratt, Bishop of Rochester, published an account in 1692. Bishop Thomas, on being appointed to the see, finding the old building much decayed, pulled it down, and erected the present palace, which was completed in 1777: it is a plain edifice of brick, pleasantly situated on the brow of an eminence about a quarter of a mile from the town. In the gardens was anciently an oratory, much resorted to on account of certain indulgences granted by Lucas, legate of Pope Sixtus IV., to all who should offer up their devotions there during Pentecost; and near it was a well of mineral water, similar in its properties to the waters at Tonbridge, but more strongly impregnated. This well, which was, in honour of the saint to whom the oratory was dedicated, called St. Blaze's well, was for a considerable time in great repute; but the oratory becoming dilapidated after the Reformation, the well was choked up and the efficacy of its waters forgotten, till, being re-opened in 1756, it regained its former celebrity, and is still much esteemed for its medicinal quality. The town is pleasantly situated on the north side of the river Ravensbourne, and consists principally of one street extending for a considerable distance along the turnpike road: the houses are in general neat and well built, especially those in the market-place, in the centre of which is an ancient market-house, supported on wooden pillars: the streets are partially paved and lighted, and the inhabitants amply supplied with water. The market, granted to the bishop of Rochester in 1447, is on Thursday; and a great mart for cattle has been recently established on the third Thursday in every month. Fairs are held on February 14th and August 5th, for live stock. The county magistrates hold a meeting for the division alternately here and at Farnborough, every other week. A court of requests, for the recovery of debts under £5, is held every alternate Thursday, at the market-house, the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundreds of Blackheath, Bromley, Beckenham, Roxley, Little, and Lessness. Headboroughs and constables are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a spacious structure, with a square embattled tower, partly rebuilt in 1792; it contains an ancient Norman font, and various interesting monuments, among which are those of several of the bishops of Rochester; of Dr. Hawkesworth, author of the Adventurer, who was a native of this place; and of Elizabeth, wife of Dr. Johnson. There are places of worship for Independents and Methodists. A National school for children of both sexes has been erected, and is supported by subscription; fifteen of the boys and as many of the girls are clothed by means of the dividends on £1400 stock, purchased with the amount of various donations, the chief of which were by the Rev. George Wilson, in 1718, and Launcelot Tolson, in 1726. In 1631, Bishop Buckeridge gave £20 to the poor, with which a house has been purchased and is assigned rent-free to aged persons. Bromley college, at the north-eastern extremity of the town, was founded in 1666, by John Warner, Bishop of Rochester, who endowed it with £450 per annum, for the residence and support of twenty widows of loyal and orthodox clergymen, to each of whom he assigned £20 per annum, and to a chaplain £50. This endowment has been augmented by many subsequent benefactions: in 1767, the Rev. William Hetherington bequeathed £2000 Old South Sea annuities, to purchase coal and candles for the use of the establishment; in 1774, Dr. Zachary Pearce, Bishop of Rochester, gave £5000 in the same stock for the augmentation of the widows' pensions; in 1782, William Pearce, the bishop's brother, bequeathed £10,000 for the erection and endowment of ten additional houses; in 1788, Mr. Betenson left £10,000 in the three per cents, for building and endowing ten additional houses; in 1823, Walter King, Bishop of Rochester, gave £3000 three per cents., for the payment of £30 per annum each to three out-pensioners; and in 1824, Mrs. Rose bequeathed £8000, to increase the stipend of the widows. There are at present forty widows resident in the college, who receive £38 per annum each, with an allowance of coal and candles; and the chaplain's salary has been advanced to £150 per annum: the college is a handsome appropriate pile of building, surrounding two quadrangular areas, in which there is a chapel also. This institution is under the direction of fourteen trustees, among whom are the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, the Bishop, Archdeacon, and Chancellor of Rochester, the Dean of St. Paul's, and the Dean of the Arches, besides others who are elected.

BROMLEY, a township in the parish of ECCLESHALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 40 inhabitants.

BROMLEY (ABBOTS), a parish (formerly a market town) in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 12½ miles (E.) from Stafford, and 130 (N. W. by N.) from London, comprising the liberty of Bagot's Bromley, and the township of Bromley-Hurst, and containing 1533 inhabitants. This place is situated near the river Blythe, by which it is bounded on the south-west, and derives its distinguishing name from a Benedictine monastery founded at Blythebury, in this neighbourhood, in the latter part of the reign of Henry I., or in the beginning of that of Stephen, by Hugh Malveysin, and dedicated to St. Giles, which was suppressed at the instance of Cardinal Wolsey. The trade is principally in malt, which is carried on to some extent: the making of shoes, for the manufacturers at Stafford, formerly furnished a livelihood to many of the inhabitants, but it has of late declined. The market has been discontinued for many years: the market-house is an ancient building covered with shingles. The fairs are on March 11th, May 22nd, and September 4th, chiefly for cattle. Courts leet and baron for the manor are held once a year: at the former two constables and a headborough are chosen. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Anglesey. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is an ancient structure, partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, with a Norman entrance: it has recently undergone considerable repairs, and has been much modernized. There is a place of worship for Independents. The free school was founded, in 1606, by Mr. Richard Clarke, who bequeathed £300 to purchase land for its endowment: the annual income of the school estate is £137. 11. 9., of which the master receives a salary of £20, together with a rent-free residence and about three quarters of an acre of garden-ground, for which eleven boys are taught English gratuitously, instruction in the classics having been discontinued. An hospital was founded, in 1702, by Lambard Bagot, Esq., who bequeathed £800 for its erection and endowment, for six aged men, three of this parish, and one from each of the parishes of Yoxhall, Hanbury, and Tatenhill: the endowment was augmented by Charles Bagot, Esq., and a matron has been added to the establishment, who, with each of the inmates, receives a stipend, of £10 per annum.

BROMLEY (BAGOTS), a liberty in the parish of ABBOT'S BROMLEY, southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 1½ mile (N. W.) from Abbot's Bromley, with which the population is returned. This place derives its distinguishing name from the noble family of Bagot, to which it has belonged since the time of the Conquest, and was anciently their residence, which is now situated at Blithfield, about two miles distant. Sir William Bagot, Bart., was advanced to the peerage, on the 17th of October, 1780, by the title of Baron Bagot, of Bagot's Bromley. There is a chalybeate spring in the park, but it is not much resorted to.

BROMLEY (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of TENDRING, county of ESSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Manningtree, containing 693 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £16. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Valentine Warren, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a handsome and regular edifice. Petty sessions for the division are held here once in five weeks, on Monday, alternately with Mistley, Manningtree, and Thorpe. This parish participates in the benefit of two scholarships at St. John's College, Cambridge, to be filled up out of twenty candidates from the school at Dedham, of which number, Great Bromley supplies four.

BROMLEY (KING'S), a parish in the northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Lichfield, containing 614 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Alrewas and Weeford, and in the patronage of the Chancellor, in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A free school was founded, in 1699, by Richard Crosse, who endowed it with property now producing £95 a year, for which forty-eight boys are instructed gratuitously.

BROMLEY (ST. LEONARD'S), a parish in the Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Stratford le Bow, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Cornhill, London, containing 4360 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, and in the patronage of John Walter, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small plain structure, comprising only a nave and a chancel: it is surrounded by a high wall, and exhibits some remains of Norman architecture, containing also, in the southern wall of the chancel, some stone seats. It is part of a larger edifice, the conventual church of a Benedictine nunnery, founded, soon after the Conquest, by William, Bishop of London, and dedicated to St. Leonard; the society consisted of a prioress and nine nuns, whose revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was rated at £121. 16. The Bow Wesleyan Methodists' chapel stands in this parish. The name appears to have been derived from Brom, broom, and Ley, a field, indicating that a great quantity of broom anciently grew in the vicinity. The village is lighted partly with gas, and partly with oil, is paved, and supplied with water by the works of the East London Water Company. There is a distillery on a large scale, near the western entrance into the village: a communication with the Regent's canal has been formed by a cut from the river Lea, made by Sir Charles Duckett. Bromley is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Osborne-street, Whitechapel, for the recovery of debts under 40s.: two headboroughs and a constable are annually appointed at the manorial court; and the parochial affairs are under the superintendence of a select vestry. Seventeen of the children taught gratuitously in the school at Stratford le Bow, endowed by Sir John Jolles, in 1617, with £26. 13. 4. per annum, to be paid by the Drapers' Company, are chosen by the churchwardens from this parish. The same benefactor also founded eight almshouses for the equal benefit of the poor of Stratford and Bromley, which were rebuilt in 1806, by the Company of Drapers, to whom he assigned certain tenements in Mark-lane, in trust, for their support and that of the school. Opposite to these are almshouses founded for the benefit of decayed sail-makers, by John Edmonson, which are also under the superintendence of the Drapers' Company; and at the upper extremity, between the two rows of almshouses, is a neat chapel.

BROMLEY (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of TENDRING, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Manningtree, containing 349 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of T. Newman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BROMLEY-HURST, a township in the parish of ABBOT'S BROMLEY, southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Abbot's Bromley, with which the population is returned.

BROMPTON, a hamlet in the parish of GILLINGHAM, hundred of CHATHAM and GILLINGHAM, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT. The population is returned with the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This place lies at the extremity of the parish, on the brow of a hill overlooking the royal dock-yard at Chatham, and consists of a considerable collection of houses, commanding a fine prospect, and chiefly inhabited by persons connected with the dock-yard; it lies also within the fortifications called the Lines, which were constructed for the defence of the arsenal, pursuant to an act passed in 1738.

BROMPTON, a hamlet in the parish of KENSINGTON, Kensington division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 1 mile (S. W. by W.) from Hyde-Park Corner. The population is returned with the parish. Numerous dwelling-houses have been erected here within the last few years: it is lighted with gas, and supplied with water by the Chelsea Water Works Company. A church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and intended as a district church for Old and New Brompton and Little Chelsea, was built in 1828, partly by a grant of £5000 from the parliamentary commissioners: it is a handsome structure in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower at the west end, and contains one thousand five hundred and five sittings, of which six hundred and six are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, and diocese of London, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Kensington. A chapel of ease was erected here in 1769. There is a meeting-house for Independents. A school for the education of one hundred boys was established in 1828, on the plan of those at Chatham, Devonport, and the Scotch public schools. Here was formerly a botanical garden, supported by subscription, but it has been converted into a nursery-ground, in common with a considerable portion of the ground in the immediate vicinity. Hale House, commonly called Cromwell House, and erroneously supposed to have been the residence of the Protector, is an ancient mansion belonging to the Earl of Harrington.

BROMPTON, a joint township with Riston, in that part of the parish of CHURCH-STOKE which is in the hundred of CHIRBURY, county of SALOP, 6 miles (N.W. by W.) from Bishop's Castle, containing, with Riston, 167 inhabitants.

BROMPTON, a chapelry in the parish of NORTH ALLERTON, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.N.E.) from North Allerton, containing 1223 inhabitants. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. Here is an extensive linen-manufactory; and in the chapelry is Standard Hill, where the memorable battle of the standard was fought, being thus named from a large banner having been placed on a lofty pole, with a silver crucifix on the summit, which was fixed on a wagon and carried with the troops.

BROMPTON, a parish in PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Brompton, Sawdon, Troutsdale, and the chief part of the township of Snainton, and containing, with the whole of Snainton, 1303 inhabitants, of which number, 516 are in the township of Brompton, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W. by W.) from Scarborough. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £12, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £1600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir G. Cayley, Bart. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is one of the most spacious and elegant in the county. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Saxon kings of Northumberland are stated to have had a residence here: and on an eminence called Castle Hill, are the foundations of an ancient castle, about half a mile from which is Gallows Hill, being the place of execution for criminals within the barony. John of Brompton, a monkish historian, who compiled a laborious work on the early annals of England, including the period between the years 558 and 1198, is supposed to have been born here: he lived twenty years in the Benedictine abbey of Whitby, during the abbacy of John of Skelton, which commenced in 1413.

BROMPTON upon SWALE, a township in that part of the parish of EASBY which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.W.) from Catterick, containing 388 inhabitants.

BROMPTON-PATRICK, a parish comprising the townships of Brompton-Patrick, Newton le Willows, and part of Arrowthorne in the eastern, and part of the chapelry of Hunton in the western, division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, and containing, with the whole of Arrowthorne and Hunton, 968 inhabitants, of which number, 158 are in the township of Brompton-Patrick, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Bedale. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £500 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester, to whom belongs the improper rectory, which is rated in the king's books at £34. 13. $1\frac{1}{2}$. There is an endowment of about £25 per annum for the instruction of children, arising from a bequest of land by Samuel Atkinson, in 1707, and another by Mr. Clarke.

BROMPTON-RALPH, a parish in the hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Wiveliscombe, containing 449 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £17. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Sweet Escott. The church is dedicated to St. Mary: the greater part of it was rebuilt in 1738. Between Combe and Holcombe, in this parish, there are vestiges of an encampment, supposed to have been constructed by the Romans.

BROMPTON-REGIS, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E.) from Dulverton, containing 771 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £12. 5. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Emanuel College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a curiously carved screen separating the nave from the chancel. This parish anciently constituted a hundred; the river Exe winds through it; it contains an abundance of stone used for building. A weekly market on Tuesday, and two fairs annually, each for four days, were granted to Sir Thomas de Besilles, Knt., lord of the manor; the market has long since fallen into disuse, but the fairs are held in May and October, for the sale of cattle and sheep. About two miles south of the church stands a private mansion, formed out of the remains of Barlinch priory, which was founded by William de Say, in the reign of Henry II., for Black canons, and dedicated to St. Nicholas, the revenue of which, in 1534, was valued at £98. 14. $9\frac{1}{2}$.; in the burial-ground several stone coffins containing human skeletons have been found. Three Roman tumuli are visible on an adjacent eminence; and at a mount, called Hadborough, near the western extremity of Haddon hill, Roman coins have been found. Until lately a subscription hunt existed here, for the purpose of chasing the wild red deer found in the neighbouring woods; this once popular amusement; however, has been discontinued.

BROMSBERROW, a parish in the hundred of BORTON, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E.) from Ledbury, containing 335 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £7. 15., and in the patronage of Earl Beauchamp. The church is an ancient edifice, dedicated to St. Mary; adjoining the chancel is the mausoleum of the Yate family, built about a century ago, and containing several monuments.

BROMSGROVE, a market town and parish (formerly a borough) in the upper division of the hundred of HALFESHIRE, county of WORCESTER, 13 miles (N.E. by N.) from Worcester, 13 (S.W.) from Birmingham, and 116 (N.W.) from London, on the road from Birmingham to Worcester, containing 7519 inhabitants. This place, anciently Bremesgrave, was a royal demesne at the time of the Conquest, and continued to be so till the reign of Henry III.: it returned members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I. During the parliamentary war it was the head-quarters of a party of royalists employed in the siege of Hawkesley House, about three miles distant, which, in 1645, was fortified and garrisoned by the parliament. The town is pleasantly situated on the western bank of the river Salwarp, and consists principally of one street, extending for a considerable distance along the turnpike road: the houses are in general substantial and well built, and the inhabitants amply supplied with water. The principal articles of manufacture are nails, needles, and fish-hooks; and some coarse linen table-cloths and sheeting are still made: in the neighbourhood, potatoes, for the Bristol and other markets, are extensively cultivated. The Birmingham and Worcester canal passes within three miles to the east. The market is on Tuesday: the fairs are on June 24th and October 1st. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates; a bailiff and other officers are annually appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor, held at Michaelmas; and a court is held every third week, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The town-hall is a neat and commodious building, under which is a market-place, in the centre of the town. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of King's Norton annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £41. 8. 1½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a very ancient structure, combining portions in the Norman style, and others in the early, decorated, and later, styles of English architecture, of which last the tower and spire, and most of the exterior of the church, are fine specimens; the interior contains many curious and interesting monuments. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded, with an endowment of £7 per annum, by charter of Edward VI., confirmed by Queen Mary, who vested the management in governors, whose appointment of a master is subject to the approval of the bishop of the diocese. The original endowment was augmented with £50 per annum by Sir Thomas Cookes, who, in 1714, founded six scholarships, of £50 per annum each, in Worcester College, Oxford, for this school and four others in the county; and six fellowships, of £150 per annum each, in the same college, to which, as vacancies occur, those who hold the scholarships succeed. There are twelve scholars on the foundation, who are clothed, educated, and apprenticed: they are entitled to the scholarships and fellowships above mentioned, but the master's private pupils usually enjoy the benefit of them. There are some endowed almshouses in the parish. At Dodford, two miles from the town, are the remains of a small priory of Premonstratensian canons, founded by Henry I. in 1190, now part of a farm-house. At Shepley there are some traces of the Roman Iknield-street; and near Gannow is a petrifying spring. To the north of the town is Bromsgrove Lickey, a range of lofty hills, commanding an extensive and diversified prospect of the surrounding country; a considerable part, comprising a tract of two thousand acres, has been enclosed, and produces good crops of clover, turnips, and potatoes. A spring, rising among these hills, divides into two streams, one of which flowing northward, joins the river Rea; and uniting with the Trent, falls into the North sea; the other, running into the Stour, joins the Severn, and empties itself into the Irish sea.

BROMWICH (CASTLE), a chapelry in the parish of ASTON, Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 4½ miles (W. by N.) from Coleshill. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of the Earl of Bradford. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary and St. Margaret. The Birmingham and Fazely canal passes through the chapelry.

BROMWICH (WEST), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S.E. by S.) from Wednesbury, containing 9505 inhabitants, according to the census of 1821, since which time its population has increased to nearly 15,000. This place, which is in the centre of an extensive manufacturing and mining district, has, within the last few years, risen with amazing rapidity from a state of comparative insignificance to a degree of importance, for the variety and extent of its manufactures and trade, which is almost unparalleled. The rich mines of iron-stone and coal beneath the soil, in almost every direction, affording the utmost facility of establishing works upon the most extensive scale, have consequently attracted the notice of the enterprising and ingenious, and, from little more than a barren heath, a populous and flourishing town has arisen. It extends for more than three miles along the high road from Birmingham to Holyhead, and, exclusively of the numerous dwellings of the people employed in the various works and manufactories, and the respectable houses of the persons who superintend them, contains many handsome private residences, and several pleasing villas inhabited by their proprietors. The parish is well lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are abundantly supplied with water from springs and pumps attached to their houses. Among the various branches of manufacture, all of which are conducted on the most extensive scale, are gun and pistol barrels and locks, swords, bayonets, fenders, fire-irons, locks, bolts, hinges, nails, sadlers' ironmongery, coach furniture, iron culinary utensils, chains, traces, spades and other implements of husbandry, steel toys, gas tubes and fittings, palisades and ornamental iron work of every kind; among the larger works are furnaces for the smelting of iron-ore, foundries, forges, slitting mills, in which, and also in the various collieries, numerous steam-engines are employed. Very extensive gas-works have been established by a company of proprietors, from which part of Birmingham, seven miles distant, is lighted: from these works, which are on a very extensive scale, Wednesbury, three miles distant; Dudley, four miles; Bilston, four miles; Darlaston, four miles; Tipton, two miles and a half; and Great Bridge, one mile and a half distant, are also supplied with gas, the conveyance of which, from the main gasometer at West Bromwich to the several places lighted by the company, employs a series of tubes of the aggregate length of nearly one hundred and fifty miles. The trade of the place, and the transport of the produce of its mines, and the heavier articles of manufacture, are greatly facilitated by the numerous branches of canals which intersect the parish. West Bromwich is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session here every Saturday.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £2800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Dartmouth. The church, dedicated to St. Clement, is an ancient structure, of which, notwithstanding numerous alterations and additions, a portion of the original character remains. The first stone of Christ church was laid by the Earl of Dartmouth, in 1821, and the building was completed in 1828, at an expense of £12,446.2.6., part of which was defrayed by subscription, and the remainder by grant from the parliamentary commissioners; it is a handsome edifice of stone, in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty square embattled tower, and contains one thousand four hundred and eight sittings, of which seven hundred and thirty-seven are free. There are six places of worship for Wesleyan, and four for Primitive, Methodists, three for Baptists, three for Independents, and two for Kilhamites. Two National schools, one for boys and the other for girls, are supported by subscription, and there are Sunday schools connected with the established church and the several dissenting congregations. A priory of Benedictine monks was founded at the close of the reign of Henry II., or the beginning of that of Richard I., by William, son of Guy de Opheni, at Sandwell, which was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene; it was suppressed for the endowment of Cardinal Wolsey's intended colleges, in the 17th of Henry VIII., at which time its revenue was £38. 8. 7., the site is now occupied by the splendid mansion of the Earl of Dartmouth. The land in some parts of the parish is in a high state of cultivation, and the surface varied with pleasing undulations: the river Tame passes through it, and at a place called Wigmore is a chalybeate spring. A tessellated pavement was discovered in the village, in 1741. William Parsons, the gigantic porter of James I., whose portrait was for a long time hung up in the guard-room at Whitehall, and whose figure in bas relief, with that of Jeffrey Hudson, the celebrated dwarf, appeared in the front of a house in Newgate-street, London, was a native of this parish.

BROMYARD, a market town and parish in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 14 miles (N. E.) from Hereford, and 126 (N. W. by W.) from London, on the road from Worcester to Hereford, containing, with the townships of Linton, Norton, and Winslow, 2767 inhabitants. This town is situated near the river Frome, in a district abounding with orchards, and consists of several irregular streets, indifferently paved, but well lighted: many of the houses are built of wood, and the inhabitants are tolerably supplied with water. Races were formerly held annually for two days, but they have been for some time discontinued. The market is on Monday, chiefly for grain, butter, and cheese: the fairs are on the Thursday before March 25th, May 3rd, the Thursday before St. James' day, Thursday before October 29th, and the last Monday in January. The county magistrates hold petty sessions for the hundred here weekly on Monday, and courts leet and baron are held twice in the year. The living forms a rectory and a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford: the rectory is divided into three portions, the first of which is rated in the king's books at £5, and the two others at £6 each; they are all in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford: the vicarage is rated at £9. 10. 7½., and is in the gift of the three Portionists. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a spacious structure, in the Norman style of architecture. There is a meeting-house for Independents. The free grammar school was founded by Queen Elizabeth, and endowed with £16. 14. 11½. per annum, subsequently augmented with £20 per annum, by John Perrins, Esq.: though originally intended for the classics, the rudiments of an English education only are taught at present. The National school, in which ninety girls and thirty boys are instructed, is supported by subscription; the master's salary is £30 per annum. There are almshouses for seven aged women, endowed by the Rev. Phineas Jackson, formerly vicar of this parish.

BRON-Y-GARTH, a joint township with Weston-Rhyn, in the parish of St. MARTIN, hundred of OSWESTRY, county of SALOP, 5 miles (N.) from Oswestry, containing, with Weston-Rhyn, 917 inhabitants.

BROOK, a parish partly in the hundred of WYE, but chiefly in the hundred of CHART and LONGBRIDGE, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Ashford, containing 162 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 7. 3., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BROOK, a parish in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 8¼ miles (S. W. by W.) from Newport, containing 123 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £1. 18. 9., and in the patronage of B. and J. Jolliffe, Esqrs. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. On Brook Down are several tumuli, each of which is encompassed with a fosse.

BROOKE, a parish in the hundred of CLAVERING, county of NORFOLK, 7¼ miles (S. E. by S.) from Northwich, containing 640 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. This lordship was anciently part of the possessions belonging to the abbey of St. Edmund's Bury, and the abbot, in the 52nd of Henry III., pleaded exemption from the jurisdiction of the king's bailiff: in the 10th of Edward I. he received a grant of a market and a fair.

BROOKE, a parish in the soke of OAKHAM, county of RUTLAND, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Oakham, containing 110 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Oakham. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A small priory for canons Regular of the order of St. Augustine, was founded by Hugh Ferrars, in the time of Richard I., as a cell to the monastery of Kenilworth in Warwickshire, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin: the revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was valued at £43. 13. 4.: only an archway remains.

BROOK-END, a hamlet in the parish of NORTHILL, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Biggleswade. The population is returned with Thorncote.

BROOK-END, a hamlet in that part of the parish of SHENLEY which is in the hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, containing 224 inhabitants.

BROOKESBY, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 23 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 12. 6., and in the patronage of Miss Wright. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Here was formerly a village, but there are now only a private mansion and a farm-house. The river Wreake has been made navigable hence to Oakham. George Villiers, the first duke of Buckingham of that name, and the favourite of James I., was born here, in 1592, at the family mansion.

BROOKHAMPTON, a township in the parish of HOLDGATE, hundred of MUNSLow, county of SALOP, containing 101 inhabitants.

BROOKHAMPTON, a township in the parish of OMBERSLEY, lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER. The population is returned with the parish.

BROOKLAND, a parish in the hundred of ALOESBRIDGE, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 5 miles (W. by N.) from New Romney, containing 487 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £17. 12. 8½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Augustine, is principally in the early style of English architecture.

BROOK-STREET, a hamlet in the parish of SOUTHWEALD, hundred of CHAFFORD, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Brentwood. The population is returned with the parish. A free chapel, and an hospital for a master and various poor lepers, were established some time previously to the 20th of Edward I., and dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BROOM, a hamlet in the parish of SOUTHILL, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Biggleswade, containing 226 inhabitants.

BROOM, a township in that part of the parish of St. Oswald, city of DURHAM, which is in the middle division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Durham, containing 93 inhabitants.

BROOM, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, though locally in the county of Worcester, 4 miles (S.) from Stourbridge, containing 134 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £5. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Dudley. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BROOME, a parish in the hundred of LODDON, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Bungay, containing 470 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. N. Colville, D.D. The church is dedicated to St. Michael: here was anciently a chapel, dedicated to St. Botolph.

BROOME, a parish in the hundred of HARTISMERE, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Eye, containing 324 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Oakley annexed, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of Sir E. Kerrison, Bart.: it was anciently divided into mediæties, which were consolidated in 1448. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The noble family of Cornwallis long resided here; and Charles, the fifth baron, was created Viscount Brome and Earl Cornwallis, on the 30th of June, 1753: his son and successor, Charles, having distinguished himself as a military commander in India, was advanced to a marquisate, as Marquis Cornwallis, August 15th, 1792.

BROOMFIELD, a parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Chelmsford, containing 624 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BROOMFIELD, a parish in the hundred of EXHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 6 miles (E. S. E.) from Maidstone, containing 115 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to that of Leeds, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. On the southern side of the parish extends a tract of woodland, called King's wood, and within its limits there is a rabbit-warren.

BROOMFIELD, a parish in the hundred of ANDERSFIELD, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Taunton, containing 489 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Wells, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Col. Hamilton. In the churchyard is a stone cross somewhat mutilated.

BROOMHAUGH, a township in the parish of Bywell St. Andrew, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Hexham, containing 116 inhabitants.

BROOMHILL, a member of the town and port of NEW ROMNEY, in the liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Rye, containing 56 inhabitants. It was anciently a parish, at which period a portion of it was within the liberty of Old Winchelsea: the church, which stood within the limits of the county of Sussex, has long since been destroyed.

BROOMHOPE, a joint township with Buteland, in the parish of BIRTLEY, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Bellingham. The population is returned with Birtley and Chollerton, with the former of which this township is connected in all ecclesiastical affairs, and with the latter as regards civil matters.

BROOMLEY, a township in the parish of Bywell St. Peter, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.S.E.) from Hexham, containing 354 inhabitants.

BROOM-PARK, a township in the parish of EDLINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Alnwick, containing 43 inhabitants.

BROOMRIDGE, a hamlet in the parish of FORD, western division of GLENDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Wooler. The population is returned with the parish. Camden considers this to have been the place called Brunanburh, where King Athelstan, in 928, defeated Constantine, King of Scotland, Anlaf the Dane, and Eugenius, a petty prince of Cumberland. About half a mile to the south of Broomridge, is Haltwell Sweire, the scene of an encounter, in 1558, between the English under Sir Henry Percy, and the Scotch under Earl Bothwell, in which the former sustained a defeat.

BROOMSTHORPE, formerly a distinct parish, now a hamlet in the parish of EAST RUDHAM, hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Fakenham, containing 11 inhabitants. The church has long been demolished.

BROSELEY, a market town and parish in the franchise of WENLOCK, county of SALOP, 4 miles (E.) from Wenlock, 14 (S.E.) from Shrewsbury, and 144 (N.W.) from London, on the road from Worcester to Shrewsbury, containing 4814 inhabitants. This place, in ancient records called Burwardesley, probably derived that appellation from a family of the name of Burward, to which it belonged; or from its vicinity to the borough of Wenlock, within the liberties of which it is comprehended. Its extent and importance are owing to the numerous mines of coal and iron-stone abounding in the neighbourhood, whereby it became the resort of miners; and in proportion as the works proceeded, it increased in population and magnitude. The town is irregularly built, but is pleasantly situated on an eminence rising abruptly from the western bank of the river Severn, to which its eastern extremity extends, and from which its western extremity is nearly two miles distant. It consists principally of one long street, from which a few smaller streets branch off irregularly, leading to the different collieries and other works; the houses, in general built of brick and of mean appearance, are occasionally intermixed with some of more respectable character; and in detached situations are several handsome and spacious edifices. It is neither paved nor lighted, and the inhabitants are but scantily supplied with water, which in winter they bring from a well about half a mile eastward from the town, and in summer from brooks at the distance of a mile and a half. The trade consists principally in mining operations; but, from the exhausted state of the mines, it is rapidly declining: there are numerous coal-pits, iron-foundries, and furnaces, and tobacco-pipes, bricks and tiles, are made to a great extent. The fire-bricks for building furnaces are in great repute, and, by means of the river Severn are sent to various parts of the kingdom. The market is on Wednesday: the fairs are on the last Tuesday in April and October 28th; they are chiefly pleasure fairs, though a considerable number of pigs is sold. The town is within the jurisdiction of the borough of Wenlock: courts leet for the manor are held in the town-hall in April and October, at the latter of which four constables are appointed. A court of requests for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held under an act passed in the 22nd of George III., generally every alternate Wednesday: its jurisdiction extends over "the parishes of Broseley, Benthall, Madeley, Barrow, Linley, Willey, Little Wenlock, and Dawley, and an extra-parochial place called Posnall, in the county of Salop." The town-hall is a handsome brick building, in the centre of the town, supported on pillars and arches, the basement forming a spacious market-place: on the first story is a room wherein the courts and public meetings are held (used also as an assembly-room), and two smaller apartments, appropriated to the use of the Sunday school: there is a small prison attached to it, for the confinement of debtors, and for criminals previous to their committal by the borough magistrates.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Forrester. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, with the exception of the ancient tower, which is of stone, has been rebuilt of brick; but something of its original character is preserved in the interior, in the octangular pillars and pointed arches which support the roof. A chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, was built in 1759, by Mr. Francis Turner Blythe, in a part of the parish called Jackfield, at a considerable distance from the church: it is a neat brick building, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of William Yelverton Davenport, Esq., which, at his decease, becomes vested in the family of Blythe. There are two places of worship for Baptists, and one for Wesleyan Methodists. In 1750, John Barret, Esq., a native of this place, bequeathed £110 for charitable uses; this sum, augmented with a legacy of £100 by Mr. Richard Edwards, and several smaller sums, amounting in the whole to £380, was invested in the purchase of land, upon which the town-hall and other houses have been erected: after deducting the expense of keeping these in repair, the rents of the houses and of the standings in the market-place are distributed among the poor. Here is a well, the water of which, formerly containing much inflammable gas, ignited on the application of a lighted candle; but since sinking a coal-pit near the spot it has entirely lost that peculiarity.

BROTHERICK, a township in that part of the parish of WARKWORTH which is in the eastern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, containing 10 inhabitants, and only one house.

BROTHERTOFT, a chapelry in the parish and wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (W.N.W.) from Boston, containing 111 inhabitants.

BROTHERTON, a parish comprising the township of Brotherton in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, East riding, and the townships of Byrome with Pool, and Sutton, partly in the same liberty, but chiefly in the lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding, of the county of YORK, and containing 1626 inhabitants, of which number, 1491 are in the township of Brotherton, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile (N.N.W.) from Ferrybridge. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8. The church is dedicated to St. Edward the Confessor. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This parish is bounded on the south and west by the river Aire, and contains limestone of a fine quality, there being various kilns for burning it. In June 1300, Margaret, the second wife of Edward I., having been taken in labour whilst hunting in the neighbourhood, was delivered of a son at the village, to whom the name Thomas de Brotherton was given; he was created Earl of Norfolk and Earl Marshal of England, and from him, in the female line, descended the Mowbrays, Dukes of Norfolk: the house in which this event occurred is stated by tradition to have stood on part of a plot of land of about twenty acres, not far from the church, which the tenants are obliged, by the tenure of their land, to keep surrounded by a stone wall. There is an endowment of £5 a year for the instruction of children, arising from a bequest of £100 by Mr. Wilson, in 1731.

BROTTON, a parish in the eastern division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the township of Brotton, Kilton, and Skinningrove, and containing 492 inhabitants, of which number, 332 are in the township of Brotton, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Guilsbrough. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Skelton, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York. The church was erected in 1741. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BROUGH, a joint hamlet with Shatton, in the parish of HOPE, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Tideswell, containing, with Shatton, 93 inhabitants. A place called the Castle, near the junction of two small streams, the Noe and the Bradwell Water, was evidently the site of a Roman station, probably Crococolana; numerous Roman relics have been discovered, coins (among which is a gold coin of Vespasian), and rude busts, one being a bust of Apollo.

BROUGH, or BURG, under STAINMOOR, a parish in EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, comprising the market town of Brough, the chapelry of Stainmore, the township of Brough-Sowerby and Hilbeck, and part of the township of Kaber, and containing, exclusively of Kaber, 1837 inhabitants, of which number, 940 are in the town of Brough, 8 miles (S. E. by E.) from Appleby, and 262 (N. N. W.) from London, on the high road to Glasgow. This town occupies the site of the ancient Verteræ, or Veteris, where, towards the decline of the Roman empire in Britain, a prefect, with a band of directores, was stationed. It was partly built with the ruins of that fort, from which circumstance it probably derived its appellation, and is distinguished from other places of the same name by its vicinity to an extensive ridge of rocky mountains, that separates this county from Yorkshire. It flourished as a place of considerable importance prior to the conquest, soon after which a conspiracy was formed here by the northern English, against the government of William. At what time the castle was erected is not precisely known; but in 1174 it was nearly demolished by William, King of Scotland, who laid waste the town: it was subsequently restored, and, in 1521, was nearly destroyed by a fire that broke out after the celebration of a Christmas festival by Lord Clifford; it remained in a ruinous state till 1660, when it was repaired by Lady Ann Clifford, Countess Dowager of Pembroke. This fortress was situated upon an eminence, abruptly steep towards the north and west; and on the south and east, where the activity is more gentle, it was defended by a ditch and a strong rampart: the remains consist of some massive towers, of which the keep, a large square tower with turrets at the angles, called Cæsar's tower, was almost perfect in 1792, when the lower part of one of the angles fell down, leaving the upper part adhering by the cement only to the main building. Great part of it has within the last few years been removed, and the remainder is in a state of progressive dilapidation: its present proprietor is the Earl of Thanet. The town, divided into Market-Brough and Church-Brough, is pleasantly situated, and is crossed by the Swindale Beck, which flows into the river Eden: it consists principally of one long street; the houses are rather commodious than handsome; the inhabitants are well supplied with water. Two attempts have been made to introduce the cotton manufacture into the town, but both have failed; part of the buildings has been converted into dwellings, and part into a large corn-mill: several of the female inhabitants are employed in knitting white yarn stockings. The parish contains mines of lead and coal, with strata of limestone and freestone. The market, granted in 1331, by Edward III., to Robert, Lord Clifford, is on Thursday, but is of little note; corn is admitted toll-free. Fairs are held on the Thursday before Whitsunday and September 30th; the latter called Brough Hill fair, is held on a common, two miles from the town, and is celebrated for the sale of linen and woollen cloth, wearing apparel, articles of hardware, and live stock: cattle fairs are also held in the town, on the second Thursday in March and April.

This parish was formerly a chapelry within the parish of Kirkby-Stephen: the living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £8.8.9., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford, to whom the rectory and advowson were given, at the request of Robert Eggesfield, founder of that college, and for several years rector of this parish. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a large handsome structure of great antiquity; a square embattled tower was added in 1513: the windows are ornamented with richly stained glass, which, from an inscription on one of them appears to be of the time of Henry VIII.: the pulpit is formed of one entire stone, and within the church are several interesting monuments. There are places of worship for Independents and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The free school is endowed with a portion of the revenue of a dissolved chantry and hospital, founded in 1506, by John Brunskill, the former for two chaplains, one of whom was to instruct the children of the parish in grammar: the present building was erected by Lord Thanet; and though, at the dissolution of the chantry, the pension was reserved for the continuation of the grammar school, the course of instruction is at present confined to reading, writing, and arithmetic. A National school for sixty girls was established in 1828. Many Roman coins and other antiquities have been found at various times near the castle, and, within the last thirty years, an earthen vessel full of silver quinarii, many of which are in good preservation, and particularly one with a perfect impression of the head of Titus Vespasian, having on the reverse the figure of a female in a weeping posture: there are several tumuli on the mountains in the neighbourhood. On Stainmoor, in that part of the parish which verges upon Yorkshire, William the Norman, and Malcolm, the Scottish king, erected a cross, called Rey-cross, as a boundary between the two kingdoms: the site is now marked by two stones. Cuthbert Buckle, lord mayor of London in 1593, was born here.

BROUGH, a township in that part of the parish of CATTERICK which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.) from Catterick, containing 90 inhabitants.

BROUGH-FERRY, a township in the parish of ELLOUGHTON, partly in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, and partly in the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, East riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from South Cave. The population is returned with the parish. Here is a ferry across the Humber to Wintringham, in Lincolnshire.

BROUGH-SOWERBY, a township in the parish of BROUGH, East ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Brough, containing 180 inhabitants.

BROUGHALL, a township in that part of the parish of WHITCHURCH which is in the Whitchurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Whitchurch. The population is returned with the parish.

BROUGHAM, a parish in WEST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Penrith, containing 143 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £16. 10. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$.; and in the patronage of the Earl of Thanet. The church, dedicated to St. Ninian, and hence vulgarly called the Ninekirks, stands pleasantly within a curve on the southern bank of the river Eamont. There is also a chapel of ease, supposed to be dedicated to St. Wilfrid, in the western part of the parish, which, together with the church, was rebuilt in 1659, by Anne, the celebrated Countess of Pembroke. This was the Roman station Broconiacum, which appears to have comprised an area one hundred and forty paces in length, and one hundred and twenty in breadth: the vallum and some vestiges of the outworks are visible; and coins, votive altars, and other relics, have been found on the southern side of the station, where, as it is related, a city anciently stood, named by the Saxons Burg-ham, the Castle Town. A castle was built soon after the Conquest, principally, as appears from an inscription over the inner gateway, by the first Roger, Lord Clifford, which was demolished by the Scots, in 1412; and having been rebuilt, was honoured by the presence of James I., who was entertained by its noble owner, Francis, Earl of Cumberland, on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of August, 1617, when returning from his last progress into Scotland. Soon after this it became ruinous, and sustained much damage during the parliamentary war, but was restored by the Countess of Pembroke, in 1651. The venerable and extensive ruins are pleasingly situated on a woody eminence, at the confluence of two streams; League Tower, the only perfect part, is so called from a league having been concluded in it by commissioners from England and Scotland. Near them is a handsome pillar, embellished with heraldic bearings, and surmounted by a small obelisk, erected in 1656, by the above-named countess, as a memorial of her last parting with her mother, the Countess Dowager of Cumberland, on this spot, April 2nd, 1616: it bears an inscription, recording the gift of £4 annually to the poor of this parish, by the same distinguished female, to be distributed among them on that day, and at this stone. This parish is bounded on every side, except the south, by the rivers Eden, Eamont, and Lowther, which unite here: there are two stone bridges across the Eamont (one of them built in 1814, to afford a shorter line of communication between Penrith and Appleby), and one over the Lowther: the village of Brougham has long since disappeared. Brougham Hall, the property and residence of that distinguished orator, statesman, and scholar, Lord Brougham and Vaux, the present Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, is a plain, lofty, and aged structure, with an embrasured parapet, erected at different periods, occupying an elevated site, which, from a similarity in the richness and diversity of the prospects it commands, has acquired for it the characteristic title of the "Windsor of the North."

BROUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Newport-Pagnell, containing 191 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 9. 7., and in the patronage of W. Praed, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a small endowment for teaching six poor children to read.

BROUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Huntingdon, containing 351 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £21. 13. 9., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Johnstone. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BROUGHTON, a chapelry in the parish of PRESTON, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Preston, containing 615 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir H. P. Hoghton, Bart. The chapel has lately received an addition of two hundred and two sittings, one hundred and four of which are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £150 for that purpose. A free school, for the instruction of children within the chapelry, has an endowment of £128 per annum, arising from land and tenements assigned at a remote period, by unknown donors: the master has a salary of £50 a year, with the privilege of instructing, on his own terms, children not resident within the chapelry; and an usher, one of £40. There are also some minor charities for the benefit of the poor within the township.

BROUGHTON, a township in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from Manchester, containing 890 inhabitants.

BROUGHTON, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (W.N.W.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing, with Manby and Castlethorp, 827 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £21, and in the patronage of Richard Burton, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The interest of £200, left by Catherine Thompson, is applied to the instruction of children. Here was a Roman station, at which, about the year 400, an auxiliary troop of Dalmatian cavalry was quartered: coins, bricks, and other relics of the Romans have been found at various times. A Cistercian nunnery was founded by William de Alta Ripa, before the year 1185, the establishment of which, at the time of the dissolution, consisted of a prioress and six nuns, whose revenue was estimated at about £20; the site is now occupied by a farm-house, a doorway in which is the only relic of the conventual buildings. There is a large decoy for wild fowl on the low grounds, near the river Ancholme.

BROUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of ORLINGBURY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (S.W.) from Kettering, containing 455 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £21. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BROUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (W.S.W.) from Banbury, containing, with the hamlet of North Newington, 517 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £18. 16. 0½., and in the patronage of the Rev. Charles F. Wyatt. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BROUGHTON, a parish within the liberties of the borough of SHREWSBURY, county of SALOP, 7½ miles (N.) from Shrewsbury, containing 177 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of R. Lister, Esq.

BROUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of THORNGATE, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (W.S.W.) from Stockbridge, containing, with the tything of French-Moor and the extra-parochial district of Pittleworth, 821 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £37. 10., and in the patronage of Charles Baring Wall, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. A fair for pedlary and toys is held on the first Monday in July: the lord of the manor holds a court leet annually. Thomas Dowse, in 1601, conveyed an estate in trust for the support of a free school, the rental of which, together with minor benefactions, amounting to £68. 17. annually, is paid to the schoolmaster, who has also a house, garden, and a small plot of land, for which he instructs the children of Broughton and Bossington; the present number is about forty. Camden considers the Roman station Brige, noticed in Antonine's Itinerary, to have been here: Salmon fixes it on a hill near Broughton; and Mr. Gale says that, in 1719, he saw vestiges of the station in a wood near this place, on the road to Salisbury. The Roman road passed about a mile south of the village.

BROUGHTON, a chapelry in the parish of ECCLESHALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 5¼ miles (N.W. by W.) from Eccleshall, containing 30 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Eccleshall in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, endowed with £1000 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir J. D. Broughton, Bart.

BROUGHTON, a township in the parish of APPLETON le STREET, wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (N.W.) from New Malton, containing 94 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. According to Bishop Tanner, an hospital, dedicated to St. Mary Magdelene, was founded here by Eustace Fitz-John, who died in the 1st of Henry II.

BROUGHTON in AREDALE, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWECROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 3½ miles (W. by S.) from Skipton, containing, with Elslack, 427 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 16. 0½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £900 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains several mural monuments belonging to the family of Tempest, who have been long resident here. The manufacture of cotton goods is carried on to a limited extent. The Saxon name of the place, implying a fortified town, is evidence of its antiquity; and there are vestiges of an early settlement, ascribed to the Romans; various instruments, supposed to have belonged to that people, or to the Britons, have also been discovered. The village suffered considerably in the civil war of the last century, when the inhabitants were plundered, and much of their property was destroyed.

BROUGHTON (CHURCH), a parish in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 8½ miles (E.) from Uttoxeter, containing, with Sapperton, 536 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Michael; in the chancel are three stone stalls. A charity school was founded about 1745, by subscription among the freeholders, to which the Duke of Devonshire was the principal contributor; and the sum thus raised was invested in land, the rental of which is about £30 per annum. Broughton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BROUGHTON (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of CARTMEL, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Cartmel, containing 381 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lord G. Cavendish. The chapel, which was consecrated in 1745, is dedicated to St. Peter.

BROUGHTON in FURNESS, a market town and chapelry, in the parish of KIRKBY-IRELETH, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 29 miles (N.W.) from Lancaster, and 270 (N.W. by N.) from London, containing 1253 inhabitants. The town is situated on the southern declivity of a gentle eminence, and is in the form of a square: the houses are built of stone, and roofed with blue slate. In the centre of it is a spacious square area, the ground for forming which was given by John Gilpin, Esq., whose widow erected a handsome lofty obelisk within it. Previously to the introduction of machinery, the spinning of woollen yarn prevailed to a considerable extent in private houses: the making of brush-stocks and hoops at present furnishes employment to many of the inhabitants, particularly the latter, owing to the number and extent of the coppices on Furness Fells. The surrounding country is very mountainous, abounding with mines of iron and copper ore, and with slate quarries; a great quantity of the slate is shipped at Dudden Sands, for conveyance coastwise: iron, grain, malt, oak-bark, and hoops, are also sent from the same place, in vessels averaging about sixty tons' burden; and from a place about half a mile below Dudden bridge, in vessels carrying twenty-five tons, for which the estuary is navigable at the flow of the tide: coal and other articles of general consumption are brought to these places, whence they are distributed throughout the district. The market is on Friday: fairs are held on April 27th and August 1st, for horned cattle; and on the first Friday in October, for horned cattle and sheep; those in April and October are also statute fairs for the hiring of servants, and all are much frequented by the clothiers from Yorkshire. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. G. Saurey, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. There is a chapel of ease at Seathwaite. Edward Taylor, by will dated in 1784, bequeathed £100, on condition that £60 should be raised by subscription, for the benefit of a grammar school: these sums, with an additional sum of £36. 10., amounting in the whole to £196. 10., have been laid out in the purchase of premises now used as a workhouse; and the master is paid £6. 8. annually out of the poor's rate, charging also a quarterage for teaching: the school-room was built by subscription on a piece of waste ground.

BROUGHTON (GREAT), a township in the parish of BRIDEKIRK, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 4½ miles (W.) from Cocker-mouth, containing 435 inhabitants. The village lies on the southern slope of an eminence rising from the river Derwent. Mr. Joseph Ashley built an almshouse for four poor women, and a school-room for the children of Great and Little Broughton, endowed them by will dated July 18th, 1735, the former with £8, and the latter with £20. 10., per annum; between seventy and eighty children are taught gratuitously, and the master's fixed stipend is usually augmented by subscription.

BROUGHTON (GREAT and LITTLE), a township in the parish of KIRKBY in CLEVELAND, western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 2¼ miles (S. E.) from Stokesley, containing 517 inhabitants. On the top of a mountain near this place is a rude collection of large stones, one of them in an erect position, which some have conjectured to have been raised over the remains of a Danish warrior.

BROUGHTON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of BRIDEKIRK, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 4½ miles (W. by N.) from Cocker-mouth, containing 237 inhabitants. A meeting-house was built by the Society of Friends in 1656, and one by the Anabaptists in 1672. Here is a manufactory for tobacco-pipes and coarse earthenware. Abraham Fletcher, a self-taught mathematician of no inconsiderable eminence, author of the "Universal Measurer," was born here, in 1714; he was the son of a tobacco-pipe maker, and in early life laboured at that occupation.

BROUGHTON (NETHER), a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 5½ miles (N.W.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 435 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 5. 7½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Radnor and the Hon. Francis Bowater, alternately. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Broughton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BROUGHTON-ASTLEY, a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, comprising the townships of Broughton-Astley, Prime-Thorp, and Sutton in the Elms, and containing 630 inhabitants, of which number, 210 are in the township of Broughton-Astley, 5½ miles (N. by W.) from Lutterworth. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £26. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Liptrott. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BROUGHTON-BRANT, a parish in the wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (E.) from Newark, containing 596 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £35. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Sir R. Sutton, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Mr. Pickering, in 1604, gave £50, the produce of which is applied to the instruction of children.

BROUGHTON-GIFFORD, a parish in the hundred of BRADFORD, county of WILTS, 2 miles (W.) from Melksham, containing 776 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £19. 3. 11½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A fund for the instruction of children and for the relief of the poor was given by Francis Paradice and his wife, in 1782.

BROUGHTON-HACKET, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, 5½ miles (E.) from Worcester, containing 123 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £8. 1. 0½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. There are some stone pits in this parish, producing specimens in which marine shells are imbedded; these are susceptible of a polish that renders them in appearance not inferior to the Derbyshire marble. A valuable blueish limestone, which supplies the city of Worcester and places adjacent with lime for building and manure, abounds here.

BROUGHTON-POGGS, a parish in the hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Burford, containing 114 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Rev. S. Goodenough. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BROUGHTON-SULNEY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, $12\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Nottingham, containing 348 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £11. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of Sir J. Radcliffe. Broughton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The water of a spring, vulgarly called Woundheal, in this parish, is noted for the cure of scorbutic eruptions.

BROWNSHALL, or BROWNSSEL-LANE, a hamlet in the parish of BISHOP'S CAUNDLE, hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET. The population is returned with the parish. This hamlet is of great antiquity, and was formerly of greater importance, from its having given name to the hundred of Brownsall.

BROWNSOVER, a chapelry in the parish of CLIFTON, Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Rugby, containing 112 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael.

BROXA, a township in the parish of HACKNESS, liberty of WHITBY-STRAND, North riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Scarborough, containing 61 inhabitants.

BROXBURN, a parish in the hundred and county of HERTFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S.) from Hoddesdon, containing, with Hoddesdon, part of which is in the parish of Great Amwell, 1888 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £12. 6. 5½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church, dedicated to St. Augustine, is a large handsome edifice in the later style of English architecture, with a square tower supporting an octagonal spire, and a north and south chapel; the workmanship in the north chapel is of a superior description; there are several very fine monuments, and an ancient font. James I., on his way from Scotland, was entertained at the manor-house, where he was met by many of the nobility, and the great officers of state. Sir Richard Lacy, Knt., in 1667, bequeathed property for the erection and endowment of a school, which is free for all children within the parish. By deed in 1727, the Hon. Letitia Monson gave £1000, since laid out in Bank Annuities, for endowing an almshouse for six poor widows: there are also several minor benefactions for the poor.

BROXHOLME, a parish in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Lincoln, containing 148 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 10., and in the patronage of George Manners, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BROXTED, a parish in the hundred of DUNMOW, county of ESSEX, 3 miles (S. W.) from Thaxted, containing 597 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of R. De Beauvoir, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BROXTON, a township in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 5 miles (N.) from Malpas, containing 352 inhabitants. This township has given name to a hundred, which, at the time of the Norman survey, was called Dudestan hundred.

BROXTOW, a chapelry in the parish of BILBOROUGH, southern division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Nottingham. The population is returned with the parish. This place, which gave name to the hundred, in ancient records is called a parish, but appears to have been subsequently annexed to Bilborough, to which the chapel, now in ruins, was a chapel of ease.

BRUERN, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Burford, containing 64 inhabitants. An abbey for Cistercian monks, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded by Nicholas Basset, in 1147, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, amounted to £124. 10. 10.

BRUISYARD, a parish in the hundred of PLOMESGATE, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Framlingham, containing 269 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Stradbroke. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A collegiate chapel, in honour of the Annunciation, was founded at Campsey, for a warden and four Secular priests, by Maud, Countess of Ulster, in 1347, seven years after which the establishment was removed to Bruisyard: the site and possessions, in 1366, were surrendered to an abbess and nuns of the order of St. Clare, who continued here until the general suppression, when their revenue was estimated at £56. 2. 1.

BRUMHILL, a hamlet in the parish of WEETING, hundred of GRIMSHOE, county of NORFOLK, 1 mile (N. N. E.) from Brandon. The population is returned with the parish. A priory for Augustine canons, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Thomas the Martyr, was founded in or about the reign of John, by Sir Hugh de Plaiz: in the 7th of Henry III. the prior received a grant for a fair to be held here on the 7th of July, and, in the following year, permission to hold a market also. It was suppressed by a bull of Pope Clement, issued in May 1528, and the possessions were granted by the king to Cardinal Wolsey, toward endowing his intended college at Ipswich; but this design having been frustrated by the cardinal's fall, they were given, in exchange for other lands, to the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge: the site is now occupied by a farm-house, and several stone coffins have been dug up on the spot.

BRUMSTEAD, a parish in the hundred of HAPPING, county of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from North Walsham, containing 93 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6.5.7½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BRUNDALL, a parish in the hundred of BLOFIELD, county of NORFOLK, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Norwich, containing 54 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with those of Little Plumstead and Witton, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 10. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. In the 38th of Henry III., William de St. Omer received a grant of a fair to be held here.

BRUNDISH, a parish in the hundred of HOXNE, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Framlingham, containing 427 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Tannington, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

BRUNDON, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Castle-Hedingham. The population is returned with Ballingdon. The living is a rectory with Ballingdon, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Admiral Wyndham. The church has been destroyed, and the inhabitants now repair to the chapel of Ballingdon, which has in consequence become parochial.

BRUNSTOCK, a township in the parish of CROSBY, upon EDEN, ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Carlisle, containing 53 inhabitants.

BRUNTINGTHORPE, a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Lutterworth, containing 348 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 7. 6., and in the patronage of George Bridges, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BRUNTON (EAST), a township in that part of the parish of GOSFORTH which is in the western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, containing 270 inhabitants.

BRUNTON (WEST), a township in that part of the parish of GOSFORTH which is in the western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, containing 126 inhabitants.

BRUSHFIELD, a township in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Bakewell, containing 40 inhabitants.

BRUSHFORD, a parish in the hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, county of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Chulmleigh, containing 134 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Luxton.

BRUSHFORD, a parish in the hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by E.) from Dulverton, containing 311 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £15. 1. 5½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Carnarvon. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

BRUTON, a market town and parish in the hundred of BRUTON, county of SOMERSET, 12 miles (S. E.) from Wells, and 110 (W. by S.) from London, containing, with the chapelries of Weeke-Champflower and Redlynch, and the tything of Discove, 2076 inhabitants. This place, which takes its name from the river Bri, or Bru, that rises in the adjoining forest of Selwood, was distinguished, prior to the Conquest, for an abbey founded by Algar, Earl of Cornwall, in 1005, for monks of the Benedictine order, upon the ruins of which William de Mohun, in the reign of Stephen, erected a priory for Black canons; this was raised into an abbey, in the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII., by William Gilbert, the prior, by whom it was almost rebuilt: it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and its revenue, at the dissolution, was £480. 17. 2.: the remains have been recently converted into a parsonage-house, and the other vestiges consist of the altars, the tomb of the last abbot, and an ancient well. The town is pleasantly situated at the base of a steep hill, and along the side of a romantic combe, watered by the river Bru, which affords a plentiful supply of water, and over which is a stone bridge: it consists principally of one clean and well-paved street; the houses are in general neatly built. The manufactures were once considerable, but are now confined to stockings and silk. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are on September 17th and April 23rd. The town-hall is a spacious building; the lower part is used for the market, and the upper part contains a large court-room, wherein the petty sessions for the division are held.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1700 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious and handsome structure in the later style of English architecture; the tower at the west end is most elaborately decorated, embattled, and crowned with pinnacles: there are two porches, over the entrance into which are the arms of some of the abbots; the tomb of prior Gilbert is preserved in the church, and a neat marble monument has been erected to the memory of Captain Berkeley. There is a place of worship for Independents. The free grammar school was founded, in the reign of Edward VI., by Richard Fitzjames, Bishop of London; Sir John Fitzjames, Chief Justice of England; and Dr. John Edmonds, by deed dated September 24th, 1519, who endowed it with estates producing £350. 5. 10. per annum: it has four exhibitions, of £50 per annum each, to either of the Universities. An hospital for the maintenance and clothing of fourteen aged men, the same number of women, and sixteen boys, who are also educated and apprenticed, was founded about 1618, by Hugh Sexey, Esq., auditor of the household to Queen Elizabeth and James I., who endowed it with estates producing £1381. 11. 2½. per annum; the men and woman have a weekly allowance of six shillings each, and a bushel of coal; and with the boys, on leaving school, is given an apprentice fee of £22, of which £12 is paid to the master on the signing, and £10 on the expiration, of the indenture. The chaplain has a stipend of £40 per annum; the schoolmaster, a salary of £42 per annum for teaching, and seven shillings per week each for boarding, the scholars; the treasurer and steward receives £32, and the surgeon and apothecary £20, per annum. The buildings, which were completed about 1636, form a spacious quadrangle near the west end of the town, and are in the Elizabethan style of architecture: in one of the wings is a neat chapel, with a school-room below it; and over the entrance to the hall is the bust of the founder: the eastern side of the quadrangle was rebuilt about twenty-five years since. The benevolent founder of this hospital, the two Fitzjames', and Dampier, the celebrated navigator, were born here. Many marine shells and fossils have been dug up at Creech Hill, where was an encampment, and on which also a beacon was formerly erected: human skeletons and skulls have been found at Lawyat; and at Dischcove, a small hamlet in the parish, the remains of a tessellated pavement were discovered in 1711.

BRUTON (HIGH and LOW), a township in the parish of EMBLETON, southern division of BAMBOURGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8½ miles (N. by E.) from Alnwick, containing 70 inhabitants.

BRYANSTON, a parish in the hundred of PRIMERNE, Blandford (North) division of the county of DORSET, 1½ mile (N. W. by W.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 79 inhabitants. The living is a rectory with that of Durweston consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Dorset and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 11. 5½., and in the patronage of Edward Berkeley Portman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. The navigable river Stour forms the northern boundary of this parish.

BRYANTS PIDDLE, a tything in the parish of AFF-PIDDLE, hundred of HUNDRED'S BARROW, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, 9¼ miles (E. by N.) from Dorchester, containing 169 inhabitants.

BRYNGWYN, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of RAGLAND, county of MONMOUTH, 6¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Monmouth, containing 265 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £4. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

BRYNING, a joint township with Kellasnergh, in the parish of KIRKHAM, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2¼ miles (S. W. by W.) from Kirkham, containing, with Kellasnergh, 145 inhabitants.

BUBBENHALL, a parish in the Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 6 miles (S. S. E.) from Coventry, containing, 247 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the prebendary of Bubbenhall in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. Eight poor children are taught to read, from an endowment of £5 a year, being the interest of £100 given by Mrs. Hannah Murcott, in 1775.

BUBNELL, a township in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 2¼ miles (S. E.) from Stoney-Middleton, containing 96 inhabitants. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children.

BUBWITH, a parish partly in the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, but chiefly in the Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Brighton, Bubwith, Foggathorpe, Gribthorpe with Willitoft, Harlthorpe, and Spaldington, and containing 1456 inhabitants, of which number, 540 are in the township of Bubwith, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Howden. The living is a discharged vicarage, held in mediæties; the first, which is rated in the king's books at £7. 2. 6., is in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, and in the patronage of the Crown; the second, rated at £8. 0. 5., is in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of York. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is situated close to the river Derwent, which is crossed by a stone bridge of ten arches, built in 1793, and is the birthplace of Nicholas de Bubwith, Bishop of Bath and Wells, who was one of the English prelates that were present at the council of Constance, in 1415.

BUCKBY (LONG), a parish in the hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. E.) from Daventry, containing, with the hamlet of Murcott, 1843 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Langton Freeman, in 1783, gave £400 for the endowment of a school for poor children.

BUCKDEN, a parish in the hundred of TOSELAND, county of HUNTINGDON, 4½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Huntingdon, containing 973 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a tower surmounted by an elegant spire, and contains the remains of some of the bishops of Lincoln, to one of whom the manor was granted by the abbot of Ely, in the reign of Henry I.; the episcopal palace is a venerable structure: and there are vestiges of an ancient monastic building. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Grand Junction canal passes through the parish, and the river Nine has its source in the neighbourhood. Robert Raymond, in 1761, bequeathed a rent-charge of £10 for the instruction of children; and a charity school has been established by means of a bequest, in 1778, of £200 from Dr. Greenlate, Bishop of Lincoln.

BUCKDEN, a township in that part of the parish of ARNCLIFFE which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWECROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 18½ miles (N. E.) from Settle, containing 382 inhabitants.

BUCKENHAM, a parish in the hundred of BLOFIELD, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S. W.) from Acle, containing 31 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Hassingham consolidated, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of Sir T. B. Proctor, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The village lies near the river Yare, over which there is a ferry. The Romans are supposed to have had a minor station here, relics of which have been discovered in the vicinity.

BUCKENHAM (NEW), a market town and parish in the hundred of SHROPHAM, county of NORFOLK, 15½ miles (S. W.) from Norwich, and 96 (N. E. by N.) from London, containing 720 inhabitants. This place owes its origin to William D'Albini, Earl of Chichester, who, disliking the situation of a castle which was built at Old Buckenham, about the time of the Conquest, caused that structure to be demolished, and another to be erected here, in the reign of Henry II. This castle was pleasantly situated on an eminence to the east of the former, and consisted of a keep, two round towers, a grand entrance tower, and a barbican, enclosed with embattled walls surrounded by a fosse; part of the gateway and keep is still remaining. Its lord, who had view of frank pledge, and the power of life and death, obtained from Henry II. many privileges for his new burgh, among which were those of holding a mercate court, the assize of bread and ale, and a market. The inhabitants have also the privilege of exposing goods for sale at any market or fair in the kingdom, free of toll and stallage, and are exempt from serving on juries. The lords of this manor claim the right of officiating as butler at the coronation of the kings of England. The town is pleasantly situated, the houses are neatly built, and there is an ample supply of water. A high bailiff is chosen annually at the "Portman" court; and a court baron and court leet are held by the proprietor of the manor. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are on the last Saturday in May, September 28th, and November 22nd. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the parishioners. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is an ancient structure, part of which was rebuilt in 1479; over the western entrance are sculptured the arms of several ancient families: the chancel is separated from the north aisle by a richly carved screen, and contains some interesting monuments. There is a place of worship for Methodists. A free school is endowed for a limited number of boys; and an almshouse for four aged persons was endowed by William Barber, Esq., with £28 per annum.

BUCKENHAM (OLD), a parish in the hundred of SHROPHAM, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Attleburgh, containing 1134 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the parishioners. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Sandemanians. This was anciently a place of considerable importance, and is supposed to derive name either from Boccen, a beech tree, and Ham, a dwelling-place; or from an allusion to the bucks, or deer, that thronged the adjacent forests. A priory for Augustine canons was founded, in honour of St. James the Apostle, by William D'Albini, Earl of Chichester, about the middle of the twelfth century: at the dissolution, the establishment consisted of a prior and eight canons, whose revenue was estimated at £131. 11. It was partly built with the ruins of an old castle in the vicinity, which was entirely demolished by Sir Philip Knyvett, whose ancestors had resided in it. A little southward from the site of this castle, which is still visible, stood a chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, subsequently converted into a barn, to which purpose also the present parochial church was appropriated, soon after its desecration, on being granted away as part of the possessions of the priory. Here were three guilds, dedicated respectively to St. Margaret, St. Peter, and St. Thomas the Martyr. There is a small fund for the instruction of children, besides some trifling benefactions for the poor.

BUCKENHILL, a township in the parish of WOOLHOPE, hundred of GREYTRERE, county of HERTFORD, 8½ miles (N. by E.) from Ross. The population is returned with the parish.

BUCKERELL, a parish in the hundred of HEMVOCK, county of DEVON, 3 miles (W.) from Honiton, containing 315 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10. 0. 2½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BUCKFASTLEIGH, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of STANBOROUGH, county of DEVON, 2½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ashburton, containing 2240 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £19. 1. 0½., and in the patronage of the Rev. Matthew Lowndes. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is situated on an eminence northward from the village, and comprises a nave, chancel, transepts, and a tower, with chapels on the north and south sides. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village owed much of its past importance to a Cistercian abbey, founded in 1137, by Ethelward de Pomeroy, in honour of St. Mary, the abbot of which had power to execute capital offenders; its revenue, at the time of the dissolution, was estimated at £466. 11. 2.: the visible remains are few, many of the houses in the village having been built with its materials; and a modern mansion, in the ecclesiastical style of architecture, has been erected on part of its site. Prior to the dissolution, a weekly market was held, the market-house being still standing: fairs for live stock are held on the third Thursday in June, and the second Thursday in September. Copper-works are in active operation in the vicinity; and there are strata of indifferently good marble mixed with the lime-stone rock. Within the limits of the parish are vestiges of an encampment.

BUCKHOLT-FARM, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of THORNGATE, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. W.) from Stockbridge. The Roman road from Salisbury to Winchester crosses this farm.

BUCKHORN-WESTON, a parish in the hundred of REDLANE, Sturminster division of the county of DORSET, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Shaftesbury, containing 327 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £10. 1. 3., and in the patronage of Lady Stapleton. In the chancel of the church is an ancient statue, supposed to be that of the father-in-law of Gascoigne, Lord Chief Justice in the reigns of Henry IV. and V.; the gallery is said to have been painted by Sir James Thornhill, who resided in a neighbouring parish.

BUCKHOW-BANK, a township in the parish of DALSTON, ward and county of CUMBERLAND, 5½ miles (S.S.W.) from Carlisle, containing 570 inhabitants. The village lies on the eastern bank of the river Caldew, and there are several cotton-mills within the township, in connexion with the manufacturers at Carlisle: the soil is very favourable to the growth of wheat, and produces heavy crops.

Seal and Arms.

BUCKINGHAM, a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, comprising the borough and market town of Buckingham (which has a separate jurisdiction), the chapelry of Gawcott, the hamlets of Bourton, Bourtonhold, and Lenborough, and the precinct of Prebend-End, and containing 3465 inhabitants, of which number, 1495 are in the borough, 17 miles (N.W.) from Aylesbury, and 56 (N.W. by W.) from London. This place is supposed to have derived its name either from the Saxon Bocce, a beech tree, or from Bucca, a stag, having been equally remarkable for the extensive beech woods in its neighbourhood, and for the great number of deer with which those woods abounded: some, however, from the name having anciently been written Boch-ing-ham, deduce it from Boch-ing, a chartered or free meadow, as boch-land, among the Saxons, signified a charter-land, to distinguish it from folc-land, or copyhold. In 915, King Edward the Elder fortified both sides of the river on which the town is situated, with ramparts and turrets, to protect it from the incursions of the Danes, who, in 941, committed dreadful outrages in the neighbourhood, and, in 1010, took possession of the town. In the reign of Edward III., Buckingham sent three representatives to a great council held at Westminster, at which time it was a considerable staple town for wool; but upon the removal of that distinction to Calais, its prosperity declined, and it finally became one of those decayed towns for which relief was granted by an act of parliament in 1535. About this period, the assizes, formerly held here, were removed to Aylesbury; but in 1758 Lord Cobham obtained an act for holding the summer assizes at this town. In 1644, Charles I. fixed his head-quarters, and Sir William Waller, after the battle of Cropredy-Bridge, and Fairfax after his defeat at Borstall House, took up their stations here. In 1724, a considerable part of the town was destroyed by an accidental fire.

Buckingham is pleasantly situated on the river Ouse, by which it is environed on every side except the north.

VOL. I.

and over which are three bridges of stone: it consists principally of one long street; the houses in general are built of brick, and the town is paved, lighted with oil, and plentifully supplied with water. The trade chiefly consists in sorting wool, tanning leather, and the making of lace. Of the last, prior to the introduction of the lace manufacture into Nottingham, a great quantity was made, not only in this town, but throughout the county, affording employment to a large portion of the female inhabitants: there are several corn and paper mills on the banks of the Ouse. A branch of the Grand Junction canal, extending to the town, affords the means of supplying it with coal, and considerably facilitates its trade. There are several limestone quarries in the vicinity, besides a quarry of marble; the marble is of a darkish colour, but can neither endure the weather, nor retain a good polish, on which account it is but little worked. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on January 12th, and on the last Monday in that month, March 7th, the second Monday in April, May 6th, Whit-Thursday, July 10th, September 4th, and October 2nd, chiefly for cattle and sheep; on the Saturday after Old Michaelmas-day, which is a statute fair; and November 8th and December 13th, for cattle. The government, by charter of incorporation granted in the reign of Edward III., confirmed by Henry VIII., and subsequently by Queen Mary, is vested in a bailiff, high steward, recorder, and twelve principal burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk and subordinate officers. There are four incorporated fraternities, viz., the Mercers, Tanners, Merchant Taylors, and Butchers; but the freedom of the borough has become obsolete. The bailiff is a justice of the peace, and, with three of the burgesses, and the deputy steward, holds a court for the recovery of debts under £5. The corporation hold courts of session in April and October, for the trial of all offenders, except such as are accused of capital crimes. The town-hall is a neat and spacious brick building, nearly in the centre of the town. The borough gaol, a commodious structure, was erected by Lord Cobham, in 1748, at an expense of £7000: on a tablet over the entrance is an inscription recording the restoration of the summer assizes in 1758. The borough has constantly returned two representatives to parliament since the 36th of Henry VIII.: the right of election is vested exclusively in the officers of the corporation, thirteen in number, who are in the interest of the Duke of Buckingham: the bailiff is the returning officer.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £22, and in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, was erected in 1781, on the site of an ancient castle, supposed to have been built by one of the earls of Buckingham, prior to the Conquest, the foundations of which are occasionally discovered, and constitute its only vestiges: it is a handsome structure, with a square embattled tower surmounted by a well-proportioned spire. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Presbyterians. The free grammar school, now incorporated with an English school under the management of the corporation, was founded by Edward VI., who endowed it with the revenue of a dissolved chantry belonging to the guild of the Holy Trinity; and appropriated to its use the chapel founded, in 1268, by Matthew Stratton, Archdeacon of Buckingham, and dedicated to St. John the Baptist and Thomas à Becket, of which the seats, erected in the reign of Edward IV., and the original entrance, in the Norman style, are still remaining. The Green-coat school, for twenty-six boys, was founded and endowed in 1760, by Mr. Gabriel Newton, alderman of Leicester; and a National school for two hundred boys and one hundred girls, established in 1819, for which a handsome building of stone has been erected, is supported by subscription. The almshouses, called Christ's hospital, for six aged women, were founded by Queen Elizabeth, about 1597. Buckingham gives the title of duke to the family of Temple.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the south and south-west by Berkshire, from which it is separated by the river Thames; on the west by the county of Oxford; on the north-west and north by that of Northampton; on the north-east by that of Bedford; on the east by those of Bedford and Hertford; and on the south-east by Middlesex. It extends from $51^{\circ} 25'$ to $52^{\circ} 11'$ (N. Lat.), and from $0^{\circ} 30'$ to $1^{\circ} 9'$ (W. Lon.); and comprises an area of about seven hundred and forty square miles, or four hundred and seventy-three thousand statute acres. The population, in 1821, amounted to 134,068.

The ancient British inhabitants of this territory are supposed by Camden to have been the Cassii, or Catti-euchlani. Mr. Whitaker, the learned historian of Manchester, is of opinion, that only that part of Buckinghamshire which borders on the present county of Bedford, was originally inhabited by the Cassii; but, that they afterwards seized upon the territories of the Dobuni, who inhabited the other parts of it, which the latter, at a still remoter period, had conquered from the Ancalites. The neighbourhood of Kimble is stated to have been the scene of that action between the invading Romans and the aborigines of the island, in which the two sons of Cunobeline, or Cymbeline, were defeated by Aulus Plautius, and one of them, named Togodumnus, slain. Under the Roman dominion, the territory now constituting the county of Buckingham was included in the great division called Flavia Caesariensis. The Romanized Britons, in consequence of a defeat which they had received from the Saxons under Cuthwulf, brother of Ceawlin, king of the West Saxons, at Bedford, were compelled, in the year 580, to abandon the districts lying immediately below the Chiltern Hills, in which several of their principal towns were situated, one of which, called by the victors Eaglesbyrig, is now the town of Aylesbury. On the complete establishment of the Saxon Octarchy, this shire became part of the powerful kingdom of Mercia. Edward the Elder, in the year 915, built a fortress on each side of the Ouse at Buckingham, where he staid four weeks: in 921, the Danes committed great depredations between Aylesbury and the forest of Bernwood. On the consolidation of the Danish power in England under Canute, this shire was included in the Dane-lege, or Danish jurisdiction. During the war between King John and the barons, Hanslope Castle, at Castlethorpe, was garrisoned against the former by its possessor, William Mauduit, but was taken and demolished, in 1216, by Fulk de Brent. In 1233, the lands of Richard, Earl of Cornwall, near Brill, were laid waste by Richard Sward, and others of the revolted party. At the commencement of the civil war of the seventeenth century, Buckinghamshire was one of the first that joined in an association for mutual defence on the side of the parliament: it was the address of its inhabitants, too, that first excited this body more strenuously to resist the king; and Lord Clarendon informs us that, "from the date of its presentation we may reasonably date the levying of war in England." On the breaking out of hostilities, the king had a garrison in a strong position at Brill, which, towards the close of the year 1642, was attacked by the celebrated patriot, Hampden, who, however, was repulsed with considerable loss, and the garrison continued to be a great annoyance to the parliamentarians, by its frequent excursions to Aylesbury and its vicinity. Among the terms for a cessation of hostilities, as delivered to the king, in March 1643, it was proposed that the royal forces should not advance nearer to Aylesbury than Brill, nor those of the parliament nearer to Oxford than Aylesbury. A skirmish, which took place in the following June, on Chalgrave-field, is memorable for the severe loss sustained by the parliamentary cause in the death of Hampden, who there received a wound, which caused his death six days after. Newport-Pagnell, in the course of the same year, was for a short time garrisoned by the king's troops, but was abandoned by Sir Lewis Dyve, on the approach of the Earl of Essex, and it afterwards proved a very useful garrison to the parliament. Brill was evacuated by the royalist forces in April 1643; and about the same time Prince Rupert attacked the quarters of the parliamentarians at High Wycombe with some success. In the summer of this year, the Earl of Essex quartered his army for a considerable time about Aylesbury and Thame, near the former of which, in August, a grand rendezvous of the parliamentary forces was held. In 1644, the king had his head-quarters for some time at Buckingham; but on the other hand a royalist garrison in Borstall House, just within the western confines of the county, which had proved troublesome to the parliamentary garrison at Aylesbury, abandoned that strong hold in June of the same year, and it was immediately taken possession of by the parliament; but it was some time afterwards retaken for the royalists by Col. Gage. Greenland House, another garrison for the king, situated on the banks of the Thames, near Henley, after sustaining a severe siege, was surrendered in the month of July to General Browne. During the whole of the following year, neither of the contending parties here gained any advantage over the other, although Skippon and Fairfax each made successive attacks on Borstall House: from the siege of this place the parliamentary forces marched to Marsh-Gibbon, Brickhill, and Buckingham. In 1646, Borstall House, the only remaining royal garrison in the county, was surrendered to the parliament.

Buckinghamshire is in the diocese of Lincoln, and province of Canterbury; and, with the exception of a few parishes, constitutes an archdeaconry, in which are the deaneries of Buckingham, Burnham, Mursley, Newport, Wadsden, Wendover, and Wycombe: the total number of parishes is two hundred and two, of which one hundred and one are rectories, sixty-eight vicarages, and the remainder perpetual curacies and donatives. For purposes of civil jurisdiction, it is divided into eight hundreds, viz., Ashendon, Aylesbury, Buckingham, Burnham, Cottesloe, Desborough, Newport, and Stoke. It contains the borough and market towns of Amersham, Aylesbury, Buckingham, Great Marlow, Wendover, and High or Chipping-Wycombe; and the market towns of Beaconsfield, Chesham, Ivinghoe, Newport-Pagnell, Olney, Prince's Risborough, Fenny-Stratford, Stony-Stratford, and Winslow; as also part of that of Colnbrook, the rest of which is in Middlesex. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire, and two burgesses for each of the six boroughs: the county members are elected at Buckingham. It is included in the Oxford circuit: the summer assizes are held at Buckingham, and the Lent assizes and general quarter sessions at Aylesbury, where is situated the common gaol and house of correction for the county. There are one hundred and thirty acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1829, amounted to £146,543, and the expenditure to £143,732, of which £124,497 was applied to the relief of the poor.

There is hardly a county in England more irregular in shape and outline than this, which, although it approaches an oblong, has singular projections and indentations: its boundaries, except on the south and south-east, where they are formed by the rivers Thames and Colne, are almost entirely arbitrary. A little beyond its western confines, immediately to the north of Bicester, is a small detached portion, forming the parish of Caversfield, which is surrounded by Oxfordshire. The most striking natural feature in its surface is the range of heights called the Chiltern hills, which stretches across it from the southern extremity of Bedfordshire, by Eddlesborough, Halton, Wendover, Ellesborough, Risborough, and Bledlow, to the southern part of Oxfordshire, being part of the great chain of chalk hills which extends from Norfolk south-westward into Dorsetshire. On the western side of the county is a range of hills of calcareous stone, which runs parallel with the Chiltern hills, at the distance of only a few miles. Between these two lies the rich Vale of Aylesbury, the natural fertility of which is almost unrivalled. The country to the south of the Chilterns abounds with pleasing scenery, highly diversified with hill and dale, corn-fields, meadows, and woodlands, particularly near Amersham and the Missendens. Between Marlow and Henley the scenery is rendered still more delightful by the broad and glassy current of the Thames, and the picturesque boldness of its opposite banks. Among the more striking prospects may be particularly mentioned that from the hills above Ellesborough, over the Vale of Aylesbury; that from a field near Brill, over a great part of Oxfordshire and Northamptonshire; and that from the tower of Penn church, which is the most extensive of all, and, besides comprising a great portion of Bucks, stretches into the counties of Berks, Oxford, Bedford, Herts, Essex, Kent, Middlesex, Surrey, and even into some parts of Sussex and Northamptonshire.

The predominating soils are rich loam, strong clay, chalky mould, and loam upon gravel, all of which, however, admit of considerable variety, and are much intermingled. The subsoil of the Chiltern hills is chalk of different qualities, with occasional beds of gravel and sand, and in many places a great abundance of brick earth, especially from Chesham to Amersham, at which latter place it is very fine, and supplies a manufactory for common earthenware. The surface soil of the valleys between these hills consists of rich clays and clayey loams, which upon the declivities are, in some places, very thin, and form a clayey chalk: on some of the hills the surface is clayey; on others it is composed, in a great measure, of chalk. These kinds of soil occupy the whole southern part of the county, excepting only the district separated from the rest of it by an imaginary line drawn from Uxbridge to Maidenhead, in which a gravelly loam upon gravel prevails. In the central parts of the county, from the Chiltern hills to the Watling-street on the north-east, and to the river Ouse on the north, the prevailing soils on the uplands are various clays, upon calcareous strata. The Vale of Aylesbury consists of rich clays and loams, of almost proverbial fertility. On the border of Bedfordshire, in the neighbourhood of Wavendon, Broughton, and the Brickhills, the prevailing soil is a deep sand: in the same vicinity is also found a rich blue marl, used for manure. The northern parts of the county consist of clays and loams, with mixtures of gravel, forming good turnip land, and rich meadows along the course of the Ouse.

This county has long been famous for its produce of corn and cattle, "Buckinghamshire bread and beef" having been formerly a common expression. Agriculture is practised with greater or less diligence, according to the nature of the soils: thus, on the Chiltern hills, and in the district to the south of them, where the shallowness of the soil calls forth the industrious powers of the husbandman, a more active system of farming prevails than in the rich Vale of Aylesbury, where, indeed, the land is for the most part devoted to grazing and the dairy. One-half of the county consists of arable farms, containing not more than one-fifth of grass land, which occupy the whole of the Chiltern hills and the county southward of them to the Thames, together with the sandy lands in the neighbourhood of the Brickhills, Soulbury, and Linslade, and some parts of the Vale of Aylesbury: a sixth part of the county, situated to the north-east of the Watling-street, is composed of farms of a mixed nature, containing about two-fifths of meadows and pastures. The courses of crops are various: those most commonly cultivated are wheat, barley, beans, turnips, tares, and artificial grasses: the average produce of wheat is computed at nearly twenty-five bushels per acre; that of barley, at nearly thirty-eight bushels; and that of beans, at about twenty-four bushels. Oats and peas are very little cultivated. The turnips are chiefly eaten upon the land by sheep; the tares are applied to the feeding of sheep and horses. The artificial grasses commonly sown are red clover, white clover, trefoil, and ray-grass; sainfoin also is grown on the Chiltern hills. Besides the proportion of grass land intermixed with that under cultivation, most of the central part of the county, from the Chiltern hills to the Watling-street, consists of dairy and grazing farms, which occupy about one-third of the entire surface. The pastures are not in general so rich as those of some counties, but the meadows on the banks of the Ouse and the Thame derive such fertility from the floods to which those rivers are very liable, as seldom to require manuring. The grazing farms are very few, in comparison with those applied to the dairy, upon which latter neat stock is never grazed. The number of cows kept on these extensive pastures is computed at about twenty-seven thousand, of which upwards of twenty-one thousand are always productive to the dairy. Between four and five million pounds, or about one thousand nine hundred tons, of butter are annually made in this county, by far the greater part of which is sent by contract to London. It is made up into lumps of two pounds each, and packed in osier baskets, called flats, which are in the form of parallelopipedons of different sizes, but all of the same depth, namely, eleven inches: each of these holds from three to ten dozen of butter, or from thirty-six to one hundred and twenty pounds: the flats are the property of the carrier, who receives the butter of the dairyman at the nearest point by which he passes, its carriage being paid by the factor in London. No cheese is made, except a few cream cheeses in summer for the markets of Buckingham, Aylesbury, and Wycombe. The cattle fattened are almost wholly grazed, chiefly in the Vale of Aylesbury, and considerable numbers of them sent to Smithfield market. The manures, besides those common to other counties, are chalk, obtained by sinking pits on different parts of the Chiltern hills; marl, found at Brickhill; lime; ashes, universally applied to the clover leys; soot; and woollen rags on the Chilterns: but the most general mode of manuring land is by the folding of sheep upon it, which are sometimes hired for the purpose. The greater number of the dairy cows are of the short-horned Yorkshire kind; though some dairies are composed of the long-horned Leicester breed; others of the Suffolk, and others of the Welch: a few Alderney cows are also seen. The graziers have a great variety of cattle, among which the Hereford, Devon, and Yorkshire breeds predominate. The calves are generally sold from the dairy farms, at from four to twelve days old, to persons who suckle them: these, together with others from the northern parts of the county, are purchased at Aylesbury market by the farmers of the Chilterns, particularly such as live in the neighbourhood of Chesham and Amersham, who fatten them for the London market. The principal object of those who keep sheep is to produce fat lambs as early as possible for the London market: the prevalent breeds are, the Dorsetshire, the Gloucester, the Berkshire, and the South-Down. Hogs form an important part of the stock of the dairy farms, from which great numbers are sold as bacon between Michaelmas and Christmas, or sent as porkers to the London market from that time until the spring: they are commonly of the Berkshire sort, though the Chinese and Suffolk breeds have also been introduced. There are rabbits upon the Chiltern hills, but no warrens; considerable numbers, however, are kept by poor persons, who send the young to the London markets. At Aylesbury and its vicinity, great numbers of ducks are bred and fattened by poor people, and sent to London by the weekly carriers: in this manner are sent many thousands annually, some of them very early in the spring. The orchards, though objects of little attention, produce considerable quantities of cherries, which are sent to the Aylesbury and London markets.

It is related by ancient historians, that this shire was formerly so covered with woods as to be almost impassable, until Leofstan, abbot of St. Albans, caused several of them to be cut down, because they afforded shelter for thieves. The whole of the Chiltern district is said to have been covered with wood; and the western part of the county, bordering on Oxfordshire, was occupied by the forest of Bernwood, which was disafforested in the reign of James I. The chief of the woodlands are in the districts to the south of the Chiltern hills, of which also they occupy a considerable portion. The prevailing timber is beech, of which some of the larger woods entirely consist, and which, from its abundance, gives the country a remarkably rich appearance: this timber is generally applied to the manufacture of chairs, both in this county and in London. A tract of land on the Chiltern hills, in the parishes of Ellesborough, Little Kimble, and Great Kimble, is covered with box wood, which appears to be indigenous; and the woods on many parts of these hills, particularly at West Wycombe, contain a vast quantity of juniper: the neighbourhood of Chesham abounds with the black cherry chiefly planted in hedge-rows. The principal tract of woodland in the northern part of the county is Whaddon Chase, containing about two thousand acres of coppices, consisting of oak, ash, &c. The practice of lopping and shrouding trees prevails so much in some parts of the county, as to give such districts a very unsightly appearance. The most extensive tracts of waste lands are Wycombe heath, containing about fifteen hundred acres; Iver heath, about eleven hundred; Stoke heath, about one thousand; Fulmer heath, about six hundred; and Great Harwood common, about five hundred. The fuel used is chiefly coal, obtained, by means of the Grand Junction canal, from the collieries of Staffordshire: Newcastle coal is brought up the Thames, and sometimes along the Grand Junction canal from London; and fagots are burned in the places most distant from these lines of navigation, where they can be most easily procured.

The mineral productions are of scarcely any importance. Near Newport is a bed of good marble, which, however, is not worked; and in the vicinity of Olney is a quarry of freestone. At Wavendon are some very old and celebrated fullers' earth pits. At Brill is obtained ochre for painting; and umber is found in small quantities in the northern parts of the county. A yellow limestone is found near Dinton, a few miles south-westward of Aylesbury, which contains an abundance of a species of nautilus, with other extraneous fossils: remains of this nature have also been found in other strata at Quainton, and in its vicinity, near Aylesbury, near Amersham, on Wyrardisbury, or Raisbury, common, and in the vicinity of Ellesborough. The manufactures are those of thread-lace, straw-plat, and paper. The former is tolerably general in most parts of the county, though its prosperity has greatly declined, owing to the rise of the machine lace manufacture of Nottingham, and the populous district surrounding it; it is chiefly prevalent at Hanslope, and in its immediate vicinity: in and about Olney are made great quantities of veils and laces of the finer sorts. Both boys and girls, when about five years old, are put to the lace schools to learn the art, and by the latter it is pursued through life; some men, even, follow no other employment; and others find it a resource when out of work. The straw-plat manufacture, of which the town of Dunstable, in Bedfordshire, is the centre, extends for some distance within this county. The manufacture of paper has been carried on in the neighbourhood of Wycombe for more than a century and a quarter, and different mills on the Wyke are still actively and extensively engaged in it. The exports of the county are simply the produce of these manufactures and of its agriculture: its imports are of the ordinary kinds.

The principal rivers are, the Thames, the Ouse, the Ouzel, the Thame, and the Colne. The first of these is the boundary and chief ornament of the southern part of it, which it separates from Berkshire during a navigable course of about twenty-eight miles, first touching it about a mile north of Henley bridge, and thence flowing by Medmenham, Great Marlow, Hedsor, Taplow, Boveny, Eton, and Datchet, to the mouth of the Colne, a little above Staines, where it quits the county: the navigation of this river, as affording an immediate communication with the metropolis, is of great importance to the county. The course of the Ouse through Buckinghamshire, and as a boundary to it, is very circuitous, and in length is little less than fifty miles, in no part of which, however, is it navigable: it first becomes a boundary in the parish of Turweston, near Brackley, separating it from Northamptonshire, and, after passing Westbury, forms the boundary line of the counties of Buckingham and Oxford for a short distance: it then enters the former at Water-Stratford, and flows eastward to the borough of Buckingham, and thence north-eastward to the village of Thornton, a little beyond which it again becomes a boundary between the counties of Buckingham and Northampton: a little beyond Stony-Stratford, however, it enters the county a second time, and pursues a remarkably circuitous course eastward to Newport-Pagnell, whence it proceeds northward to Olney, and thence eastward to the border of Bedfordshire, which county it separates from that of Bucks for a short distance, and then enters the former at the north-eastern extremity of the latter. The Ouzel, which rises near Eddlesborough, on the eastern confines of the county, at the foot of the Chiltern hills, immediately becomes the boundary between it and Bedfordshire, flowing northward by Leighton-Buzzard: at Linslade, near that town, it enters Buckinghamshire, and continues to run northward by Fenny-Stratford to the Ouse, at Newport-Pagnell, which it joins, after a course of about thirty miles. Into the Ouse and Ouzel flow several brooks, which take their rise in Whaddon Chase, the highest point of land in the northern part of the county. The Thame is formed by the junction of two small streams near Quarrendon, a few miles from Aylesbury, one of which has its source near Cublington; the other on the border of Hertfordshire: being joined by various other rivulets, it becomes a considerable stream on reaching Eythorpe, in its winding course westward through the rich Vale of Aylesbury: at the town of Thame it becomes the boundary between the counties of Buckingham and Oxford, for a few miles, and entirely quits the former for the latter a little beyond the village of Ickford, after a course through Buckinghamshire, from its highest sources, of about thirty miles: this river abounds with eels, which are claimed by the king: its other fish are chiefly pike, perch, chub, roach, and gudgeons. The mouth of the Thame, where it falls into the Thames, in Oxfordshire, having, for want of cleansing, become choked up, and its channel narrowed, two commissions of sewers were issued in the early part of the last century, but, owing to disputes between the commissioners and the land-owners, nothing effectual was done towards the removal of the obstruction, which, having at length so far increased that the adjacent parts of Buckinghamshire frequently presented the appearance of a lake for months together, a new commission was sued out in 1797, under which the object so long desired was accomplished, by restoring the ancient channel, which has ever since been effectually preserved. The Colne, for a course of about fourteen miles, forms the south-eastern boundary of this county, which it separates from Middlesex, flowing near Denham and Iver, through Colnbrook, and near Horton and Wyrardisbury, to the Thames, between Ankerwyke and Staines: this river, in most parts of its course, has several channels. This county derives great commercial advantage from the Grand Junction canal, which connects the Coventry canal at Braunston with the Thames navigation at Brentford and at Limehouse: it enters it from Northamptonshire, near Cosgrove in the latter, by an aqueduct about three quarters of a mile long, over the stream and valley of the Ouse; and thence proceeds eastward to within a few miles of Newport-Pagnell, where it turns southward up the valley of the Ouzel, by Fenny-Stratford and Leighton-Buzzard; passing a little to the westward of Ivinghoe, it quits for Hertfordshire a little beyond the village of Marsworth. In 1794, an act was obtained for making navigable cuts to communicate with this canal from the towns of Aylesbury, Buckingham, and Wendover: the Aylesbury branch joins the main canal near Marsworth; the Buckingham branch is carried from that town down the northern side of the valley of the Ouse, near Stony-Stratford, to the main line at Cosgrove; and the Wendover navigation joins the main canal at Bulborne, on the confines of Hertfordshire. These canals are navigated by barges of sixty tons' burden: the chief articles of traffic are iron, pottery, coal, timber, lime, and manures.

The great road from London to Chester and Holyhead enters this county in the line of the ancient Watling-street, and, passing through Fenny-Stratford and Stony-Stratford, quits it at Old Stratford, near the fifty-third milestone. That from London to Liverpool enters near the forty-third milestone, about a mile from the town of Woburn in Bedfordshire, and, proceeding through Newport-Pagnell, runs into Northamptonshire between the fifty-seventh and fifty-eighth milestones. The road from London to Oxford, Bath, &c., enters at Colnbrook, and crossing the southern extremity of the county, through Slough, quits it at Maidenhead bridge. Another road to Oxford, commonly called the Wycombe road, enters from Uxbridge, and, passing through Beaconsfield and High Wycombe, proceeds into Oxfordshire a little beyond the thirty-seventh milestone. The road from London to Banbury branches from the Wycombe road at the eighteenth milestone, and passes through Amersham, Wendover, Aylesbury, Winslow, and Buckingham, a little beyond which latter place it enters Northamptonshire, near the sixtieth milestone. That from London to Aylesbury, through Tring, enters between the thirty-second and thirty-third milestones, and joins the last-mentioned road near Aylesbury.

This county contained the Roman station Magiovin-tum, near the present town of Fenny-Stratford, and was crossed by the Roman roads Ikening, or Ikniel, street, the Watling-street, and the Akeman-street, as also by several vicinal ways. The Ikening-street, supposed to have been originally of British construction, from its not being raised or paved, like other Roman roads, runs along the northern verge of the Chiltern hills through their whole extent, entering this county on its eastern border near Eddlesborough, and passing through Wendover, Aston, and Calverton, to its western confines near Chinner: although passing by many camps and earthworks of various sorts, it never diverges towards them, nor does it seem to have any connexion with them; as is the case with the roads known to be of Roman construction. Another ancient road runs nearly parallel with the above, at the northern base of the hills, and is provincially called the "Lower Acknell Way." The Watling-street, during its entire course through the northern part of the county, bears no trace of its ancient Roman construction, except its exact straightness, its line being identical with that of the great modern road to Ireland, which is carried along it from Bedfordshire, through Brickhill, Fenny-Stratford, and Stony-Stratford, across the Ouse into Northamptonshire. The ancient road called the Akeman-street, which runs parallel with the Ikniel-street, on the north, is traceable only in a few places, and appears to have passed by Hide-Lane, and near Buckingham, Stony-Stratford, Stanton, and Newport-Pagnell, to Bedford. An ancient road, which by some has been falsely designated the Akeman-street, enters this county from Bicester, in Oxfordshire, and proceeds in the same line with the modern turnpike road towards the Berry-fields, near Aylesbury, and may have been part of a Roman road from Alcester to Verulam, or London. Another Roman road proceeds in a direct line north-north-eastward from Bicester, and, after forming the eastern boundary of a detached portion of Buckinghamshire, reaches the main body of the county at Water-Stratford, and appears to have crossed the northernmost part of it, by Stowe, in its way to Towcester in Northamptonshire, the Roman Lactodorum. Traces of another Roman road, under the usual name of the Portway, are visible in the vicinities of Stone and Hartwell, to the west of Aylesbury.

The remains of the Roman station Magiovinum are still visible on a small elevation in the "Auld Fields," about a quarter of a mile from Fenny-Stratford: coins and foundations of buildings have been dug up here in abundance. Camden is of opinion that there was anciently a Roman town at Burgh-hill (now contracted into Brill), in the western part of the county. Numerous traces of Roman occupation, such as coins, pavements, &c., have been found at High Wycombe and in its vicinity: coins have also been found near Prince's Risborough and Ellesborough. Above the village of Medmenham are the remains of a large camp, nearly square, formed by a single ditch and vallum, and enclosing an area of about seven acres: in a wood near Burnham is an oblong intrenchment of the same kind, about one hundred and thirty paces long and sixty broad, vulgarly called Harlequin's Moat. Near Ellesborough are some strong earthworks on the side of the Chiltern hills, at one corner of which is a high mount, eighty paces in circumference, called the Castle Hill, or Kimble Castle, and commonly supposed to have been the site of the residence of the British king Cunobeline. On the top of the hill at West Wycombe are the remains of a circular encampment; and those of another are discernible near High Wycombe, at a place called Old, or All, Hollands. At Danesfield, on the banks of the Thames, is a nearly circular intrenchment, called Danes' ditch, formed by a double vallum which environs it, except towards the river, where it is defended by a steep cliff: at Cholsbury, too, is a nearly circular camp, formed by a double ditch, two hundred and eighty-nine yards in diameter from east to west, and two hundred and seven from north to south; and the manor-house of the adjacent village of Hawridge is built within an ancient circular intrenchment. There are also some large intrenchments at Hedgerley-Dean, and a remarkable ditch runs thence to East Burnham: near the Lower Ikniel Way, in the parish of Ellesborough, is a moated area of an irregular form, and in most places about fifty paces in breadth. A considerable rampart of earth, under the common name of Grimesdike, runs nearly east and west through a part of this county, upon the Chiltern hills, where it may be traced for some miles, particularly between Wigginton common in Hertfordshire and St. Leonard's common in Buckinghamshire. A great cross, called White-Leaf Cross, of unknown antiquity, is cut on the side of the chalk hills near Risborough, and has been supposed to be the memorial of some victory gained by the Anglo-Saxons over the Danes.

Before the period of the Reformation this county contained twenty-one religious houses, including four Alien priories, one preceptory of the Knights Hospitallers, and a college of the society of Bonhommes at Ashridge, near the confines of Hertfordshire, being the only house of that order in England, excepting that at Edington in Wiltshire: there were, besides, ten hospitals, one of which, at Newport-Pagnell, re-founded by Queen Anne, consort of James I., is still existing; and the well-known royal college of Eton, founded by Henry VI. There are very considerable remains of Nutley abbey, converted into a farm-house and offices; and vestiges of those of Burnham, Medmenham, and Great Missenden, and of the college of Bonhommes at Ashridge: part of St. Margaret's nunnery, in the parish of Ivinghoe, is yet standing, and is occupied as a dwelling-house. Among the ecclesiastical edifices, Stewkley church is entitled to primary notice, both on account of its antiquity, and as being one of the most complete specimens remaining of Saxon architecture, no part of the original structure, either internally or externally, having been altered or materially defaced; nor have any additions been made to it, excepting the porch on the southern side and the pinnacles of the tower. The doorway of Water-Stratford church is enriched with Saxon ornaments; Dinton church has another remarkable doorway of the same kind; and in that of Stanton-Bury is an arch richly ornamented with Saxon mouldings and heads of animals. Upton church retains its original form, and is on the same plan as that of Stewkley, but less ornamented and much smaller. The doorways of the churches of Caversfield, Horton, Lathbury, Twyford, Waddesdon, Westbury, and Wormenhall, and of the ancient chapel of St. Thomas à Becket, now the free school, at Buckingham, are circular, with Saxon mouldings and other ornaments: there are also remains of this style in the churches of Fingest, Hanslope, Leckhampstead, Stone, Tingewick, and Tyrringham. Chetwood and Hillersdon churches are the only specimens of English architecture worthy of particular notice: in the chancel of the former are some of the most ancient and elegant specimens of stained glass in the kingdom; and Buckinghamshire is rich in other specimens of the same kind. There are more than seventy ancient circular fonts in the churches of this county, many of which are richly ornamented; and among these may be more particularly specified those of Aylesbury, Caversfield, Dinton, Dorney, Drayton-Beauchamp, Hambledon, Hawridge, Hedgerley, Hitchenden, Maids-Moreton, and Upton: many others are octagonal and variously ornamented; while those of Taplow and Chalfont St. Giles are square. There are no remains of the buildings of any fortress; but some earthworks point out the sites of those which formerly stood at Castlethorpe, Lavendon, and Whitchurch, the first of which was called Hanslope Castle. The most remarkable ancient mansions are, Gayhurst, which was built in the reign of Elizabeth, and Liscombe House: the gatehouse of Borstall House is yet standing. At Prince's Risborough, adjoining the churchyard, is an intrenchment nearly square, supposed to be the site of the Black Prince's palace. Among the seats of the landed proprietors, those most distinguished for their architectural beauties are, Stowe, the magnificent mansion of the Duke of Buckingham; Wycombe Abbey, the residence of Lord Carrington; Ashridge, partly in Bucks and partly in Herts, that of the late Earl of Bridgewater; and the modern mansion, at Tyrringham, of William Praed, Esq. The ordinary building materials are bricks, manufactured in various places; tiles, generally flat; freestone, dug at Olney; lime; and timber. Buckinghamshire contains no mineral waters of any note: it gives the title of earl to the family of Hampden.

BUCKINGHAM (PARVA), a parish in the hundred of GRIMSHOE, county of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Watton, containing 29 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £3, and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Newman. The church, which was dedicated to St. Andrew, has long been demolished, together with the village of Buckingham, and not even the site of the former is with certainty known.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the hundred of GANFIELD, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Great Faringdon, containing, with Carswell, 893 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £18. 4. 7., endowed with £300 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Robert Throckmorton, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Henry Southby, in 1793, gave £200 and some land; and his executrix, Sarah Hayter, gave £200 more, for the instruction of girls and for a Sunday school; and Sir J. Throckmorton, in 1793, gave a house for the charity: the income is about £40 a year, for which twenty-five children of each sex are taught and partly clothed. There is a small parochial library.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Tring, containing 496 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed, with those of Quarrendon and Stoke-Mandeville, to the vicarage of Bierton, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Bierton, which belongs to the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of KIRTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Chipping-Campden, containing, with the hamlet of Laverton, 382 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £29. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Bath. The church is a fine structure, in the later style of English architecture; some of the windows exhibit specimens of ancient stained glass. Henry Fred. Thynne, Esq., by deed in 1707, gave land producing upwards of £100 per annum, for teaching poor children of the parishes of Buckland and Chipping-Campden, and for other charitable purposes.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the hundred of EDWINS-TREE, county of HERTFORD, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Barkway, containing 343 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the hundred of BEWSBOROUGH, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W.) from Dover, containing 693 inhabitants. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, endowed with the vicarial tithes, and with £12 per annum payable out of the great tithes; also with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Stour is crossed by a neat brick bridge at the village: here are two large and well-constructed paper-mills, besides a corn-mill: a fair is held on the 4th of September. In 1141, an hospital for lepers was founded within the parish, and dedicated to St. Bartholomew; but there are not now any vestiges of it; digging near its site, in 1765, a leaden vessel, filled with silver coins struck in the reigns of Edward II. and Edward III., was discovered.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the hundred of FAVERSHAM, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Faversham, containing 22 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Charles Eve, Esq. The church, which was dedicated to St. Nicholas, has long been in ruins.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the first division of the hundred of REIGATE, county of SURREY, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Reigate, containing 292 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £11. 12. 11., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The river Mole forms the southern boundary of the parish.

BUCKLAND (EAST), a parish in the hundred of BRAUNTON, though locally in the hundred of South Molton, county of DEVON, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from South Molton, containing 165 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Buckland-Filleigh, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £9. 1. 8. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BUCKLAND (ST. MARY), a parish partly in the southern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, and partly in the hundred of MARTOCK, but chiefly in the hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Ilminster, containing 565 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £12. 19. 9½., and in the patronage of Mrs. Popham. The churchyard contains a mutilated stone cross. A fair for cattle and toys is held on the Wednesday and Thursday next after September 20th. Various relics of warfare have been found in the neighbourhood, which was the scene of some sanguinary conflicts between the Saxons and the Danes: on the edge of Blackdown hill are the remains of a Roman fortification, called Neroche Castle; and on the summit of the same ridge, a little further on, by the side of the road leading to Chard, there is a huge collection of flint stones, lying in heaps upwards of sixty yards in circumference, styled Robin Hood's Butts, and supposed to be the rude sepulchral memorials of warriors who fell in battle.

BUCKLAND in the MOOR, a parish in the hundred of HAYTOR, though locally in the hundred of Lifton, county of DEVON, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Ashburton, containing 137 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Ashburton, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church contains a fine wooden screen.

BUCKLAND (WEST), a parish in the hundred of BRAUNTON, though locally in the hundred of South Molton, county of DEVON, 5½ miles (N. W.) from South Molton, containing 288 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £13. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Lord de Dunstanville. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, has a carved wooden screen, highly enriched, separating the nave from the chancel.

BUCKLAND (WEST), a parish in the western division of the hundred of KINGSBURY, locally in that of Taunton and Taunton-Dean, county of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (E.) from Wellington, containing 750 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Wellington, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the Norman style of architecture, with later additions.

BUCKLAND - BREWER, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of SHEBBEAR, county of DEVON, 4½ miles (W. by N.) from Great Torrington, containing 1043 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of East Purford annexed, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £25. 17. 3½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Benedict has an enriched Norman door, and had anciently a small college, dedicated to St. Michael, attached to it, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £8. 7. 6. A part of the manor was anciently given by Lord Brewer to the abbot of Dunkeswell, who obtained for this place a market and a fair; the former has been discontinued, but two fairs are held, one on Whit-Monday, and the other on the 2nd of November.

BUCKLAND-DENHAM, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of KILMERSDON, county of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Frome, containing 440 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Buckland-Denham in the Cathedral Church of Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 9. 7., and endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This was formerly a place of greater importance, having been distinguished for the manufacture of woollen cloth. The inhabitants are now chiefly engaged in the cultivation of teasel, for the use of the clothiers in the neighbouring towns. A market, to be held on Tuesday, and a fair on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Michael, were granted, in the 24th of Henry III., to Geoffrey Dinant, lord of the manor. The assizes were frequently held in a town-hall here.

BUCKLAND-EGG, a parish in the hundred of ROBOROUGH, county of DEVON, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Plymouth, containing 954 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8. 4. 4½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The Methodists have a meeting-house within the parish. A fair for live stock is held on the second Wednesday in June. The Plymouth railway crosses the parish. There is a small endowment for a charity school, which is chiefly supported by subscription.

BUCKLAND-FILLEIGH, a parish in the hundred of SHEBBEAR, county of DEVON, 6½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Hatherleigh, containing 274 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of East Buckland consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 16. 0½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BUCKLAND-MONACHORUM, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of ROBOROUGH, county of DEVON, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Tavistock, containing 1177 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £19. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Rev. A. Crymes. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, stands in a cemetery planted with trees, and consists of a nave, two side aisles, two small transepts, with a fine tower supporting four octagonal turrets, embattled, and surmounted by pinnacles: within, among several others, is a noble monument, by Bacon, to the memory of Baron Heathfield, the brave defender of Gibraltar. The village, which contains some curious old houses, a mutilated stone cross, and a few ancient inscriptions, is mean in appearance, but picturesquely situated. It acquired its distinguishing name from an abbey founded, in 1278, by Amicia, Countess Dowager of Devonshire, in honour of the Virgin Mary and St. Benedict, to which she removed a society of Cistercian monks from the Isle of Wight. In 1337, the abbot obtained permission to castellate his monastery; and during the parliamentary war it was garrisoned by Sir Richard Grenville. The revenue of the society, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £241. 17. 9.: the estate came by purchase into the possession of Sir Francis Drake, and a modern mansion, beautifully situated on the banks of the Tavy, has been erected on it; but there are still some interesting remains of the abbey. The market has been discontinued; but a fair is still held on Trinity-Monday. The Plymouth railway crosses the parish on the east. Lady Modyford, in 1702, gave two messuages, out of the rental of which, £7. 10. a year is paid for the instruction of six boys; and the interest of £100, given by Matthew Elford, in 1723, is applied in clothing four boys.

BUCKLAND-NEWTON, a parish in the hundred of BUCKLAND-NEWTON, Cerne subdivision of the county of DORSET, comprising the tythings of Brockhampton with Knowle, Buckland-Newton, Duntish, Mintern Parva, and Plush, and containing 843 inhabitants, of which number, 275 are in the tything of Buckland-Newton, 10½ miles (N.) from Dorchester. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £16. 19. 9½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Wells. The church, dedicated to the Holy Rood, is partly in the early, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, and has lately received an addition of one hundred and twenty sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £50 for that purpose.

BUCKLAND-RIPERS, a parish in the hundred of CULLIFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 3½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Melcombe-Regis, containing 60 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £5. 9. 2., and in the patronage of J. Frampton, Esq.

BUCKLAND-TOUTSAINTS, a chapelry in that part of the parish of LODDISWELL which is in the hundred of COLERIDGE, county of DEVON, 2½ miles (N. E.) from Kingsbridge, containing 40 inhabitants.

BUCKLEBURY, a parish in the hundred of READING, though locally in that of Faircross, county of BERKS, 7½ miles (E. N. E.) from Newbury, containing 1143 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Marston, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. H. H. Hartley: the vicar enjoys the great tithes of the chapelry of Marston. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains an organ that cost £210, presented by the present vicar, to whom the manor belongs. This parish is entitled to send scholars to the school at Thatcham, founded and endowed by Lady Frances Winchcombe, in 1707, (to whose memory there is a monument in the church of this parish), in which forty boys are clothed and educated, and six apprenticed annually, with a premium of £10 each; those who are not apprenticed receive also a small gratuity.

BUCKLESHAM, a parish in the hundred of COLNEIS, county of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Ipswich, containing 269 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 1. 8., and in the patronage of W. Walford, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The crag pits in this parish contain a great quantity of shells, generally considered to be antediluvian remains: bones of fishes in a state of petrefaction have also been found.

BUCKLEY, or BULKELEY, a township in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Nantwich, containing 178 inhabitants.

BUCKMINSTER, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 9¼ miles (E. N. E.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing, with the chapelry of Sewstern, 625 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 7. 3½., and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, has a massive tower and spire, with portions in various styles of architecture. A charity school is supported by subscription; and there are several bequests for the relief of the poor. A close called the Grange was the site of a religious house subordinate to the monastery of Kirkby-Belew.

BUCKNALL, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6¼ miles (W. by S.) from Horncastle, containing 241 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. 10½., and in the patronage of Lord Monson. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is an endowment of about £5 per annum, the gift of an unknown individual, for the instruction of poor children, paid annually by the Governors of Christ's Hospital, as trustees.

BUCKNALL, a joint parish with Bagnall, in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 1½ mile (E.) from Hanley. The population is returned with Stoke upon Trent. The living is a rectory not in charge, with the perpetual curacy of Bagnall annexed, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £100 and £5 per annum, private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. Edward Powys. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Bucknall was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Stoke upon Trent, but, with four other chapelries, was severed from it by an act passed in 1807, by which, including the chapelry of Bagnall, this was constituted a distinct rectory. William Shallcross, in 1719, gave a rent-charge of £5 for the instruction of twelve children.

BUCKNELL, a parish in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 2½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Bicester, containing 235 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £13. 16. 0½., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter: at a short distance from it, near the verge of a coppice, are the foundations of numerous houses that constituted the village of Saxenton, the greater part of which was destroyed by the Danes, about the year 912; the site, for many generations, has been unoccupied by a single habitation.

BUCKNILL, a parish partly in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, but chiefly in the hundred of PURSLOW, county of SALOP, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Knighton, containing, with the township of Buxton with Coxall, 465 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and in the patronage of the Master and Wardens of the Grocers' Company. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Bucknill is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BUCKTON, a township in the parish of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bridlington, containing 147 inhabitants.

BUCKWORTH, a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from Huntingdon, containing 151 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £21. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of R. E. Duncombe, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BUDBROOK, a parish in the Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Warwick, containing 438 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Warwick. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The Warwick and Birmingham canal crosses the parish. The school is endowed with part of the rental of some land that was bequeathed by Job Marston, in 1701, the remainder of which is distributed among the poor.

BUDBY, a township in the parish of EDWINSTOW, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Ollerton, containing 140 inhabitants.

BUDE, a village and small sea-port, on the coast of the Bristol channel, in the parish and hundred of STRATTON, county of CORNWALL. The population is returned with the parish. It has of late years become a place of resort for bathing. The trade of the port has recently received a stimulus from the construction of the Bude and Launceston canal: the imports are coal and limestone from Wales, and grocery, &c., from Bristol; and timber, bark, and oats, are sent coastwise. The harbour is inaccessible to ships of large burden, on account of the sands, those connected with it averaging not more than fifty tons each, though vessels of ninety tons' burden have often entered. A great quantity of sand is conveyed inland for manuring the soil. The sea is fast encroaching on the coast, having made a considerable inroad within the last fifty years.

BUDEAUX, or BUDOCK, (ST.), a parish in the hundred of ROBOROUGH, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Plymouth, containing 689 inhabitants. A small portion of the parish is in the county of Cornwall. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of St. Andrew, Plymouth, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £1400 parliamentary grant. The church stands pleasantly on a commanding eminence, and contains some interesting monuments. The village is romantically situated on the banks of the navigable river Tamar, near the confluence of that river and the Tavy. A charity school has an endowment of about £86 per annum, arising from land purchased in 1770, for £710, of which £300 South Sea stock, and £100 Bank stock, were bequeathed by Peter Madock Docton, in 1767, in lieu of an annuity of £10, left by his father; and from some property in the funds: twelve boys and twelve girls are clothed and educated.

BUDLE, a township in the parish of BAMBROUGH, northern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Belford, containing 99 inhabitants. The village lies on the southern shore of a fine bay; the adjacent coast abounds with large cockles of a superior flavour.

BUDLEIGH (EAST), a parish (formerly a market town) in the eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Sidmouth, containing 1706 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Withycombe-Rawleigh annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £30, and in the patronage of Lord Rolle. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a meeting-house for Independents. The river Otter flows through the parish. The antiquity of this place is evinced by its having given name to the hundred: the market was formerly held on Sunday, and afterwards on Monday, but it has been wholly discontinued: a pleasure fair is held annually on Easter-Tuesday. Budleigh-Salterton, in this parish, is rising into repute as a watering-place; hot and cold baths have been built, and there is comfortable accommodations for visitors. A chapel of ease has been erected at the expense of Lord Rolle; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. At Poer-Hayes is an old mansion, noted as the birthplace of Sir Walter Raleigh, in 1552, who was beheaded in 1618, besides some remains of an ancient chapel, dedicated to St. James.

BUDOCK, a parish in the hundred of KERRIER, county of CORNWALL, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Falmouth, containing, with part of the town of Falmouth, which extends into this parish, 1634 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of St. Gluvias, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This parish is bounded on the east by Falmouth bay and the English channel. Francis Robyns, in 1768, gave an endowment of £6. 16. per annum, for the instruction of children.

BUDWORTH (GREAT), a parish comprising the chapelry of Hartford, and the townships of Castle-Northwich and Winnington, in the second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY; the chapelries of Northwich, Nether Peover, and Witton with Twambrook, and the townships of Allstock, Birches, Hulse, Lack-Dennis, Lostock-Gralam, and a small portion of that of Rudheath, in the hundred of NORTHWICH; and the chapelries of Aston by Budworth, Little Leigh, and Stretton, and the townships of Anderton, Antrobus, Barnton, Barnington, Great Budworth, Cogshall, Comberbach, Crowley, Dutton, Hull with Appleton, Marbury, Marston, Little Peover, Pickmere, Plumley, Seven-Oaks, Tabley Inferior, Lower Whitley, Over Whitley, and Wincham, in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER; and containing 14,344 inhabitants, of which number, 501 are in the township of Great Budworth, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Northwich. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £6. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints, consists of a nave, chancel, side aisles, and two transepts, with a fine tower; it sustained considerable damage from the parliamentary troops in 1647, who destroyed the pipes of the organ, and perpetrated other outrages. The village is pleasantly situated on a gentle acclivity, near two sheets of water, called Budworthmere and Pic-mere. The inhabitants are employed to a considerable extent in the manufacture of salt, which prevails throughout the entire neighbourhood. The river Weaver and the Duke of Bridgewater's canal pass through the parish. In the north-eastern angle of the churchyard is a school-room, supposed to have been built by John Dean, rector of St. Bartholomew's the Great, London, about the year 1600, and endowed with the interest of £200 given by Mr. Pickering of Thelwall, and Mrs. Glover.

BUDWORTH (LITTLE), a parish in the first division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, 3½ miles (N.E. by E.) from Tarporley, containing 524 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £10 per annum private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester, who is the impropiator, on the nomination of the lessee of the great tithes. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, belonged, previously to the dissolution, to St. Mary's nunnery in Chester, and was called a free chapel within the parish of Over, the church of which was also appropriated to the same convent: the nave and the chancel were rebuilt with stone, in 1798, pursuant to the will of Mr. Ralph Kirkham, a wealthy merchant in Manchester, and a native of this parish, who gave £1000 for that purpose; his remains were interred here. Horse-races were formerly held on a four-mile course, but they have long been discontinued. A school-house was erected in 1706, near the park wall at Oulton, in which about twenty children are instructed. Lady Isabella Dod, by will dated in 1720, bequeathed £2500 for the erection and endowment of almshouses for the support of twelve poor persons of Little Budworth, and eight of a town in Buckinghamshire.

BUERTON, a township in that part of the parish of ALDFORD which is in the lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 5¼ miles (S.E. by S.) from Chester, containing 60 inhabitants.

BUERTON, a township in the parish of AUDLEM, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles (E.) from Audlem, containing 524 inhabitants.

BUGBROOKE, a parish in the hundred of NOBOTTLE-GROVE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5½ miles (W.S.W.) from Northampton, containing 835 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £34, and in the patronage of the Rev. H. B. Harrison, D.D. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, exhibits various styles of English architecture, and contains a fine wooden screen, and an octagonal font highly enriched. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The Grand Junction canal passes through this parish, which is bounded on the west by the Roman Watling-street. Every inhabitant pays fourpence annually to the duchy court of Lancaster, which is held at West Haddon.

BUGLAWTON, a township in that part of the parish of ASTBURY which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 1 mile (N.E. by E.) from Congleton, containing 948 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Extensive mills for spinning and preparing lace thread for the Nottingham and Buckingham manufacturers, are in active operation at this place. Here is a mineral spring, the water of which contains sulphur, a small quantity of Epsom salts, and calcareous earth, and has proved serviceable in scorbutic diseases.

BUGLEY, a hamlet in the parish and liberty of GILLINGHAM, Shaston (West) division of the county of DORSET, 5½ miles (W.N.W.) from Shaftesbury. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel.

BUGTHORPE, a parish partly in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, and partly in the wapentake of BUCKROSE, East riding of the county of YORK, 7½ miles (N.N.W.) from Pocklington, containing 281 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Bugthorpe in the Cathedral Church of York, rated in the king's books at £20, and endowed with £400 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BUILDWAS, a parish in the Wellington division of the hundred of BRADFORD (South), county of SALOP, 4 miles (N.N.E.) from Much Wenlock, containing 240 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of W. Moseley, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. Buildwas is celebrated for the ruins of an abbey, founded in 1135, by Roger, Bishop of Chester, in honour of St. Mary and St. Chad, for monks of the order of Savigny, who were subsequently incorporated with a society of Cistercians: at the time of the dissolution, the establishment consisted of about twelve monks, whose revenue was rated at £129. 6. 10. The ruins occupy a beautiful situation on the southern bank of the Severn, and consist principally of the outer walls of the nave, transept, and tower of the cruciform church: the massive pillars of the nave, with capitals in the Norman style, support handsome pointed arches, and there are several circular arches; the western end is overspread with a thick cluster of ivy: a respectable farm-house occupies part of the site. Nearly opposite these ruins is a very handsome cast-iron bridge, constructed in 1796, on the site of an ancient stone bridge, which was swept away by a flood in the preceding year: the span of the arch is one hundred and thirty feet, and the height twenty-four: the outer ribs rise to the top of the railing, and are connected with the lower ribs by dovetailed king-posts.

BULBRIDGE, a parish in the hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, county of WILTS, ¾ of a mile (S.) from Wilton, with which parish the population is returned. The living is a vicarage, united to the rectory of Wilton, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 2. 1. The church, which was dedicated to St. Peter, has been demolished.

BULBY, a chapelry in the parish of IRNHAM, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Corby, containing 105 inhabitants.

BULCOTE, a chapelry in the parish of BURTON-JOYCE, southern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Nottingham, containing 142 inhabitants.

BULFORD, a parish in the hundred of AMESBURY, county of WILTS, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Amesbury, containing 269 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, and in the patronage of Sir J. W. Pollen, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. John. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children, arising from a donation by Richard Duke.

BULK, a township in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Lancaster, containing 111 inhabitants.

BULKINGTON, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Nuneaton, comprising the hamlets of Barnacle, Bramcott, Marston-Jabbett, Ryton, and Weston, and containing 1679 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 10. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. James, has lately received an addition of three hundred and fifty sittings, three hundred of which are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £200 for that purpose. The manufacture of ribands has recently been introduced; and the Ashby de la Zouch canal crosses the north-western angle of the parish, in which there is a quarry of excellent freestone. A National school has been established, and is supported by subscription.

BULKINGTON, a tything in that part of the parish of KEEVIL which is in the hundred of MELKSHAM, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Melksham, containing 306 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BULKWORTHY, a chapelry in the parish of BUCKLAND-BREWER, hundred of SHEBBEAR, county of DEVON, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Great Torrington, containing 155 inhabitants.

BULLER'S GREEN, a township in that part of the parish of MORPETH which is in the western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, containing 255 inhabitants. Part of the town of Morpeth is locally within this township.

BULLEY, a chapelry in the parish of CHURCHAM, duchy of LANCASTER, county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Newent, containing 237 inhabitants. The chapel is a small edifice, chiefly in the Norman style of architecture, a fine specimen of which may be seen in the arch between the nave and the chancel.

BULLINGHAM (LOWER), a hamlet in the parish of UPPER BULLINGHAM, hundred of WEBTREE, county of HEREFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. by E.) from Hereford, containing 264 inhabitants.

BULLINGHAM (UPPER and LOWER), a parish in the hundred of WEBTREE, county of HEREFORD, 2 miles (S.) from Hereford, containing 376 inhabitants, of which number, 112 are in Upper Bullingham, 2 miles (S.), and 264 in Lower Bullingham, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. by E.), from Hereford. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Bullinghope in the Cathedral Church of Hereford, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty.

BULLINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of GOLTHO, western division of the wapentake of WRAGGOS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Wragby, containing 45 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. Here are inconsiderable remains of a religious house founded by Simon Fitz-William, or de Kyme, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, as a priory and convent for both sexes, under the rule of St. Gilbert of Sempringham: the revenue, at the time of the dissolution, was £187. 7. 9.

BULLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WHERWELL, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Whitchurch, containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Wherwell, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. At a place called Titbury Hill there is an intrenched area of about ten acres, in which square stones, Roman coins, and the remains of some wells, have been discovered.

BULLOCK'S HALL, a township in that part of the parish of WARKWORTH which is in the eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Morpeth, containing 14 inhabitants.

BULMER, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Sudbury, containing 628 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Belchamp-Walter consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Samuel Milbanke Raymond, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BULMER, a parish in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Henderskelf, and the townships of Bulmer and Welburn, and containing 850 inhabitants, of which number, 339 are in the township of Bulmer, 7 miles (W. S. W.) from New Malton. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. The river Derwent bounds this parish on the east.

BULPHAN, a parish in the hundred of BARSTABLE, county of ESSEX, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Horndon on the Hill, containing 242 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £23, and in the patronage of James William Freshfield, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BULVERHITHE (ST. MARY), a member of the town and port of HASTINGS, locally in the parish and hundred of Bexhill, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E.) from Bexhill, containing 34 inhabitants. William the Conqueror is supposed to have landed here, at which time it was a haven called Bollefride: a considerable part of the coast has been encroached upon by the sea.

BULWELL, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Broxtow, county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Nottingham, containing 2105 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. Alfred Padley. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small neat edifice, situated to the east of the village, on the highest ground in the parish, and was enlarged to its present size about sixty years ago. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This place owes its name to a famous spring, still called the "Bull well," to which the cattle from the adjoining forest of Sherwood anciently resorted to quench their thirst, prior to its enclosure. The village contains several respectable houses; and there are three corn-mills, and one for the manufacture of cotton twist, besides some extensive bleaching-grounds, and printing establishments. To the west of the river Leen the parish abounds with excellent limestone. Courts baron and leet are held periodically, and the lord of the manor also claims the power of proving wills, and granting letters of administration, &c.: the custom of Borough English prevails throughout the manor. A free grammar school is endowed with four acres of land, producing £20 per annum, and a dwelling-house for the master: there is a good school-room.

BULWICK, a parish in the hundred of CORBY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Rockingham, containing 471 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £18. 7. 1., and in the patronage of Thomas Tryon, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, with a finely proportioned tower and spire; it contains three stone stalls and some screen-work, and has lately been re-pewed.

BUMPSTEAD (STEEPLE), a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Castle-Hedingham, containing 961 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £15. 2. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Ann Cole, in 1730, gave a small endowment for teaching and apprenticing children.

BUMPSTEAD-HELION, a parish in the hundred of FRESHWELL, county of ESSEX, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Thaxted, containing 773 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BUNBURY, a parish comprising the chapelry of Burwardsley, in the higher division of the hundred of Broxtow, and the townships of Alraham, Beeston, Bunbury, Calveley, Haughton, Peckforton, Ridley, Spurstew, Tilston-Fernall, Tiverton, and Wardle, in the first division of the hundred of EADISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, and containing 4021 inhabitants, of which number, 667 are in the township of Bunbury, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Tarporley. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Wardens of the Haberdashers' Company. The church, dedicated to St. Boniface, is a handsome building of red freestone, in the later style of English architecture, comprising a nave with lateral aisles, a chancel, and a square tower crowned with eight pinnacles: at the termination of each of the aisles is an ancient and elegant chapel, called Eggerton and Spurstow chapels, the former, built in 1523, containing on the north side a rich stone shrine, ornamented at the base with grotesque figures, flowers, &c., painted in chiaro oscuro, and on the south two arches with curious open work, and scriptural paintings. Within the church are several fine monuments, among which are a rich altar-tomb to the memory of Sir Hugh Calveley, the celebrated "Cheshire hero," who eminently distinguished himself during the invasions of France by Edward III.; and one to Sir George Beeston, one of the admirals who aided in the destruction of the Spanish Armada, in 1588. The church was fired by a detachment from the royal garrison at Cholmondeley House, on the 20th of June, 1643, and sustained considerable injury. The above Sir Hugh, about 1386, founded and endowed in the church a college for a master and six Secular chaplains: at the dissolution, the establishment consisted of a dean, five vicars, and two choristers, whose clear revenue was valued at £48. 2. 8. The buildings stood in a field about two hundred yards north-west of the church; every vestige has been removed, but the site is conspicuous, from the inequality of the surface, and the remains of the moat that surrounded it. The revenue, which arose partly from the tithes of the parish, became vested in the crown, and the greater part was appropriated towards the maintenance of two ministers. In 1575, Thomas Aldersey, citizen and haberdasher of London, purchased the rectory and advowson from Queen Elizabeth, and some time afterwards leased the tithes for £130 per annum, of which he directed that £20 should be annually given to a schoolmaster, £10 to an usher, one hundred marks to a minister (each to have a house and a certain portion of land in addition), £20 to a curate, and £10 to the poor, and that the patronage should be vested in the Haberdashers' Company; all these grants were confirmed by letters patent, dated January 2nd, 1594. The ministers are nominated by the Master and Wardens, and enter upon the clerical office without and other presentation or institution, but are subject to the jurisdiction of the Ordinary. The school, which was rebuilt in 1812, at the expense of Samuel Aldersey, Esq., stands at a short distance from the church. A school, for the children of poor parishioners not resident in the township of Bunbury, was founded and endowed by Mr. Thomas Gardener, in 1750. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Chester canal passes through the parish, in which courts leet and baron are held annually; and a manorial court is occasionally held, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Bunbury heath, by some considered to be the place described in a poem entitled the "Ancient English Wake of Jerningham," is the scene of rustic revelry annually on the Sunday preceding the festival of St. Boniface.

BUNCTON, a chapelry in the parish of ASHINGTON, hundred of WEST GRINSTEAD, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Steyning. The population is returned with the parish.

BUNDLEY, a parish in the hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, county of DEVON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Chulmleigh, containing 335 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Blackborough annexed, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10. 17. 8½., and in the patronage of the Hon. P. C. Wyndham, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. James, exhibits some remains of Norman architecture, and has an ancient font.

BUNGAY, a market town in the hundred of WANGFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 40 miles (N. N. E.) from Ipswich, 40 (N. E. by E.) from Bury St. Edmund's, and 109 (N. E. by N.) from London, on the road to Yarmouth, containing 3290 inhabitants. The name is supposed to have been anciently Bon-gué, from the goodness of a ford over the river Waveney, by which the town is nearly surrounded. In the reign of Stephen, a castle was built by one of the Bigods, earls of Norfolk, which, from its situation and the strength of its fortifications, was deemed impregnable; it was demolished in the reign of Henry III., and on its site was erected a mansion which, in the 22nd of Edward I., Roger Bigod obtained permission to embattle. In 1688, a fire broke out in an uninhabited house, and the flames spread with such rapidity that the whole town, with the exception of one small street, was reduced to ashes, destroying property of the estimated value of £30,000, together with the records of the castle: the remains of this building have been converted into cottages, and little more than some portions of the walls can now be distinguished. The town is pleasantly situated on the river Waveney, that here forms the line of boundary between the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, and over which a handsome new bridge has been built: the streets, diverging from the market-place in the centre of the town towards the principal roads, are spacious, well paved, and lighted with oil; the houses are in general modern, having been rebuilt since the fire; and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs. The theatre, a neat edifice erected in 1827, is opened occasionally; and there are assembly-rooms handsomely fitted up. On the northern side of the town is an extensive common, by the side of which is a pleasant promenade, one mile and a half in length, leading to a cold bath, where a bath-house has been built, and requisite accommodation provided. A botanical society, and a book-club, have been recently instituted. The races, after having been discontinued for more than thirty years, were re-established in 1828. The trade is principally in corn, malt, flour, and lime, there being several flour-mills, malting-houses, and limekilns, on a large scale; there are also a paper and a silk manufactory, and an extensive printing-office. The manufacture of hempen cloth for the Norwich and London markets has been wholly discontinued: several of the female inhabitants are employed in knitting stockings. The river Waveney is navigable from Yarmouth, whence the town is supplied with coal, timber, and other articles of consumption. The market is on Thursday: fairs are held on May 14th and September 25th. In the centre of the market-place is a handsome octangular building, surmounted by a dome covered with lead, and bearing on its summit a leaden statue of Justice; within is a cage for the confinement of disorderly persons. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates: a town-reeve and certain feoffees are appointed annually, who are trustees of the estates and rent-charges devised for the improvement and benefit of the town: courts leet and baron for the manor are held occasionally.

Bungay comprises the parishes of St. Mary and the Holy Trinity, both in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich. The living of St. Mary's is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk. The church is a handsome and spacious structure, with a fine tower; it was rebuilt, in 1696, with flint and freestone: the interior contains some interesting monuments, and is remarkable for the lightness and elegance of the pillars supporting the roof. The living of the parish of the Holy Trinity is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £8. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is a small ancient edifice, with a fine round tower. There was formerly a church dedicated to St. Thomas, but it has been destroyed. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school is of ancient and uncertain foundation: the Rev. Thomas Popeson, in 1591, annexed the vicarage of St. Andrew Ilketshall to the mastership, and founded ten scholarships in Emanuel College, Cambridge, but these have been reduced to four: the school was endowed with forty acres of land by Mr. Scales, of Earsham: the income of the master, who is appointed by the Master and Fellows of Emanuel College, is from £180 to £200 per annum: there are ten boys upon the foundation by Mr. Scales. Henry Webster, in 1712, bequeathed land for the instruction of poor children of the parish of St. Mary. A dispensary was established in 1828, which is liberally supported; and there are almshouses in each parish for the residence of aged persons. Near St. Mary's church are some remains of a Benedictine nunnery, founded in the reign of Henry II., by Robert de Glanville and his lady, the Countess Gundreda, in honour of the Blessed Virgin and the Holy Cross, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was estimated at £62. 2. 1. At the back of the King's Head Inn is a mineral spring, now in disuse. A few Roman coins, some seals, and ancient tokens have been found.

BUNNY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, county of NOTTINGHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Nottingham, containing 395 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Bradmore, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 14., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Rancliffe. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, with a tower surmounted by a crocketed spire. A school for the poor children of Bunny and Bradmore, the building for which was erected in 1700, has an endowment in land, producing £60 per annum, the gift of Dame Anne Parkyns, who also founded an almshouse for four poor widows, and endowed it with £16 per annum, which was augmented with £5 annually by her husband, Sir Thomas Parkyns: this benevolent lady also assigned an annuity of £30 for apprenticing poor boys.

BUNTINGFORD, a chapelry (formerly a market town) in the parishes of ASPEDEN, LAYSTON, THROCKING, and WYDDIAL, in the hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, 12 miles (N. N. E.) from Hertford. The population is returned with the respective parishes. This place takes its name from a ford on the river Rib, near which a blacksmith, named Bunt, or Bunting, had a forge. The town is pleasantly situated on a gentle ascent between two hills, and consists of one street, half a mile in length: the houses are in general well built, and of respectable appearance, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The trade is principally in leather and malt: the market, granted by Henry VIII., has been discontinued: the fairs, formerly on the 29th of June and the 30th of November, each for four days, are now irregularly held. The county magistrates hold petty sessions for the division at the George Inn, where also a septennial court leet is held for the hundred. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, endowed with a portion of the tithes of Layston, and in the patronage of the Vicar of that parish. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, is a commodious brick building, erected by subscription, and completed in 1626, through the exertions of the Rev. Alexander Strange, vicar of Layston, who is interred in it; from its convenient situation, it is appropriated to the general use of the parishioners of Layston, the parish church, half a mile distant, being resorted to only for the solemnization of marriages. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Independents. The free grammar school was founded also through the exertions of the Rev. Mr. Strange, and endowed, in 1630, by Mrs. Elizabeth Freeman, with lands producing £10. 10. per annum; the endowment was augmented with a moiety of the produce of lands left by Seth Ward, Bishop of Salisbury, to Christ's College, Cambridge, the other being applied to the endowment in that college of four scholarships, of £12 per annum each, for boys on this foundation, or, in default of such, for the most deserving in the university, reserving one to Hitchen. A charity school for forty girls is supported by subscription. Eight almshouses, for four aged men and four aged women, were founded in 1668, and endowed with the rent of lands in Lincolnshire, by Bishop Ward; but these are now occupied by paupers of the parish. The bishop also gave £600 to purchase lands, the rental of which is applied to the apprenticing of children: he was a native of this town, and received the rudiments of his education in the grammar school.

BUNWELL, a parish in the hundred of DEFWADE, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from New Buckenham, containing 774 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of Sir R. J. Buxton, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

BURASTON, a joint chapelry with Whetmore, in the parish of BURFORD, hundred of OVERS, county of SALOP, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Tenbury, containing, with Whetmore, 226 inhabitants. The Kington canal passes on the southern side of the village.

BURBAGE, a chapelry in the parish of ASTON-FLAMVILLE, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Hinckley, containing, with the hamlet of Sketchley, 1504 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BURBAGE, a parish in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Pewsey, containing 1195 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 3. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Hurstborne and Burbage in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has recently received an addition of one hundred and twenty-eight sittings, one hundred and eight of which are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £40 for that purpose.

BURCOMBE (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, county of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by S.) from Wilton, containing 374 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master of St. John's Hospital, Wilton.

BURCOTT, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of DORCHESTER, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Abingdon, containing 145 inhabitants.

BURDON, a township in the parish of BISHOP-WEARMOUTH, northern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Sunderland, containing 149 inhabitants.

BURDON (GREAT), a township in that part of the parish of HAUGHTON le SKERNE which is in the south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Darlington, containing 76 inhabitants.

BURE, a tything in the parish and hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, New Forest (West) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Christchurch, with which the population is returned.

BURES (ST. MARY), a parish partly in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, but chiefly in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Sudbury, containing 1292 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of O. Hanbury, Esq. The church stands in the county of Suffolk. Edmund, King of the East Angles, is stated to have been crowned here. The navigable river Stour flows on the western and southern sides of the parish, and is crossed by a bridge at the village.

BURES (MOUNT), a parish in the Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 6 miles (E. by N.) from Halstead, containing 260 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Brett. The church is dedicated to St. John. The river Stour is navigable on the north-eastern side of this parish, which probably takes its distinguishing name from an artificial mount, about eighty feet in perpendicular height, covering nearly an acre and a half of ground; concerning its origin both history and tradition are silent.

which its present name is a variation. In 685, an ecclesiastical synod was held here by the kings Ethelred and Berthwald, at which Aldhelm, Bishop of Sherborne, was ordered to write against the error of the British church respecting Easter. In 752, a battle was fought at Battle-edge, a little westward from the town, between Ethelbald, King of Mercia, and Cuthred, King of the West Saxons, who had revolted against his authority, in which Ethelbald was defeated, and the royal standard, bearing the device of a golden dragon, captured. This event was commemorated by an annual festival on Midsummer-eve, for several ages, when the inhabitants paraded the streets, bearing the figures of a dragon and a giant. Soon after the Conquest, the town was bestowed on Robert, Earl of Gloucester, natural son of Henry I. In 1649, an encounter took place between Fairfax and the royalists, when the former was victorious. The town is pleasantly situated on the banks of the small river Windrush; the houses are indifferently built, but the inhabitants are well supplied with water. Races were formerly held here, but they have been long discontinued. The making of saddles, and a considerable trade in malt and wool, that formerly flourished, have much declined; this, added to the diversion of the line of road, which now avoids the town, instead of passing through it as before, has reduced it from a flourishing condition to a state of comparative poverty. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on the last Saturday in April, for cattle, sheep, and cheese; July 5th, for horses; and September 25th, for horses, sheep, and cheese. A charter was granted by Henry II., conferring on the inhabitants "all customs enjoyed by the free burgesses of Oxford," of many of which they were deprived by Lord Chief Justice Tanfield, in the reign of Elizabeth. They are entitled to elect an alderman, a steward, two bailiffs, and twelve burgesses, at Easter, but of late years these officers have not been regularly appointed; they do not possess magisterial authority, the town being wholly within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold here petty sessions for the division: a court leet and a court baron are also held.

The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Fulbrook annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £31. 13., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a spacious structure, BURFORD, a market town and parish in the hundred of Bampton, county of OXFORD, 18½ miles (W. N. W.) from Oxford, and 73 (W. N. W.) from London, on the road from Oxford to Cheltenham, containing, with the hamlet of Upton with Signet, 1696 inhabitants. This place is of considerable antiquity, and was by the Saxons called Beorford, of exhibiting a mixture of the Norman and the later style of English architecture, with a tower surmounted by a beautiful spire. At the west entrance is a very fine Norman arch; and the south porch, which is in the later English style, is exquisitely rich. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free school was founded by Simon Wisdom, alderman of this town, in 1571, who assigned property for its endowment, which, with subsequent benefactions, produces £84 per annum: it affords instruction in English grammar, writing, and arithmetic, to all boys resident within the parish. An apartment over the school-room is used as the town-hall, where the assizes for the county were held in 1636. Two school-wardens are annually appointed by the corporation. John Wilmot, the celebrated earl of Rochester, received the rudiments of his education in this school. The Great Almshouse was founded, in 1457, by the Earl and Countess of Warwick, for eight poor widows; and Wisdom's almshouse was founded before 1628, for four widows: the inmates of both receive, in addition, certain allowances derived from lands and tenements devised for their benefit, under the direction of feoffees. Four messuages were assigned for almshouses, in 1726, by the will of Dr. John Castle, for four aged widows, with a small endowment. There are also various charitable endowments, the principal of which are, the Church estate, which yields £56 per annum, applicable to the repairs of the church; and Pool's estate, producing £62 annually, which is distributed in various ways: some of the charities have been curtailed by the decreased value of property, and others injured by mal-administration. A small priory, or hospital, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, was valued at the dissolution at £13. 6. 6. Lenthal, the celebrated Speaker of the Long Parliament, resided here; and his descendants occupied a mansion called the priory, near the town, erected on the site of a religious house that belonged to the abbey of Keynsham in Somersetshire. The eminent cosmographer, Dr. Peter Heylin, was born here, in 1600. Burford gives the inferior title of earl to the Duke of St. Albans.

BURFORD, a parish in the hundred of OVERS, county of SALOP, comprising the chapelries of Buraston with Whetmore, Nash with Tilsop and Weston, and Whitton, and the township of Burford, and containing 1039 inhabitants, of which number, 365 are in the township of Burford, 1½ mile (W. by S.) from Tenbury. The living is a rectory, divided into three portions, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford; the first portion is rated in the king's books at £9. 13. 4., the second at £8, and the third at £8. 13. 4., they are in the patronage of G. Bowles, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Licence for a weekly market and an annual fair, to be held at this place, was granted by Henry III. The Kington canal crosses the parish on the northern side of the village.

BURGATE, a parish in the hundred of HARTISMERE, county of SUFFOLK, 4½ miles (W. N. W.) from Eye, containing 344 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BURGH, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Aylsham, containing 228 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. 1., and in the patronage of G. H. Holley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Bure, which is navigable to Yarmouth, flows past this parish.

BURGH, a village (formerly a market town) comprising the consolidated parishes of St. Margaret and St. Mary, in the western division of the hundred of FLEGG, county of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Acle, containing 396 inhabitants. The living of St. Margaret's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., and endowed with £200 royal bounty; that of St. Mary's is also a discharged rectory, rated at £4; they are in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of Charles Lucas, Esq. The church of St. Mary has long been in ruins. Henry III. granted permission to hold a free market here weekly on Monday, and a fair annually on the eve and festival of St. Margaret, and on the six following days.

BURGH, a parish in the hundred of CARLFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Woodbridge, containing 250 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late Miles Barnes, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is said to have been built from the ruins of an ancient castle, of which the vallum and other vestiges are still visible. A preceptory of the order of St. John of Jerusalem formerly existed here.

BURGH upon BAINE, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of WRAGGÖE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (W.) from Louth, containing, with the hamlet of Grisby, 128 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 10., endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of George Lister, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

BURGH (CASTLE), a parish in the hundred of MURFORD and LOTHINGLAND, county of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Great Yarmouth, containing 239 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late Miles Barnes, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a neat ancient edifice, with a square embattled tower on the south side, near the western end: it is stated, together with the church of Clopton adjoining, to have been built out of the ruins of a Roman fort, supposed to have been Garianonum, a station founded by Publius Ostorius Scapula, and garrisoned, under the command of a Præpositus, by a troop of cavalry called the Stablesian horse. The ramparts included an area of upwards of five acres and a half; and various coins, urns, fibulae, domestic utensils, and military weapons, have been found in the fields contiguous to it. At this place, then called Cnobheresburg, King Sigebert gave to Fursæus, an Irish monk, some land on which he founded a monastery, the revenue of which was augmented by King Anna, and other monarchs of the East Angles. The navigable river Waveney flows on the western side of this parish, and opposite the village unites with the river Yare, forming Breydon Water, which runs on the northern side, and is navigable.

BURGH (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, 4½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Holt. The population is returned with Melton-Constable. The living is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £4, consolidated with that of Melton-Constable, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich. The church is in ruins.

BURGH in the MARSH, a parish in the Marsh division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7½ miles (E. by S.) from Spilsby, containing 903 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, to which that of Winthorpe was united in 1729, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Jane Palmer gave a rent-charge of £20 for the endowment of a free school for poor children.

BURGH upon the SANDS, a parish in the ward and county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Boustead Hill, Burgh upon the Sands, or Burgh-Head, Longburgh, Moorhouse, and Westend, and containing 987 inhabitants, of which number, 304 are in the township of Burgh upon the Sands, 5½ miles (W. N. W.) from Carlisle. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £5. 1. 10½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, exhibits evident marks of having been constructed, like some others on the border, as a place of occasional retreat and defence. Close to the village, on the northern side, and on a site now called the Old Castle, stood the Roman station Axelodunum, the sixteenth on the line of Severus' Wall, and the spot where Adrian's vallum terminated: the lines of the ramparts, which are still visible, include an area about one hundred and thirty-six yards square, in which and in the vicinity, urns, altars, and inscribed stones have been dug up. A castle, built soon after the Conquest, but of which there are no remains, is stated to have been seized in 1174, by William, King of Scotland. Several encounters between the English and the Scotch have occurred in this parish; the most sanguinary were those in 1216 and 1520. Burgh is the head of a barony including this and several other parishes, and is now the property of the Earl of Lonsdale, on whom it confers the title of baron, and who holds annually a customary court. The village, which extends into the township of Westend, is nearly three quarters of a mile in length; there were various branches of manufacture formerly carried on, but these have been chiefly removed to Carlisle. Edward I. died here, on the 7th of July, 1307, whilst on an expedition against Scotland: this event has been commemorated by the erection of an obelisk, in 1685, by Henry, Duke of Norfolk, which fell down on the 4th of March, 1795, and was rebuilt by the Earl of Lonsdale in 1803. It stands about a mile north of the village, on the marsh, a tract of ground belonging to several proprietors, each of whom pays to the baron a yearly fee rent of twopence for every stint, and which has been greatly encroached upon by the sea, so as to have rendered embankments necessary for its protection. A school-room has been erected by the parishioners, and the master receives £5 per annum from property bequeathed by Thomas Pattinson, in 1785, and Richard Hodgson previously. Such of the inhabitants as are not possessed of a real estate worth £12 per annum, are entitled to send children for instruction to the school at Wiggonby, in the parish of Aikton, founded by Mrs. Hodgson; but, owing to the distance, few avail themselves of this privilege.

BURGH (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of MITFORD, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from Hingham, containing 242 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. P. Gurdon. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BURGH-APTON, a parish in the hundred of CLAVERING, county of NORFOLK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E.) from Norwich, containing 389 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, to which a mediety of the rectory of Holveston is annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny. The church is dedicated to St. Martin.

BURGH-MATTISHALL, a parish in the hundred of MITFORD, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from East Dereham, containing 219 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Hockering united, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £3. 15. 10., and in the patronage of T. T. Berney, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BURGH-WALLIS, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Doncaster, containing, with Haywood and Sutton, 237 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £14. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of M. Tasburgh, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

BURGHAM, a tything in the parish of WORPLESDON, first division of the hundred of WOKING, county of SURREY. The population is returned with the parish.

BURGHCLERE, a parish in the hundred of EVINGAR, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Whitchurch, containing, with Earliston, which is in Kingsclere hundred, 763 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Newtown annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated in the king's books at £30, and in the patronage of the Earl of Carnarvon. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The wills proved in the course of the year are, at the close of it, deposited in the bishop's registry. The village lies at the base of a lofty eminence, the summit of which, now exhibiting vestiges of a military encampment, was formerly crowned by a beacon. A house and school-room are appropriated rent-free, by the Earl of Carnarvon, for the instruction of children, and his lordship allows £20 a year to the schoolmistress, who receives an additional annuity of £10, the bequest of Elizabeth Cornwallis, in 1721.

BURGHFIELD, a parish in the hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W.) from Reading, containing 881 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £14. 19. 2., and in the patronage of the Earl of Shrewsbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The navigable river Kennet passes through the parish, and is crossed by a bridge of great antiquity. In an unsuccessful attempt to obtain coal at Hose Hill, in this parish, a few years ago, a bed of cockle-shells, firmly concreted with sand, was discovered about twelve feet beneath the surface.

BURGHILL, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (N.W. by N.) from Hereford, containing, with the township of Tillington, 823 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £6. 18. 2., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of B. Bidulph, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BURHAM, a parish in the hundred of LARKFIELD, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.N.W.) from Aylesford, containing 236 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of C. Milner, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, stands near the river Medway, which bounds the parish on the west; a range of chalk hills, near which are Burham Downs, forming its eastern boundary. Here is a spring, called Holy Garden, that anciently attracted numerous pilgrims, on account of the supposed miraculous efficacy of the water.

BURIAN (ST.), a parish in the hundred of PENWITH, county of CORNWALL, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W. by W.) from Penzance, containing 1495 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, and a royal peculiar, rated in the king's books at £48. 12. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, which stands on an eminence, and serves as a land-mark to mariners, is a spacious edifice, containing some interesting monuments: it had a handsome carved screen and other relics of antiquity, but these were removed on its reparation in 1814: there is a small ancient cross near the south porch. St. Burian is a place of considerable antiquity, having been noted for a collegiate church founded by King Athelstan, in honour of St. Buriena, or Beriena, who had an oratory and was interred here, and on which he bestowed the privilege of sanctuary and other immunities: in the 20th of Edward I. the society consisted of a dean and three prebendaries. This establishment constituted the basis of the present independent deanery, which comprises within its jurisdiction the parishes of St. Burian, St. Levan, and Sennan: it was for a long time annexed to the bishoprick of Exeter, but was severed from it during the episcopacy of Bishop Harris, who thus became the first independent dean: every vestige of the collegiate buildings has disappeared. There is a charity school under the direction of trustees, who allow the master eight guineas a year, and a residence rent-free.

BURITON, a parish in the hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Alton (South) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (S. by W.) from Petersfield, containing, with the tythings of Nursted and Weston, 767 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Petersfield annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £32. 16. 10½, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BURLAND, a township in the parish of ACTON, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 2½ miles (W.) from Nantwich, containing 505 inhabitants. The Whitchurch branch of the Chester canal crosses this township.

BURLATON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of SHERIFF-HALES which is in the western division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 3½ miles (N. N. E.) from Shifnall. The population is returned with the parish.

BURLESCOMBE, a parish partly in the hundred of HALBERTON, but chiefly in the hundred of BAMPTON, county of DEVON, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Welling-ton, containing 1073 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 15. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of William Ayshford Sandford, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains several ancient monuments. A priory for Augustine canons was founded at Leigh, thence called Canonleigh, in this parish, by Walter Clavell, in the time of Henry II., in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, St. John the Evangelist, and St. Etheldreda: the society, in the beginning of the reign of Edward I., was changed by Matilda de Clare, Countess of Hereford and Gloucester, for an abbess and nuns of the same order, whose number, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was eighteen, and the revenue £202. 15. 3. In 1286, the abbess obtained a license for a weekly market to be held here. The gateway and the ruins of the eastern wing of the abbey are visible in the grounds belonging to Mr. Browne. There is a small chapel at Ashford, in which divine service is performed eight times during summer, a special endowment charged on the Court estate having been given for that purpose. The summit level of the Grand Western canal crosses this parish, in a direction nearly parallel with the course of the river Lynot: there are various strata of limestone, and small pieces of pure silver have been found in the limekilns. The water of a spring at Ashford possesses properties somewhat similar to those of the sulphur wells at Harrogate, and there are indications of the existence of coal in the vicinity.

BURLESTON, a parish in the hundred of PIDDLE-TOWN, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Dorchester, containing 63 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united to that of Admiston, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £3. 17. 1. The river Piddle passes on the southern side of the village.

BURLEY, a parish in the hundred of ALSTON, county of RUTLAND, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Oakham, containing 222 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10. 13. 1½, and in the patronage of the Earl of Winchelsea. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross. The manor came by purchase into the possession of Villiers, the first Duke of Buckingham, who greatly enlarged and embellished the mansion, in which he successively entertained James I. and Charles I., with their respective courts. This stately edifice, on the breaking out of the civil war, was garrisoned by a small body of parliamentary troops, who, unable to sustain an attack of the royalists, set fire to the house, which, with all the costly furniture it contained, was burnt to the ground; the stables, situated at a short distance, being the only part of the buildings that escaped destruction: the site is now occupied by an elegant modern mansion.

BURLEY, a tything in that part of the parish of RINGWOOD which is in the northern division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, New Forest (East) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Lyndhurst, containing, with the ville of Bistern-Closes, 303 inhabitants.

BURLEY, a chapelry in that part of the parish of OTLEY which is in the upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 2½ miles (W. by N.) from Otley, containing 1200 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Matthew Wilson, Esq. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here are two or three cotton-mills on an extensive scale, and the manufacture of worsted goods is carried on to a limited degree.

BURLEY-DAM, a chapelry in the parish of ACTON, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 3½ miles (W. by S.) from Audlem. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Viscount Combermere.

BURLEY-LODGE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the northern division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, New Forest (East) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, containing 30 inhabitants.

BURLINGHAM (ST. ANDREW), a parish in the hundred of BLOFIELD, county of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (W. by S.) from Acle, containing 178 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Burlingham St. Edmund annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of Mrs. Burroughes.

BURLINGHAM (ST. EDMUND), a parish in the hundred of BLOFIELD, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. W.) from Acle, containing 75 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Burlingham St. Andrew, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12.

BURLINGHAM (ST. PETER), a parish in the hundred of BLOFIELD, county of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (W. by S.) from Acle, containing 97 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of H. N. Burroughes, Esq.

BURMARSH, a parish in the liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, though locally in the hundred of Worth, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 4½ miles (W. S. W.) from Hythe, containing 94 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £20. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BURMINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of WOLFORD, Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Shipston upon Stour, containing 176 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. Nicholas, was rebuilt in 1693.

BURN, a township in the parish of BRAYTON, lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Selby, containing 238 inhabitants. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children, given by George Ellis in 1711, and Edward Goodwin in 1743.

BURNAGE, a township in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Manchester, containing 513 inhabitants.

BURNASTON, a hamlet in the parish of ETWALL, hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Derby, containing 148 inhabitants.

BURNBY, a parish in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Pocklington, containing 95 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £7. 15., and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The church is dedicated to St. Giles.

BURNESIDE, a chapelry in the parish and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Kendal, comprising the townships of Strickland-Kettle and Strickland-Roger, and containing 731 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Landowners. The chapel was rebuilt in 1823, at an expense of £1300, of which £900 was raised by subscription, and the remainder by a rate. The school was enlarged pursuant to the will of Mr. Alan Fisher, dated October 28th, 1781, whereby he endowed it with £600, bestowing also a collection of books; this endowment was augmented with a gift of £100, by the will of Mr. Joseph Harling, in 1802: these sums having been invested in the funds, produce an annual income of about £40, for which, subject to one or two small deductions, six children from Strickland-Roger are taught for Mr. Fisher's bequest, and four from Skelsmergh on account of Mr. Harling's; the rest, about forty in number, pay a small quarterage settled by the trustees. The village, situated on both sides of the river Kent, is connected by a bridge, the chapel standing in the township of Strickland-Roger. The spinning of worsted-yarn is carried on to a limited extent, and there is a manufactory for patent machines for cutting candlewicks.

BURNESTON, a parish in the wapentake of HALKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Leeming with Exelby and Newton, and the townships of Burneston, Carthorp, Gatenby, and Theakstone, and containing 1326 inhabitants, of which number, 288 are in the township of Burneston, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Bedale. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £37. 6. 8., and in the patronage of G. Elsley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lambert. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Matthew Robinson, by deed dated in 1688, assigned a rent-charge of £43. 5. for the endowment of a school, and of an almshouse for five poor persons, besides an alms-master, which he had previously erected: the building contains a school-room, with apartments for the master, also rooms for the alms-master and five hospitallers: other benefactions have subsequently been added, and the present annual income is about £67, of which the schoolmaster receives £16 for teaching seventeen children, the alms-master or usher £5. 8., and the remainder is divided among the poor inmates of the hospital. An annual sum of about £20, arising from land appropriated for their benefit, is distributed among the poor of the parish. The magistrates acting for the district hold their meetings at the New Inn, in this township, and at the York Gate Inn, Melmerby, alternately.

BURNETT, a parish in the hundred of KEYNSHAM, county of SOMERSET, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Keynsham, containing 75 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £5. 10. 7½., and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The village, which is small and compact, is situated on the river Chew, and was formerly part of the manor of Keynsham, which, with the advowson, was purchased by John Whiston, Esq., alderman of Bristol, who assigned it in trust to feoffees, for the endowment of the "Red Maids' school" founded by him at Bristol.

BURNHAM, a parish in the hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Eton, comprising the chapelry of Lower Boveny, and the liberties of Upper Boveny, Britwell, East Burnham, Cippenham, Toun, and Wood, and containing 1918 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £16. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains a handsome monument to the memory of Lord Chief Justice Wills. There is a meeting-house for dissenters. Burnham is a place of great antiquity, having given name to the hundred. On a moated site near Cippenham stood a palace belonging to the kings of Mercia; and the kings of England of the Norman line appear to have occasionally resided in it, since the foundation charter of Burnham abbey is dated there: this abbey was founded by Richard, Earl of Cornwall, in 1165, for nuns of the order of St. Augustine, whose revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., amounted to £91. 5. 11.: a portion of the buildings has been converted into a farm-house and offices. The village lies at a short distance from the Thames, and had formerly a market, which has long been discontinued: fairs are held on February 23rd, May 1st, and October 2nd. A National school is supported partly by a small endowment, but chiefly by subscription among the inhabitants of Burnham, Hilcham, and Taplow; and there are various small benefactions for the poor. A court leet for the manor is held once in three years. Robert Aldrich, Bishop of Carlisle in the reign of Henry VIII., was a native of Burnham.

BURNHAM, a parish in the hundred of DENGIE, county of Essex, $19\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Chelmsford, containing 1371 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £22. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Lady Jane St. John Mildmay. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, stands about a mile south of the village, on an elevated site, the tower serving as a landmark for mariners. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is situated on the northern bank of the river Crouch, near its æstuary: there is a commodious quay; and the oyster-beds, both in the river and on the coast, are extremely productive, a considerable quantity of oysters being annually exported to Holland. There are extensive salt marshes in the vicinity. A school for the instruction of boys and girls has an endowment of about £90 per annum.

BURNHAM, a parish in the hundred of BEMPSTONE, county of SOMERSET, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Axbridge, containing 920 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £16. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Wells. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew in 1316, is a spacious edifice, with a lofty plain tower, that serves as a landmark. It contains the fine altar-piece designed by Inigo Jones for the chapel of the intended palace of Charles II. at Whitehall, and afterwards placed in Westminster abbey, by the dean and chapter of which it was presented to Dr. King, Bishop of Rochester, for many years incumbent of this parish, who erected it in the church at his own expense. It is of white marble, and is executed in the Grecian style: the principal objects are three boys holding a bible, two children in a kneeling attitude, one pouring incense on the altar from a thuribulum, and the other bearing a paten, with two angels in the act of reverence, inclining toward the altar, as supporters. This parish lies on the coast of the Bristol channel, and the fine sandy beach has induced many respectable families to reside here during the summer. A lighthouse, formerly the property of a private individual, has lately been purchased by the Corporation of the Trinity House, for the guidance of vessels passing up the channel.

BURNHAM (EAST), a liberty in the parish and hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Eton. The population is returned with the parish.

BURNHAM-DEEPDALE, a parish in the hundred of BROTHERCROSS, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 113 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of Henry Blythe, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contained an ancient font, on which were engraved hieroglyphic characters, emblematic of the Saxon months; but, by being removed during the progress of some alteration of the edifice, about twenty years ago, it was accidentally broken. The inhabitants have the privilege of sending four children to the endowed school at Bramcaster. In this and the adjoining parishes are extensive salt marshes, for draining, embanking, and improving which, an act was obtained in 1821, whereby two hundred and fifty acres in this parish have been enclosed by a wall seventy feet broad at the base, and ten feet high, to protect it from the sea, which regularly at spring tides flowed over the whole level of the marsh. On the shore are various artificial eminences, the supposed tombs of the Saxons and Danes who fell in battle in the vicinity; and at a short distance are the vestiges of a fortification, supposed to have been raised by the Saxons, after the sanguinary battle between them and the Scots and the Picts, at Stamford in Lincolnshire.

BURNHAM-NORTON, a parish in the hundred of BROTHERCROSS, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 187 inhabitants. The living, consolidated with that of Burnham-Ulph, is a rectory divided into mediæties, one of which is held with Burnham-Sutton, rated jointly in the king's books at £17. 10., in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge; the other is held with Burnham-Westgate, jointly rated at £20. 16. 8. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. A Carmelite monastery was founded, about 1241, by Sir Ralph de Hemenhale, and Sir William de Calthorp, Knts., the revenue of which, at the time of the dissolution, was estimated at not more than £2. 5. 4. Robert Bale, the historian, was prior of this house, and, dying in the reign of Henry VII., was interred here.

BURNHAM-OVERY, a parish in the hundred of BROTHERCROSS, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 508 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Clement. This parish, together with others bearing the name of Burnham, is situated in the northern part of the county, adjoining the North sea: a considerable quantity of grain is sent from a small port here, and a few of the inhabitants are engaged in the fishery.

BURNHAM-SUTTON, a parish in the hundred of BROTHERCROSS, county of NORFOLK, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (S. S. E.) from Burnham-Westgate. The population is returned with Burnham-Ulph. The living is a rectory, with which a mediæty of the consolidated rectories of Burnham-Norton and Burnham-Ulph is united, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated jointly in the king's books at £17. 10. The church is dedicated to St. Albert.

BURNHAM-THORPE, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of BROTHERCROSS, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by S.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 344 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £19. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Orford. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is principally in the later style of English architecture. In the 55th of Henry III., Sir William de Calthorp obtained a grant of a market to be held on Saturday, and a fair annually on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Peter ad Vincula. Here is a free school for a certain number of boys: the master has about £35 a year, with a house and two small plots of land. Lord Nelson, the renowned naval commander, was born here, on the 29th of September, 1758, during the incumbency of his father; he was raised to the peerage in October, 1798, and on the 22nd of May, 1801, was created Viscount Nelson of the Nile, and of Burnham-Thorpe; his lordship was interred with the most distinguished public honours in the cathedral church of St. Paul, London, January 9th, 1806.

BURNHAM-MARKET, or BURNHAM-WESTGATE, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of BROTHERCROSS, county of NORFOLK, $36\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Norwich, and 120 (N. N. E.) from London, containing 937 inhabitants. This place derives its name from the small river Burn, on which it is situated, and takes the adjunct Westgate to distinguish it from the numerous villages of the same name in this county. It is pleasantly situated in a fertile valley, environed by a range of hills on the north, west, and south, within four miles of the sea; and though its market has been discontinued, and the building appropriated to that purpose converted into dwellings, it has experienced considerable improvement of late years, and is rapidly advancing in prosperity; the houses are in general well built, and amply supplied with water from springs. The trade is chiefly in corn, which is greatly facilitated by a small harbour formed by the river, and by its proximity to the sea. A small manufactory for iron has been recently established, and hemp is prepared in the town to a limited extent. Fairs for toys are held on Easter Monday and Tuesday, and August 1st and 2nd. The county magistrates hold a meeting here once a month: courts baron are occasionally held by the lords of the respective manors. The living is a rectory, with which a mediety of the consolidated rectories of Burnham-Norton and Burnham-Ulph is united, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated jointly in the king's books at £20. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a neat structure of stone and flint, with a square embattled tower ornamented with sculptured figures; and in the chancel are some interesting monuments and a rudely sculptured statue. The site of another parochial church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is at present occupied by a carpenter's shop; and at the lower end of the town is the chapel of Burnham-Ulph, dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Independents. Mr. John Wilmot bequeathed £100 for the instruction of poor children, the produce of which is applied to the education of a certain number in a private boarding and day school. There are almshouses for the aged poor, and some bequests for charitable purposes.

BURNHAM-ULPH, a parish in the hundred of BROTHERCROSS, county of NORFOLK, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. E.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing, with Burnham-Sutton, 315 inhabitants. The living is a mediety of the consolidated rectories of Burnham-Norton and Burnham-Ulph, united to Burnham-Westgate, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is now used as a chapel to Burnham-Westgate.

BURNISTON, a township in the parish of SCALBY, PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Scarborough, containing 347 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BURNLEY, a market town and chapelry in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 25 miles (N.) from Manchester, 53 (E. N. E.) from Liverpool, and 210 (N. N. W.) from London, containing 6378 inhabitants. This place, anciently Brunley, derives its name from the river Burn, on which it is situated, near the confluence of that stream with the river Calder; and, from the numerous coins, fragments of pottery, and urns containing ashes and burnt bones, that have been found in the neighbourhood, is supposed to have been a Roman station. Several Saxon remains have also been discovered; and at a short distance to the east of the town is a place called Sazifield, said to have been the scene of a battle in the year 597. About the same period Paulinus is stated to have visited Burnley, on a mission for converting the natives to Christianity; and the remains of an ancient cross, erected to commemorate his preaching, still exist near the town, where religious rites were usually performed prior to the erection of the chapel. The town is pleasantly situated on a tongue of land formed by the rivers Burn and Calder; the greater part is of very recent erection, and the houses are neatly built of freestone found in the neighbourhood. The streets are well paved, and lighted with gas, under an act of parliament obtained in 1819, for the general improvement of the town; and the inhabitants are abundantly supplied with water from two reservoirs, one to the north, and the other to the south, of the town, under the management of a company. The barracks, standing in the adjoining township of Hambergham-Eaves, were erected in 1819, at an expense of £5500, of which sum £2500 were subscribed by the inhabitants. The trade was formerly confined to the manufacture of woollen cloth and worsted goods; but that of cotton has been introduced, for the spinning, weaving, and printing of which, large establishments have been erected: on the banks of the rivers are also several mills for grinding corn, &c., and for fulling cloth. Coal, flag stone, and slate, are found in abundance within a short distance. The Leeds and Liverpool canal, which winds nearly round the town, has contributed greatly to the promotion of its trade. The market, granted in the 22nd of Edward I. to Henry de Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, is on Monday and Saturday, the former being the principal; and on every alternate Monday there is a market for cattle, established in January 1819. Fairs are held on March 6th, Easter-eve, May 9th and 13th, July 10th, and October 11th, for horses, cloth, and pedlary; there is a wool fair on the second Thursday in July, and a horse fair on the third Thursday in October. Petty sessions for the division are held here.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with various benefactions (among which is one of £400, to meet a similar donation from the commissioners of Queen Anne's bounty), and in the patronage of Robert Townley Parker, Esq. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, was erected soon after the Conquest; but having been partly rebuilt and enlarged at different times, it combines various styles of architecture: it is a spacious structure, and contains several monuments of the Townley family, among which is one to the memory of Charles Townley, Esq., a celebrated patron of the fine arts, whose collection of Grecian and Roman sculpture was the most select ever introduced into this country: the Townley marbles were purchased by the trustees of the British Museum for £20,000, which sum was granted by parliament for that purpose. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school was founded in the reign of Edward VI., and endowed in 1578, by Sir Robert Ingham; the endowment, originally small, has been considerably augmented by subsequent benefactions, and now produces about £140 per annum: the school has an interest in thirteen scholarships founded in Brasenose College, Oxford, by Dr. Nowell, Dean of St. Paul's, London, in 1572: the management is vested in trustees, who appoint the master, and allow him a salary of £130 per annum, with the privilege of charging each boy £3. 3. per annum for writing and arithmetic. The Rev. W. Whitaker, D.D., the learned master of St. John's College, Cambridge, and the erudite historian of the "Original parish of Whalley," received the rudiments of his education in this school. An institution for the relief of poor married women in childbirth was established in 1819; there is also a Strangers' Friend Society. The interest of £1244. 15. three per cent. consols., given by Mrs. Elizabeth Peel in 1800, and of £500 by Mrs. Molly Thompson, is distributed in clothing to the poor of Burnley and Habergham-Eaves.

BURNOP, a joint township with Hamsteels, in that part of the parish of LANCHESTER which is in the western division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, containing, with Hamsteels, 127 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BURNSALL, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelries of Coniston with Kilnsay, and Rilsdon, and the townships of Appletreewick, Burnsall with Thorp sub Montem, Craco, Harlington, and Hetton with Bordley, and containing 1423 inhabitants, of which number, 329 are in the township of Burnsall with Thorp sub Montem, 9½ miles (N. N. E.) from Skipton. The living is a rectory in mediocres, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £36, and in the patronage of the Earl of Craven and the Archbishop of York. The church is dedicated to St. Wilfrid: at the entrance to the choir each portionist has a pulpit and a reading-desk, from which divine service is performed alternately. This parish is supposed to have been formerly a member of the parish of Linton, the rector of which still receives a modus from the greater part of it, for the tithe of corn. A grammar school was built in 1605, by Sir William Craven, Knt., who also repaired the church in 1612, erected four bridges in the vicinity, and performed various acts of charity: the income of the school is £42 per annum, arising from a rent-charge of £20 given by the founder, £200 by Dame Elizabeth Craven, in 1624, and an annuity of £10 to an usher by a subsequent benefactor: only four or five boys are taught Latin; the rest, on an average about thirty, pay for commercial instruction. Sir William was a native of Appletreewick, in this parish, and by industry and frugality amassed considerable property in London, of which city he was lord mayor in 1611.

BURNTWOOD, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ST. MICHAEL, LICHFIELD, which is in the southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 3½ miles (W. by S.) from Lichfield, containing, with Edgehill and Woodhouse, 675 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £2600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Perpetual Curate of St. Michael's.

BURPHAM, a parish in the hundred of POLING, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, 2½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Arundel, containing 223 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7. 12. 6., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally of Norman architecture. The river Arun bounds this parish on the west.

BURRALS, a township in the parish of APPLEBY, ST. LAWRENCE, EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 1¼ mile (S. by W.) from Appleby, containing 75 inhabitants. This township is supposed to have been anciently crossed by the borough walls of Appleby, and hence, by contraction, its name: it contains a great quantity of limestone.

BURREL, a joint township with Cowling, in that part of the parish of BEDALE which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 1¼ mile (S. W. by W.) from Bedale, containing, with Cowling, 113 inhabitants.

BURRINGHAM (EAST), a chapelry in that part of the parish of BOTTESFORD which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSAY, county of LINCOLN, 10½ miles (W. N. W.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 338 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a ferry over the Trent to Althorpe.

BURRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, county of DEVON, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Chulmleigh, containing 939 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £13. 11. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Buckingham. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

BURRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, 4½ miles (W. S. W.) from Ludlow, containing 194 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. George.

BURRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of BRENT with WRINGTON, county of SOMERSET, 5½ miles (N. E.) from Axbridge, containing 559 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, and in the patronage of the inhabitants, subject to the approval of the rector of Wrington. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, contains some fine screen-work. The village is romantically situated on the northern side of the Mendip range of hills. An ancient catacomb was discovered in 1795, containing about fifty skeletons lying in a great quantity of black mould, some of the bones being coated with stalagmik; and there is a cave of a similar description about a mile distant: they are supposed by Dr. Buckland to have been places of common sepulture in early times, and the circumstance of flint knives and other relics of antiquity having been found among the skeletons, corroborates the opinion of the learned professor. There is also another capacious cavern in the parish, which, owing to its intricacy, has been but little explored.

BURROUGH, a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 183 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of W. Hanbury, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a circular font. Camden has fixed the Roman station Vernometum at this place, inferring also, from the meaning of the word, that here was a temple to one of the heathen deities: the summit of Burrough hill exhibits traces of an encampment, the lines of which enclosed an area of eighteen acres, now under cultivation.

BURROUGH-GREEN, a parish in the hundred of RADFIELD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 5 miles (S.) from Newmarket, containing 381 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £18. 10., and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The church is dedicated to St. Augustine. A charity school is endowed with about £30 per annum, chiefly arising from a benefaction from Samuel Knight, D.D., in 1734. Editha, consort of Edward the Confessor, had a palace here.

BURROW, a township in the parish of TUNSTALL, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Kirkby-Lonsdale, containing 198 inhabitants.

BURROW-ASH, a hamlet in the parish of OCKBROOK, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Derby. The population is returned with the parish. Burrow-Ash is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BURSCOUGH, a township in the parish of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Ormskirk, containing 1755 inhabitants. A priory of Black canons was founded in the time of Richard I., by Robert Fitz-Henry, Lord of Latham, and dedicated to St. Nicholas: at the dissolution there were a prior, five brethren, and forty servants, and the revenue was estimated at £129. 1. 10.: previously to that period it was the burial-place of the noble family of Stanley, and the cemetery, in which stands the mutilated central arch of the church, the only relic of the conventual buildings, has subsequently been used as a place of interment by a few poor Roman Catholic families in the vicinity.

BURSLEDON, a chapelry in the parish of HOUND, in that part of the hundred of BISHOP'S WALTHAM which is in the Portsdown division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.S.E.) from Southampton, containing 473 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Leonard. This chapelry lies at the head of the æstuary of the river Hamble, about three miles from Southampton water, which is crossed by a bridge on the road from Southampton to Portsmouth. Several large vessels have been built here for the navy, the creek being very commodious for that purpose, and the water deep enough for eighty-gun ships. Bursledon is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

BURSLEM, a market town and parish in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N.E.) from Newcastle, 19 (N.) from Stafford, and 151 (N.E.) from London, containing, with the townships of Abbey-Hulton and Sneyd, 10,176 inhabitants. This place in Domesday-book is named Barcardeslim, the derivation of which has not been distinctly ascertained. It appears, from the most authentic records, to have been distinguished at an early period for the excellence and variety of the clay in the vicinity, and to have been noted for its manufacture of pottery and earthenware, for which, in the seventeenth century, it became the principal place in England; but it was not till after the construction of the Grand Trunk canal, begun in the year 1766, a branch of which has been formed to this town, that it rose into celebrity, under the auspices of the enterprising Mr. Wedgwood, who was a native of the place, and the principal promoter of its present importance. The town is pleasantly situated on rising ground, and contains, in addition to the dwellings of the workmen employed in the potteries, many good houses for the superintendents of the works, and some handsome edifices for the proprietors: it is lighted with gas, and supplied with water from the works of John Smith, Esq., of Hanley. Previously to the year 1766, the native clay only was used in the manufacture of earthenware; but after a facility of conveyance by water was obtained, the Devonshire and Dorsetshire clay was introduced, and the manufacture of porcelain and china established, in which the Cornwall stone, or "growan," forms an essential ingredient. A most extensive manufacture of these articles is at present carried on throughout a wide district, abounding with coal and every other requisite, and presenting the greatest facility for conveying the goods to various parts of the kingdom. The market, permanently established by act of parliament in 1825, and under the superintendence of trustees, is on Monday and Saturday; the fairs are on the Saturdays preceding Shrove-Sunday, Easter-day, and Whit-Sunday; on Midsummer-day, if Saturday, or if not, on the Saturday following; on the first Saturday after September 11th, and on the day after Christmas-day. The county magistrates hold a petty session for the whole district of the potteries once in six weeks; and a chief constable and subordinate officers are annually chosen, by resident commissioners appointed by act of parliament for managing the local affairs of the town. The town-hall is a neat building, with a cupola, in the centre of the market-place: it was erected by subscription in 1761, and has since been much improved.

Burslem, formerly a chapelry in the parish of Stoke upon Trent, was made a separate parish by act of parliament in 1807. The living is a rectory not in charge, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of William Adams, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a small brick building, with an ancient stone steeple. The first stone of a new church, to be dedicated to St. Paul, was laid by the bishop of the diocese in 1828: the expense of its erection was estimated at £10,000, of which sum the parliamentary commissioners granted £8000, the remainder to be raised by subscription among the inhabitants. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, besides those in the New Connexion, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The National school, erected in 1817 by subscription, aided by a grant from the parent society, has been incorporated with a charity school, founded in 1748, by John Bourne, Esq., and endowed with twenty-seven acres of land; the school-house belonging to the latter has been converted into a private dwelling: two hundred and fifty children are instructed. There are Sunday schools in connexion with the church and the several dissenting congregations. At Abbey-Hulton are some remains of a Cistercian abbey, founded in 1223, by Henry de Audley, consisting chiefly of the out-buildings, now converted into farm-offices: the revenue, at the dissolution, was £76. 14. 11½.

BURSTALL, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 4½ miles (W.) from Ipswich, containing 203 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Bramford, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich.

BURSTEAD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of BARSTABLE, county of ESSEX, 2 miles (S.S.E.) from Billericay, containing 1861 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £17. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. Edward Evans. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. About a mile north of it are some earthworks, enclosing a space of about four acres, and called Blunt's Walls, where various Roman remains have been dug up. There is a free school at Billericay for the benefit of the children of the whole parish.

BURSTEAD (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of BARSTABLE, county of ESSEX, 2½ miles (S. by W.) from Billericay, containing 201 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BURSTOCK, a parish in the hundred of WHIT-CHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 4½ miles (W.N.W.) from Beaminster, containing 203 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £5. 19. 4½, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John Bragge, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BURSTON, a parish in the hundred of DISS, county of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N.E. by N.) from Diss, containing 405 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a tower circular at the base and octangular above.

BURSTOW, a parish in the second division of the hundred of REIGATE, county of SURREY, 8 miles (S.E. by S.) from Reigate, containing 715 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the exempt deanery of Croydon, which is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at

VOL. I.

£15. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

BURSTWICK, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Burstwick, and Ryhill with Camerton, and containing 751 inhabitants, of which number, 436 are in the township of Burstwick, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Hedon. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Skeckling, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York. The church is principally in the later style of English architecture.

BURTHOLME, a township in the parish of LANERCOST-ABBEY, ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 3¼ miles (N.E. by E.) from Brampton, containing 223 inhabitants.

BURTON, a township in that part of the parish of TARVIN which is in the second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, 3¼ miles (W.N.W.) from Tarporley, containing 78 inhabitants.

BURTON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Burton and Puddington, and containing 461 inhabitants, of which number, 326 are in the township of Burton, 2½ miles (S.E. by S.) from Great Neston. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of R. Congreve, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, was rebuilt in 1721. At Denwall, in this parish, there is a colliery, opened about 1750, that extends a mile and three quarters from high water mark under the river Dee: the coal is chiefly sent to Ireland. At the same place was anciently an hospital, to which Alexander de Savensby, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry (to which see the manor belonged) appropriated, in 1238, the tithes of Burton. Henry VII., about 1494, gave this hospital, together with all its revenue, including the rectory of this parish, to the hospital of St. John the Baptist, founded at Lichfield, by Bishop Smith, to which the estate still belongs. A free school for poor children of the township of Burton, and for four of that of Puddington, was founded in 1724, by Dr. Wilson, the pious and benevolent bishop of Sodor and Man, who was born here, on the 20th of December, 1663: he gave £400 for erecting and endowing it, and his son, Dr. Thomas Wilson, rector of St. Stephen's Walbrook, and a prebendary in the collegiate church of Westminster, added £200. The market, granted in 1298, to Bishop Langton, was held on Thursday, together with a fair for three days at the festival of St. James.

BURTON, a township in the parish of BAMBROUGH, northern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5½ miles (E. by S.) from Belford, containing 85 inhabitants.

BURTON, a chapelry in the parish and liberties of MUCH WENLOCK, county of SALOP, 3 miles (S.W. by S.) from Much Wenlock, with which the population is returned. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Much Wenlock, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty.

BURTON, a tything in the parish and hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, New Forest (West) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. by E.) from Christchurch, with which the population is returned.

BURTON, or BODEKTON, a parish in the hundred of ROTHERBRIDGE, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Petworth, containing 14 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Coates consolidated, discharged from the payment of first fruits, but paying tenths to the Bishop of Chichester, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7. 3. 11½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont. The Rother, or Arundel navigation, forms the north-eastern boundary of this parish, where it is crossed by a bridge to Shropham.

BURTON, a hamlet in the parish of WARCOP, EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Brough, containing 52 inhabitants. There are lead-works at Kirsty Bank, in this township. This is the birthplace of Christopher Bainbridge, Archbishop of York in the reign of Henry VIII.; having been sent on a diplomatic mission to Rome by that monarch, the pontiff created him cardinal of St. Praxis: he was poisoned in 1511, by his Italian steward, with whom he had quarrelled, and was interred at Rome.

BURTON, a joint township with Walden, in the parish of AYSGARTH, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Middleham, containing, with Walden, 478 inhabitants. The village is situated in a district abounding with fine scenery, on a small stream which falls into the river Ure, and contains a great quantity of salmon. Wool-combing is carried on here. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BURTON (BLACK), a chapelry in the parish of THORNTON in LONSDALE, western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by S.) from Kirkby-Lonsdale, containing 746 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £2100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Thornton.

BURTON (CHERRY), a parish in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (W.N.W.) from Beverley, containing 417 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £23. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. H. Ramsden. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

BURTON in KENDAL, a parish comprising the market town of Burton in Kendal, and the township of Holme, in LONSDALE ward, and the chapelry of Preston-Patrick, in KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, and the township of Dalton in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, and containing 1642 inhabitants, of which number, 673 are in the town of Burton, $34\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Appleby, and 251 (N. W. by N.) from London, on the road to Carlisle through Manchester. The ancient name of this place, Borton, a contraction of Borough town, is still retained by the inhabitants; it takes its adjunct from being situated in the dale, or valley, of the river Ken, to distinguish it from Burton in Lancashire. The houses, many of which are ancient, are well built, and the general appearance of the town is prepossessing: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. A communication with the Mersey, the Dee, the Humber, and the Trent, is afforded by the Kendal and Lancaster canal; but, notwithstanding its favourable situation, the town possesses very little trade: there are some small linen-manufactories at Holme, but the principal part of the population are employed in agriculture. The market, established in 1661, and once noted for corn, is on Tuesday: the market-place is a spacious area, adjoining which are some good houses and shops, and in the centre is a neat stone cross. A fair is held on Easter-Monday, for cattle and horses, which is also a statute fair. The county magistrates hold a petty session every alternate Tuesday; and a manorial court is held on Whit-Monday and Martinmas-day, for the renewal of fines, and for the recovery of debts under 40s. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £15. 17., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Johnstone. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a plain ancient structure, with a square tower: the pulpit, and the canopy over it, are richly carved; and there are two sepulchral chapels belonging to Dalton and Preston halls: in the churchyard is a monument to the memory of William Cockin, author of the "Rural Sabbath," and other literary productions. There is a place of worship for Independents. The grammar school has an income of £50 per annum, the produce of various benefactions since the year 1657: the premises, which are neat and commodious, were erected by subscription, in 1817: it has recently sustained a considerable loss from the bankruptcy of an individual who held a great part of the endowment, and is likely henceforward to be conducted on a more limited plan. Gerard Langbaine, Dr. William Lancaster, and Dr. Launcelot Dawes (prebendary of Carlisle, and forty-eight years vicar of this parish), eminent literary characters in the reign of Charles I., were natives of this town.

BURTON (KIRK), a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Cumberworth-Half, the townships of Cartworth, Foulston, Hepworth, Kirk-Burton, Shelley, Shepley, Thurstonland, and Wooldale, and containing 13,559 inhabitants, of which number, 2153 are in the township of Kirk-Burton, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Huddersfield. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was built in the reign of Edward III. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A small sum is annually paid by the parishioners to the vicar of Dewsbury, in token of their ancient dependence on that parish. A school, established by the inhabitants in 1714, was endowed, in 1721, by the Rev. Henry Robinson, with a bequest of £100 for the instruction of ten poor children of this township, and three of Thurstonland; and, in the following year, with a bequest of £360, for teaching twenty more of the same places: these sums having been invested in land, produce about £66 per annum, which is paid to the master. It is thought that the Saxons had a fort here, a memorial of which probably subsists in a small dike, called the Old Saxe Dike.

BURTON by LINCOLN, a parish in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Lincoln, containing 186 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 15. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Monson. The church is dedicated to St. Vincent.

BURTON (LONG), a parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Sherborne, containing 327 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £10. 15., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. James.

BURTON upon STATHER, a parish (formerly a market town) in the northern division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $35\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Lincoln, and $164\frac{1}{2}$ (N. by W.) from London, containing 762 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with which the rectory of Flixborough was consolidated in 1729, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of Sir Robert Sheffield, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The village is situated on the brow of a hill, at the foot of which flows the river Trent, where there is a wharf, or staith, commonly called Stather, whence the adjunct to the name. It was formerly of much greater extent than it is at present, having been greatly reduced by a tempest that entirely destroyed several of the houses, and injured the church: part of it was also damaged, in 1777, by the explosion of a brig laden with gunpowder; and the increase of Gainsborough, a neighbouring market town, has contributed still further to its decline. The market was on Tuesday: fairs are held on the first Monday in May, and the first Monday after Martinmas. On the summit of Alkborough hill is a kind of labyrinth, called the Julian tower, supposed to be the remains of a Roman fortification.

DERBY, and containing 6700 inhabitants, of which number, 4114 are in the town of Burton, 24 miles (E.) from Stafford, and 124 (N. W. by N.) from London. This place derived its name from having been a Saxon burgh of considerable importance, and its adjunct from being situated on the river Trent. In the ninth century, St. Modwena, who had been expelled from her monastery in Ireland, came hither, and having obtained an asylum from King Ethelwolf, in reward for a miraculous cure that she is said to have performed on his son Alfred, erected a chapel, and dedicated it to St. Andrew:

the site, still called St. Modwena's garden, is the only part visible. In 1004, Wulfic, Earl of Mercia, founded an abbey for monks of the Benedictine order, which, from the vestiges still to be traced, appears to have been one of the most considerable in the kingdom: it was a mitred abbey, richly endowed, and invested with extensive privileges; its revenue, at the dissolution, was £356. 16. 3. The remains consist principally of some fine Norman arches that formed part of the cloisters, which included an area one hundred feet square, and of part of the entrance gateway, now converted into a blacksmith's shop. In 1225, a considerable part of the town was destroyed by an accidental fire. In the reign of Edward II., Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, posted himself at Burton, and endeavoured to defend the passage of the river against the king; but being unsuccessful in his attempt, he fled with his forces into Scotland. During the parliamentary war, this town and neighbourhood were frequently the scene of action between the contending parties.

Burton is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale, on the northern bank of the river Trent, which is navigable from Gainsborough for vessels of considerable burden. Over the river is a noble bridge of freestone, five hundred and twelve yards in length, consisting of thirty-seven arches, built prior to the Conquest, and substantially repaired in the reign of Henry II.: the expense of repairing it devolves upon the Marquis of Anglesey. The town, consisting principally of one street in a direction parallel with the river, is well paved, lighted with gas, and plentifully supplied with water; the houses are in general modern and well built. There is a public subscription library and news-room; and assemblies and concerts take place occasionally at the town-hall. The principal branch of manufacture is that of cotton, power-looms being employed in weaving it: an ancient water-mill in the vicinity of the town, noticed in the Norman survey, is now appropriated to the grinding of corn, and to making scrap-iron into bars; a few articles in iron are also made, particularly screws. This town has long been celebrated for its ale, a great quantity of which is sent to London, and other large towns in England. A company was formerly established for regulating the navigation of the river Trent; but a canal has been constructed, which joins the Grand Trunk canal, and affords a more direct medium for the transport of goods. The market is on Thursday: fairs are held on February 5th, April 5th, Holy Thursday, July 16th, and October 29th, for cattle and cheese; the last continues six days, and is a great horse fair. The government is vested in a high steward, deputy-steward, and bailiff, appointed by the Marquis of Anglesey, as lord of the manor, who holds a court leet and a court baron annually in October. The bailiff is a justice of the peace, and acts also as coroner. The power to try and execute criminals, and to hold courts of pleas to any amount, was formerly enjoyed. A court, called the Genter's court, the jurisdiction of which extends over the whole parish, is held every third Friday, before the steward, or his deputy, for the recovery of debts not exceeding 40s. The inhabitants, by virtue of letters patent granted in the 11th of Henry VIII., are exempt from serving the office of sheriff, and from being summoned as jurors at the assizes and sessions for the county.

The town-hall is a handsome building, erected at the expense of the Marquis of Anglesey, and containing, in addition to the offices for transacting the public business, a handsome suite of assembly-rooms.

The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £800 parliamentary grant, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the lord of the manor. The ancient church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Modwena, formerly belonged to the abbey, and was made collegiate by Henry VIII; having been greatly damaged in the parliamentary war, it was taken down, and the present edifice, a handsome structure with a tower, though less embellished than the former, was erected on its site, in 1720. A new church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in 1823, on a piece of land given by the Marquis of Anglesey: it is a very handsome structure, in the decorated style of English architecture, and highly ornamental to the town. It was built and endowed by the executors of Isaac Hawkins, Esq.; and the living, which is a perpetual curacy, is in the patronage of the Marquis of Anglesey. There are places of worship for General and Particular Baptists, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded, in 1520, by William Beane, abbot, and endowed with lands producing at present £450 per annum, of which the master receives two-thirds, and the usher the remainder: there are sixty boys on the foundation. Richard Allsop, in 1728, bequeathed property with which land was purchased, now producing £24 per annum, to found a school for the instruction of thirty boys, for the clothing of four of whom, Francis Astle, in 1735, left a messuage producing £5 per annum. There are Sunday schools, established under the patronage of the Marquis and Marchioness of Anglesey. Almshouses were founded and endowed, in 1634, by Mrs. Ellen Parker, for six widows or maidens, who receive each an allowance of £10 annually: the management is vested in eight trustees. Other almshouses were founded in 1591, for five unmarried women, and endowed by Dame Elizabeth Pawlett, the present income of which is about £80 per annum; out of this a certain sum is paid to the master and usher of the free grammar school. There are various other charities, the principal of which, by Mrs. Almund, yields about £72 per annum. Isaac Hawkins Browne, a poet of minor celebrity, was born here, about 1705. Near Branson is a chalybeate spring.

BURTON upon URE, a township in the parish of MASHAM, eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 1 mile (N.) from Masham, containing 170 inhabitants. This township is chiefly composed of dispersed farm-houses, one of which is called High Burton, another Low Burton Hall, and a third Burton House. At a place called Aldborough was the ancient castle of William le Gros, Earl of Albemarle, who, for having gained the battle of the Standard, was created Earl of York, in 1139.

BURTON (WEST), a parish in the North-clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 3½ miles (S. S. W.) from Gainsborough, containing 37 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, endowed with £20 per annum private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of David Walters, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. This parish is bounded on the east by the river Trent.

BURTON on the WOLDS, a township in the parish of PRESTWOLD, eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 3½ miles (E. N. E.) from Loughborough, containing 416 inhabitants. The Wesleyan Methodists have a meeting-house here. There is a small endowment for teaching, clothing, and apprenticing children, chiefly arising from benefactions by Miles Newton, in 1757, and John Kirk.

BURTON-AGNES, a parish in the wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Burton-Agnes, Gransmoor, Haisthorp, and Thornholm, and containing 609 inhabitants, of which number, 321 are in the township of Burton-Agnes, 6½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Great Driffield. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £20. 6. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. A. Mills. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. Adjoining it is an old building, used as a school-room, in which between thirty and forty children of both sexes are taught English gratuitously, from a bequest of £200 by Richard Green, in 1563, which having been invested in land, now produces £50 a year: this sum is divided into three parts, one of them being given to the schoolmaster, another to the poor, and the third expended in repairing the church. An hospital for four poor widows was founded, and endowed with an annuity of £20. 10., by the widow of the late William Boynton, Esq.

BURTON - BISHOP, a parish in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, 2½ miles (W.) from Beverley, containing 534 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £700 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of North Newbold in the Cathedral Church of York. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists, with a Sunday school attached, in which about one hundred children are taught. Ten poor children are instructed in English for £20 a year, being the rental of some land purchased with a legacy of £100 from Mrs. Elizabeth Gee, in 1714. Almshouses for four persons are endowed with about £70 per annum, arising from property given by Ralph Hansby, by deed dated July 24th, 1614.

BURTON-BRADSTOCK, a parish in the liberty of FRAMPTON, though locally in the hundred of Godder-Thorne, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 2½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bridport, containing 854 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £25, and in the patronage of Lord Rivers. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. This parish has the English channel on the south, and Bridport harbour on the west; the cliffs on the beach rise perpendicularly to a considerable height, and contain a vast quantity of fossils.

BURTON-COGGLES, a parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 1½ mile (W. N. W.) from Corby, containing 245 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £16. 12. 3½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket. A charity school has a small endowment arising from bequests by John Speight, in 1734, and Catherine Chomeley, in 1773.

BURTON-CONSTABLE, a township in the parish of FINGALL, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (N. E.) from Middleham, containing 204 inhabitants.

BURTON-DASSETT, a parish (formerly a market town) in the Burton-Dassett division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 5½ miles (E.) from Kington, containing 670 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BURTON-EXTRA, a township in that part of the parish of BURTON upon TRENT which is in the northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, contiguous to the southern part of the town of Burton upon Trent, containing 910 inhabitants.

BURTON-FLEMING, or (NORTH), a parish in the wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, 3½ miles (S. by W.) from Hunmanby, containing 386 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 4. 2., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of H. Osbaldeston, Esq. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BURTON-GATE, a parish in the wapentake of WELL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Gainsborough, containing 110 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 10., and in the patronage of W. Hut-ton, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

BURTON-HASTINGS, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 4½ miles (E. S. E.) from Nuneaton, containing 241 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of G. Greenway, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph. The Ashby de la Zouch canal passes through this parish, which is also intersected by the Roman Watling-street.

BURTON-HILL, a tything in the parish and hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, ¾ of a mile (S.) from Malmesbury, containing 192 inhabitants.

BURTON-JOYCE, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, 5 miles (N. E. by E.) from Nottingham, containing, with the chapelry of Bulcote, 650 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 19. 2., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is an ancient spacious structure, with a spire: in a niche of the north aisle is an upright effigy of an armed knight, standing on a lion, and bearing a shield on the left arm, said to represent Robert de Joaz, who lived in the reign of Edw. I.; and in the chancel are two altar-tombs of deceased members of the family of Stapelton, with inscriptions in Saxon characters. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is pleasantly situated on the northern bank of the river Trent. Courts leet and baron are held annually for the manor.

BURTON-LATIMER, a parish in the hundred of HUXLOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (S. E.) from Kettering, containing 842 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £29. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Grimshaw. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A silk-manufactory on an extensive scale has of late years been established in this parish. Here is a free school with a considerable endowment.

BURTON-LAZARS, a chapelry in the parish of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 1½ mile (S. E. by S.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 249 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. In the reign of Stephen, an hospital, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary and St. Lazarus, was founded here by a general collection throughout England, the principal contributor being Roger de Mowbray, who gave two carucates of land, a house, a mill, &c.: it was dependent on the great house at Jerusalem, and was the chief of all the lazaret-houses in England: the revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £265. 10. 2. It stood near a spring, the water of which was formerly in high repute for curing the leprosy: a bath and a drinking-room were built about 1760, and are frequented by persons afflicted with scrofulous and scorbutic disorders.

BURTON-LEONARD, a parish partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, East riding, and partly in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding, of the county of YORK, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Knaresborough, containing 518 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of York, rated in the king's books at £3. 1. 0½., and endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a small plain structure, built about forty years ago. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the dressing of flax, and the manufacture of linen.

BURTON-OVERY, a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, 7½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Leicester, containing 383 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. S. Lee. There is a chalybeate spring within the parish, but it is not much resorted to.

BURTON-PEDWARDINE, a parish in the wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Sleaford, containing 124 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 12. 8½., and in the patronage of T. O. Hunter, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, has a lofty tower of considerable antiquity, but is in a very ruinous condition.

BURTON-PIDSEA, a parish partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 378 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, within the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of York, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant. The church is principally in the later style of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is situated on rising ground, whence there is an extensive prospect of the surrounding country.

BURTON-SALMON, a township in the parish of MONK-FRYSTON, lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Ferry-Bridge, containing 192 inhabitants.

BURTONWOOD, a chapelry in the parish of WARRINGTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Newton in Mackerfield, containing 911 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Warrington.

BURWARDSLEY, a chapelry in that part of the parish of BUNBURY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Tarporley, containing 272 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Trustees. The chapel, dedicated to St. John, was built on the waste by subscription, and consecrated in 1735.

BURWARTON, a parish in the hundred of STORTESDEN, county of SALOP, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Ludlow, containing 123 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 6. 8., and in the patronage of B. Holland, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

BURWASH, a parish partly in the hundred of SHOYSWELL, partly in the hundred of HENHURST, but chiefly in the hundred of HAWKESBOROUGH, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Wadhurst, containing 1937 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Curteis. There is also a sinecure rectory, rated at £8. 10., in the gift of the same patron. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is partly in the early style of English architecture, and partly of later date. The petty sessions are held here. A National school, in which about eighty boys and the same number of girls are instructed, has an endowment of £35. 10. per annum, arising from property in land and stock, purchased with the amount of sundry contributions.

BURWELL, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Louth, containing 161 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Walmsgate annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of M. B. Lister, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Fairs are held annually on May 15th and Old Michaelmas-day. There are the remains of a small Alien priory of Benedictine monks, founded by John de Hay, and given by some of the lords of Kyme to the abbey of St. Mary Sylve Majoris, near Bordeaux. This is the birthplace of the celebrated Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, whose ascendancy in the affections of Queen Anne had a material influence on the political events of that reign.

BURWELL, a tything in that part of the parish of HAMBLEDON which is in the hundred of MEON-STOKE, Portsdown division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON. The population is returned with the parish.

BURWELL (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of STAPLOE, county of CAMBRIDGE, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Newmarket, containing 1518 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with which the rectory of Burwell St. Andrew is consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated jointly in the king's books at £50. 14. 2., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Guilford, on the nomination of the University of Cambridge. The church is a beautiful edifice, in the decorated style of English architecture: the rental of one hundred acres of arable land is appropriated for preserving it in repair. The church of St. Andrew has long been demolished, and the cemetery converted into pasture ground. The village consists principally of one irregular street, about three quarters of a mile long, the houses in which are built with a peculiar kind of stone obtained in quarries in the vicinity, in which pyrites and sharks' teeth, in good preservation, have been found. A great fair for horses is held, annually on Rogation-Monday, at Reach, once a market town, now an insignificant hamlet, partly in this parish. A navigable cut extends from this place. Here are the ruins of a castle, surrounded by a moat, which was besieged in the war between Stephen and the Empress Matilda, by Geoffrey de Mandeville, Earl of Essex, who was shot by an arrow from the walls. The parish register contains the record of a melancholy event arising from a fire that broke out in a barn, in the evening of the 8th of September, 1727, whereby seventy-eight persons, who had assembled to witness a puppet-show, lost their lives; the mangled and half-consumed bodies of the sufferers were promiscuously interred in two pits, dug for them in the churchyard.

BURY, a parish in the hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 1 mile (S.) from Ramsey, containing 337 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of George Maule, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is the eastern part of a large cruciform edifice, and exhibits a mixture of Norman and early English architecture, with some interesting specimens of both; the entrance to the chancel from the nave is under a carved wooden screen. Bury formed part of the possessions of Ramsey abbey; and there is a strong stone bridge of two arches over a small brook, which is supposed to have been built by one of the abbots.

BURY, a parish comprising the market town of Bury, the chapelries of Heap, Higher Tottington, and Lower Tottington, and the townships of Elton and Wal- mersley, in the hundred of SALFORD, and the townships of Coupe-Lench with Newhallhey and Hall-Carr, Henheads, and Musbury, in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, and containing 34,581 inhabitants, of which number, 10,583 are in the town of Bury, 48½ miles (S.E. by S.) from Lancaster, 9 (N.N.W.) from Manchester, and 195½ (N.N.W.) from London. Some antiquaries suppose this to have been a Roman station; it was certainly a Saxon town, as its name obviously implies, the Saxon word Byri signifying a fortified place. Leland notices the remains of a castle near the church, the site of which, still called Castle Croft, was near the ancient bed of the river Irwell. This castle, one of the twelve baronial castles in the county, was entirely demolished about the year 1644, by the parliamentary troops, who, after having laid siege to the town, and thrown up an intrenchment at a place called Castle Steads, in the adjoining township of Walmersley, battered down the small remains that were then existing; fragments of the building are still occasionally discovered in digging the ground near its site. In 1787, nearly three hundred persons having assembled in a barn, to witness the performance of some itinerant players, the gable end gave way, and the whole building fell, and buried the audience in its ruins.

The town is situated on a gentle acclivity rising from the eastern bank of the river Irwell, over which is a stone bridge, and is skirted on the east by the river Roche, which falls into the Irwell about two miles and a half to the south. It is indifferently paved, well lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water by pumps: the houses, generally old and dilapidated, are rapidly giving place to modern structures; and among the more recent improvements may be noticed a spacious square of well-built houses at the northern extremity of the town. There are a public subscription library, a news-room, a botanical institution, and a mechanics' library; and a medical library, together with a splendid billiard-room, has been recently established by John Woodcock, Esq. The woollen trade was introduced in the reign of Edward III., and increased so as to constitute the staple trade of the town in the reign of Elizabeth, who stationed one of her aulnagers here, to stamp the cloth: it is still carried on to a considerable extent, and furnishes employment to nearly four thousand persons; the principal articles manufactured are baize, flannel, coating, blankets, &c. The cotton manufacture, improved by the various ingenious inventions of Mr. John Kay and his sons, is also carried on; and printing establishments on an extensive scale owe their introduction to the late Sir Robert Peel, Bart., whose works, together with the houses of the workmen, extend for a considerable distance along the banks of the river: there are also large bleaching-grounds in the neighbourhood. Coal abounds within the parish. A branch of the Manchester and Bolton canal, constructed under an act of parliament in 1791, affords a facility of communication with every part of the kingdom. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on March 8th, May 3rd, and September 18th. Bury is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a meeting every Saturday. Petty sessions for the division are held here every alternate Saturday. Courts leet are held in April and October, and at Whitsuntide, at which last three constables are appointed for the town, subordinate to whom is a deputy constable, who holds his office for life; the jurisdiction extends over the whole parish. A court baron is also held every third week, for the recovery of debts under 40s. At a place called Castle Hill, not far hence, the court for the royal manor of Tottington was anciently held; it exercised jurisdiction in capital crimes, a neighbouring eminence, called Gallows Hill, having been the place of execution.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £29. 11. 5½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Derby. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was taken down, with the exception of the tower, which is surmounted by a low spire, and rebuilt in 1776. St. John's chapel, a neat edifice, was erected in 1770: the living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector, who also presents to the other chapels in the parish. There are two meeting-houses for Independents, and one each for Primitive, Wesleyan, and New Connexion of Methodists, Presbyterians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school was founded, in 1726, by the Rev. Roger Kay, prebendary in Salisbury Cathedral, who endowed it with estates now producing yearly about £440, of which the master receives £200, and the usher £100, per annum: it has two exhibitions, of £25 per annum each, to be continued for six years during residence at either of the Universities. The same foundation includes also the instruction of ten girls, for teaching whom a mistress is allowed £7 per annum: a premium is also given with such of the scholars as are apprenticed to a trade. The management is vested in thirteen trustees, seven of whom, including the rector of Bury, the warden of Manchester, and the rector of Prestwich, must be beneficed clergymen residing within ten miles of the town, and the other six, laymen of the church of England, and possessing property within the parish. The premises, comprising two school-rooms and dwellings for the masters, are handsomely built. A charity school, for the instruction of eighty boys and thirty girls, was founded and endowed, in 1748, by the Hon. and Rev. John Stanley, formerly rector: in 1815, the income having been much augmented by annual subscription, it was enlarged into a National school, and a spacious building erected, at an expense of £1000, raised by subscription; the lower apartment is for the instruction of boys, and the upper for that of girls: about sixty of the boys and forty of the girls, on an average, are clothed, in pursuance of the will of the founder. A savings bank was established in 1822, and a dispensary in 1829; there is also a lying-in charity. The Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, Bart., late Secretary of State for the Home Department, was born at Chamber Hall, a mansion in this parish, the present residence of the family of Hardman.

BURY, a hamlet in the parish of BROMPTON-REGIS, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, 2¼ miles (E.) from Dulverton. The population is returned with the parish. Near this place is an intrenched mount, called Bury Castle, supposed to have been originally a military post of the Romans, on which a mansion belonging to the family of Besilles was subsequently erected.

BURY, a parish in the hundred of BURY, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, 4 miles (N.) from Arundel, containing, with the tything of Westburton, 504 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7. 5. 5., endowed with £600 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Bury in the Cathedral Church of Chichester. The river Arun runs on the east, and the river Rother, or Arundel Navigation, on the north.

BURY (ST. EDMUND'S), a borough and market town, having exclusive jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Thingoe, county of SUFFOLK, 26½ miles (N.W. by W.) from Ipswich, and 71 (N.E. by N.) from London, containing 9999 inhabitants. This was a place of importance long before the introduction of Christianity into Britain, and is by some antiquaries supposed to have been the Villa Faustina of the Romans; it evidently was in the possession of that people, from the discovery of many Roman antiquities, among which are four antique heads, of colossal dimensions, cut out of single blocks of freestone, representing some of their divinities, which were found in digging up an old foundation. Soon after the settlement of the Saxons it was made a royal burgh, and called Beodrics worthe, signifying the dwelling of Beodric, to whom it belonged at the time of the Octarchy, and who, at his death, bequeathed it to Edmund, afterwards canonized as a martyr, from whom it was named St. Edmund's Bury. Edmund, having succeeded to the kingdom of East Anglia, on the death of Offa, was crowned here in the fifteenth year of his age; but being afterwards taken prisoner by the Danes, who in 870 made an irruption into this part of the country, he was cruelly put to death. The circumstances attending his death and burial are thus superstitiously related: on his refusal to become a vassal to the conquerors, they bound him to a tree, pierced his body with arrows, and striking off his head, threw it into a neighbouring forest. After the enemy had retired, the East Anglians assembled to perform the funeral obsequies to the remains of their sovereign; having found the body, they went into the forest to search for the head, and discovered it between the fore paws of a wolf, which immediately resigned it on their approach: the head, on being placed in contact with the trunk, is then said to have re-united so closely, that the juncture was scarcely visible. The subject of this fabulous story has been assumed for the device of the corporate seal.

Forty days after his death, the remains of Edmund were interred at Hoxne, in a small chapel built of wood, and the report of miracles wrought at his tomb being promulgated and believed, they were removed to this place in 903. A new church was built in honour of St. Edmund, by some Secular priests, who were incorporated by King Athelstan, about the year 925, and the establishment made collegiate. The town and church having been nearly destroyed by Sweyn, King of Denmark, in 1010, were restored by Canute, who being warned, as it is said, by a vision, raised the town to more than its former splendour, rebuilt the church and monastery, which he endowed with great possessions, and, expelling the Secular canons, placed in their stead monks of the Benedictine order. The monastery of St. Edmund, in process of time, became one of the most splendid establishments in the kingdom; and, in magnificent buildings, costly decorations, valuable immunities, and rich endowments, was inferior only to that of Glastonbury. It had the royalties, or franchises, of many separate hundreds, and the right of coinage; its abbot sate in parliament, and possessed the power of determining all suits within the franchise, or liberty, of Bury, and of inflicting capital punishment. These high privileges were frequently the cause of strife and bloodshed; and in the year 1327, the townsmen and neighbouring villagers, assembling to the number of twenty thousand, headed by their alderman and capital burgesses, made a violent attack upon the monastery; they demolished the gates, doors, and windows, and reduced a considerable part of the building to ashes; they wounded the monks, and pillaged the coffers, from which they took the charters, deeds, and other valuable property, including plate, £5000 sterling, and three thousand florins of gold. The king, having been informed of this outrage, sent a military force to quell the tumult; the alderman and twenty-four of the burgesses were imprisoned, and thirty carts loaded with rioters were sent to Norwich; of these, nineteen were executed, and one was pressed to death for refusing to plead: thirty-two of the parochial clergy were also convicted as abettors; and the inhabitants were adjudged to pay a fine of £140,000, which was afterwards mitigated on the restoration of the stolen property.

The monastery remained in the possession of the Benedictine monks for five hundred and nineteen years; it contained within its precincts the churches of St. Margaret, St. Mary, and St. James, and its revenue, at the dissolution, was £2336. 16. The remains consist chiefly of the abbey gate, still entire, and displaying some elegant features in the decorated style of English architecture; the abbey bridge, in good preservation; and detached portions of the walls, which still exhibit traces of its former magnificence. About the year 1256, a fraternity of the Franciscan order came to Bury, but they were compelled by the abbot to remove beyond the precincts of the town, where their establishment continued till the dissolution. Henry I., on his return from Chartres, repaired to the shrine of St. Edmund, where he presented a rich offering, in gratitude for his safe return to his own dominions; and in 1173, Henry II., having assembled a large army at this place, to oppose his rebellious sons, caused the sacred standard of St. Edmund to be borne in front of his troops, and to its influence was ascribed the victory that he obtained over them in the battle of the 27th of October. In 1214, King John was met here by the barons, who compelled him to confirm the grant of Magna Charta, to abolish the Norman laws, and to govern the kingdom by those of Edward the Confessor. Henry III. held a parliament here in 1272, which may be regarded as the outline of a British House of Commons; and in 1296, Edward I. visited this town, where he also held a parliament. In 1381, Sir John Cavendish, then Lord Chief Justice, was brought hither and beheaded by the Suffolk and Norfolk insurgents, amounting to fifty thousand men, who afterwards attacked the abbey, executed the prior, Sir John Cambridge, and continued their career of lawless outrage till they were finally dispersed by the exertions of Spencer, the martial Bishop of Norwich. In 1526, the Dukes of Suffolk and Norfolk assembled their forces here, to quell a dangerous insurrection of the inhabitants of Lavenham and the adjacent country; and on the death of Edward VI., in 1553, John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, made this place the rendezvous of his forces, when he caused Lady Jane Grey to be proclaimed successor to the throne. In 1555-6, twelve persons were burned at the stake, in the persecutions on account of religious tenets during the reign of Mary: in 1583, her successor Elizabeth visited Bury, where she was magnificently entertained.

The town is delightfully situated on a gentle eminence, on the western bank of the river Larke, also called the Bourne, in the centre of an open and richly cultivated tract of country: the streets are spacious, well paved, and lighted with oil, under an act of parliament passed in the 51st of George III., and extended for general improvement in the 1st of George IV. The houses are in general uniform and handsomely built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water: the air is salubrious, the environs abound with interesting scenery, and the peculiar cleanliness of the town, and the number and variety of its public institutions, render it desirable as a place of residence. The subscription library, formed by the union of two separate institutions, one of which was established in 1790, and the other in 1795, contains a valuable collection, and is liberally supported: there are also a news-room, four circulating libraries, and a billiard-room. The botanical gardens, containing a well-arranged assortment of aquatic, alpine, and herbaceous plants, and forming an agreeable promenade, in one of the finest situations, commanding a view of the ruins of the abbey and much picturesque scenery, were established by Mr. N. S. Hodson, and are supported by an annual subscription of two guineas from each member: the theatre, a neat building, erected in 1819, is opened during the great fair, by the Norwich company of comedians. Concerts take place occasionally in the old theatre, built in 1780, which has been converted to this use; and assemblies are held during the season at the subscription rooms, erected in 1804, and handsomely fitted up. A mechanics' institution has recently been established. The spinning of yarn was formerly the principal source of employment for the poor, and the halls in which the wool was deposited are yet standing; but no particular branch of manufacture is at present carried on. About a mile from the town the river Larke becomes navigable to Lynn, whence coal and other commodities are brought hither in small barges. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday, the former for corn, &c., the latter for meat and poultry. Fairs are held on the Tuesday in Easter week, for toys, &c.; October 1st, for horses, cattle, butter, and cheese: the great fair commences on the 10th of the same month, and generally continues about three weeks; and December 1st, for cattle, butter, cheese, &c.

VOL. I.

Corporate Seal.

The government, by charter of incorporation granted in the 4th of James I., and extended in subsequent reigns, is vested in an alderman, recorder, twelve capital burgesses, and twenty-four common councilmen, assisted by a town-clerk, four serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The alderman, who is chosen annually from among the capital burgesses, recorder, and coroner, are justices of the peace; there are also five assistant justices, chosen either from the burgesses, or from the inhabitants generally: these magistrates exercise exclusive jurisdiction. The freedom of the borough is acquired by servitude and gift, but is never taken up. The corporation hold courts of session for the trial of capital offenders, and a court of pleas to the amount of £200: a court for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held under the chief steward of the liberty of Bury. The assizes for the county and liberty are also held here: there is always a separate commission for the borough and liberty. The shire-hall, on the site of the ancient church of St. Margaret, is a neat modern building, containing two courts for civil and criminal causes. The guildhall, where the borough courts are held, has a beautiful ancient porch of flint, brick, and stone, on which are sculptured the arms of the borough; the hall contains some good portraits of members of the corporation, and representatives of the borough, among which is a portrait of Admiral Hervey, by Sir Joshua Reynolds; over the entrance is a chamber wherein the records of the corporation are deposited. The town bridewell, situated on the Hog hill, was formerly a synagogue; the circular windows bespeak its antiquity, and it appears, from other parts, to be of Norman origin. The new county gaol, erected in 1805, is a spacious building upon the radiating principle, the keeper's house being in the centre: the buildings are surrounded by a stone wall twenty feet high, enclosing an octagonal area, the diameter of which is two hundred and ninety-two feet; they consist of four wings, and have been lately enlarged; a tread-wheel has also been recently added. The house of correction, near the gaol, enclosed within a high wall, is arranged with a due regard to classification; and the internal regulations are superior to those of most others in the country. The borough first received a precept to return representatives to parliament in the 30th of Edward I., but made no subsequent return till the 4th of James I., since which it has continued to send two members: the right of election is vested exclusively in the alderman and thirty-six burgesses, who are in the interest of the Duke of Grafton and the Marquis of Bristol: the alderman is the returning officer, and has the casting vote.

Bury comprises the parishes of St. Mary and St. James; the living of each is a donative, in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, completed about the year 1433, is a spacious and elegant structure in the later style of English architecture, with a low massive tower; the north BUTTERLEIGH, a parish, forming a detached portion of the hundred of CLISTON, locally in the hundred of Hayridge, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Tiverton, containing 144 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10: 8: 8., and in the patronage of the Crown.

BUTTERLEY, a hamlet in the township of RIPLEY, parish of PENTRICH, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, 3 miles (S.) from Alfres-ton. The population is returned with Ripley. The extensive iron-works at this place belong to a company formed in 1792, who are also owners of various similar establishments, collieries, and lime-works in the vicinity. The ore and coal are conveyed to the Butterley works by railways, and by the Cromford canal, which, by means of a tunnel two thousand nine hundred and sixty-six yards in length, passes under the works; to this a shaft about thirty-six yards in depth has been sunk, up which the ore is raised by a steam-engine. There are about fifteen hundred workmen; and the number of steam-engines employed in the works and mines is twenty-six, affording an aggregate power equal to that of seven hundred and six horses. All the heavier articles in cast-iron, and machinery of various kinds, are produced at these works. Among those made for different public undertakings may be enumerated the cast-iron work for Vauxhall bridge, the great roof over the quay and other works at the West India docks, the bridges and lock-gates of the Caledonian canal, a great part of the cast-iron work for the dock-yard at Sheerness, the whole of that for the harbours and docks at Dublin and Leith, the large main pipes for supplying Edinburgh with water, and the pipes for many of the Water and Gas Companies in England: several steam-engines for vessels, and for exportation to the colonies, have been made: the entire process of constructing them, from the raising of the ore to completing the engine, is here carried on. The Cromford canal affords a medium for the conveyance of goods by water to Cromford, where the navigation terminates, and where the Cromford and High Peak railway, planned by Josias Jessop, Esq., of Butterley (the expense of constructing which is estimated at £180,000), commences, extending to Whalley bridge, near Stockport, a distance of about thirty-two miles and a half: another, called the Stockport Junction railway, has been planned connecting the former with the Manchester and Liverpool line, and thus forming a distinct medium of communication between Cromford and Liverpool.

BUTTERLEY, a township in the parish of EDWIN-RALPH, hundred of WOLPHY, though locally in the hundred of Broxash, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Bromyard. The population is returned with the parish.

BUTTERMERE, a chapelry in the parish of BRIGHAM, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Keswick, containing 136 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the inhabitants. The village lies in a deep winding valley, environed by high rocky mountains, between the lake of Buttermere, noted for its char, and Crummock water, and in a district celebrated for its picturesque and romantic beauty. Mines of lead and copper were formerly worked in these mountains: many of the labourers are now occupied in the extensive quarries of fine blue slate in Honister Crag.

BUTTERMERE, a parish in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Hungerford, containing 136 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. James.

BUTTERTON, a township in the parish of TRENT-HAM, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 22 inhabitants.

BUTTERTON, a chapelry in the parish of MAYFIELD, southern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Leek, containing 432 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Mayfield. William Mellor, in 1754, bequeathed property now producing £16 a year, for which twenty children are taught to read. Butters-ton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

BUTTERWICK, a tything in the parish of FOLKE, hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Sherborne. The population is returned with the parish.

BUTTERWICK, a township in the parish of SEDGEFIELD, north-eastern division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 11 miles (S. E.) from Durham, containing 54 inhabitants.

BUTTERWICK, a parish in the wapentake of SKIRBECK, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Boston, containing 482 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united in 1751 to that of Frieston, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 4. 2. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A considerable fund is applied towards the instruction of children, besides which there are various minor sums for the relief of the poor.

BUTTERWICK, a chapelry in the parish of FOXHOLES, wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Great Driffield, containing 93 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Foxholes.

BUTTERWICK, a township in that part of the parish of BARTON le STREET which is in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (N. W.) from New Malton, containing 50 inhabitants.

BUTTERWICK (EAST), a township in the parish of MESSINGHAM, eastern division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 248 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BUTTERWICK (WEST), a chapelry in the parish of OWSTON, western division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Epworth, containing, with the hamlet of Kelfield, 669 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £2000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Owston. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BUTTERWORTH, a township in that part of the parish of ROCHDALE which is in the hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Rochdale, containing 5554 inhabitants. A school at Milnrow, in this township, was built by Alexander Butterworth, about 1720, and endowed with a rent-charge of £20, to which £7 per annum, accumulated during a vacancy in the school from the year 1789 to 1796, has been added, and for this twenty children are taught free. There are also schools at Hollingworth and Ogden, in each of which twenty children are taught and partly clothed: that at Hollingworth is endowed with an estate producing £26 a year, and that at Ogden with one producing £54 a year, both devised by John Hill, in 1727.

BUTTOLPHS, a parish in the hundred of STEYNING, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Steyning, containing 62 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Bramber, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester. The navigable river Adur runs along the eastern boundary of this parish.

BUTTSBURY, a parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Chelmsford, containing 522 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with the rectory of Ingatestone annexed, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. D. Lloyd. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BUXHALL, a parish in the hundred of STOW, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Stow-Market, containing 457 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £20. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Heirs of the late Rev. H. Hill. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious handsome structure. The Upper and Lower Ged, and the river Bret, flow through the parish. A considerable traffic in corn and coal is carried on with Stow-Market and Ipswich. There is a school for poor children, supported by voluntary contributions.

BUXLOW, formerly a chapelry, now a hamlet in the parish of KNODISHALL, hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Saxmundham. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel, now desecrated, was dedicated to St. Peter. Buxlow was annexed to the parish of Knodishall in 1721.

BUXTED, a parish in the hundred of LOXFELD-DORSET, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Uckfield, containing 1509 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Uckfield annexed, in the exempt deanery of South Malling, within the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £37. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is principally in the early style of English architecture. The Rev. Anthony Sanders left, in 1718, a considerable bequest in land, for teaching and apprenticing six poor boys, and a small donation for teaching six girls. Sir Henry Fermor bequeathed £3000, directing the interest to be applied in educating and clothing ten poor children of this parish, and thirty from Rotherfield.

BUXTON, a market town and chapelry in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 33 miles (N. W.) from Derby, and 159 (N. W.) by N. from London, on the high road from Derby to Manchester, containing 1036 inhabitants. Antiquaries agree in considering this to have been a Roman station, although they have not been able to ascertain what it was called. The name of the place subsequently was Bawkestan, supposed to be a corruption of Bathanstanes, signifying the bath stones; and one of the Roman roads still retains the name Bathorn-gate. The Romans, attracted by the temperature of the waters, constructed a bath, the wall of which, covered with red cement, and other parts, are still remaining: several Roman coins have been discovered. Near this spot was the intersection of two great military roads, one connecting Little Chester with Manchester, and the other leading from Middlewich to Brough, and thence to York and Aldborough, at which places respectively were stations of considerable importance. The town is situated near the source of the small river Wye, in a valley surrounded by bleak elevated tracts of moorland; but several plantations have been formed on the adjacent eminences, which, with other improvements, will materially alter the appearance of the immediate vicinity: the older part, occupying the higher ground, consists chiefly of houses built of limestone, without order, and of mean appearance; the more modern, situated in the vale, comprises elegant lodging-houses and hotels, erected and fitted up with every regard to the comfort of its numerous visitors. The old hall, built in the sixteenth century by the Earl of Shrewsbury, for several years afforded temporary accommodation to visitors of rank; and for some time it was the abode of Mary, Queen of Scots, who, while in the custody of the earl, accompanied him and his countess in an excursion to this place. It underwent considerable alteration and enlargement in 1670, and is still the principal hotel: it contains two baths for ladies, and three for gentlemen, with distinct apartments for each; besides a bath for the gratuitous use of poor invalids: there are also warm and shower baths. The spring that supplies the baths in this establishment affords an influx of sixty gallons per minute: the mean temperature of the water is 82° of Fahrenheit. The crescent, erected in 1781, by the Duke of Devonshire, is a fine range of building in the Grecian style of architecture: it is built of grit-stone obtained near the spot, and fronted with fine freestone brought from a quarry about a mile distant, and consists of three stages; the basement story is a rustic arcade, extending round the whole of the building, and surmounted by a balustrade, above which are fluted pilasters of the Doric order, supporting a richly ornamented architrave and cornice, terminated by another balustrade: in the centre of the range are the arms of the Cavendish family. Among these buildings are several spacious lodging-houses and three hotels, called St. Anne's, the Central, and the Great hotel: the last, exclusively of other apartments, contains a splendid suite of rooms in which assemblies are held three times in the week, during the season; also a library and news-room. At the eastern extremity of the crescent, and communicating with the Great hotel, two hot baths have been recently constructed, and are supplied from Bingham's well, of which the temperature is 81° of Fahrenheit, and may be raised by means of steam to any higher degree of temperature required. In the front of the crescent is a rising ground, planted with trees, and disposed in parterres, shrubberies, and walks; and behind it is an extensive range of stabling, corresponding in character, including a spacious covered ride, affording to invalids in unfavourable weather the convenience of equestrian exercise. The new square, nearly adjoining, has an arcade communicating with that of the crescent, and forming a continued promenade of considerable extent: it contains many handsome lodging-houses, and there are also others in various parts of the town, but a preference in the use of the baths is enjoyed by those visitors who inhabit the houses belonging to the Duke of Devonshire. St. Ann's well, near the crescent, the resort of those who drink the waters, is enclosed within a handsome building in the style of a Grecian temple: the water issues from the spring into a marble basin, and opposite to it is a double pump, by which both hot and cold water are simultaneously raised from springs lying within a few inches of each other: the hot spring has a temperature of 81° of Fahrenheit. The waters are sulphureous and saline, but neither foetid nor unpalatable, the sulphur not being united with vitriolic, and but slightly with saline, particles; they are efficacious in gout, rheumatism, and indigestion, and in nervous, scorbutic, and nephritic diseases: the season commences early in June, continuing generally till October. There is also a chalybeate spring, the water of which is strongly impregnated with iron held in solution by acidulous gas. The environs abound with picturesque and romantic scenery, and with pleasant walks and rides; of the latter, the Duke's ride, on the Bakewell road, extending over the summit of a rock called the Lover's Leap, is a favourite excursion with equestrians: a pack of harriers is kept by subscription. The principal branch of trade consists in the manufacture and sale of many beautiful ornaments in fluor spar, alabaster, and other mineral productions of the Peak. A great quantity of lime, noted for its strength, is burnt to the west of the town, the workmen and their families living in huts excavated in the limestone rocks, near which passes the Peak Forest railway. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on February 3rd, April 1st, May 2nd, and September 8th, for cattle. The town is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. A new church, an elegant structure near the town, but without the limits of the chapelry, was erected under an act passed in the 51st of George III., in 1812, at the expense of his Grace. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. A school, now conducted on Dr. Bell's plan, was founded towards the close of the seventeenth century, and re-opened in 1817, after a suspension of twenty-five years, during which period its affairs were in Chancery: the income, arising from land and property in the funds, is £94 per annum: the school is held in the ancient chapel. The bath charity, for the benefit of poor invalids coming hither for the use of the waters, is liberally supported by subscription, and is under the superintendence of a president and committee: applicants, on presenting a certificate from the minister of their parish, signed by a medical practitioner, are not only permitted to bathe free of expense, but for one month receive a weekly allowance of money for their support, from a fund raised by a contribution of one shilling from every visitor who remains for more than one day in the town: according to the last annual report, one thousand one hundred persons had received relief to the amount of £450. About three quarters of a mile to the south-west of the town is Poole's Hole, a dark and dreary cavern, narrow and very low at the entrance, but spacious and lofty within, abounding with stalactites representing various natural forms; near the extremity is a rude mass, called the pillar of Mary, Queen of Scots, beyond which few persons advance: the visitors are accompanied by guides with candles, the light of which is brilliantly reflected from the various incrustations and crystals that decorate the sides, and hang from the roof, producing a beautiful, but dazzling, effect. About one mile and a half beyond the cavern is Diamond Hill, so called from the detached crystals found there in profusion, denominated Buxton diamonds; their form is hexagonal, and their surface and angles well defined, but of bad colour; when first found they are hard, but they soon lose that property.

BUXTON, a joint township with Coxhall, in that part of the parish of BUCKNILL which is in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Knighton, containing, with Coxhall, 134 inhabitants.

BUXTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Coltishall, containing 504 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectories of Oxnead and Skeyton annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 9., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of George Anson, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. In this parish are two almshouses, endowed by Sir John Picot with eighteen acres of land. This was a subordinate Roman station, the name of which is not precisely known; several coins, urns, and other remains of that people have been discovered.

BWLCH, a township in that part of the parish of CWMYOY which is in the hundred of EWYASLACY, county of HEREFORD, containing 81 inhabitants.

BYAL-FEN, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred and Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE.

BYERS-GREEN, a township in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW, AUCKLAND, which is in the south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Bishop-Auckland, containing 231 inhabitants.

BYFIELD, a parish in the hundred of CHIPPING-WARDEN, county of NORTHAMPTON, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Daventry, containing 903 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £28, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross. In 1694, Samuel Greenwood bequeathed a rent-charge of £2. 14. for teaching seven poor children; and, in 1779, the Rev. John Knightly left £2. 17. 6. per annum, which is now paid to the master of a Sunday school.

BYFLEET, a parish in the first division of the hundred of GODLEY, county of SURREY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Cobham, containing 427 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The manor was presented by Edward II. to his favourite, Piers de Gaveston; and Henry VIII. was nursed at a house in this place. The Wey and Arun Junction canal passes through the parish. An old mansion, called Byfield Park, at present a farm-house, was built by Edward the Black Prince.

BYFORD, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Hereford, containing 211 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £7. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BYGRAVE, a parish in the hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Baldock, containing 107 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £17. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Salisbury.

BYKER, a township in that part of the parish of ALL SAINTS, NEWCASTLE, which is in the eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Newcastle, containing 3852 inhabitants. The Wesleyan Methodists have a meeting-house here. There are glass-houses and other manufactories.

BYLAND cum MEMBRIS, a township in the parish of COXWOLD, wapentake of BIRDFOORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (S. W. by W.) from Helmsley, containing, with Oldstead and Wass, situated in Kilburn parish, 372 inhabitants. In 1177, a convent of Cistercian monks was founded here, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, amounted to £295. 5. 4.: it was a noble building; the western front, part of a fine circular window, one end of the transept, and some parts of the lateral aisles yet remain, affording a beautiful specimen of early English architecture. On the removal of a portion of the ruins, in 1818, a stone coffin, containing, according to tradition, the remains of Roger de Mowbray, its founder, was discovered, and is still preserved at Myton. Fragments of a beautiful tessellated pavement were also found.

BYLAND (OLD), a parish in the wapentake of BIRDFOORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Helmsley, containing 133 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of G. Wombwell, Esq.

BYLAUGH, a parish in the hundred of ERNSFORD, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from East Dereham, containing 93 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Norwich. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a venerable edifice, much dilapidated.

BYLEY, a joint township with Yatehouse, in that part of the parish of MIDDLEWICH which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by N.) from Middlewich, containing, with Yatehouse, 132 inhabitants.

BYRNESS, a chapelry in the parish of ELSDON, southern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $13\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Bellingham. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Elsdon. The chapel was rebuilt, in 1793, by subscription. Here was a Druidical temple, but every vestige of it has disappeared.

BYROME, a joint township with Pool, in the parish of BROTHERTON, partly within the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, East riding, but chiefly in the lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding, of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. W.) from Ferry Bridge. The population is returned with Pool.

BYSHOTTLES, a joint township with Brandon, in the parish of BRANCPETH, north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Durham. The population is returned with Brandon.

BYTHAM (CASTLE), a parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Corby, comprising the chapelry of Holywell with Awnby, and the hamlet of Couthorpe, and containing 736 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with which the rectory of Little Bytham is consolidated, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln and the Dean and Chapter, alternately. The church is dedicated to St. James. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

BYTHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S.) from Corby, containing 223 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of Castle Bytham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 8. 4. The church is dedicated to St. Medardus.

BYTHORN, a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Kimbolton, containing 293 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the rectory of Brington, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

BYTON, a parish in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.S.E.) from Presteigne, containing 167 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BYWELL (ST. ANDREW), a parish in the eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Bearl, Broomhaugh, Riding, Stocksfield-Hall, and Styford, and containing 399 inhabitants, exclusively of one-fourth of the population of the township of Bywell St. Andrew and St. Peter, which is in this parish, but included in the return for Bywell St. Peter. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Shotley annexed, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £3. 9. 2., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. W. Beaumont, Esq. The church is a small edifice with a lofty steeple. The river Tyne runs through the parish.

BYWELL (ST. PETER'S), a parish in the eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the chapelry of Whittonstall, and the townships of East Acomb, Broomley, Espersields with Millshields, High Fotherly, Heally, Newlands, Newton, Newton Hall, and Stelling, and part of the township of Bywell St. Andrew and St. Peter, and containing 1406 inhabitants, of which number, 174 are in the township of Bywell St. Andrew and St. Peter, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Hexham, on the northern bank of the Tyne. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. There are meeting-houses in the parish for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists. Bywell was anciently the head of a barony, the ruins of the castle being still visible at a short distance from Bywell Hall. The village is partly situated in the parish of Bywell St. Andrew, and partly in that of Bywell St. Peter, and was formerly noted for the manufacture of saddlers' ironmongery, which was in a flourishing state in the middle of the sixteenth century; it has now wholly declined, but there are still some vestiges of the works. In the river Tyne, which flows southward of this parish, two stone piers of an ancient bridge are still standing.

C.

CABOURN, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. N.E.) from Calistor, containing 105 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 18. 4., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Yarborough. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

CABUS, a township in the parish of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N.) from Garstang, containing 277 inhabitants.

CADBURY, a parish in the hundred of HAYRIDGE, county of DEVON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W.) from Tiverton, containing 242 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £9. 4. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. On the summit of a high hill, called Cadbury Castle, is an enclosure nearly circular, consisting of a single vallum and fosse, supposed to be either of British or of Roman origin.

CADBURY (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of CATSASH, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Castle-Cary, containing, with the hamlets of Galhampton, and Yarlinton, with Woolston and Clapton, 1003 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £28. 17. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Emanuel College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a stately and beautiful pile, pleasantly situated on the ridge of a hill. Henry V., in the fourth year of his reign, gave license to Dame Elizabeth Botreaux, relict of Sir William Botreaux the elder, to found and endow in the church (which she had then rebuilt) a college for seven secular chaplains (one of whom to be rector) and four clerks: it was to have been dedicated to St. Michael; but it does not appear ever to have been settled. On the ridge of a high hill overlooking the village is a Roman intrenchment, of an oval form, surrounded by a large double rampart composed of loose limestone, the produce of the spot on which it is situated.

CADBURY (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of CATSASH, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Castle-Cary, containing 257 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10. 3. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Francis Newman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket. Near the village are the remains of one of the most famous ancient fortifications in England: it was situated on the northern extremity of a ridge of hills, and encircled by four trenches; its figure inclined to a square, but conforming to the slope of the hill: the area is upwards of thirty acres. A higher work within, surrounded by a trench, is called King Arthur's palace; the rampart is composed of large stones covered with earth, with only one entrance, from the east, guarded by six or seven trenches. Numerous Roman coins, in gold, silver, and copper, have been discovered, chiefly those of Antoninus and Faustina; and, among other antiquities, a silver horse-shoe was dug up about the middle of the sixteenth century. Antiquaries are divided as to the origin of this place: the most probable conjecture seems to be that of Stukeley, who ascribes it to the Romans.

CADDINGTON, a parish partly in the hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, but chiefly in the hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Luton, containing, with a portion of the chapelry of Market-Street, 1549 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is in Bedfordshire. Market, originally Markgate, Cell, in this parish, was founded in 1145, chiefly by Geoffrey, Abbot of St. Albans, on land given by the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, for nuns of the Benedictine order, whose revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was £143. 18. 3; the proprietor appropriated part of the lands to the endowment of a chapel and a school in Market-Street; but it does not appear that they were ever applied to that purpose.

CADEBY, a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Market-Bosworth, containing, with a part of the township of Osbaston, 343 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 10. 2½., and in the patronage of Sir Willoughby Dixie, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CADEBY, or CATEBY, a chapelry in the parish of SPROTBOUGH, northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TROKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Doncaster, containing 169 inhabitants.

CADELEIGH, a parish in the hundred of HAYRIDGE, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Tiverton, containing 236 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of J. H. Moore, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

CADLEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, containing 45 inhabitants.

CADNAM, a hamlet partly in the parish of ELING, hundred of REDBRIDGE, and partly in the parish of MINSTEAD, northern division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, New Forest (East) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Lyndhurst. The population is returned with the parishes. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CADNEY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing, with the township of Housham, 303 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 4., and in the patronage of Lord Yarborough. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CADWELL, a tything in the parish of BRIGHTWELL-BALDWIN, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, containing 14 inhabitants.

CAENBY, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Market-Rasen, containing 121 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir C. M. L. Monck, Bart. The church is dedicated to St Nicholas. The river Ancholme bounds the parish on the east.

CAERLEON, a market town in the parish of LLANGATTOCK, lower division of the hundred of USK, county of MONMOUTH, $20\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Monmouth, and $151\frac{1}{2}$ (W.) from London, containing 1062 inhabitants. This place, called by the Britons Caerleon, city of the legion, or, according to some, Caerllian, city of the waters, was the Isca Silurum of the Romans, in the time of Claudius, whose second legion, being recalled from Germany, was stationed here under the command of Vespasian. It became the metropolis of that division of the island called Britannia Secunda, and one of the chief cities of the Romans, who fortified it with strong walls three miles in circuit, enclosing a quadrilateral area, measuring five hundred and thirty yards by four hundred and sixty: they erected temples, an amphitheatre, baths, aqueducts, and splendid dwellings of various descriptions, the magnificent remains of which, in the twelfth century, are described by Giraldus Cambrensis as emulating the grandeur of Rome itself. In the reign of Domitian, St. Julian and St. Aaron, both of whom preached the doctrine of Christianity in this part of Britain, suffered martyrdom at this place; but after the final submission of the Britons to the Roman power, Caerleon became, under the auspices of Antoninus, the seat of learning and devotion. Three Christian churches were erected, two in honour of the martyrs St. Julian and St. Aaron, to which a nunnery and a priory of Cistercian canons were annexed respectively; and a third, to which was added a monastery that afterwards became the metropolitan see of Wales, and of which Dubricius, the great opponent of the Pelagian heresy, was the first archbishop. Under his successors the see continued to flourish to such an extent, that, at the time of the Saxon invasion, its college is said to have contained, among other students, not less than two hundred who were well skilled in geography and astronomy; it was afterwards translated to Menevia by St. David, and has since that time been known as the see of St. David's: there are some small remains of the monastery still existing. The castle was probably built about the time of the Conquest, but no mention of it occurs till the year 1171, when Henry II. took the town, and deposed Iorwith ap Owen, lord of Gwent, who, in 1173, retook it after a vigorous defence, and restored it to the Welch. After repeated sieges it was retained by Llewellyn ap Iorwith till the reign of Edward I., when, upon the overthrow of the independence of the Welch, the town fell into neglect, and the castle into decay: the remains of the castle are inconsiderable, consisting chiefly of heaps of stones round the base of the lofty mount on which the keep was built, and the ruins of a dilapidated portal at a distance, that probably formed the entrance. The town is pleasantly situated on a gentle acclivity on the bank of the river Usk, over which is a handsome stone bridge of modern structure, and consists of two streets indifferently paved and lighted; the houses are mostly old and irregularly built, and are fast hastening to decay: some fragments of the ancient walls are still remaining, and bear testimony to the former extent and importance of the town, which has since dwindled into comparative insignificance. The trade consists principally in the manufacture and sale of tin-plates and iron, for which there are two large establishments; the articles are conveyed to Newport by the river Usk, in vessels of small burden. The market is on Thursday: fairs are held on July 31st and October 2nd, the latter being a large fair for horses. The market-house is a dilapidated edifice, supported on four massive pillars of the Tuscan order, supposed to have belonged to some Roman structure, two bases of similar dimensions and character having been dug up near the walls.

The county magistrates hold a petty session once a fortnight. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free school, for clothing and educating twenty-five boys and twenty-five girls, was founded and endowed, in 1724, by Charles Williams, Esq.; the master's salary is £75 per annum: there is an almshouse for aged widows, who receive twenty shillings per annum each. Several remains of the Roman station are still visible, and numerous minor relics have been discovered, consisting of portions of columns, altars dedicated to Jupiter Dolichenus and the goddess Astræa, bricks inscribed "Leg. II. Aug.," tessellated pavements, coins from Caesar to Valentinian inclusive, earthen vessels, urns, a gold ring with an intaglio representing Hercules strangling the Nemean lion, a cornelian seal of Ceres (found about twenty years since), a mutilated statue of Jupiter in bronze, portions of the baths, &c. To the north of the town is an extensive quadrilateral encampment, with seven smaller camps near it; and on the banks of the Usk are considerable remains of the amphitheatre, called by the inhabitants King Arthur's Round Table. St. Amphibalus, the tutor of the protomartyr St. Albanus; and the martyrs St. Julian and St. Aaron; were born in this place. The renowned King Arthur is stated to have been interred here.

CAERTON, a hamlet in the parish of CHRISTCHURCH, lower division of the hundred of CALDICOTT, county of MONMOUTH, containing 297 inhabitants.

CAER-WENT, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of CALDICOTT, county of MONMOUTH, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Chepstow, containing, with the hamlet of Crick, 394 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to that of Mathern, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £7. 11. 8. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. This place, now an inconsiderable village, was anciently a Roman station, the Venta Silurum of Antoninus' Itinerary, and is supposed to have been the site of the capital city of the Britons in Siluria: it is still partially environed by the original Roman walls, enclosing an area of about a mile in circumference: the turnpike road to Newport, which is here upon part of the Roman road Akeman-street, passes through the centre, where formerly stood the eastern and western gates. Coins, fragments of columns, statues, sepulchral stones, and tessellated pavements belonging to that people, have been discovered: some of the latter were very curious and beautiful. At a small distance stand the magnificent ruins of Caldicott castle, formerly in the possession of the Bohuns, earls of Hereford: it is still surrounded by a moat: the side fronting the village is flanked by a large round tower, and at the northern angle is a circular tower, on a mound of earth, evidently the keep, encircled by a ditch: another circular dilapidated tower stands at the southern angle. The principal entrance consists of a fine arched gateway, flanked by massive turrets. Within are the remains of several apartments, particularly the baronial hall; and opposite to the grand gateway is another entrance, through a fine hexagonal tower, with a machicolated roof.

CAINHAM, a parish in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Ludlow, containing 936 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., and in the patronage of J. Mainwaring, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CAIN'S CROSS, a hamlet partly in the parish of STROUD, hundred of BISLEY, and partly in the parish of STONEHOUSE, lower division, and partly in the parish of RANDWICK, upper division, of the hundred of WHITSTONE, county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (W.) from Stroud. The population is returned with the respective parishes. The petty sessions for Whitstone-district are holden here and at Frocester alternately.

CAISTOR, or CASTOR, a market town and parish partly in the northern division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, but chiefly in the southern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 23 miles (N. N. E.) from Lincoln, and 153 (N.) from London, containing, with the chapelry of Holton le Moor, 1388 inhabitants. This was evidently a station of the Romans; numerous coins and other Roman relics have been discovered. According to tradition, Hengist, after having repulsed the Picts and Scots, obtained from Vortigern the grant of so much land as he could encompass with the hide of an ox: having divided the hide into small thongs, he was enabled to enclose a considerable area, forming the site of the town, which, from that circumstance, was by the Saxons called Thuang Ceastre, or Thong Ceastre. But Dr. Stukeley derives the prefix from the Saxon thegn, athane, or nobleman. The marriage of Rowena, daughter of Hengist, to Vortigern, was solemnized here in 453. Egbert, who finally brought the several kingdoms of the Octarchy under his dominion, obtained a signal victory at this place over Wiglof, King of Mercia, in 827, in commemoration of which a cross was erected on the castle hill, where many bodies have been dug up, and a stone with a mutilated inscription, apparently recording the dedication of the spoils by the victor to some sacred purpose. The town is well supplied with water from four springs issuing out of a grey stone rock, three of which unite their streams on the western side of the town, and fall into the river Ancholme; the other flows into the same river, near the junction of the Kelsey canal with that to Glandford-Bridge. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are on the Saturdays before Palm-Sunday, Whit-Sunday, and Old Michaelmas-day. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session here. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Clixby annexed, rated in the king's books at £7. 6. 8., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Caistor in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a spacious structure in the early English style, with some remains of Norman architecture; it has a fine tower, with a chapel on the south side, now used as a vestry-room: it stands within the area of the ancient castle, with the materials of which it was partly built. A singular ceremony is observed here, on the performance of which depends the tenure of an estate: the holder sends an agent on Palm-Sunday, who cracks a whip three times in the north porch, while the minister is reading the first lesson; after which, folding the thong round the handle, and at the same time tying up some twigs of mountain-ash with it, he attaches a small purse, with some silver coin in it, to the end, enters the church, and bowing to the minister, takes his seat in front of the reading-desk; on the commencement of the second lesson, he kneels down in front of the minister, and flourishing the whip three times, keeps the purse suspended over his head till the conclusion of it, when he retires into the chancel: after the service is ended, he takes the whip and the purse to the manor-house at Hundon, where they are deposited. There are places of worship for Independents and Methodists. The free grammar school was founded, in 1630, by the Rev. Francis Rawlinson, rector of St. Nicholas', South Kelsey, who endowed it with £400, which sum was laid out in the purchase of a portion of the great tithes of Beesby, now producing £130 per annum; the endowment has been augmented with £60 per annum, arising from lands purchased with a donation by William Hansard, Esq.: the school has an exhibition of £10 per annum to Jesus' College, Cambridge, and is open to all sons of parishioners, who are instructed in the Greek, Latin, and English languages, and in writing and arithmetic, by a master and an usher.

CAISTOR (ST. EDMUND'S), a parish in the hundred of HENSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Norwich, containing 164 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Merksall, or Mattishall-Heath united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of J. R. Dashwood, Esq. and others. Caistor, though at present an inconsiderable village, was anciently one of the most flourishing cities of the Britons, and probably the residence of the kings of the Iceni: it was the Venta Icenorum of the Romans, and the principal station of that people in the territory of the Iceni, the present city of Norwich having gradually arisen out of its ruins: the walls enclose a square area of about thirty acres, within which foundations of buildings may be traced. Numerous Roman coins have been discovered, principally of Constantine, and, a few years since, a bronze figure of a satyr, of very fine workmanship, about eight inches in length. But the most conspicuous Roman relic is a large fortified encampment, about a furlong south-west of Caistor: the whole space, including the rampart, exceeds thirty-two acres, and was capable of containing six thousand men: the north, east, and south sides exhibit large banks raised from a deep fosse, and the west side has one formed on the margin of the river Tees; in these are the vestiges of four gates. At each corner is an artificial mount; and on the western side the remains of a tower, thirty-three feet in circumference, are still visible. Within the area of the camp stands the church, the materials for building which were evidently taken from the ruins of the rampart.

CAISTOR near YARMOUTH, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of FLEGG, county of NORFOLK, $19\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Norwich, containing 772 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of St. Edmund consolidated, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of John Steward, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund. The name is evidently a corrupted Saxonism of Castrum, it being clear, from the visible remains of fortifications and the discovery of numerous coins, that the Romans had a camp here, opposite to, and connected with, Garianonum. The manor was anciently in the possession of the family of Fastolf; and Sir John Fastolf, a celebrated warrior and estimable man, whose character some consider Shakespeare to have pervertedly drawn in his Sir John Falstaff, was born here. He was the founder of the castle, which at his death, in the 38th of Henry VI., he requested should be kept as a college for priests and an hospital for poor men: but it was besieged some time afterwards by the Duke of Norfolk, at the head of three thousand men, under the pretence of having purchased it, to whom the defenders were compelled to surrender it: it was supposed to be one of the oldest brick mansions in the kingdom, but is now in ruins. Caistor was formerly divided into two parishes, Castor Trinity and Castor St. Edmund's, which were consolidated September 22nd, 1608; the church belonging to the former has been suffered to fall into ruins. A line of sand-hills, called the Meals, or Marum Hills, commences here, and extends, with occasional interruptions, to Hapsbury Point, where two lighthouses have been erected, and thence to Cromer bay.

CAISTRON, a township in the parish of ROTHBURY, western division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Rothbury, containing 43 inhabitants. A school was endowed by William Hall, in 1779, with £6 per annum.

CALBOURN, a parish in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Newport, containing, with the borough of Newton, 767 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated in the king's books at £19. 12. 8½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is principally in the early style of English architecture; in it is an ancient tomb, inlaid with brass, representing a knight in complete armour, with his feet resting on a dog.

CALCEBY, a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Alford, containing 48 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united, in 1774, to the rectory of South Ormsby, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 10. 2½., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of C. B. Massingberd, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

CALCETHORPE, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Louth, containing 60 inhabitants. The living is a sinecure rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 2. 6. The Bishop of Lincoln presented by lapse in 1783. The church is dedicated to St. Faith.

CALDBECK, a parish in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships (locally denominated Graves) of High Caldbeck, Low Caldbeck, and Haltcliffe-Caldbeck, and containing 1588 inhabitants, of which number, 272 are in High Caldbeck, 720 in Low Caldbeck, and 596 in Haltcliffe-Caldbeck, 8 miles (S. E.) from Wigton. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £45. 13. 6½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. Kentigern, bears date 1112, and was founded soon after the establishment of an hospital for the entertainment of travellers, by the prior of Carlisle, with the permission of Ranulph D'Engain, chief forester of Inglewood: it stands in the township of Low Caldbeck, and was new roofed and greatly embellished in 1818. There are three meeting-houses in the parish for the Society of Friends, who settled here in the time of George Fox, their founder, who resided for some time at Woodhall. A manufactory for blankets, duffels, flannels, stocking-yarn, &c., has been long established; here are also a brewery, a small paper-mill, a fulling-mill, a gingham and check manufactory, and a dye-house. The parish comprises a mountainous district of eighteen thousand acres, not more than six thousand of which are enclosed, the remainder being appropriated to depasturing numerous flocks of sheep: the hills contain various mineral productions, principally lead and copper ores, limestone, and coal, and there are several establishments for working the mines: a considerable proportion of silver is occasionally extracted from the lead-ore. The summit of Carrock Fell is nearly covered with heaps of stones occupying an elliptical area of two acres, in some instances rudely piled up in huge masses; but whether they are the scattered relics of an aboriginal structure, or the production of nature, is a matter of conjecture. The river Caldew flows close to the village, about half a mile from which, in a romantic glen called the Howk, where it is crossed by a natural bridge of limestone, the stream dashes impetuously over the rocks, and forms two interesting cascades, by the sides of which are singular excavations, called the Fairies' Kirk, and Fairies' Kettle. At Halt Close bridge, the river enters upon a subterraneous course, which it continues for about four miles, when it emerges at a place called Spouts Dub. Robert Sewell, a natural philosopher of considerable repute, was a native of this parish.

CALDBRIDGE, a township in the parish of COVERHAM, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 3¼ miles (S. W.) from Middleham, containing 103 inhabitants.

CALDECOT, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. E.) from Stoke-Ferry, containing 37 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £3. 1. 10½. The church, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, has been in ruins upwards of a century and a half, and the village has entirely disappeared.

CALDECOTE, a parish in the hundred of LONGSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Caxton, containing 111 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Toft, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £3. 11. 0½. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

CALDECOTE, a parish in the Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 3¼ miles (S. E. by E.) from Atherstone, containing 86 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 15., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of S. Hemming, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Theobald and St. Chad. In 1647, George Abbott bequeathed land, directing the annual produce to be expended in teaching poor children, and in providing them and poor families with bibles. The Coventry canal passes through this parish.

CALDECOTT, a township in the parish of SHOCKLACH, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 5½ miles (N. W.) from Malpas, containing 84 inhabitants.

CALDECOTT, a parish in the hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Baldock, containing 46 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of W. Hale, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. In the year 1724, several Roman urns, containing burnt bones and ashes, were discovered in this parish.

CALDECOTT, a chapelry in the parish of LIDDINGTON, hundred of WRANDIKE, county of RUTLAND, 4½ miles (S.) from Uppingham, containing 274 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. John. The Welland, which here separates this county from Northamptonshire, and the small river Eye, flow through the chapelry.

CALDER-BRIDGE, a hamlet in the parish of BECKERMET ST. BRIDGET'S, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. E.) from Egremont. The population is returned with the parish. It owes its origin and name to a bridge erected over the river Calder, and is celebrated for the remains of an abbey, founded for Cistercian monks, by Ralph de Meschines, second Earl of Chester and Cumberland, in 1134, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the revenue of which, at the suppression, was £64. 3. 9.: the ruins are situated in a sequestered and well-wooded vale, near a modern mansion of the same name, and consist principally of part of the transepts of the church, composed of five circular arches resting on clustered columns, and overspread with ivy, and a tower supported on eight clustered pillars, from the capitals of which spring beautiful pointed arches.

CALDEY (GREAT and LITTLE), a township in the parish of WEST KIRBY, lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, 6½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Great Neston, containing 90 inhabitants.

CALDICOT, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of CALDICOTT, county of MONMOUTH, 6 miles (S. W.) from Chepstow, containing 498 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £6. 0. 7½., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Charles Kemys Tynte, Esq. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In 1680, Catherine Kemys gave a small rent-charge for teaching poor children. In this parish are the remains of a castle that formerly belonged to the constable of England, and was held by the service of that office. The walls are in good preservation; they are of a square form, with round towers at the different angles: the principal entrance is under a lofty gate of smooth stone. Caldicot Level, commonly called the Moors, was formerly subject to continual inundations; but the greater part having been drained, it is now in a state of high cultivation, and forms a rich grazing district: this work was performed by the monks of a religious house in the vicinity.

CALDICOTE, a parish in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Stilton, containing 51 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 3. 6., and in the patronage of James Kelwell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. In 1769, the Rev. James Oram bequeathed £250, directing the interest to be applied in supporting a school for girls.

CALDICOTTS (LOWER and UPPER), a hamlet in the parish of NORTHILL, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W. by N.) from Biggleswade, containing 369 inhabitants.

CALDWELL, a township in that part of the parish of STANWICK ST. JOHN'S which is in the western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Greta-Bridge, containing 188 inhabitants. This was formerly a place of much greater extent and importance. Here is a school with a small endowment. A Roman military road passed through the township.

CALLALEY, a joint township with Yetlington, in the parish of WHITTINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Alnwick, containing 363 inhabitants. On Castle hill, a conical eminence embosomed in wood, is a large circular intrenchment, with vestiges of buildings denoting a Roman position.

CALLERTON (BLACK), a township in that part of the parish of NEWBURN which is in the western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, containing 173 inhabitants. T. H. Graham, Esq. allows a small yearly stipend to a schoolmaster for the instruction of poor children.

CALLERTON (HIGH), a township in the parish of PONTELAND, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, containing 104 inhabitants.

CALLERTON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of PONTELAND, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, containing 21 inhabitants.

CALLINGTON, or KELLINGTON, a borough, market town, and parish, in the middle division of the hundred of EAST, county of CORNWALL, 11 miles (S. by E.) from Launceston, 14 (N.) from Plymouth, and 213 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 1321 inhabitants. This town, formerly called Calwetton, Calvington, and Killington, is situated on a gentle acclivity, and consists principally of one spacious street: the houses are in general of mean appearance and irregularly built; the town is badly paved, but amply supplied with water. The inhabitants formerly carried on a considerable trade in wool, which has of late declined; there is still a manufactory for fine woollen cloth. The mines in the neighbourhood, though formerly worked to a greater extent, still afford employment to a few of the labouring poor; and a mine of manganese, recently discovered, is in active operation. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday; the former is for corn and provisions, the latter for meat only: a cattle market is also held on the first Wednesday in every month. The fairs, chiefly for cattle and sheep, are on the first Thursday in May and September, and the first Wednesday and Thursday in November. The county magistrates hold a petty session here on the first Thursday in every month: a portreeve and other officers for the town are appointed annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The court-house, a commodious edifice, has been recently rebuilt by Lord Clinton. The borough first received the elective franchise in the 27th of Elizabeth, since which time it has continued to return two members to parliament: the right of election, by a decision of the House of Commons in 1821, is in "freeholders of houses or lands within the borough, resident or non-resident, and in persons holding lands or houses in the borough under leases granted by the owners of the freehold, for terms of years determinable on a life or lives, and in the assignees of the whole subsisting interest granted by such leases, such persons being resident householders for forty days before the day of election, and rated to the poor at forty shillings at the least:" the electors are chiefly in the interest of Alexander Baring, Esq.: the portreeve is the returning officer.

The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Southill, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter. The church, a spacious structure dedicated to St. Mary, was built chiefly at the expense of Nicholas de Asheton, one of the judges of the court of King's Bench, who died in 1645, and to whose memory a marble tomb has been erected in the chancel: in the churchyard is the shaft of an ancient cross, on the upper part of which is sculptured a representation of the Crucifixion. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A charity school, originally established by Lord Clinton, is at present supported by Mr. Baring, who pays the master £30 per annum for teaching poor boys of the town: there is an endowment of £12 per annum for teaching children to read, but it is usually distributed among three poor women.

CALLOW, a hamlet in that part of the parish of WIRKSWORTH which is in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Wirksworth, containing 100 inhabitants.

CALLOW, a parish in the hundred of WEBTREE, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Hereford, containing 139 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united, with that of Acconbury, to the vicarage of Dewsall, which is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Hereford, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Governors of Guy's Hospital. The church is dedicated to St. Michael: one hundred additional sittings, sixty of which are free, have been recently made, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 for that purpose. Here are the remains of two Roman camps.

CALMSDEN, a tything in the parish of NORTH CERNEY, hundred of RAPSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Cirencester. The population is returned with the parish.

Seal and Arms.

CALNE, a borough, market town, and parish, in the hundred of CALNE, county of WILTS, 30 miles (N. N. W.) from Salisbury, and 87 (W. by S.) from London, on the road to Bath and Bristol, containing, with the liberty of Bowood, 4612 inhabitants. This place is of very remote antiquity, and is supposed to have risen from the ruins of a Roman station on the opposite side of the river, near the town of Studley, where numerous Roman antiquities have been discovered. Tradition states it to have been the residence of the West Saxon monarchs; but there are no vestiges of their palace, or castle, and the remembrance of it is preserved only in the name of a field thought to have been the site, and in that of a street which probably led to it. A synod, memorable from the circumstances attending it, was assembled here in 977, for adjusting the differences existing at that time between the monks and the secular clergy, at which Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury, presided. During the controversy the floor of the chamber gave way, and several of the secular priests were killed; but Dunstan, and the monks whose cause he advocated, having escaped unhurt, their preservation was regarded as a miraculous interposition of Heaven, and they were allowed to take immediate possession of the religious houses throughout the kingdom, to the exclusion of the secular clergy. The town consists principally of one long street, partially lighted, but not paved: the houses are in general well built of stone, and amply supplied with water from springs, and from a rivulet which, after passing through the town, falls into the Avon. Calne has been much improved under the auspices of the Marquis of Lansdowne, whose mansion is in the adjoining liberty of Bowood: it is an extensive and stately pile in the Grecian style of architecture, with a noble portico of ten columns of the Doric order, supporting an entablature and a pediment, in which are the family arms: the environs abound with pleasing scenery. The woollen manufacture, formerly carried on to a great extent, is now conducted on a very limited scale; the articles made are principally broad cloth, kerseymere, and serge. A branch of the Wilts and Berks canal passes through the town, which, uniting with the Kennet and Avon canal, and with the Thames at Abingdon, affords a facility of communication with London, Bristol, and the intermediate places. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are held on May 6th and September 29th, for cattle and sheep. The town, though a borough by prescription, is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates: the corporation consists of two guild stewards and an indefinite number of burgesses; the former are chosen annually from among the burgesses, who add to their own number as occasion may require. A court of requests, the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundreds of Calne, Chippenham, and North Damerham, and the lordship or liberty of Corsham, is held under an act passed in the 35th of George III., for the recovery of debts under 40s. The town-hall is a neat and commodious building, erected by the lord of the manor, lately repaired and an upper story added by the Marquis of Lansdowne; the lower part is used as the market-place. The borough first sent members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., from which time it made irregular returns until the reign of Richard II., since which it has uninterruptedly returned two members: the right of election is vested in the members of the corporation, at present twenty-three in number; the guild stewards are the returning officers. The Marquis of Lansdowne possesses the preponderating influence.

The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Cherhill and Barwick-Bassett, rated in the king's books at £8. 5., within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendal Court of Calne, and in the patronage of the Treasurer in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a venerable structure in the early style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Methodists, and Unitarians. The free school was founded in 1660, by John Bentley, Esq., who endowed it with property near Lincoln's Inn, London, afterwards sold by act of parliament, and the produce vested in the purchase of an annuity of £52, payable on lands in this county, for the instruction of thirty boys in English and arithmetic; but Sir Francis Bridgman, Knt., having, in 1730, founded six scholarships, of the value of £50 per annum each, in Queen's College, Oxford, of which two were for natives of this town, five of the scholars receive a classical education. The master, in addition to his salary, has a house and an acre of land rent-free. A charity school, for the instruction of children of all religious denominations, was established partly by some trifling benefactions, and is supported by subscription; a handsome school-house has lately been erected by contributions among the principal inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood. An hospital, dedicated to St. John, existed here in the reign of Henry III., the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £2. 2. 8. At the distance of three miles to the east of the town is the figure of a horse, cut in the chalk hill, one hundred and fifty-seven feet long.

CALOW, a hamlet in the parish of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, 2 miles (E. by S.) from Chesterfield, containing 395 inhabitants.

CALSTOCK, a parish in the middle division of the hundred of EAST, county of CORNWALL, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Callington, containing 2388 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £26. 7. 8½, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Cornwall. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a neat building, with a high tower ornamented with lofty pinnacles. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The parsonage-house was built about the year 1710, by Launcelot Blackburn, then rector of this parish and Bishop of Exeter, who was afterwards Archbishop of York. Here are copper and tin mines; and a lead mine, the ore of which is intermixed with silver, has been recently opened. The Tamar canal passes through the parish, and there is a ferry over the navigable river Tamar, which forms its eastern and southern boundary, and separates it from Beer-Alston, in the county of Devon. The tide flows to about the centre of the parish, where there is a weir, and a very productive salmon fishery.

CALSTONE-WILLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of CALNE, county of WILTS, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Calne, containing 35 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Lansdowne. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is a school for six children, who are taught and supplied with books at the charge of the minister.

CALTHORPE, a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Lutterworth, containing 164 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. Harpur, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints.

CALTHORPE, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Aylsham, containing 184 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

CALTHWAITE, a township in the parish of HESKET in the FOREST, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Penrith, containing 168 inhabitants. The river Patterill, over which a bridge of one arch was built by subscription in 1793, flows on the eastern side of the village.

CALTON, a chapelry partly in the parish of BLORE, northern division, and partly in the parishes of CROXDEN, MAYFIELD, and WATERFALL, southern division, of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Ashbourn, containing 238 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Wilmot. The chapel, a small edifice dedicated to St. Mary, has never been consecrated. The chapelry is divided into four quarters, each maintaining its own poor.

CALTON, a township in that part of the parish of KIRKBY in MALHAM-DALE which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWXCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from Settle, containing 76 inhabitants. There is a school with a small endowment. This is the birthplace of Major-General Lambert, one of the principal parliamentary leaders in the civil war.

CALVELEY, a township in that part of the parish of BUNBURY which is in the first division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, 6 miles (N. W. by N.) from Nantwich, containing 221 inhabitants. The Chester canal passes in the vicinity of this township.

CALVER, a township in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 1 mile (E. S. E.) from Stoney-Middleton, containing 604 inhabitants. There are extensive lime-works in this place; also cotton-mills, in which from two to three hundred persons are employed. The village is situated on the river Derwent.

CALVERHALL, a chapelry in the parish of PREES, Whitchurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, containing, with Williston and Millenheath, 293 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Prees (otherwise Pipa Parva) in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, endowed with £10 per annum and £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. W. Dodd, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

CALVERLEIGH, a parish in the hundred of TIVERTON, county of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Tiverton, containing 93 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of C. Chichester, Esq.

CALVERLEY, a parish in the wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelries of Idle and Pudsey, and the townships of Bolton, and Calverley with Farsley, and containing 14,134 inhabitants, of which number, 2605 are in the township of Calverley with Farsley, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Bradford. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Wilfrid. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children. At Apperley Bridge, in a most delightful part of Aire-dale, is a noble mansion, appropriated as a school, on the principle of that at Kingswood in Gloucestershire, for the education of the sons of Methodist ministers: it was established, in 1812, under the superintendence of the Rev. Miles Martindale, and the number is limited to seventy-two. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the woollen trade. This place is memorable as the scene of a most inhuman murder, committed in 1605, by Walter Calverley, on his two infant sons, William and Walter, aggravated by his attempt to assassinate his wife also, for which he was executed, by being pressed to death, having on his trial refused to plead: this barbarous outrage was made the subject of the "Yorkshire Tragedy," erroneously ascribed to Shakspeare.

CALVERTON, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1 mile (S.) from Stony-Stratford, containing 370 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £26. 2. 11., and in the patronage of Lord Arden. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The river Ouse bounds the parish on the north. The parsonage-house occupies the site of a Roman camp, where fragments of ancient pottery have been found. The west side of Stony-Stratford, which was formerly in the parish of Calverton, has been made a separate parish by act of parliament.

CALVERTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Nottingham, containing 1064 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, rated in the king's books at £4, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the alternate patronage of the Prebendaries of Oton in the Collegiate Church of Southwell. The church is dedicated to St. Wilfrid. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This parish is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. A school is endowed with £6 per annum, and a house and garden.

CALWICK, a township in the parish of ELLASTONE, southern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ashbourn, containing 120 inhabitants. A hermitage was anciently established here, which was given to the priory of Kenilworth before the year 1148, by Nicholas de Greselei Fitz-Nigell, and a small convent of Black canons placed therein. This house was given by Henry VIII. to the monastery of Merton in Surrey, in exchange for the manor of East Moulsey, as parcel of which it was again granted by that monarch to John Fleetwood.

CAM, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile (N. by E.) from Dursley, containing 1885 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. The church is dedicated to St. George. Several of the inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of woollen cloth; and the place is also noted for the superiority of its cheese. A great part of the parish lies very low, and frequently sustains considerable injury by the inundations of the Severn. In 1730, Mrs. Frances Hopton bequeathed an estate for the erection of a school, and the education and clothing of ten boys and ten girls: the income is £163 per annum. In the reign of Edward the Elder, a battle was fought here between the Danes and the Saxons.

CAMBERWELL, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BRIXTON, county of SURREY, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from London, containing, with Dulwich and Peckham, 17,896 inhabitants. This place, in the Norman survey called Cambrewell, and in other ancient records Camerwell, appears to have been known at a very early period to the Romans, whose legions are by some antiquaries supposed to have here forded the Thames, and to have constructed a causeway leading from the river through the marshes in this parish, of which a considerable part, consisting of square chalk stones, and secured with oak piles, was discovered fifteen feet below the surface of the ground, in digging the bed of the Grand Surrey canal, in 1809. In Domesday-book mention is made of a church, and in the register of Bishop Edington, at Winchester, a commission dated 1346, for "reconciling Camberwell church, which had been polluted by bloodshed," is still in existence. The village is pleasantly situated, and the beauty of its environs, which command extensive prospects, and abound with richly diversified scenery, has made it the residence of several of the more wealthy merchants in the metropolis: it is paved, lighted with gas, and watched, under an act of parliament obtained in 1814, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs, and from the works of the South London Company.

The ancient part of the village contains several spacious mansions in detached situations; the more modern is built on rising ground to the south-east, and comprises the Grove, Champion, Denmark, and Herne hills, which are occupied by elegant villas, in a pleasing and appropriate style of building. In Union-Row is a building recently purchased for the Surrey Literary Institution, which comprises a library of useful and interesting standard works, and reading and conversation-rooms, and where lectures are delivered periodically, during the winter months: the institution is under the management of a president, vice-president, honorary librarian, honorary secretary, honorary assistant secretary, and a committee of eighteen. There are several coal and coke wharfs, and a limekiln on the banks of the Surrey canal, which terminates in this parish. The magistrates for the district hold a meeting every alternate week; and the jurisdiction of the court of requests held in the borough of Southwark, for the recovery of debts under £5, was, by an act passed in the 32nd of George II., extended to this parish, in common with the other parts of the eastern division of the hundred of Brixton not previously included. A noted pleasure fair is held on the Green, annually for three days in the month of August.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of Sir Thomas Smyth, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, and built in the reign of Henry VIII., is in the later style of English architecture, with a low embattled tower, having a turret at one of the angles; it contains many ancient and interesting monuments. The chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Matthew, and situated on Denmark Hill, is a neat edifice of brick, ornamented with stone. St. George's, a district church, recently erected on the bank of the Surrey canal, is a handsome structure in the Grecian style of architecture: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Camberwell. Camden chapel, formerly a dissenting place of worship, is now an episcopal proprietary chapel. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Methodists. The free grammar school, originally intended for twelve boys of the parish, was founded in 1618, by the Rev. Edward Wilson, vicar, who built the school-room and other premises, and gave seven acres of land for its endowment: by letters patent soon afterwards obtained, the management was vested in the patron, the vicar and churchwardens of Camberwell, the rectors of the parishes of Lambeth, Newington, and St. Olave's (Southwark), and the vicar of Carshalton. The school estate, worth £200 per annum, is let upon a beneficial lease at £60 per annum, which is given to the master, who has the privilege of taking boarders, and receiving from those who are on the foundation, not natives of the parish, a small quarterage for their instruction in the classics. The Green-coat school, on Camberwell Green, conducted on the National plan; and the Camden chapel school, instituted in 1810, besides other similar establishments, of which some have small endowments arising from successive benefactions, are supported by subscription. Sir Edmund Bowyer, in 1626, bequeathed premises and land, producing at present £98. 10. per annum, for charitable purposes; Mrs. Abigail Bowles, in 1676, bequeathed five acres of land, for the relief of the poor; and Mrs. Harriet Smith, in 1808, left £3000 three per cent. reduced annuities, the dividends on which are annually distributed amongst ten poor housekeepers in the parish. The late Dr. Lett-som, an eminent physician, lived for many years in a beautiful cottage in the Grove, where he had an extensive library, and a complete philosophical apparatus; and the uncle of the unfortunate George Barnwell, the hero of Lillo's Tragedy, resided in an ancient house, of which there are still some vestiges. On the south side of the village is Ladland's Hill, on which is a quadrilateral camp, defended on the south by a double intrenchment, and evidently of Roman origin; and in a field in the neighbourhood, called Well Hill, were discovered three large wells, thirty-five feet in circumference, and lined with cement, from which the place probably derived its name. A head of Janus, eighteen inches high, was found about a century since, at a place called St. Thomas' Watering, where pilgrims used to stop on their way to Becket's shrine, near which is a hill, called Oak of Honour Hill, where Queen Elizabeth is said to have dined under an oak.

CAMBLESFORTH, a township in the parish of DRAX, lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Snaith, containing 257 inhabitants. There is a charity school in this township, with a small endowment; besides almshouses for six poor people, endowed with £100 per annum. The poor children also participate in the advantages of the free grammar school at Drax, liberally endowed by Mr. Charles Reed, in 1669.

CAMBO, a township in that part of the parish of HARTBURN which is in the north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Morpeth, containing 101 inhabitants. Here is a haven for small vessels which are chiefly engaged in exporting corn and grindstones, and importing timber. There is a small subscription library in the village. The school has a small endowment left by Thomas and James Cook; and twenty-two children are taught at the expense of the Trevilian family. Here was anciently a chapel, of which there are no remains; several tombstones have been dug up near its site.

CAMBORNE, a market town and parish in the hundred of PENWITH, county of CORNWALL, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Redruth, and 267 (S. W.) from London, on the road from Truro to Penzance, containing 6219 inhabitants. This town, situated in the centre of an extensive district abounding with copper, tin, and lead mines, consists of several streets, uniformly built, and contains many handsome houses, but is indifferently supplied with water obtained from wells of a great depth. There are two book clubs established in the town. In the neighbourhood are numerous cottages inhabited by the miners, dwellings for the superintendents of the works, and some handsome residences belonging to the proprietors. The Dolwath copper mine, in this parish, has been sunk to the depth of one thousand feet, and extended laterally for more than a mile, in a direction from east to west; a small vein of silver was discovered in one of the branches, about five years since, a mass of which was presented to Lord de Dunstanville, and manufactured into an elegant piece of plate: the number of persons employed in this mine exceeds one thousand, and the annual expenditure of the proprietors is more than £50,000: there are several other mines on a smaller scale, and the neighbourhood abounds with granite. The market is on Saturday: the market-house, a shed supported on pillars of granite, was erected at the expense of Lord de Dunstanville. The fairs are on March 7th, Whit-Tuesday, June 29th, and November 11th, principally for cattle. The county magistrates hold a petty session for the district on the first Tuesday in every month: a court leet is held in November, at which constables and other officers are appointed. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £39.16.10 $\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of Lord de Dunstanville and another. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is an ancient structure, principally in the later style of English architecture: the altar-piece is of marble handsomely sculptured, and the pulpit of oak curiously carved: it contains a fine Norman font, and several monuments to the family of Pendarves. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Bryanites. A free school for twelve boys and eight girls was founded, in 1763, by Mrs. Grace Percival, of Pendarves, who endowed it with a house and £21 per annum. Mrs. Basset left an endowment of £10 per annum, which is paid to a private schoolmaster for teaching ten children. Attached to the Methodist chapel is a school recently built.

CAMBRIDGE, a university, borough, and market town, having separate jurisdiction, and forming a hundred of itself, in the county of CAMBRIDGE, on the river Cam, 51 miles (N. by E.) from London. This ancient town was the Grantan-brycge, Granta-bricge, or Grante-brige, of the Saxon Chronicle, signifying the bridge over the Granta, the ancient name of the river Cam. By the substitution of cognate letters, the Saxon compound was altered after the Norman conquest into Cantebrige, since contracted into Cambridge. The earliest authenticated fact in its history is its conflagration by the Danes, in 871, who established on its desolated site one of their principal stations, which they occasionally occupied until the year 901. When the Danish army quartered here had submitted to Edward the Elder, that monarch restored the town; but, in 1010, the Danes again laid it waste. During the period that the Isle of Ely was held against William the Conqueror, by the Anglo-Saxon prelates and nobles, William built a castle at Cambridge, on the site, as it is supposed, of the Danish fortress, including also the sites of twenty-seven other houses, that, according to Domesday-book, were then destroyed. In 1088, the town and county were ravaged by Roger de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, who had espoused the cause of Robert, Duke of Normandy. Upon the agreement made in 1201, during the absence of Richard I. in Palestine, between Prince John and Chancellor Longchamp, the castle was among those which the chancellor was allowed to retain. The town was taken and despoiled by the barons in 1215. King John was at Cambridge about a month before his death: soon after his departure, the castle was taken by the barons, and on his decease a council was held here between them and Louis the Dauphin. In 1265, the inhabitants of the Isle of Ely being in rebellion against Henry III., the king took up his abode in this town, and began to fortify it; but being suddenly called away by the tidings of the Earl of Gloucester's success, he left Cambridge without a garrison, in consequence of which it was plundered by the rebels in the isle, the townsmen having fled at their approach. On the death of Edward VI., the Duke of Northumberland, at that time chancellor of the university, aiming to place Lady Jane Grey on the throne, came hither with an army to seize the Lady Mary, who, being at Sir John Huddleston's house at Sawston, and receiving intelligence of his design, escaped into Suffolk. The duke advanced towards Bury, but finding himself almost deserted by his forces, he returned with a small party to Cambridge, and proclaimed Queen Mary in the market-place, but was arrested for high treason the same night in King's College. In 1643, Cromwell, who, before he acquired any celebrity as a public character, was for some time an inhabitant of the Isle of Ely, and twice returned for the borough of Cambridge, took possession of it for the parliament, and placed in it a garrison of a thousand men. In August 1645, the king appeared with his army before Cambridge, but it continued in the possession of the parliamentarians until the close of the war. The town has suffered several times from accidental calamities: in 1174, the church of the Holy Trinity was destroyed by fire, and most of the other churches injured; in 1294, another conflagration destroyed St. Mary's church, and many of the adjoining houses; and, in 1630, the plague raged so violently that the summer assizes were held that year at Royston; the university commencement was postponed till October, and there was no Stourbridge fair.

Situated in a fenny agricultural district, Cambridge owes its chief picturesque attractions to the number and variety, and in several instances to the magnitude and beauty, of the buildings connected with the university, and the walks and gardens attached to them. The town, upwards of a mile in length, and in its greatest breadth more than half a mile, lies chiefly on the south-eastern side of the river: on the south it is entered by two principal streets, one forming a continuation of the road from London, the other of that from Colchester; these unite at a short distance from the iron bridge over the Cam, which connects them with the principal northern entrance; being that from Ely, Godmanchester, and Huntingdon. Notwithstanding recent alterations, the streets in general are narrow and irregularly formed; but on the whole, the town has been much improved by many elegant additions to the several colleges and university buildings; and other improvements on a very extensive scale are in contemplation, and will shortly be commenced. The town was paved under an act passed in 1787, and has lately been drained at a great expense; the streets and many of the public buildings are lighted with gas. Water is obtained from a conduit in the market-place, erected in 1614 by the eccentric and benevolent Thomas Hobson, carrier, and supplied by a small aqueduct communicating with a spring about three miles distant. Dramatic exhibitions are not permitted within nine miles of the town at any other period than that of Stourbridge fair, when, for three weeks, the Norwich company of comedians perform in a commodious theatre lately erected at Barnwell: several public concerts are held in Term-time, usually at the town-hall, when the best performers are engaged; and at the Public Commencements, which generally take place every fourth year, there are grand musical festivals. A choral society on an extensive scale has recently been formed. There are several book societies upon different plans, the most considerable of which has been established many years, and possesses a very good library, with globes, maps, &c.

Cambridge has lately become a considerable thoroughfare, particularly since the draining of the fens, and the formation of excellent roads towards the east and north-east coasts, over tracts previously impassable. There is no manufacture; but a considerable trade in corn, coal, timber, iron, &c., is carried on with the port of Lynn, by means of the Cam, which is navigable to this town. A great quantity of oil, pressed at the numerous mills in the Isle of Ely, from flax, hemp, and cole-seed, is brought up the river; and butter is also conveyed hither weekly from Norfolk and the Isle of Ely, and sent by wagons to London. The markets, which are under the sole control of the university, though the tolls belong to the corporation, are held every day in the week, Saturday's market being the largest, and are excellently supplied with provisions: the market-place consists of two spacious oblong squares. A practice peculiar to this market is that of making up the butter in rolls of such a thickness that a pound of it shall be a yard in length, in order that the butter may be more easily divisible into certain portions, called sizes, for the use of the collegians. There are two fairs; one of them, for horses, cattle, timber, and pottery, beginning on the 22nd of June, and commonly called Midsummer or Pot fair, is held on a common called Midsummer Green, between Jesus' College and Barnwell, and is proclaimed by the heads of the university and the mayor and corporation successively: the other, called Stourbridge fair, anciently one of the largest and most celebrated in the kingdom, is held in a large field a short distance to the east of Barnwell, and is proclaimed on the 18th of September by the vice-chancellor, doctors, and proctors, of the university, and by the mayor and aldermen of the town, and continues upwards of three weeks; the staple commodities exposed for sale are leather, timber, cheese, hops, wool, and cattle; the 25th is appropriated to the sale of horses: both these fairs have been for some years declining.

The town, though a borough by prescription, was first incorporated by Henry I., in the early part of his reign; and many valuable and important privileges have been granted by John, Henry III., Edward II., Richard II., and succeeding sovereigns. The officers of the corporation are a mayor, high steward, recorder, twelve aldermen, twenty-four common council-men, four bailiffs, a town-clerk, two treasurers, two coroners, with five sergeants at mace, and other inferior officers. The mayor, bailiffs, and coroners, are elected annually on the 16th of August: the mayor and his counsellors nominate one freeman, and the freemen at large another; these two then choose twelve others, and these twelve six more, by which eighteen the election is made. The aldermen and common council-men are elected in the same manner, but hold their places for life, as do also the high steward, recorder, and town-clerk, elected by the freemen at large, who also choose the treasurers annually on Hock-Tuesday. The freedom is acquired by birth, servitude, and gift: the last is vested in the freemen at large, who are entitled to take part in the transaction of all other corporation business. The justices of the peace for the town are appointed from time to time under a commission from the king, in which the names of the chancellor, vice-chancellor, and high steward of the university, with the heads of colleges and halls, and the mayor, high steward, recorder, and aldermen, of the borough, are always inserted: they have exclusive jurisdiction, and hold a court of session quarterly. By charter of Henry III. the mayor and bailiffs hold a court of pleas, taking cognizance of actions, real and personal, arising within the town, but few actions are commenced in it: they likewise hold a court leet annually, for the appointment of constables, &c. The town-hall, rebuilt in 1782, is obscurely situated behind the shire-hall. The steward of the university holds a court leet twice a year, for enquiring into matters connected with weights and measures, and for licensing victuallers in the town and the adjoining village of Chesterton. The Bishop and the Archdeacon of Ely hold their courts and have their registries here; and both the spring and the summer assizes and the quarter sessions for the county are held in the shire-hall, a handsome building standing in the market-place, containing two courts: it rests upon arches faced with stone, beneath which are shops let to butchers and fruit-sellers. Under the powers of an act of parliament recently obtained, a new and commodious town gaol, on the radiating principle, has been erected in the parish of St. Andrew the Less, on the north-east of the road to Colchester: it contains cells for forty-eight prisoners, with separate day-rooms and a tread-mill. The borough has returned members to parliament since the 23rd of Edward I.: the right of election is vested in the freemen not receiving alms, in number about one hundred and eighty, about half of whom are non-resident: the mayor is the returning officer. The privilege of sending two representatives was conferred upon the university by charter in the 1st of James I.: the right of election is vested in the members of the senate, in number about one thousand nine hundred: the vice-chancellor is the returning officer.

The origin of the university is enveloped in great obscurity: it is, however, probable that Cambridge first became a seat of learning in the seventh century, when, as Bede in his Ecclesiastical History informs us, Sigebert, King of the East Angles, with the assistance of Bishop Felix, instituted within his dominions a school in imitation of some that he had seen in France, and this is thought to have been established here. It is certain that at a very early period this town was the resort of numerous students, who at first resided in private apartments, and afterwards in inns, where they lived in community under a principal, at their own charge. Several of these houses were at length deserted and fell into decay; others were purchased in succession by patrons of literature, and, obtaining incorporation with right of mortmain, received permanent rich endowments. It is believed that a regular system of academical education was first introduced in 1109, when the abbot of Crowland having sent some monks, well versed in philosophy and other sciences, to his manor of Cottenham, they proceeded to the neighbouring town of Cambridge, whither a great number of scholars repaired to their lectures, which were arranged after the manner of the university of Orleans. The first charter known to have been granted to the university is that in the 15th of Henry III., conferring the privilege of appointing certain officers, called taxors, to regulate the rent of lodgings for students, which had been raised exorbitantly by the townsmen: this was about fifty years before the foundation of Peter-House, the first endowed college. In 1249, the discord between the scholars and the townsmen had arrived at such a pitch as to require the interference of the civil power; and, in 1261, dissensions arose in the university between the northern and the southern men, which were attended with such serious consequences that a great number of scholars, in order to pursue their studies without interruption, withdrew to Northampton, where a university was established, and continued four years. In 1270, Prince Edward came to Cambridge, and caused an agreement to be drawn up, by virtue of which certain persons were appointed by the town and the university, to preserve the peace between the students and the inhabitants. In 1333, Edward III. granted some important privileges to the university, making its authority paramount to that of the borough, and ordaining that the mayor, bailiffs, and aldermen, should swear to maintain its rights and privileges. These eminent favours caused the townsmen to be more than ever jealous of its authority: their discontents broke out into open violence in the succeeding reign, when, taking advantage of the temporary success of the rebels of Kent and Essex, in 1381, the principal townsmen, at the head of a tumultuous assemblage, seized and destroyed the university charters, plundered Benedict College, and compelled the chancellor and other members of the university to renounce their chartered privileges, and to promise submission to the usurped authority of the burgesses. These lawless proceedings were put an end to by the arrival of the Bishop of Norwich with an armed force; and the king soon after punished the burgesses, by depriving them of their charter, and bestowing all the privileges which they had enjoyed upon the university, together with a grant that no action should be brought against any scholar, or scholar's servant, by a townsman, in any other than the chancellor's court. In 1430, Pope Martin V. decided, from the testimony of ancient evidences, that the members of the university were exclusively possessed of all ecclesiastical and spiritual jurisdiction over their own scholars. Richard II. restored to the burgesses their charter, with such an abridgment of their privileges as rendered them more subordinate to the university than they had previously been. On the first symptoms of an approaching war between King Charles and the parliament, the university stood forward to demonstrate its loyalty, by tendering the college plate to be melted for his majesty's use. In 1643, the Earl of Manchester, at that time chancellor of the university, came to Cambridge, and, after a general visitation of the colleges, expelled all the members that were known to be zealously attached to the king and to the church discipline. In March 1647, Sir Thomas Fairfax visited the university, and was received with all the honours of royalty at Trinity College: on the 11th of June he kept a public fast at this place. Queen Elizabeth visited Cambridge, August 5th, 1564, and stayed five days, during which she resided at the provost's lodge, King's College, and was entertained with plays, orations, and academical exercises. On the 7th of March, 1615, James I., with his son Henry, Prince of Wales, was here, and was lodged at Trinity College, which has ever since, on the occasion of royal visits, been the residence of the sovereign. King James honoured the university with another visit, in 1625; and Charles I. and his queen were there in 1632, when they were entertained with dramatic exhibitions. It has also been visited by Charles II., October 14th, 1671, and September 27th, 1681; by William III., October 4th, 1689; by Queen Anne and the Prince of Denmark, April 16th, 1705; by George I., October 6th, 1717; and by George II., in April 1728: on all these occasions the royal guests were entertained by the university in the hall of Trinity College; and it was customary for the corporation of the town to present them with fifty broad pieces of gold.

The University of Cambridge is a society of students in all the liberal arts and sciences, incorporated in the 13th of Elizabeth, by the name of the "Chancellor, Masters, and Scholars of the University of Cambridge." It is formed by the union of seventeen colleges, or societies, devoted to the pursuit of learning and knowledge, and for the better service of the church and state. Each college is a body corporate, and bound by its own statutes, but is likewise controlled by the paramount laws of the university. The present university statutes were given by Queen Elizabeth, and, with former privileges, were sanctioned by parliament. Each of the seventeen departments, or colleges, in this literary republic, furnishes members both for the executive and the legislative branch of its government; the place of assembly is the senate-house. All persons who are masters of arts, or doctors in one of the three faculties, viz., divinity, civil law, and physic, having their names upon the college boards, holding any university office, or being resident in the town, have votes in this assembly. The number of those who are entitled to the appellation of members of the senate, is at present upwards of nineteen hundred. The senate is divided into two classes, or houses; and according to this arrangement they are denominated regents, or non-regents, with a view to some particular offices allotted by the statutes to the junior division. Masters of arts of less than five years' standing, and doctors of less than two, compose the regent or upper house, or, as it is otherwise called, the white hood house, from its members wearing hoods lined with white silk. All the rest constitute the non-regent or lower house, otherwise called the black hood house, its members wearing black silk hoods. But doctors of more than two years' standing, and the public orator of the university, may vote in either house, according to their pleasure. Besides the two houses, there is a council called the Caput, chosen annually upon the 12th of October, by which every university grace must be approved before it can be introduced to the senate. This council consists of the vice-chancellor, a doctor in each of the three faculties, and two masters of arts, the last representing the regent and non-regent houses. A few days before the beginning of each term the vice-chancellor publishes a list of the days on which congregations will be held for transacting university business; these fixed days occur about once a fortnight, but, in case of emergency, the vice-chancellor calls a meeting of the senate, for the despatch of extraordinary affairs. Any number of members of the senate not less than twenty-five, including the proper officers, or their legal deputies, constitute a congregation. There are also statutable congregations, or days of assembling enjoined by the statutes, for the ordinary routine of affairs: a congregation may also be held without three days' previous notice, provided forty members of the senate be present. No degree is ever conferred without a grace for that purpose; after the grace has passed, the vice-chancellor is at liberty to confer the degree. The university confers no degree whatever, unless the candidate has previously subscribed a declaration that he is bona fide a member of the church of England, as by law established; for all other degrees, except those of B. A., M. B., and B. C. L., it is necessary that persons should subscribe to the 36th canon of the church of England, inserted in the registrar's book.

The executive branch of the university government is committed to the following officers:—A Chancellor, who is the head of the whole university, and presides over all cases relative to that body: his office is biennial, or tenable for such a length of time beyond two years as the tacit consent of the university chooses to allow. A High Steward is elected by a grace of the senate, who has special power to try scholars impeached of felony within the limits of the university (the jurisdiction of which extends a mile each way from any part of the suburbs), and to hold a court leet, according to the established charter and custom; he has power, by letters patent, to appoint a deputy. A Vice-chancellor is annually elected on the 4th of November by the senate: his office, in the absence of the chancellor, embraces the government of the university, according to the statutes; he acts as a magistrate both for the university and the county, and must, by an order made in 1587, be the head of some college. A Commissary is appointed by letters patent under the signature and seal of the chancellor; he holds a court of record for all privileged persons, and scholars under the degree of M. A. A Public Orator is elected by the senate, and is the oracle of that body on all public occasions; he writes, reads, and records the letters to and from the senate, and presents to all honorary degrees with an appropriate speech: this is esteemed one of the most honourable offices in the gift of the university. The Assessor is an officer specially appointed, by a grace of the senate, to assist the vice-chancellor in his court, in causis forensibus et domesticis. Two Proctors, who are peace-officers, are elected annually on the 10th of October by the regents only, and are chosen from the different colleges in rotation, according to a fixed cycle: it is their especial duty to attend to the discipline and behaviour of all persons in statu pupillari, to search houses of ill fame, and take into custody women of loose and abandoned character; and even those suspected of being so: they are also to be present at all congregations of the senate, to stand in scrutiny with the chancellor, or vice-chancellor, to take the open suffrages of the house, both by word and writing, to read them, and to pronounce the assent or dissent accordingly; to read the graces in the regent house, and to take secretly the assent or dissent, and openly to pronounce the same: they must be masters of arts of two years' standing at least, and, of whatever standing in the university, are regents by virtue of their office: they determine the seniority of all masters of arts, at the time of their taking that degree. Two Librarians are chosen by the senate, to whom the regulation and management of the university library are confided. A Registrar, elected also by the senate, is obliged, either by himself or deputy, properly authorized, to attend all congregations, to give requisite directions for the due form of such graces as are to be propounded, to receive them when passed in both houses, and to register them in the records; to register also the seniority of such as proceed yearly in any of the arts and faculties, according to the schedules delivered to him by the proctors. Two Taxors are elected annually on the 10th of October by the regents only, who must be masters of arts, and are regents by virtue of their office: they are appointed to regulate the markets, examine the assize of bread, the lawfulness of weights and measures, and to lay all the abuses and deficiencies thereof before the commissary. Two Scrutators are chosen at the same time by the non-regents only, who are non-regents, and whose duty it is to attend all congregations, to read the graces in the lower house, to gather the votes secretly, or to take them openly in scrutiny, and publicly to pronounce the assent and dissent of that house. Two Moderators are nominated by the proctors, and appointed by a grace of the senate: they act as the proctors' substitutes in the philosophical schools, superintending alternately the exercises and disputations in philosophy, and the examinations for the degree of bachelor of arts; they are also generally deputed to officiate in the absence of the proctors. Two Pro-proctors are appointed, in consequence of the increasing magnitude of the university, to assist the proctors in that part of their duty which relates to the discipline and behaviour of those who are in statu pupillari, and the preservation of the public morals. This office was instituted by a grace of the senate, April 29th, 1818, and bachelors in divinity, as well as masters of arts, are eligible: they are nominated by the vice-chancellor and proctors, and elected by a grace of the senate. The Classical Examiners are nominated by the several colleges, according to the cycle of proctors, and the election takes place at the first congregation after October 4th. There are three Esquire Bedells, whose duty it is to attend the vice-chancellor, and walk before him with their silver maces on all public occasions. The University Printer, the Library-keeper, and Under Library-keeper; and the School-keeper, are elected by the body at large. The Yeoman Bedell is appointed by letters patent under the signature and seal of the chancellor. The University Marshal is appointed by letters patent under the signature and seal of the vice-chancellor. The Syndics are members of the senate chosen to transact all special affairs relating to the university, such as the framing of laws, the regulating of fees, inspecting the library, buildings, printing, &c.

The professors have stipends allowed from various sources; some from the university chest, others from his Majesty's government, or from estates left for that purpose. Lady Margaret's Professorship of Divinity was founded in 1502, by Margaret, Countess of Richmond, mother of Henry VII., the election to be every two years: the electors are the chancellor, or vice-chancellor, doctors, inceptors, and bachelors in divinity, who have been regents in arts: the same person may be re-elected, but the professor usually continues in office without the observance of that ceremony. The Regius Professorship of Divinity was founded by Henry VIII., in 1540; the candidates must be either a bachelor or a doctor in divinity: the electors are the vice-chancellor, the master and the two senior fellows of Trinity, the provost of King's, and the masters of St. John's and Christ's Colleges. The Regius Professorship of Civil Law was founded also by Henry VIII., in 1540: the professor is appointed by the king, and continues in office during his Majesty's pleasure. The Regius Professorship of Physic, founded at the same time, may be held for life: the appointment is by the king. The Regius Professorship of Hebrew was founded also at the same time; the electors are the same as to the Regius Professorship of Divinity: a candidate must not be under the standing of M.A. or B.D., but doctors of all faculties are excluded. A Professorship of Arabic was founded by Sir Thomas Adams, Bart., in 1632; the electors are the vice-chancellor and the heads of colleges: among persons qualified, heads of houses, fellows, and masters of arts being gremials of the university, are to be preferred. The Lord Almoner's Reader and Professorship of Arabic is appointed to by the lord almoner, and the stipend is paid out of the almonry bounty. The Lucasian Professorship of Mathematics was founded in 1663, by Henry Lucas, Esq., M. P. for the university; the electors are the vice-chancellor and the masters of colleges: a candidate must be M.A. at least, and well skilled in mathematical science. The Professorship of Casuistry was founded in 1683, by John Knightbridge, D.D., fellow of St. Peter's: the electors are, the vice-chancellor, the Regius Professor of Divinity, the Lady Margaret's Professor, and the master of St. Peter's; in case of an equality of votes, the casting vote belongs to the last: a candidate must be a bachelor or doctor in divinity, and not less than forty years of age. The Professorship of Music was founded by the university, in 1684: the election is by a grace of the senate. The Professorship of Chemistry was founded by the university, in 1702: the election was originally by a grace of the senate, but, by a grace dated October 24th, 1793, it was determined that all subsequent elections should be more burgensium. The Professorship of Astronomy and Experimental Philosophy was founded in 1704, by Dr. Plume, Archdeacon of Rochester: the electors are, the vice-chancellor, the masters of Trinity, Christ's, and Caius Colleges, and the Lucasian professor; when any one of these masters is vice-chancellor, the master of St. John's is entitled to vote: the candidates may be single or married, Englishmen or foreigners. The Professorship of Anatomy was founded by the university, in 1707: the election is by a majority of the members of the senate. The Professorship of Modern History was founded by George I., in 1724: the professor is appointed by the king, and holds the office during his Majesty's pleasure: he must be either a master of arts, bachelor in civil law, or of a superior degree. The Professorship of Botany was founded by the university, in 1724, and has since been made a patent office. The Professorship of Geology was founded by Dr. Woodward, in 1727: on the decease of the four executors of the founder's will, the election became vested in the members of the senate, in addition to whom the following persons were allowed to give their votes by proxy; viz., the chancellor of the university, the archbishop of Canterbury, the bishop of Ely, the president of the Royal Society, the president of the College of Physicians, and the members of parliament for the university: only unmarried men are eligible. The Professorship of Astronomy and Geometry was founded by Thomas Lowndes, Esq., in 1749: the appointment is vested in the lord high chancellor, the lord president of the privy council, the lord privy seal, the lord high treasurer, and the lord high steward of the king's household. The Norrisian Professorship of Divinity was founded by John Norris, Esq., of Whitton, in the county of Norfolk, in 1768: the electors must be a majority of ten heads of houses: the professor cannot continue in office longer than five years, but may be re-elected; he may be a member of either university, may be lay or clerical, but cannot be elected under his thirtieth, nor re-elected after his sixtieth, year. The Professorship of Natural and Experimental Philosophy was founded in 1783, by the Rev. Richard Jackson, M.A.: the election is by those regent masters of arts who have been resident the greater part of the year previously to the day of election, excepting such as are under one year's standing, who may vote though they have not been resident for that period: a member of Trinity College is to be preferred, and next a Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Derbyshire, or Cheshire man. The Downing Professorship of the Laws of England, and the Downing Professorship of Medicine, were founded in pursuance of the will of Sir George Downing, Bart., K.B., in 1800: the electors are the archbishops of Canterbury and York, and the masters of St. John's College, Clare Hall, and Downing College. The Professorship of Mineralogy was founded by the university, in 1808, and afterwards endowed by his Majesty's government. The title of Professor of Political Economy was conferred by a grace of the senate, in May 1828, on George Pryme, Esq., M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, and is to be a permanent professorship.

Lady Margaret's Preachership was founded in 1503: the electors are the vice-chancellor and the heads of houses: doctors, inceptors, and bachelors of divinity, are alone eligible, one of Christ's College being preferred. The Barnaby Lectureships, four in number, viz., in mathematics, philosophy, rhetoric, and logic, are so called from the annual election taking place on St. Barnabas' day, June 11th: the mathematical lecture was founded at a very early period, by the university; and the other three were endowed in 1524, by Sir Robert Rede, Lord Chief Justice of the court of common pleas in the reign of Henry VIII. The Sadlerian Lectureships in Algebra, seventeen in number, were founded by Lady Sadler, and the lectures commenced in 1710: the lecturers, who are required to be bachelors of arts at least, are appointed by the heads of colleges, who are the trustees, and by the vice-chancellor for the time being, from all the colleges; the lectureships are tenable only for ten years, and no one can be elected unless previously examined and approved by the Mathematical Professor. The Rev. John Hulse, who was educated at St. John's College, and died in 1789, bequeathed his estates in Cheshire to this university, for the advancement and reward of religious learning. The purposes to which he appropriated the income are, first, the maintenance of two scholars at St. John's College; secondly, to recompense the exertions of the Hulsean prizemen; thirdly, to found and support the office of Christian Advocate; and, fourthly, that of the Hulsean Lecturer, or Christian Preacher. The Christian Advocate must be a learned and ingenious person, of the degree of master of arts, or of bachelor or doctor of divinity, of thirty years of age, and resident in the university; he has to compose yearly, while in office, some answer in English to objections brought against the Christian religion, or the religion of nature, by notorious infidels. The office of the Hulsean Lecturer, or Christian Preacher, is annual; but the same individual may, under certain circumstances, be re-elected for any number of successive years not exceeding six: the preacher is afterwards ineligible to the office of Christian Advocate: his duty is to preach and print twenty sermons in each year, the subject of them being to shew the evidences of revealed religion, or to explain some of the most obscure parts of the Holy Scriptures. William Worts, M.A., of Caius College, formerly one of the esquire bedells of the university, gave two pensions, of £100 per annum each, to two junior bachelors of arts, elected by the senate, who are required to visit foreign countries, to take different routes, and to write, during their travels, two Latin letters each, descriptive of customs, curiosities, &c.: the annuity is continued for three years, the period they are required to be absent.

The prizes for the encouragement of literature, the competition for which is open to the university at large, amount annually to nearly £1200 in value, three-fourths of which are given for the classics and English composition, the remainder for mathematics. The amount of the annual prizes in the different colleges is upwards of £300, two-thirds of which are given for the encouragement of classical literature. Two gold medals, value £15. 15. each, are given annually by the chancellor to two commencing bachelors of arts, who, having obtained senior optimes at least, shew the greatest proficiency in classical learning: these prizes were established in 1751, by his Grace, Thomas Holles, Duke of Newcastle, then chancellor of the university. His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester, the present chancellor, gives annually a third gold medal, to be conferred upon a resident under-graduate, who shall compose in English the best ode or best poem in heroic verse. The members of parliament for the university give four annual prizes, of £15. 15. each, to two bachelors of arts and two under-graduates, who compose the best dissertations in Latin prose: these prizes were established by the Hon. Edward Finch and the Hon. Thomas Townshend. Sir Edward Browne, Knt., M.D., directed three gold medals, value £5. 5. each, to be given yearly to three under-graduates on the commencement day; the first to him who writes the best Greek ode in imitation of Sappho; the second for the best Latin ode in imitation of Horace; the third for the best Greek and Latin epigrams; the former after the manner of the Anthologia, the latter on the model of Martial. The Rev. Charles Burney, D.D., and the Rev. John Cleaver Bankes, M.A., only surviving trustees of a fund raised by the friends of the late Professor Porson, and appropriated to his use during his lifetime, did, by deed bearing date November 27th, 1816, transfer to the university the sum of £400 Navy five per cents. upon trust, that the interest should be annually employed in the purchase of one or more Greek books, to be given to such resident under-graduate as shall make the best translation of a proposed passage selected from the works of Shakspeare, Ben Jonson, Massinger, or Beaumont and Fletcher, into Greek verse. The Rev. Robert Smith, D.D., late master of Trinity College, left two annual prizes, of £25 each, to two commencing bachelors of arts, the best proficient in mathematics and natural philosophy. John Morris, Esq., founder of the divinity professorship, bequeathed a premium of £12 per annum, £7. 4. of which is to be expended on a gold medal, the remainder in books, to the author of the best prose essay on a sacred subject, to be proposed by the Norrisian professor. The Rev. John Hulse directed that, out of the rents and profits of the estates which he bequeathed to the university for the advancement of religious learning, an annual premium of £40 should be given to any member, under the degree of M.A., who should compose the best dissertation on any argument proving the truth and excellence of the Christian religion. The Rev. Thomas Seaton, M.A., late fellow of Clare Hall, bequeathed to the university the rental of his estate at Kislisbury, producing a clear income of £40 per annum, to be given yearly to a master of arts who shall write the best English poem on a sacred subject.

The university scholarships are as follows:—John, Lord Craven, founded two classical scholarships, tenable for fourteen years, of £25 per annum each, arising from estates vested in trustees: by a decree of the court of Chancery in 1819, the income of the scholars has been augmented to £50, and three additional scholarships founded, which are tenable for seven years only. William Battie, M.D., fellow of King's College, left an estate, producing £18 per annum, to endow a scholarship similar to the preceding. Sir William Browne, Knt., M.D., left a rent-charge of £21 for endowing a scholarship tenable for seven years. The Rev. J. Davies, D.D., formerly fellow of King's College, and afterwards provost of Eton College, bequeathed, in July 1804, to the vice-chancellor for the time being, and the provost of King's College, in trust, the sum of £1000 three per cents., to found a scholarship similar to Lord Craven's, for the greatest proficient in classical learning. The Rev. William Bell, D.D., prebendary in the collegiate church of Westminster, and late fellow of Magdalene College, in 1810, transferred £15,200 three per cents. to the university in trust, to found eight new scholarships, for sons or orphans of clergymen of the church of England, whose circumstances prevent them bearing the whole expense of sending them to the university: two of these scholarships become vacant every year. By a grace of the senate, December 9th, 1813, it was directed that the sum of £1000, given by the subscribers to Mr. Pitt's statue, for the purpose of founding the Pitt scholarship, and afterwards augmented by a donation of £500 from the Pitt club in London, should be placed in the public funds until the syndics were able to vest it in land, the clear annual income to be paid to the Pitt scholar. The Rev. Robert Tyrwhitt, M.A., late fellow of Jesus' College, who died in 1817, bequeathed £4000 Navy five per cents. for the promotion and encouragement of Hebrew learning, leaving the mode of appropriating it to the discretion of the university:

in 1818 the senate decreed the foundation of three Hebrew scholarships, which number, in 1826, was increased to six, two scholars to be elected annually, and called scholars of the first and second classes; a scholar of the first class receiving an annual stipend of £30, and one of the second class a stipend of £20, for three years. The annual income of the university chest is about £16,000, including about £3000 of floating capital: this arises from stock in the funds, manors, lands, houses, fees for degrees, government annuity (for the surrender of the privilege of printing almanacks), profits of the printing-office, &c. The annual expenditure is about £12,000, disbursed to the various officers, the professors, the library and schools, the university press, and in taxes, donations to charities, &c. &c. The whole is managed by the vice-chancellor for the year, and the accounts are examined by three auditors appointed annually by the senate.

The right of presentation to the rectory of Ovington, in the county of Norfolk, and of nomination to the vicarage of Burwell, in the county of Cambridge, belongs to the university at large; in addition to which the chancellor and scholars are entitled, by act of parliament passed in the 3rd of James I., and confirmed in the 1st of William and Mary, the 12th of Anne, and the 11th of George II., to the nomination, presentation, collation, and donation to every benefice, prebend, or ecclesiastical living, school, hospital, and donative, belonging to any popish recusant convict, in the following twenty-seven counties of England and Wales:—Bedfordshire, Cambridgeshire, Cheshire, Cumberland, Derbyshire, Durham, Essex, Hertfordshire, Huntingdonshire, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, Rutlandshire, Shropshire, Suffolk, Westmorland, Yorkshire, Anglesey, Caernarvonshire, Denbighshire, Flintshire, Glamorganshire, Merionethshire, and Radnorshire. The Whitehall Preacherships were established by George I., in 1721: twelve of the twenty-four are appointed from this university; the preachers must be fellows of colleges the whole time they hold the office, to which they are appointed by the Bishop of London, as dean of his Majesty's chapel.

There are two courts of law in the university:—the consistory court of the chancellor, and the consistory court of the commissary. In the former, the chancellor, or vice-chancellor, assisted by some of the heads of colleges, and one doctor or more of the civil law, administers justice in all personal pleas and actions arising within the limits of the university, wherein a member of the university is a party, which, excepting only such as concern mayhem and felony, are to be here solely heard and decided: the proceedings are according to the course of the civil law: from the judgment of this court an appeal lies to the senate, who commit the examination of it to certain delegates, in number not less than three, nor exceeding five, with power to ratify or reverse it. In the commissary's court, the commissary, by authority under the seal of the chancellor, sits both in the university, and at Midsummer and Stourbridge fairs, to proceed in all causes, excepting those of mayhem and felony, wherein one of the parties is a member of the university, excepting that within the university all causes and suits to which one of the proctors or taxors, or a master of arts, or any one of superior degree, is a party, are reserved to the sole jurisdiction of the chancellor or vice-chancellor: the manner of proceeding is the same as in the chancellor's court, to which an appeal lies, and thence to the senate. The university council are appointed by a grace of the senate, and the solicitor by the vice-chancellor. The terms, three in number, are fixed: October, or Michaelmas, term begins on the 10th of October, and ends on the 16th of December; Lent, or January, term begins on the 13th of January, and ends on the Friday before Palm-Sunday; and Easter, or Midsummer, term begins on the eleventh day after Easter-day, and ends on the Friday after Commencement day, which last is always the first Tuesday in July.

The several orders in the different colleges are as follows:—A Head of a college or house, who is generally a doctor in divinity; Fellows, who generally are doctors in divinity, civil law, or physic, bachelors in divinity, masters or bachelors of arts: the total number of the fellowships is four hundred and eight. Noblemen Graduates, Doctors in the several faculties, Bachelors in Divinity (who have been masters of arts), and Masters of Arts, who are not on the foundation, but whose names are kept on the boards for the purpose of being members of the senate. Graduates, who are neither members of the senate nor in statu pupillari, are bachelors in divinity denominated four-and-twenty men, or ten-year men; they are allowed by the ninth statute of Queen Elizabeth, which permits persons who are admitted at any college, twenty-four years of age and upwards, to take the degree of bachelor in divinity, when their names have remained on the boards ten years. Bachelors in Civil Law and in Physic, who sometimes keep their names upon the boards until they become doctors. Bachelors of Arts who are in statu pupillari, and pay for tuition whether resident or not, and generally keep their names on the boards, either to shew their desire to become candidates for fellowships, or members of the senate. Fellow Commoners, who are generally the younger sons of the nobility, or young men of fortune, and have the privilege of dining at the fellows' table; they are here equivalent to gentlemen commoners at Oxford. Pensioners and Scholars, who pay for their respective commons, rooms, &c., but the latter are on the foundation, and, from the enjoyment of scholarships, read the graces in hall, the lessons in chapel, &c. The number of scholarships and exhibitions in the university is upwards of seven hundred. *Sizar*s are generally men of inferior fortune; they usually have their commons free, and receive various emoluments.

The terms required by the statutes to be kept for the several degrees are as follows:—A bachelor of arts must reside the greater part of twelve several terms, the first and last excepted. A master of arts must be a bachelor of three years' standing. A bachelor in divinity must be M.A. of seven years' standing. A bachelor in divinity (ten-year man) is allowed, by the 9th statute of Queen Elizabeth, to take the degree of B.D. at the end of ten years, without having taken any other. A doctor in divinity must be a bachelor in divinity of five years', or a master of arts of twelve years', standing. A bachelor in civil law must be of six years' standing complete, and must reside the greater part of nine several terms: a bachelor of arts of four years' standing may be admitted to this degree. A doctor in civil law must be of five years' standing from the degree of B.C.L., or a master of arts of seven years' standing. A bachelor in physic must reside the greater part of nine several terms, and may be admitted any time in his sixth year. A doctor in physic is bound by the same regulations as a doctor in civil law. A licentiate in physic is required to be M.A. or M.B. of two years' standing. A bachelor in music must enter his name at some college, and compose and perform a solemn piece of music as an exercise before the university. A doctor in music is generally a bachelor in music, and his exercise is the same.

By an interpretation made May 31st, 1786, it was determined that the following persons are entitled to honorary degrees; viz.—1. Privy Counsellors; 2. Bishops; 3. Noblemen—Dukes, Marquises, Earls, Viscounts, Barons; 4. Sons of Noblemen; 5. Persons related to the King by consanguinity or affinity, provided they be also Honourable; 6. The eldest sons of such persons; 7. Baronets, but only to the degree of M.A.; 8. Knights, to the same degree. By a grace of the senate, passed March 18th, 1826, all the above persons, before admission to any degree, are to be examined and approved of in the same manner as the other candidates; but they have the privilege of being examined after keeping nine terms, the first and last excepted: they are then entitled to the degree of master of arts. Sometimes, however, the university confers degrees without either examination or residence, on such individuals of mature age as are illustrious, not by their birth only, but also for the services they have rendered to the state, or to literature. No person taking a degree in right of nobility is entitled to a vote in the senate, unless he have previously resided three terms.

The ordinary course of study preparatory to the degree of bachelor of arts may be considered under the three heads of Natural Philosophy, Theology and Moral Philosophy, and the Belles Lettres. On these subjects, besides the public lectures delivered by the several professors, the students attend the lectures of the tutors of their respective colleges; and the instruction under each of the three general heads above named may be thus stated:—the first comprehends Euclid's Elements, the principles of algebra, plane and spherical trigonometry, conic sections, mechanics, hydrostatics, optics, astronomy, fluxions, Newton's Principia, Increments, &c.; the second, Beausobre's Introduction, Doddrige's and Paley's Evidences, the Greek Testament, Butler's Analogy, Paley's Moral Philosophy, Locke's Essay, and Duncan's Logic; the third, the most celebrated Greek and Latin classics. Besides a constant attendance on lectures, the under-graduates are examined in their respective colleges, yearly or half-yearly, on those subjects which have engaged their studies; and, according to the manner in which they acquit themselves in these examinations, their names are arranged in classes, and those who obtain the honour of a place in the first class receive prizes of books, differing in value, according to their respective merits. By this course the students are prepared for those public examinations and exercises which the university requires of all candidates for degrees. The first of these takes place in the second Lent term after the commencement of academical residence, at the general public examination held annually in the senate-house in the last week of that term; and continues for four days; two classes, each arranged alphabetically, are formed out of those examined, the first consisting of those who have passed their examination with credit, and the second of those to whom the examiners have only not refused their certificate of approval. Those who are not approved by the examiners are required to attend the examination of the following year, and so on; and no degree of B.A., M.B., or B.C.L., is granted unless a certificate be presented to the Caput that the candidate for such degree has passed, to the satisfaction of the examiners, some one of these examinations. The student having passed this preparatory step, has next to perform the exercises required by the statutes for the degree which he has in view.

By a late regulation of the court of directors of the Honourable the East India Company, with the approbation of the Board of Commissioners for the affairs of India, an examination has been appointed for those candidates for writerships in the service of the Company, who have not resided in the college at Haileybury. An examiner is appointed by each university, and the examination takes place at the India House. The candidates are examined in the Greek Testament, and in some of the works of the following Greek authors, viz. Homer, Herodotus, Demosthenes, or in the Greek plays; and in some of the works of the following Latin authors, viz. Livy, Cicero, Tacitus, and Juvenal; which part of the examination includes collateral reading in ancient history, geography, and philosophy: they are also examined in mathematics, including the four first and sixth books of Euclid, algebra, logarithms, plane trigonometry, and mechanics; in modern history, chiefly taken from Russell's "Modern Europe;" and in Paley's Evidences of Christianity. The number of members of the university, in 1828, was five thousand one hundred and four, of whom one thousand nine hundred and seventy-four were members of the senate; the number of the resident members, at the close of the year 1829, was one thousand seven hundred and seventy-one, of whom six hundred and seventy-three were in licensed lodgings.

The principal public buildings belonging to the university are, the senate-house, and the public schools and library: the former of these forms the north, and the latter the west, side of a grand quadrangle, which has Great St. Mary's church on the east, and King's College chapel on the south. The senate-house is an elegant building of Portland stone, erected from a design by Sir James Burrough, at the expense of the university, aided by an extensive subscription: the foundation was laid in 1722, but it was not entirely completed until 1766: the exterior is of the Corinthian order, and the interior of the Doric, with wainscot and galleries of Norway oak, the latter capable of accommodating one thousand persons; the room is one hundred and one feet long, forty-two broad, and thirty-two high, with a double range of windows: near the centre of one side is a marble statue of George I., by Rysbrach, executed at the expense of Lord Viscount Townshend; and opposite to it is that of George II. by Wilton, executed in 1766, at the expense of Thomas Holles, Duke of Newcastle, then chancellor of the university: at the east end, on one side of the entrance, is a statue of the Duke of Somerset, by Rysbrach; and on the other that of the Right Hon. William Pitt, by Nollekins, erected by a subscription among the members of the university, amounting to upwards of £7000. The public schools, in which dis-putations are held and exercises performed, were commenced on their present site in 1443, at the expense of the university, aided by liberal benefactions: they form three sides of a small court, the philosophy school being on the west, the divinity school on the north, and the schools for civil law and physic on the south; on the east is a lecture-room for the professors, fitted up in 1795: connected with the north end of the philosophy school is an apartment containing the valuable mineralogical collection presented to the university by Dr. Woodward, in 1727. The public library occupies the whole quadrangle of apartments over the schools, and consists of four large and commodious rooms, containing upwards of one hundred thousand volumes; at the commencement it occupied only the apartment on the east side, but was afterwards extended to the north side also: its most important acquisition was in the early part of the last century, when George I. having purchased of the executors of Dr. Moore, Bishop of Ely, that prelate's collection of books, amounting to upwards of thirty thousand volumes, for £6000, gave them to this university, at the same time contributing the sum of £2000 towards fitting up rooms for their reception: among the objects of the greatest curiosity in this extensive library are, a valuable and very ancient manuscript on vellum of the Gospels, and Acts of the Apostles, in Greek and Latin, presented to the university by Theodore Beza; and a large collection of the earliest printed books by Caxton, and from the foreign presses. The library has also received valuable donations of oriental books and manuscripts, chiefly from Dr. George Lewis, late archdeacon of Meath, the late Rev. Dr. Buchanan, and the Rev. C. Burckhardt. The upper part of a mutilated colossal statue, from the temple of Ceres at Eleusis, the gift of Messrs. Clarke and Cripps, of Jesus' College, by whom it was brought to England, is placed in the vestibule. The rents of the university's estate at Ovington, in the county of Norfolk, are appropriated to the purchase of books for the library, that estate having been bought with money given to the university, in 1666, by Tobias Rustat, Esq., to be so applied. William Worts, M. A., fellow of Caius College, bequeathed the annual surplus of the produce of his estate at Landbeach, in this county, to be applied to the use of the public library. A quarterly contribution of one shilling and sixpence from each member of the university, excepting sizars, is also made towards its support. This is one of the eleven libraries entitled by act of parliament to a copy of every new publication. The management is entrusted to syndics, who are the vice-chancellor, the heads of houses, all doctors in each faculty, the public orator, and all public professors, the proctors, and the scrutators. All members of the senate, bachelors in law and physic, and bachelors of arts, under certain restrictions, are entitled to the use of the library.

The superintendence of the university press is committed by the senate to syndics, who meet to transact business in the parlour of the printing-office, and cannot act unless five are present, the vice-chancellor being one. Richard, Viscount Fitz-William, formerly of Trinity Hall, who died in 1816, bequeathed to the university his splendid collection of books, paintings, drawings, engravings, &c., together with £100,000 South Sea annuities, for the erection of a museum to contain them: the old free school, in Free School-lane, has been fitted up to serve the purpose temporarily. The collection has since been augmented by many valuable donations of paintings, prints, books, &c.

The Botanical Garden occupies between three and four acres on the south-east side of the town, conveniently disposed and well watered: this piece of ground, with a large old building that formerly belonged to the Augustine friars, was purchased for £1600 by the late Dr. Richard Walker, vice-master of Trinity College. The old building having been sold, a new one has been erected for the use of the lecturers in chemistry and botany. The garden is under the government of the vice-chancellor, the provost of King's College, the masters of Trinity and St. John's Colleges, and the Professor of Physic. The Anatomical School, situated near Catharine Hall, contains a large collection of rare and valuable preparations, including the museum of the late professor, Sir B. Harwood, and a set of models beautifully wrought in wax, recently imported from Naples: it is a small building conveniently fitted up, with a theatre for the lectures on anatomy and medicine, which are delivered annually in Lent term.

Measures for the establishment of the Observatory were first adopted in 1820, when a sum of £6000 was subscribed by the members of the university, to which £5000 was added out of the public chest by a grace of the senate. The building was commenced in 1822, and is now completed: it stands on an eminence, about a mile from the college walks, on the road to Madingley, and is in the Grecian style; the centre, surmounted by a dome, is appropriated to astronomical purposes, and the wings for the residence of the observers. The superintendence is vested in the Plumian professor, under whose direction are placed two assistant observers, who must be graduates of the university, and are elected for three years, being capable of re-election at the expiration of that term. The observations are printed and published annually, and copies are presented to the principal European observatories, viz., those of Greenwich, Oxford, Dublin, Paris, and Palermo. The Philosophical Society was instituted November 15th, 1819, for the purpose of promoting scientific enquiries, and of facilitating the communication of facts connected with the advancement of philosophy and natural history: it consists of fellows and honorary members, the former being elected from such persons only as are graduates of the university, and no graduate or member of the university can be admitted an honorary member: attached to the society is a reading-room, supplied with the principal literary and scientific journals, and the daily newspapers.

St. Peter's College, commonly called Peter-house, was founded in 1257, by Hugh de Balsham, Bishop of Ely. There are fourteen fellowships on the foundation, to which no person can be elected who is M. A., or of sufficient standing to take that degree; and there cannot be more than two fellows from any one county, except those of Cambridge and Middlesex, each of which may have four: one-fourth of the foundation fellows are required to be in priest's orders. By Queen Elizabeth's license the five senior clerical fellows may hold, with their fellowships, any livings not rated higher than £20 in the king's books, and within twenty miles of the university. There are ten bye-fellows distinct from the former, and not entitled to any office or vote in the affairs of the college, but eligible to foundation fellowships. There are fifty-two scholarships, of different value, which are paid according to residence. The Bishop of Ely is visitor, and appoints to the mastership one of two candidates nominated by the society. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are the perpetual curacy of Little St. Mary, in the town of Cambridge; the vicarage of Cherry-Hinton, in the county of Cambridge; the vicarage of Ellington, in the county of Huntingdon; the rectory of Stathern, in the county of Leicester; the rectory of Exford, in the county of Somerset; and the rectory and vicarage of Freckenham, and the rectories of Newton, Norton, and Winesham, in the county of Suffolk: annexed to the mastership is the rectory of Glaston, in the county of Rutland; and the master and Lord Suffield are alternate patrons of the rectory of Knapton, in the county of Norfolk. The college, which stands on the west side of Trumpington-street, consists of three courts, two of which are separated by a cloister and gallery: the largest of these is one hundred and forty-four feet long, eighty-four broad, and cased with stone; the lesser, next the street, is divided by the chapel, and has on the north side a lofty modern building faced with stone, the upper part of which commands an extensive prospect of the country toward the south: the third was completed in 1826, by means of a donation from a late fellow, the Rev. Fras. Gisborne, from whom it is called the Gisborne court. The chapel, a handsome structure erected by subscription in 1632, is chiefly remarkable for its fine east window of painted glass, representing the Crucifixion. Among the eminent persons who have been members of this society, or educated at the college, may be enumerated Cardinal Beaufort; Archbishop Whitgift; Andrew Perne, Dean of Ely; Bishops Wren, Cosin, Walton (editor of the Polyglott Bible), and Law; Moryson, the traveller; Crashawe, the poet; Dr. Sherlock, Dean of St. Paul's; Sir Samuel Garth; the learned Jeremiah Markland; the poet Gray; and Lord Chief Justice Ellenborough.

Clare Hall was founded, in 1326, by Dr. Richard Badew, afterwards chancellor of the university, by the name of University-hall; but having been burned to the ground about the year 1342, it was rebuilt and munificently endowed, through the interest of Dr. Badew, by Elizabeth de Burgh, one of the sisters and co-heiresses of Gilbert, Earl of Clare, and from her received its present name. The society consists of a master, ten senior, or foundation fellows, nine junior, and three bye-appropriation fellows: the senior and junior fellowships are open to all counties. The master is elected by the senior and junior fellows, and must be either a bachelor or a doctor in divinity. The seniors must all be divines, except two, who, with the consent of the master and a majority of the fellows, may practise law and physic. Of the nine junior fellowships, two may be held by laymen: the other seven require priest's orders after a certain standing. The three bye-appropriation fellows hold no college office, nor have they any vote in college business, and are ever after ineligible to any other fellowship: they must take priest's orders within seven years after they are bachelors of arts. There are thirty-four scholarships, eight of which have been lately increased, four of the value of £50 per annum each, and the other four £20 each, besides a weekly allowance in the buttery of three shillings and three-pence during residence. Four exhibitions of £20 per annum each were founded by Archdeacon Johnson, with preference to persons educated at Oakham and Uppingham schools. The visitors are, the chancellor, and two persons appointed by a grace of the senate. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the vicarages of Duxford St. John and Littlington, in the county of Cambridge; the rectory of Datchworth, in the county of Hertford; the rectory of Brington, with the perpetual curacies of Bythorn and Old Weston annexed, and the vicarages of Everton with Tetworth and Great Gransden, in the county of Huntingdon; the vicarage of Wrawby with the curacy of Brigg, in the county of Lincoln; the rectory of Hardingham, in the county of Norfolk; the rectories of Elmsett, Fornham All Saints with that of Westley, and Great Waldingfield, in the county of Suffolk; the rectories of Ockley and Rotherhithe, in the county of Surrey; the rectory of Orcheston St. Mary, in the county of Wilts; the rectory of Patrington, in the East riding, and the vicarage of Warmfield in the West riding, of the county of York. This hall, one of the most uniform buildings of the university, is very pleasantly situated on the eastern bank of the Cam, over which it has an elegant stone bridge, leading to a shady walk opening into a beautiful lawn surrounded by lofty elms. It was rebuilt in 1638, of Ketton stone, and consists of one grand court, one hundred and fifty feet long, and one hundred and eleven broad: the front towards the fields is very handsome, being adorned with two rows of pilasters, the lower in the Tuscan, the upper in the Ionic, order. The chapel, the rebuilding of which, from an elegant design by Sir James Burrough, was completed in 1769, at an expense of £7000, is remarkable for the neatness of its stucco-work. Among its eminent members, &c., were Thomas Philipot, the herald and antiquary; Archbishops Heath and Tillotson; Bishops Hugh Latimer, Gunning, Moore, and Henchman; George Ruggle, author of Ignoramus; Dr. Burnet, author of the Theory of the Earth; John Parkhurst, the lexicographer; Dr. Cudworth, author of the Intellectual System; William Whiston; Martin Folkes; Dr. Langhorne; Whitehead, the poet laureat; Thomas Cecil, Earl of Exeter; Thomas Holles, Duke of Newcastle; and the late Marquis Cornwallis.

Pembroke College was founded, in 1343, by Mary, Countess of Pembroke, and its endowment greatly enlarged by Henry VI. There are fourteen foundation and two by-fellowships, open to all counties, but no county to have more than three; six of the fellows must be in deacon's or priest's orders. There are twelve scholarships, varying in value from £12 to £50 per annum each, besides several of smaller amount: the lord high chancellor is visitor. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the vicarage of Söham with the curacy of Barroway, and the vicarage of Linton, in the county of Cambridge; the rectory of Rawreth, in the county of Essex; the rectory of Orton-Waterville, and the vicarage of Waresley, in the county of Huntingdon; the rectories of Cawston and Sall, and the vicarage of Saxthorpe, with the consolidated vicarages of Tilney All Saints and Tilney St. Lawrence, in the county of Norfolk; and the rectories of Framlingham and Earl-Stonham, in the county of Suffolk. The college, or hall, is situated on the east side of Trumpington-street, nearly opposite to St. Peter's College, and consists of two courts of nearly equal dimensions, being about ninety-five feet by fifty-five, with the hall between them. On the east side of the inner court is a small detached building, erected for the purpose of containing a hollow sphere, eighteen feet in diameter, turning round with ease, and having the constellations painted inside, constructed by Dr. Long, Lowndean Professor of Astronomy, and formerly master of this college: the interior is so contrived as to form an excellent astronomical lecture-room, being capable of containing conveniently about thirty persons. Among the college plate is preserved a curious gilt silver cup, of considerable antiquity, the gift of the foundress in the reign of Edward III. The chapel, built by Dr. Matthew Wren, Bishop of Ely, from a design by his nephew Sir Christopher, and consecrated by that bishop in 1665, is one of the most elegant and best proportioned in the university. Among the more eminent members, &c., may be reckoned, Archbishops Grindal and Whitgift; Bishops Lindwood, Fox, Ridley, and Andrews; the martyrs, Rogers and Bradford; the poets, Spenser, Gray, and Mason; Dr. Long, the astronomer; Stanley, editor of Æschylus; and the late illustrious statesman, the Right Hon. William Pitt.

Gonville and Caius College, originally styled Gonville Hall, was founded in 1347, by Edmund, son of Sir Nicholas Gonville, of Terrington, in the county of Norfolk; in 1558, the hall was consolidated with the new foundation by Dr. John Caius, and under the charter then obtained the united foundations received the name they now bear. There are twenty-nine fellowships, of which twenty-one are open to all counties, and seventeen to laymen: two of the fellows must be physicians. There are twenty-six scholarships, open to all counties; three are of the value of £56 per annum each, six of £40, six of £36, six of £30, one of £24, one of £22, and three of £20: there is also a scholarship in chemistry, of the value of £20 per annum, and four studentships in physic, of upwards of £100 per annum each; in addition to these scholarships are fourteen exhibitions of different value. The visitors are, the master of Corpus Christi College, the senior doctor in physic, and the master of Trinity Hall. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the rectory of Beachampton, in the county of Buckingham; the rectory of Bratton-Fleming, in the county of Devon; the rectory of Broadway with that of Bincombe, in the county of Dorset; the rectory of Ashdon, in the county of Essex; the rectories of Blofield, Denver, Hethersett, Kirstead, the vicarage of Mattishall with the rectory of Pottesley, the rectories of Great Melton All Saints' and St. Mary's with St. Michael's Coslaney, Norwich, the rectory of St.

Clement's (Norwich) with that of Long Stratton, the rectory of Oxborough with the vicarage of Foulden, the rectories of Weeting All Saints and Weeting St. Mary, the rectory of Wheatacre All Saints with the vicarage of Mutford and the perpetual curacy of Barnaby, and the vicarage of Wilton with the rectory of Hockwold, in the county of Norfolk; and the rectory of Lavenham, in the county of Suffolk. This college stands on the west side of Trumpington-street, having Trinity College on the north, Trinity Hall on the west, and the senate-house on the south: it consists of three courts; the south court, and three remarkable gates of Grecian architecture, built by Dr. Caius, are supposed to have been designed by John of Padua, architect to Henry VIII., and to be the only works of his now remaining in the kingdom; of the principal court, part has been rebuilt, and the rest cased with stone and elegantly sashed. The chapel, though small, is admired for its beauty: on the south wall is the monument of Dr. Caius, whose body lies in a sarcophagus, under a canopy supported by Ionic columns; on the same wall is the monument of Stephen Perse, M.D., a great benefactor to the university, who died in 1615; in the ante-chapel is the gravestone of Sir James Burrough, Knt., formerly master, an ingenious architect, who designed the senate-house and other public buildings in Cambridge, and died in 1774. The library is small, but contains some exceedingly valuable books and manuscripts, particularly in heraldry and genealogy. The college has been a celebrated seminary for professors of medicine and anatomy, ever since the time of its second founder, the learned physician, Dr. Caius: of those who have most eminently conferred honour on the society in this faculty may be enumerated Dr. Francis Glisson; Sir Charles Scarborough; Dr. William Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood; and Dr. William Hyde Wollaston. Among other distinguished members, or students, were Dr. Branthwaite, one of the translators of the Bible; Sir Thomas Gresham; Sir Peter le Neve, the herald and antiquary; Richard Parker, author of the Σταλβριδς Cantabrigiensis; Dr. Brady, the historian; Henry Wharton, author of the Anglia Sacra; Sir Henry Chauncy and Francis Blomefield, the historians of Hertfordshire and Norfolk; the celebrated Bishop Taylor; Bishop Skip, one of the compilers of the Liturgy; Jeremy Collier; the learned Dr. Samuel Clarke; Shadwell, the poet; and Lord Chancellor Thurlow.

Trinity Hall was founded, in 1350, by William Bateman, Bishop of Norwich. There are twelve fellowships, which are ordinarily held by graduates in civil law; ten of the fellows are usually laymen, and two in holy orders. The lord chancellor is visitor. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the perpetual curacy of St. Edward, in the town of Cambridge; the vicarage of Weathersfield, in the county of Essex; the vicarage of Fenstanton with the perpetual curacy of Hilton, and the vicarages of Great Stukeley and Grey-Hemingford, in the county of Huntingdon; the rectory of Swanington with the vicarage of Wood-Dalling, in the county of Norfolk; and the perpetual curacy of Cowling, and the perpetual curacy of Kentford with the vicarage of Gazeley, in the county of Suffolk. This hall stands behind the senate-house, near the river, and on the northern side of Clare Hall: the principal court is very neat, being faced with stone both within and without; the second is a convenient and handsome pile of brick and stone, recently erected for the accommodation of the under-graduates. The chapel is chiefly worthy of notice for its finely-painted altar-piece. The library contains, among other valuable books, a complete body of the canon, Roman, and common law. Among remarkable persons who have been members, or students, were Bilney, the martyr; Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester; Bishops Barlow (of Lincoln), Halifax, and Horsley (of St. Asaph); Thomas Tusser, the writer on husbandry; Sir Peter Wyche, the traveller; Dr. Haddon, master of the requests to Queen Elizabeth; Sir Robert Naunton, secretary of state to James I.; Philip, the celebrated earl of Chesterfield; Sir William de Grey, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and several other eminent lawyers, who have recently filled distinguished offices in that profession.

Corpus Christi College was founded, in 1351, by the brethren of two guilds in Cambridge, bearing the names of Gilda Corporis Christi, and Gilda Beate Marie Virginis. There are twelve fellowships, four of which are appropriated, two for pupils from the school at Norwich, and two for natives of the county of Norfolk; the rest are open, with the restriction only that four of the candidates shall (if it may be) be natives of Norfolk: all the fellows are required to take orders within three years after their election. The visitors are, the vice-chancellor, and the two senior doctors in divinity; in extraordinary cases the king is visitor. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are the perpetual curacy of St. Benedict in the town of Cambridge; the rectory of Duxford St. Peter, the vicarage of Grantchester, and the rectories of Landbeach and Little Wilbraham, in the county of Cambridge; the rectory of Stalbridge, in the county of Dorset; the rectories of Great Braxted and Lambourne, in the county of Essex; the rectory of St. Mary Abchurch with the perpetual curacy of St. Lawrence Pountney, in the city of London; and the rectory of Fulmodeston with the vicarage of Croxton, and the rectory of Thurning, in the county of Norfolk. This college, frequently called Bene't College, from its proximity to the church of St. Benedict, is situated in Trumpington-street, opposite to Catharine Hall; the extent and magnificence of its buildings give it a high rank among the recent improvements which have added so much to the splendour of the university. It consists of two large courts, the old and the new, the latter having been lately erected out of the funds which had accumulated for that purpose, from the munificent bequests of Archbishop Herring, and Bishops Mawson and Green, formerly masters of the college. The new buildings were commenced in July 1823; the grand west front of the new court is two hundred and twenty-two feet long, with a lofty massive tower at each extremity, and a superb entrance gateway in the centre, flanked by towers corresponding with the former; the exterior is built of Ketton stone, and richly ornamented: the court is one hundred and fifty-eight feet long, and one hundred and twenty-nine broad, having the chapel on the east side, the library on the south, and the hall on the north. The chapel, begun in 1579 by the Lord Keeper Bacon, is sixty-six feet long, and its exterior is richly adorned with sculpture. The library is a fine lofty room eighty-eight feet long, and contains the valuable manuscripts bequeathed to the college by Archbishop Parker, comprising a collection of papers relative to ecclesiastical affairs, made on the dissolution of religious houses by Henry VIII., with other interesting documents relating to the Reformation, and the original record of the Thirty-nine Articles. The old court, situated behind the hall, is a very ancient pile of building, entirely appropriated to the accommodation of the students. Among the college plate is a curious ancient drinking horn, which belonged to the guild of Corpus Christi. Of the distinguished members were, Archbishops Parker, Tenison, Herring, and Sterne; Bishops Allen, Fletcher, Jigon, Greene (Thomas), Bradford, Mawson, Green (John), Ashburnham, and Yorke; Sir Nicholas Bacon; Roger Manners, fifth earl of Rutland; Philip, second earl of Hardwicke; his brother, the Right Hon. Charles Yorke; Sir John Cust, Bart., Speaker of the House of Commons; John Fletcher, the dramatic poet; Stephen Hales, the natural philosopher; Nathaniel Salmon, the topographer; and Dr. Stukeley, Robert Masters (the historian of the college), and the late Richard Gough, three celebrated antiquaries.

King's College was founded, in 1441, by King Henry VI. The society consists of a provost and seventy fellows and scholars; the latter are supplied by a regular succession from Eton College, and, at the expiration of three years from the day of their admission, they are elected fellows. This college possesses some remarkable privileges and exemptions: by charter it appoints its own coroner; no writ of arrest can be executed within its walls; the provost has absolute authority within the precincts; by special composition between this society and the university, the members are exempt from the power of the proctors and the university officers, within the limits of the college; neither by usage do they keep any public exercises in the schools, nor are they in any way examined for the degree of bachelor of arts. The Bishop of Lincoln is visitor. The livings in the patronage of the provost and fellows are, the rectory of Kingston, and the sinecure rectory and vicarage of Milton All Saints, in the county of Cambridge; the rectory of Sampford-Courtenay, and the curacy of Tiverton (Priors-quarter), in the county of Devon; the rectory of Stower-Provost with that of Todbere, in the county of Dorset; the rectory of Dunton, in the county of Essex; the rectory of Chalton with that of Clanfield, the rectory of Monkston, and the vicarages of Fordingbridge and Ringwood, in the county of Hants; the rectories of Buckland and Walkern, in the county of Hertford; the vicarage of Prescot, in the county of Lancaster; the rectory of Hemingby, and the vicarage of Willoughton, in the county of Lincoln, of which latter, Lord Scarborough possesses the alternate patronage; the rectory of Great Greenford, in the county of Middlesex; the rectory of Coltishall with that of Horstead, the rectory of Hempstead with that of Lessingham, and the rectory of Monks-Toft with that of Haddiscoe, in the county of Norfolk; the vicarage of Weedon-Loys, in the county of Northampton; the perpetual curacies of Great Bricett and Little Finborough, the rectory of Hepworth, and the perpetual curacies of Kersey, Lindsey, and Wattisham, in the county of Suffolk; the vicarage of Kew with that of Petersham, the vicarage of Kingston on Thames with that of Richmond, and the perpetual curacies of East Moulsey and Thames-Ditton, in the county of Surrey; the rectory of Ewhurst, in the county of Sussex; the vicarage of Wootton-Waven, in the county of Warwick; and the vicarage of Broadchalk, in the county of Wilts.

The buildings stand on the west side and near the centre of Trumpington-street, between it and the river, over which is a handsome stone bridge, communicating with the shady walks on the other side: they consist principally of the old court, now uninhabited, and purchased by the university to be taken down, in order to enlarge the public schools, and the grand court, recently completed, having Gibbs' building on the west, the magnificent chapel on the north, the library and hall on the south, and a grand entrance from Trumpington-street on the east, forming altogether the most superb group of buildings in Cambridge. The old court, built of stone, about one hundred and twenty feet by ninety, appears to be coeval with the foundation. A little to the south of it stands the chapel, the chief architectural ornament of the town, and one of the finest specimens of the later style of English architecture in the kingdom. This splendid structure was begun by King Henry VI., in 1441; continued by Edward IV., Richard III., and Henry VII.; and completed with money bequeathed by the latter for that purpose, in the year 1515: it forms the north side of the grand court: its extreme length is three hundred and sixteen feet, its breadth eighty-four feet, its height to the summit of the battlements ninety feet, to the top of the pinnacles one hundred and one, and to the summit of the corner towers one hundred and forty-six feet: about the middle of the interior is a wooden screen, supporting the organ gallery, and separating the ante-chapel from the choir, erected in 1534, and very curiously carved: the choir is paved with marble; the present altar-piece was erected about the year 1780. One of the most striking features of this edifice is the magnitude and beauty of its painted windows, of which there are twelve on each side, nearly fifty feet high, which, together with the east window, are enriched with various subjects from Scripture history: this beautiful glass was put up in the early part of the reign of Henry VIII., and is further interesting as presenting one of the very few instances in which this species of church decorations escaped, in such complete preservation, the destruction to which they were doomed in the time of the Commonwealth. On each side are nine small chapels, seven of which on the south side contained, until recently, the college library, to which the late learned Mr. Bryant bequeathed his valuable collection, in 1804. It was the intention of the royal founder that the chapel should form the south side of a large court, and for this purpose he granted two quarries of stone, in Yorkshire, besides £1000 per annum payable out of the duchy of Lancaster, until the college should be completed; but Edward IV. deprived the college of this money, together with nearly two-thirds of its possessions, in consequence of which nothing further was done towards completing the design, until the new building, an edifice of Portland stone, two hundred and thirty-six feet long, and intended to form the west side of the great court, was begun in 1724, and completed from a design by Mr. Gibbs. The provost's lodge, adjoining the bridge leading to the college walks, is very spacious and magnificent. The new buildings are from designs by William Wilkins, Esq. M.A. Amongst its eminent members and students may be enumerated Archbishop Rotherham; Bishops Fox, West, Aldrich, Cox, Guest, Wickham, Montagu, Pearson, Fleetwood, Hare, Weston, and Dampier; the martyrs, Fryth, Saunders, Glover, and Fuller; the statesmen, Sir John Cheke, Dr. Thomas Wilson, Sir Francis Walsingham, Walter Haddon, Sir William Temple, Sir Albert Moreton, Sir Robert Walpole, Horatio Lord Walpole, and Lord Chancellor Camden; Anthony Wooton, provost of Eton; Edward Hall, the historian; William Oughtred, the mathematician; Dr. Cowell, the civilian; Dr. Castell, author of the Heptaglott Lexicon; Waller, the poet; Dean Stanhope; Christopher Anstey; Jacob Bryant; and Horace, Earl of Orford.

Arms.

Queen's College was founded by Margaret of Anjou, consort of Henry VI., in 1446, and re-founded by Elizabeth Widville, consort of Edward IV., in 1465. There are nineteen foundation fellowships, the number of which may be increased or diminished according to certain circumstances declared by the statutes. In general there can be only one fellow from a county, and two from a diocese, the diocese of Lincoln excepted, from which there may be three; there may also be one fellow beyond the prescribed number from Middlesex, and from those counties and dioceses in which the college has property sufficient for the maintenance of a fellow: two fellows may remain laymen, and, within twelve years from M.A., one of the two must proceed to D.C.L., the other to M.D. The vice-president and the five senior fellows hold their fellowships with property; the others quit the society when possessed of a stated annual income. The five senior divines may hold livings rated in the king's books at not higher than £20 per annum, and within twenty miles of Cambridge. There is one bye-fellowship which is perfectly open, may be held by a layman, and is tenable with any property or preferment; but the holder has no vote in the society. The scholarships have recently been consolidated into twenty-six, and augmented by college grants, many of them having previously been inconsiderable: they are payable weekly according to residence. The president must be elected by a majority of the whole existing body, must have graduated B.D. at least, and must possess property to the amount of £20 per annum. The King is visitor. The livings in the patronage of the President and Fellows are, the rectory of St. Botolph's in the town of Cambridge; the rectory of Little Eversden, and the vicarage of Oakington, in the county of Cambridge; the rectory of Sandon, in the county of Essex; the rectory of Seagrave, in the county of Leicester; the rectories of Rockland and South Walsham, in the county of Norfolk; the rectory of Hickling, in the county of Nottingham; and the rectory of Newton-Toney, in the county of Wilts: the rectory of Grimstone, in the county of Norfolk, is in the patronage of the president, who must nominate one of the eight senior fellows. The buildings are situated to the west of Catharine Hall, on the banks of the river, and consist of three courts of considerable magnitude; the entrance to the outer, or principal court, which is ninety-six feet by eighty-four, is through an elegant tower gateway: the inner court is furnished with cloisters about three hundred yards in circumference, and extends to the bank of the river; Walnut-tree Court has buildings on one side only: the front of the college, next the river, has been recently rebuilt in an elegant style: the grove and gardens are particularly beautiful, and, lying on both sides of the river, are connected by a wooden bridge of one arch, built in 1746, and much admired for the ingenuity of its construction. Amongst eminent members, or students, of this college are Archbishop Grindal; Bishops Fisher, Davenant, Sparrow, and Patrick; Sir Thomas Smith, the statesman; Dr. Thomas Smith, the ecclesiastical historian; Thomas Brightman, author of the treatise on the Revelations; John Weever, author of the Funeral Monuments; Dr. Thomas Fuller, author of the Worthies of England; and Dr. John Wallis, the mathematician: the celebrated Erasmus was for some time a student of this college.

Catharine Hall was founded, in 1475, by Robert Woodlark, D.D., chancellor of the university, and provost of King's College. There are six fellowships on the foundation, the number of which may be increased or diminished in proportion to the revenue of the college: there cannot be more than two fellows from any one county at the same time; and two of them at least must be in priest's, and one in deacon's, orders. There are also eight other fellowships; in filling up six of which, "a preference is to be given to persons born in the county of York, if duly qualified." There are forty-three scholarships, varying in value from £2 to £35 per annum each, of which thirteen are appropriated, and to several of which chambers rent-free are attached. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the rectory of Coton, in the county of Cambridge; the vicarage of Ridgwell, in the county of Essex; and the rectory of Gimmingham with that of Trunch, in the county of Norfolk. The buildings form three sides of a quadrangle, one hundred and eighty feet by one hundred and twenty, the fourth side being open towards Trumpington-street, and having iron palisades, and a piece of ground planted with lofty elm-trees: the front is toward the west, and has an elegant portico in the centre. The library, a very handsome room, was fitted up at the expense of the late Dr. Thomas Sherlock, Bishop of London, who bequeathed to the college his large and valuable collection of books: he also left a stipend for the librarian. Amongst eminent members and students were Archbishops Sandys and Dawes; Bishops Overall, Browning, Leng (author of the Cambridge Terence), Blackall, Hoadley, and Sherlock; John Bradford, the martyr; John Strype, the antiquary; Ray, the naturalist; and

Dr. Lightfoot, the orientalist, and author of the Horæ Hebraicæ.

Jesus' College, was founded by John Alcock, Bishop of Ely, in 1496, on the site of a Benedictine nunnery, established about the year 1130, and dedicated to St. Rhadegund, the endowment of which was augmented by Malcolm, fourth king of Scotland, and the possessions of which on its dissolution, in the reign of Henry VII., were granted to the bishop: there are sixteen foundation fellowships: eight of the fellows are to be natives of the northern, and eight of the southern, counties, and six in priest's orders; but by a recent statute, granted by the Bishop of Ely, and with the king's license, the society will, from and after the 7th of Jan., 1833, be able to elect fellows from any part of England and Wales, without restriction. On each vacancy the master and fellows nominate two candidates, of whom the Bishop of Ely appoints one. There is one fellowship to which the bishop has an exclusive right both to nominate and appoint: he is also visitor, and appoints the master. There are forty-six scholarships and exhibitions, varying in value from £9 to £70 per annum each, of which twenty-seven are appropriated. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the vicarage of All Saints', and the perpetual curacy of St. Clement's, in the town of Cambridge; the vicarages of Comberton and Fordham, the rectory of Graveley, the vicarage of Guilden-Morden, the rectory of Harlton, and the vicarages of Hinxton, Swavesey, and Whittlesford, in the county of Cambridge; the vicarage of Elmstead, in the county of Essex; the rectory of Tewin, in the county of Hertford; the rectory of King's Stanley, in the county of Gloucester; and the rectory of Caven-dish, the vicarage of Hundon, and the rectory of Whatfield, in the county of Suffolk. The buildings, which are situated at the extremity of the town, consist of a principal court, one hundred and forty-one feet by one hundred and twenty, which is built on three sides; and a small court surrounded by a cloister; an addition has lately been made to the eastern side of the college. The grand front looks toward the south, and is one hundred and eighty feet long, being regularly built and sashed; both the master and fellows have spacious gardens. The library contains many scarce and valuable editions of the classics. The chapel, anciently the conventual church of St. Rhadegund, exhibits, particularly in the chancel and the interior of the tower, considerable remains of the original structure; the altar-piece, representing the Presentation in the Temple, was given, in 1796, by Dr. Pearce, master of the college: in the south transept of what is now the ante-chapel are the tombs of one of the nuns, named Berta Rosata, and of Prior John de Pykenham, the latter of which is supposed to have been removed hither from the neighbouring convent of Franciscans: in the north transept is the monument of Tobias Rustat, yeoman of the robes to king Charles II., a benefactor to the college, remarkable for his great wealth and extensive charities. Amongst eminent members and students may be reckoned Archbishops Cranmer, Sterne, Herring, and Hutton; Bishop Bale, the biographer; Dr. John Nalson, the historian; Roger North the biographer; John Flamsteed, the astronomer;

Fenton, the poet; Dr. Jortin; the witty Lawrence Sterne; Tyrwhitt, the founder of the Hebrew scholarships; Gilbert Wakefield, the classical editor and critic; and the celebrated traveller, Dr. Edward Daniel Clarke.

Christ's College was originally founded, in 1456, by King Henry VI., under the name of God's House; but in 1505, the Lady Margaret, Countess of Richmond and Derby, changed the name, incorporated the former society with the present college, and endowed it liberally for the maintenance of a master and twelve fellows. This foundation is for divinity, and the fellows are required to take priest's orders within twelve months after they have attained the requisite age. The only appropriation is to the counties of England and Wales; the restrictions are, that there shall not be two of the same county, and that there shall be six, and only six, from nine specified counties in the north of England collectively. Edward VI. added another fellowship, the holder of which participates in the emolument of the original foundation: he may be from any county, and is not obliged to take holy orders. There are two other fellowships tenable by laymen, with independent revenues; and preference to the kindred of the founders. These fifteen fellows have an equal claim to the college patronage, and are allowed by the statutes to hold preferment with their fellowships, provided it does not exceed the value of ten marks, after the deductions found in the king's books. Lady Margaret founded forty-seven scholarships, now augmented to 15s. per week during residence; there can only be three scholars of one county: three others were added by Edward VI. Various other scholarships and exhibitions have been founded by private benefactors; and four divinity studentships, the present value of which is £113.8. per annum each, were founded by C. Tancred, Esq. The visitors are the vice-chancellor and the two senior doctors of divinity; or, if the vice-chancellor be of this college, the provost of King's. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the vicarage of Bourn, the vicarage of Caldecote with the rectory of Toft, and the perpetual curacy of Fen-Drayton, in the county of Cambridge; the rectory of Little Canfield, in the county of Essex; the rectory of Anstey, in the county of Hertford; the rectory of Kegworth, in the county of Leicester; the rectories of Ingoldsby and Navenby, in the county of Lincoln; the rectory of Brisley with the vicarage of Gateley, the rectory of Burnham St. Mary, the vicarage of Croxton All Saints, and the perpetual curacy of Hap-ton, in the county of Norfolk; the rectory of Clipston (which is divided into portions), and the vicarage of Helpstone, in the county of Northampton; the vicarage of Manerbier, in the county of Pembroke; and the rectory of Moulton, in the county of Suffolk. The buildings stand north of Emanuel College, and opposite to St. Andrew's church: they consist of the principal court, a handsome quadrangle, one hundred and thirty feet by one hundred and twenty, and a second court built on two sides, that next the garden and fields being an elegant and uniform pile of stone, about one hundred and fifty feet long. The chapel is eighty-four feet long, with a floor of marble: in the east window are portraits of King Henry VII., and some others of the family of the foundress : within the rails of the altar is the gravestone of Dr. Ralph Cudworth, author of the Intellectual System, and master of the college, who died in 1688. The garden has a bowling-green and a cold bath, and contains a large mulberry-tree, planted by Milton, when a student here. Besides the great poet just mentioned, the following eminent persons have been members of this society, or students at the college : Leland, the antiquary ; Archbishop John Sharp ; Bishops Latimer, Law, and Porteus ; Hugh Broughton, and Dr. Lightfoot, the Orientalists ; the poets, John Cleland, and Francis Quarles ; Dr. Joseph Mede, an eminent divine ; Dr. Thomas Burnet, author of the Theory of the Earth ; Dr. Lawrence Echard, the historian ; Dr. Saunderson, the mathematician ; and Archdeacon Paley.

St. John's College was founded, in 1511, by the executors of Margaret, Countess of Richmond and Derby : the original endowment was for fifty fellows, but part of the foundation estates having been seized by Henry VIII., the funds were found to be sufficient only for thirty-two. These, by letters patent from King George IV., are now open to the natives of England and Wales, without any restriction of appropriation whatsoever ; one of them is in the appointment of the Bishop of Ely. This being a divinity college, the fellows are obliged to be in priest's orders within six years from the degree of M.A., except four, who are allowed by the master and seniors to practise law and physic ; the electors are the master and eight senior resident fellows, in whom is vested the entire management of the college concerns. Of the appropriated fellowships, twenty-one have all the privileges of the foundation fellowships, and an equal claim to the college patronage ; besides these there are nine fellowships, founded by Mr. Platt, which are open to all candidates ; but the fellows are not allowed to hold any college preferment. There are one hundred and fourteen scholarships, nine of which, founded by the Duchess of Somerset, have been augmented by the society to sixteen, which are appropriated to Manchester, Hertford, and Marlborough schools ; and four, founded by Mr. Platt, have been increased by the college to nine. There are numerous exhibitions, varying from £70 each downwards. All livings under £30 in the king's books are tenable with the college preacherhips, of which there are thirteen. The Bishop of Ely is visitor. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the rectories of Brinkley and Fulbourn, and the perpetual curacy of Horningsea, in the county of Cambridge ; the rectories of Houghton-Conquest, Houghton-Gildable, Marston-Moretaine, and Meppershall, in the county of Bedford ; the vicarages of Aldworth and Sunninghill, in the county of Berks ; the rectory of Aberdaron, in the county of Carnarvon ; the rectory of Morton, in the county of Derby, alternately with William Turbett, Esq. ; the rectory of Marwood, in the county of Devon ; the rectories of Lawford, Great Oakley, Great Warley, Moreton, and Thorrington with that of Frating, in the county of Essex ; the vicarage of Great Hornead, and the rectories of Lilley and Little Hornead, in the county of Hertford ; the rectory of Freshwater, in the Isle of Wight ; the rectories of Murston and Staplehurst, and the vicarages of Higham and Ospringe, in the county of Kent ; the vicarage of Barrow upon Soar, and the rectory of Medbourne with the curacy of Holt, in the county of Leicester ; the vicarage of Minting, in the county of Lincoln ; the vicarage of Cherry-Marham, and the rectories of Aldborough, Ditchingham, Fornsett St. Mary and St. Peter, Great Snoring, Holt, and Starston, in the county of Norfolk ; the rectory of Ufford with the curacy of Bainton, in the county of Northampton ; the vicarage of North Stoke, and the rectory of Souldern, in the county of Oxford ; the rectory of St. Florence, in the county of Pembroke ; the rectories of Barrow, Cockfield, and Layham, in the county of Suffolk ; the rectory of Wootton-Rivers, in the county of Wilts, alternately with the principal and fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford ; the rectory of Brandsburton, and the vicarage of Holme upon Spalding-Moor with the rectory of Holme, in the East riding of the county of York ; and the vicarage of Marton with Grafton, in the West riding of the county of York. Of these livings, five rectories in Norfolk are in the nomination of the Duke of Norfolk, but can be given only to the foundation fellows of the college. The buildings are situated to the north of Trinity College, and occupy the whole space between Trinity-street and the river, consisting of three courts, built for the most part of brick : the first, which is the most ancient, is about two hundred and twenty-eight feet by two hundred and sixteen, and is entered from the street by a handsome gateway, with turrets coeval with the foundation : the second court, about two hundred and seventy feet by two hundred and forty, is very handsome, and chiefly consists of the fellows' apartments ; it was built by the benefaction of Mary, Countess of Shrewsbury : the third, next the river, is of smaller dimensions than the others. The north side of the first court is occupied by the chapel, that of the second by the master's lodge, and that of the third by the library ; extending altogether the whole length of the college from east to west, about four hundred and eighty feet. The chapel is one hundred and twenty feet long : in the ante-chapel is the tombstone of Thomas Baker, the antiquary, sometime fellow of this college, who wrote its history ; and in the chapel is a tablet, in memory of the learned Dr. Whitaker, master, who died in 1595. In the master's lodge is a spacious ancient gallery, nearly one hundred and fifty-five feet long, with a richly ornamented ceiling, now divided into a suite of rooms containing numerous portraits of benefactors and members of the college. The library, built by Archbishop Williams, is a spacious room, containing one of the most valuable and extensive collections of books in the university, among which are those presented to the college by Matthew Prior, consisting chiefly of the works of the French historians. This college suffered severely during the civil war in the reign of Charles I., having been plundered, amongst other valuable articles, of the communion plate, and of a large collection of silver coins and medals : the outer court was at the same time converted into a prison for the royalists. The spacious gardens and walks lie on the west side of the river, over which is a stone bridge of three arches, leading from the inner court : the fellows' garden has a bowling-green. A large and splendid addition to this college has been nearly completed, from a design by Rickman and Hutchinson, on the western side of the river, consisting of a spacious court, united to the three ancient courts by a covered stone bridge. The inner and the eastern and western fronts are all varied: the cloister extends from the east to the west wing, and has a lofty entrance in the centre; this building will afford additional accommodation for one hundred and seven students, including ten suites of apartments for the fellows of the college. Amongst eminent members, &c. were Roger Ascham; Sir John Cheke; Sir Thomas Wyat; Lord Treasurer Burleigh; Lord Keeper Williams; Dr. John Dee; Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Stafford; Lord Falkland; Dr. William Whitaker; Dr. William Cave; Archbishop Williams; Bishops Day, Gauden, Gunning, Stillingfleet, and Beveridge; Dr. Jenkins, who wrote on the reasonableness of Christianity; Dr. Powell; Dr. Balguy; Dr. Ogden; Thomas Stackhouse, author of the History of the Bible; Dr. William Wotton, Dr. Bentley, and Dr. Taylor, the critics; Ben Jonson; the poets, John Cleland, Ambrose Philips, Prior, Otway, Broome, Hammond, and Mason; Martin Lister, the naturalist; Francis Peck; and Thomas Baker, the antiquaries; and the late Dr. Heberden.

Magdalene College was begun, in 1519, by Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, by the name of Buckingham House, but was not completed at the time of his attainder, after which it was granted to Thomas, Baron Audley, Lord High Chancellor, who in 1542 endowed it for a master and four fellows.

There are thirteen bye-fellowships; two of them are appropriated, one of the two being a travelling fellowship. All the fellows, except those of the two last-mentioned fellowships, must take orders within three years after election, if the master thinks fit. The mastership is in the appointment of the possessor of the estate at Audley End, now belonging to Lord Braybrooke. There are thirty-nine scholarships, varying in value from £3 to £70 per annum each, twelve of which are appropriated. The possessor of Audley End is visitor. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the rectory of Long Stanton St. Michael, in the county of Cambridge; the rectory of Anderby with that of Comberworth, and the perpetual curacy of Grainthorpe, in the county of Lincoln; the vicarage of St. Katherine Cree church, London; the rectory of Aldington, in the county of Sussex; the vicarage of Steeple-Ashton (annexed to the Mastership), in the county of Wilts; and the rectory of Ellingham, in the county of Norfolk. This is the only college which stands on the north side of the river: it consists of two courts, the larger being about one hundred and ten feet by seventy-eight. On the north side of the second court is a stone building, the body of which contains the Pepysian library, and in the wings are the apartments of the fellows. This library was given to the college by Samuel Pepys, Esq., secretary to the admiralty in the reigns of Charles II. and James II.: in this repository, amongst other valuable curiosities, are preserved many very rare portraits and engravings, a large collection of ancient ballads, many of which are not elsewhere to be found, and the original narrative of the escape of Charles II., after the battle of Worcester, taken in short hand by Mr. Pepys, from the oral communication of the king himself: but the most valuable M.S. is the diary of Mr. Pepys, consisting of three thousand pages, chiefly in short hand, and relating to the maritime affairs of the kingdom from 1659 to 1669, copious extracts from which have recently been published, under the title of Memoirs of Samuel Pepys, Esq., F.R.S., &c. Among distinguished members, &c. were Archbishop Grindal; Dr. Thomas Nevile, who erected the beautiful court in Trinity College which bears his name; Pepys, the founder of the library; Dr. Duport, the celebrated Greek professor; the Lord Keeper Bridgeman; Bishop Walton, editor of the Polyglott Bible; Bishop Rainbow; Dr. Howell, the historian; Bishop Cumberland; Dr. Waterland; and the celebrated mathematician, Professor Waring.

Trinity College stands on ground formerly occupied by seven hostels and two colleges (Michael House and King's Hall): the former college was founded, in 1324, by Hervey de Stanton, chancellor of the exchequer to Edward II.; the buildings of the latter, founded by Edward III., in 1337, for a master and thirty-two scholars, are said to have been of sufficient magnitude to accommodate Richard II. and his court, when he held a parliament at Cambridge, in 1381. Both these colleges were suppressed in 1546, and in the same year the present magnificent one was founded by Henry VIII., for a master and sixty fellows: the endowment was considerably augmented by his daughter, Queen Mary. The fellows are chosen from the scholars, ineligible if M.A., or of sufficient standing to take that degree; they are all required to go into priest's orders within seven years after they commence masters of arts, except two appointed by the master, one of whom is supposed to study law, the other physic. There are sixty-nine scholarships, which, except four or five, are open to men of any county. The government is vested in the master and eight seniors; and to so many of these as are absent the resident fellows next in seniority act as deputies: the mastership is in the gift of the King, who is visitor. All livings within twenty miles of Cambridge, or such, in any part of the kingdom, as may have passed through the society; or livings from external patronage, the value of which in the king's books, after certain deductions, does not exceed £30, are tenable with college preacherships, of which there are sixteen. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the vicarages of Cardington, Eaton-Bray, Felmersham with the perpetual curacy of Pavenham, Great Barford with that of Roxton, and the vicarages of Keysoe, Shitlington, and Stotfold, in the county of Bedford; the rectory of Loughton, and the vicarage of Marsworth, in the county of Buckingham; the perpetual curacies of Great St. Mary's and St. Michael's, in the town of Cambridge; the vicarages of Arrington, Barrington, Bottisham, Chesterton, Over, Shudy-Camps, and Trumpington, and the rectories of Orwell and Papworth St. Everard, in the county of Cambridge; the vicarage of Gainford, in the county of Durham; the vicarages of Bumpstead-Helion and Hatfield-Broad-Oak, in the county of Essex; the vicarage of Great Wymondley with that of St. Ippolits, the vicarage of Hitchin, and the vicarage of Ware with that of Thundridge, in the county of Hertford; the vicarage of Brading, in the Isle of Wight; the vicarage of Wimeswold, in the county of Leicester; the vicarage of East Ravendale (sequestered), and those of East Randal, Little Coates, and Swineshead, in the county of Lincoln; the vicarage of Enfield, in the county of Middlesex; the rectories of Dickleburgh, Fakenham, and North Rington, in the county of Norfolk; the vicarage of Grendon, in the county of Northampton; the vicarages of Blyth and Flintham, the perpetual curacies of Hoveringham, Thurgarton, and Langford, and the vicarages of Tuxford and Walkeringham, in the county of Nottingham; the rectory of Cheadle, in the county of Stafford; the rectory of Grundisburgh, in the county of Suffolk; the vicarages of Kirby-Monks and Withybrook, in the county of Warwick; the vicarages of Heversham, Kendal, and Kirkby-Lonsdale, in the county of Westmorland; the vicarage of Aysgarth, in the county of York; the rectory of Gilling, and the vicarage of Pickhill, in the North riding of the county of York; and the rectory and vicarage of Darfield, the rectory of Guiseley (one turn in three), the vicarage of Kellington, the vicarage of Kirkby-Malzeard with that of Masham, and the vicarages of Normanton All Saints, Sedburgh, and Whitkirk, in the West riding of the county of York.

The extensive buildings of this college are situated between those of St. John's and Caius Colleges, occupying the space between Trumpington-street and the river, and consisting of three spacious quadrangular courts. The first court, which is the largest, forms a magnificent assemblage of buildings: its form is a trapezium, approaching to a square, about six hundred and thirty yards in circuit; on the north side is the chapel; on the west the hall and the master's lodge: the other two sides comprise apartments for the fellows and students; the south end of the west side has been rebuilt in a handsome style. This court is entered from Trumpington-street by a turreted gateway, supposed to have been anciently the entrance to King's Hall. In the middle of it is a large conduit, which supplies the college and the neighbouring inhabitants with excellent water, brought by a subterranean channel from a spring about a mile west of the town. The second court, called Nevile's Court, built in 1600, chiefly by the benefaction of Dr. Thomas Nevile, master of the college and Dean of Canterbury, is more elegant than the former, though less spacious; the length of its sides, which, like those of the first court, are unequal, vary from one hundred and thirty-two feet to two hundred and twenty-eight: the library, forming the west side, is of later date, the building having been projected by Dr. Barrow, and the north and south sides, containing fellows' and students' apartments, have been almost wholly rebuilt: the library and the cloisters, which extend along the north, west, and south sides, were designed by Sir Christopher Wren. Beyond Nevile's Court is the newly erected and magnificent quadrangle, called King's Court, in honour of King George IV., the building of which was commenced in 1823, and completed in 1825, at an expense of upwards of £40,000, a considerable part of which was defrayed by a subscription, headed by a donation of £2000 from that monarch; the buildings are from designs by William Wilkins, Esq., M.A., and the principal front, with a fine tower gateway, faces the college walks, in a line with the library. The chapel, upwards of two hundred feet long, is in the later style of English architecture, begun by Queen Mary, and finished by Queen Elizabeth; on each side of the choir are rows of very elegant stalls for the masters and scholars, with carved work by Gibbons; and the thrones for the master and the vice-master are remarkably grand and beautiful. Among the monuments in the ante-chapel, the most interesting are, a statue of Sir Isaac Newton, by Roubilliac, presented to the society by Dr. Smith, master of the college; a tablet in memory of the eminent mathematician, Roger Cotes, Plumian professor, who died in 1716; a tablet in memory of Isaac Hawkins Browne, Esq., celebrated for his poem on the Immortality of the Soul, and other works, who died in 1762; and a bust and tablet, by Chantrey, in memory of the late professor Porson. The hall, built in the later English style, is about one hundred feet long and fifty high. The master's lodge, which contains some magnificent apartments, has, ever since the reign of Elizabeth, been the residence of the sovereign, when the university has been honoured with a royal visit; and the judges always reside in it during the assizes.

The library, a magnificent room two hundred feet long, and proportionately lofty, was built by a subscription amounting to nearly £20,000, procured chiefly by the exertions of Dr. Barrow. The collection of books is large and valuable, and amongst the manuscripts are some of Milton's pieces in his own handwriting: among the busts are those of Bacon, Newton, Ray, and Willoughby, by Roubilliac; that of Roger Cotes; and one, by Scheemaker, of Edward Wortley Montagu, Esq., who presented to the society the celebrated Sigeian inscription: there is also a statue of Charles Seymour, Duke of Somerset, for sixty years chancellor of the university, executed by Rysbrach in 1754; and at the upper end is a curious statue of Æsculapius, found at Samæ, about fourteen miles from Rome. Among the portraits the most interesting are, an original half-length of Shakspeare, by Mark Garrard, and an original full-length, in the hall, of Sir Isaac Newton, by Valentine Ritts. The room is paved with marble; and at the south end, opposite to the entrance, is a window of painted glass, from a design by Cipriani, representing the presentation of Sir Isaac Newton to his Majesty George II., for the execution of which £500 was bequeathed by Dr. Robert Smith, formerly master. The walks are spacious and particularly pleasant, and are connected with the college buildings by a bridge over the Cam. Amongst eminent members and students were, Archbishops Whitgift and Fowler; Bishops Powell, Wilkins, Pearson, Pearce, Hinchliffe, and Watson; Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex; Sir Francis Bacon; Sir Edward Coke; Fulke Greville; Lord Brooke; Charles, Earl of Halifax; Sir Isaac Newton; William Outram; Dr. Isaac Barrow; Dr. Bentley; Ray, the naturalist; Roger Cotes; Dr. William Whitaker; Bishop Hacket; the poets Cowley and Dryden; Dr. Donne, the satirist; Nathaniel Lee, the dramatist; George Herbert; Richard Duke; Lord Lansdowne; Sir Robert Cotton; Sir Henry Spelman; Dr. Gale; John le Neve; Francis Willoughby; Philemon Holland; Andrew Marvell; Robert Nelson; Dr. Samuel Knight; Dr. Conyers Middleton; the late professor Porson; and the late Lord Byron.

Emanuel College was founded, in 1584, by Sir Walter Mildmay, chancellor of the exchequer and privy counsellor in the reign of Elizabeth; it occupies the site of a Dominican friary, founded about the year 1280, and subsequently enriched by Alice, widow of Robert Vere, second Earl of Oxford, which, after the dissolution, was purchased by Sir Walter, prior to the establishment of the college. The number of foundation fellowships is twelve, besides one, the holder of which receives a dividend arising from a distinct estate, but is in most respects on an equality with the foundation fellows. These thirteen fellowships are open to Englishmen of all counties, but there cannot be more than one from the same county. All the fellows must proceed to the degrees of M.A. and B.D., as soon as they are of sufficient standing; and the four seniors must take priest's orders. In addition to the above there are two fellows on the foundation by Sir Wolstan Dixie, who must proceed in their degrees equally with those on the original foundation, but have no vote in the society, nor any claim to the offices or dividends of the college. There are likewise four scholarships of the same foundation, and subject to the same restrictions. The foundation scholarships are open to Englishmen of all counties, but there can only be three from the same county: the scholars receive upwards of £12 per annum, in addition to the weekly payment of 7s. 6d. during residence. Besides these there are many scholarships and exhibitions, founded by various benefactors, to be given to the candidates most distinguished for learning and exemplary conduct. The visitors are, in some cases, the vice-chancellor and the two senior doctors in divinity, in others, the master of Christ's College and the two senior doctors. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the rectory of Wallington, in the county of Hertford; the vicarage of Standground with the curacy of Farcett, and the rectory of Thurning, in the county of Huntingdon; the rectories of Loughborough and Thurcaston, in the county of Leicester; the vicarage of Little Melton, in the county of Norfolk; the rectory of Boddington, in the county of Northampton; the rectory of North Luffenham, in the county of Rutland; the rectories of Aller, and North Cadbury, and the vicarages of King's Brompton and Winsford, in the county of Somerset; and the vicarage of Ilketshall St. Andrew, and the rectories of Preston St. Mary, and Withersdale with the vicarage of Fressingfield, in the county of Suffolk: they also nominate to the rectory of Twyford, in the county of Southampton, which is in the presentation of Lady Mildmay.

This college is very pleasantly situated in St. Andrew's street, near the south-eastern entrance into the town; the greater part of it is modern, and elegantly built of stone. It consists of one principal court, one hundred and twenty-eight feet by one hundred and seven, to which a range of buildings for the accommodation of students has recently been added, forming, with the library and the north side of the hall, a second court. The chapel, which is eighty-four feet long, and has a marble floor, was designed and commenced by Archbishop Sancroft, in 1668, and completed in 1677, the principal contribution to which was £1040, given by Sir Robert Gayer, K.B. The old chapel has been fitted up as the library, to which Archbishop Sancroft gave his own collection of books: among the works, which are principally on divinity, is a curious copy of Cicero's Offices, printed by Faust in 1465, in fine preservation. The hall is furnished with great elegance: at the upper end is a fine painting of Sir Wolstan Dixie, Knt., the founder of two bye-fellowships and two scholarships. The gardens are spacious, and have a bowling-green and a cold bath. Among eminent members were, Archbishop Sancroft; Bishops Hall, Bedell, Kidder, Hurd, Percy, and Bennet; Matthew Poole, author of the Synopsis Criticorum; Joshua Barnes; Dr. Wallis, the mathematician; Sir Robert Twiston, the antiquary; John Morton, the historian of Northamptonshire; Sir Francis Pemberton; Sir William Temple; Anthony Blackwall, author of "The Sacred Classics Defended and Illustrated;" Dr. Farmer, the sagacious commentator on Shakspeare, to whose memory there is a tablet in the cloister, near the entrance into the chapel; and the late Dr. Samuel Parr.

Sidney Sussex College was founded, in 1598, pursuant to the will of Frances Sidney, Countess of Sussex, who died in 1589. There are nine foundation fellowships, open to natives of any part of his Majesty's dominions; besides which there are two appropriated to the scholars of this college, and one, the nomination to which is vested in the Warden and Company of Fishmongers: the two former have nearly the same privileges as those on the foundation. This being a divinity college, all the fellows must take orders within three years from the time of their election. There are twenty foundation scholarships, value seven shillings per week during residence, and two appropriated. Sir John Shelley Sidney, Bart. is visitor, as the representative of the foundress; but, by the statutes, the vice-chancellor and the two senior doctors in divinity are visitors in some cases, and the vice-chancellor, with the masters of Christ's and Emanuel Colleges, in others. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the rectory of Week St. Mary, in the county of Cornwall; the rectory of Swanscombe, in the county of Kent; the rectory of Gayton, in the county of Northampton; the vicarage of Peasmarsh, in the county of Sussex; and the rectory of South Kilvington, in the North riding of the county of York: the rectory of Rempstone, in the county of Nottingham, is in the patronage of the master. The buildings are situated on the east side of Sidney-street, and consist of two courts built of brick, and completed in 1598. The chapel and the library were rebuilt in 1780. The hall and the master's lodge have lately been cased with stone and greatly improved, and the whole college is intended to be beautified under the direction of Sir Jeffrey Wyattville. The grounds are spacious, and the fellows' garden has a large bowling-green. Amongst eminent members or students may be recorded Oliver Cromwell; Archbishop Bramall; Bishops Seth Ward, Montagu, and Garnet; Thomas Fuller, the historian; Lord Chief Baron Atkins; Sir Roger L'Estrange; Gataker, the critic; Dr. Comber, Dean of Durham; Thomas Woolston, who wrote against miracles; and William Wollaston, author of "The Religion of Na-" ture Delineated." In the master's lodge is a portrait in crayons of Cromwell, by Cooper, and in the library, a bust by Bernini, from a cast taken after his death.

Downing College was founded by Sir George Downing, Bart., of Gamlingay Park, in this county, who, by will dated in 1717, devised his estates in the counties of Cambridge, Bedford, and Suffolk, first to Sir Jacob Garrard Downing, and afterwards to other relatives, in succession, and, in failure thereof, to found a college in this university upon a plan to be approved by the two archbishops and the masters of St. John's College and Clare Hall. Sir Jacob died in 1764, the other devisees having died previously without issue; but the estates being held by Lady Downing, and afterwards by her devisees, though without any real title, the university was obliged to sue in Chancery for the establishment of the college, a decree in favour of which was obtained in 1769. The persons named as trustees in the founder's will having died in his lifetime, the trust devolved upon the heirs-at-law, who, after combating a long series of opposition and litigation, and overcoming obstacles of various kinds, petitioned the Crown for a charter, which passed the great seal in September, 1800. By this charter the college is incorporated, with all the privileges belonging to any college in the university, and endowed with the estates devised by the founder, with power to hold landed property in addition thereto, to the value of £1500 per annum. Statutes for its government were framed in July 1805, and shortly afterwards the stipends of the members began to be paid. It is provided that no new foundation shall ever be engrafted on this college that shall be inconsistent with the charter and statutes; but the college may accept any additions to its property, in augmentation of the number or value of its present appointments, or to be applied in any other manner consistent with its constitution. A piece of land comprising nearly thirty acres, situated between Emanuel and Pembroke Colleges, having been purchased for the site, the first stone was laid May 18th, 1807, since which time the building has proceeded at intervals, at an expense of more than £60,000. The society will consist of a master, professors of law and medicine, sixteen fellows (of whom two are to be clerical), and six scholars. The object of the foundation is stated in the charter to be the study of law, physic, and other useful arts and learning. At present only the master, the professors, and three fellows are appointed, to take possession of the estates, administer the revenues, superintend the building of the college, &c.; the appointment of the remaining fellows is reserved until the completion of the buildings. The scholars will also be elected after that period, but not more than two in each year. There are two chaplains nominated by the master, who is to be elected by the archbishops of Canterbury and York, and the masters of St. John's College and Clare Hall, from among those who are, or have been, professors or fellows. The electors to the professorships are the same as to the masterships, with the addition of the master. The professor of law must be, at the time of his election, D.C.L., M.A., or B.C.L., of Cambridge or Oxford, of ten years' standing from matriculation, and a barrister at law. The professor of medicine must be an M.A., who has been licensed for two years to practise physic, or M.D. or M.B. of Cambridge or Oxford, or a member of a Scotch university, of seven years' standing, twenty-five years of age, and who shall have attended the medical lectures in one of the Scotch universities for four years. The electors to the fellowships are the master, the professors, and fellows of the degree of M.A. All graduates of Cambridge or Oxford are eligible; but after the completion of the buildings, lay fellows must be under the age of twenty-four, and clerical under thirty, at the time of election: there must not be eight fellows from one county. The clerical fellowships will be tenable for life, and subject to residence for a certain part of each term. The lay fellowships are tenable only for twelve years, and are not subject to any residence. Every lay fellow must declare either for law or physic: those who declare for law must be called to the bar within eight years after their election, and the medical fellows must take the degree of M.D. within two years after they are of sufficient standing. The visitor is the King, by the Lord Chancellor. The livings in the patronage of the master and fellows are, the rectory of East Hatley, and the vicarage of Tadlow, in the county of Cambridge. In May 1821, a portion of the buildings, sufficient for opening the college, being completed, under-graduates were admitted to reside and keep terms. The whole, when completed, will form a quadrangle, larger than the principal court of Trinity College, in the Grecian style, and faced with Ketton stone. The master's lodge is of the Ionic, and the entrance to the college will be of the Doric, order; the designs are by William Wilkins, Esq., M.A. The late Mr. John Bowtell, of this town, bequeathed to the college a collection of books, manuscripts, fossils, and antiquities, with a request that the cases containing them should be placed in the college library.

The town is divided into four distinct wards, named respectively Bridge ward, Market ward, High ward, and Preacher's ward, and contains the fourteen parishes of All Saints, St. Andrew the Great, St. Andrew the Less, St. Benedict, St. Botolph, St. Clement, St. Edward, St. Giles, St. Mary the Great, St. Mary the Less, St. Michael, St. Peter, St. Sepulchre, and the Holy Trinity, all (except the precincts of King's College, which are in the diocese of Lincoln) in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, excepting St. Andrew's the Less, which, being a donative, is exempt from all ecclesiastical authority. The university, by custom and composition, is exempt from episcopal and archidiaconal jurisdiction. The living of All Saints' is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 3., endowed with £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Jesus College. The living of St. Andrew's the Great is a discharged vicarage, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Ely. The church was repaired and a great part of it rebuilt in 1643, chiefly by the benefaction of Christopher Rose, Esq.: in the north transept is a cenotaph in memory of the celebrated navigator Captain Cook, and his three sons. The living of St. Andrew's the Less, or Barnwell, is a donative, in the patronage of the owner of the priory at Barnwell. The church stands eastward from the town, and is supposed to have been built from the ruins of the priory. The village of Barnwell has suffered from repeated fires: the last and most destructive of these was on the 30th of November 1731, when the greater part of the houses was consumed. A chapel of ease to the church of this parish has been recently erected. The living of St. Benedict's is a perpetual curacy, rated at £4. 7. 11., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College. In the church was interred Thomas Hobson, the celebrated Cambridge carrier. The living of St. Botolph's is a discharged rectory, rated at £2. 14. 4½., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Queen's College. The living of St. Clement's is a perpetual curacy, rated at £4. 5. 7½., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Jesus' College. The church stands a little south of the great bridge. The living of St. Edward's is a discharged rectory, rated at 3s. 4d., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity Hall. The church stands a little to the west of Trumpington-street. The living of St. Giles' is a vicarage not in charge, to which the perpetual curacy of St. Peter's is united, endowed with £200 royal bounty, for St. Giles', and £800 royal bounty for St. Peter's, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. St. Giles' church stands at the north end of the town: St. Peter's, opposite to it, has been disused for many years. The living of St. Mary's the Great is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College. The church, commonly called the University church, is situated nearly in the centre of the town, on the east side of Trumpington-street, and opposite to the public schools and library. It is in the later style of English architecture, and consists of a nave, the dimensions of which are about one hundred and twenty feet by sixty-eight, two aisles, and a chancel, with a lofty tower surmounted by pinnacles, and containing twelve bells, which are rung on all state holidays, &c. The rebuilding of this church, by contribution, was begun in 1478, and finished in 1519, except the tower, which was not completed until 1608. In it was interred the celebrated reformer, Martin Bucer, whose body was taken up in the reign of Mary, and burned, with that of Paul Phagius, in the market-place. Academical exercises were formerly performed, and public orations delivered, here; and, in 1564, Queen Elizabeth was present at the disputations held in it. The university sermons are still preached here: the vice-chancellor, heads of colleges, noblemen, professors, and doctors, sit in a handsome gallery raised between the nave and the chancel; the proctors, masters of arts, and fellow commoners, have seats in the area of the nave, called the pit; and the bachelors and under-graduates are provided with places in the side galleries: William Worts, Esq., who died in 1709, left the sum of £1500, to accumulate for the purpose of building the galleries, and £20 per annum for keeping them in repair. The churchwardens of this parish were made a body corporate by Henry VIII., in 1535. The living of St. Mary's the Less is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of St. Peter's College. The church was built in 1327, on the site of a former church, dedicated to St. Peter, which gave name to the adjoining college of Peter-House. The living of St. Michael's is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College. The church stands on the east side of Trumpington-street, opposite to Caius College: in the spacious chancel are held the bishop's visitations and confirmations. In 1556, this church was placed under an interdict, as being the burial-place of Paul Phagius, then esteemed an arch-heretic, and was re-consecrated by the Bishop of Chester, acting as the deputy of Cardinal Pole. The living of St. Sepulchre's is a vicarage, rated at £6. 11. 0½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £1000 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the gift of the churchwardens and parishioners. St. Sepulchre's, or the church of the Holy Sepulchre, stands on the east side of Bridge-street, and is remarkable for the antiquity and peculiarity of construction of the older part of it, which is believed to be the oldest remaining specimen of the circular churches erected by the Knights Templars, on the model of that of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, and to have been built in the reign of Henry I.: it is forty-one feet in diameter, and has a peristyle of eight rude massive pillars, supporting circular arches with chevron mouldings. This church contains a tablet in memory of Dr. Ogden, the eminent divine, who died in 1778. The living of Trinity parish is a discharged vicarage, rated at £7. 6. 8., endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church stands at the south end of Bridge-street. There are meeting-houses for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists.

The free grammar school, situated near Corpus Christi College, was established in pursuance of the will of Stephen Perse, M.D., senior fellow of Caius College, who, in 1615, bequeathed certain property in trust for its erection and endowment; the master's salary is £40 per annum, and the usher's £20, with apartments for each; the number of free scholars is sixteen, who must be natives of Cambridge, Barnwell, Chesterton, or Trumpington, and, besides a knowledge of the Greek and Latin languages, and of Greek, Latin, and English composition, they are instructed in the ordinary branches of education, and in the elements of the mathematics: scholars educated for three years at least at this school are eligible, before all others, to the Perse fellowships and scholarships at Caius College. The new free school, situated in St. Peter's parish, founded in 1808, for the instruction of the poor of the town and the adjacent villages, was, in 1813, placed under the control of the National Society: the school-room is calculated to hold three hundred boys. The old charity schools, for both sexes, commonly called Whiston's charity schools, were instituted in 1703, chiefly by the exertions of the distinguished William Whiston, at that time Lucasian professor of the Mathematics, and to which William Worts, Esq., in 1709, bequeathed £30 per annum. On the union of the new free school with the National society, the boys from these schools also were transferred to that institution, to which, in consequence, the sum of £30 is annually allowed from the funds of the old charity schools. In 1816, a new school-room for three hundred girls was built in King-street, and the establishment put on the plan of the National society, to which it was then united. There are three infant schools.

The general hospital, or infirmary, commonly called Addenbrooke's hospital, situated at the entrance into the town from London, was founded by John Addenbrooke, M.D., fellow of Catharine Hall, who, in 1719, bequeathed about £4000 to erect and maintain a small physical hospital. The building was begun about 1753, and opened for the reception of patients in 1766, when the funds being found insufficient for its support, an act of parliament was obtained to make it a general hospital, since which it has been supported, in addition to the funds left by the founder, by donations and subscriptions. Mr. John Bowtell, late a bookbinder and stationer in this town, by will dated in September 1813, bequeathed to this institution £7000 three per cent. consolidated Bank Annuities, between £3000 and £4000 of which has been appropriated to the addition of two extensive wings: the building is faced with stone, and has a handsome colonnade in front. The number of patients annually cured or relieved is now about one thousand; and the annual expense has of late years been about £1700, of which about £600 is paid from the permanent funds. By act of parliament, the chancellor, the vice-chancellor, and the two representatives of the university, the bishop of Ely, the lord lieutenant of the county, the county members and the high sheriff, and the members for the town, the high steward, and the mayor, are perpetual governors. There are almshouses for upwards of fifty poor persons, founded and endowed by different individuals, the inmates of which receive allowances, varying from £2 to £20 per annum. John Crane, apothecary, who died in 1654, bequeathed money to purchase an estate, now producing upwards of £300 per annum, to be settled on the five following corporations, viz., the university of Cambridge, and the towns of Wisbeach, Cambridge, Lynn, and Ipswich; the rents to be received in order, and to be applied by the university, in its turn, towards the relief of sick scholars. The gift to the town was to accumulate until it amounted to £200, which sum was to be disposed of in loans of £20 each, bearing no interest for twenty years, to ten young men, to set them up in trade. After the sum of £200 had been set apart, Mr. Crane directed that the rents of the estates should be applied to the relief of persons confined for debt, and of poor men and women of good character. Cambridge is also one of the twenty-five cities and towns to which Sir Thomas White gave, in rotation, the sum of £104, of which £100 was to be lent, in sums of £25 each, to five young freemen for ten years, without interest, preference being given to clothiers. William Worts, Esq., besides his other benefactions to the town and the university, left £1500 of the produce of his estates, bequeathed in trust, for making a causeway towards Gogmagog hills, which was done before the year 1767; and Thomas Hobson, by will dated in 1629, left houses to trustees, for the maintenance of a house of correction, for setting the poor to work, and other charitable objects, at the discretion of the corporation, which bequest has been increased by one of £500 by the late Mr. John Bowtell.

The religious houses at Cambridge were numerous: the most ancient was that of Augustine canons, founded near the castle, in 1092, by Picot, the sheriff, and augmented and removed to Barnwell, by Payne Peverel, standard-bearer to Robert, Duke of Normandy; its revenue, at the dissolution, was valued at £351. 15. 4.: some remains of the conventual buildings have been converted into farm offices. The Benedictine nunnery of St. Rhadegund appears to have been founded about the year 1130: it was originally dedicated to St. Mary, but was re-dedicated to St. Rhadegund by Malcolm IV., King of Scotland, who augmented its revenue, and rebuilt the conventual church about the year 1160, the remaining portion of which forms the chapel of Jesus' College; for the purpose of founding this college it was granted to Bishop Alcock by Henry VII., having escheated to the Crown in consequence of its being deserted by the nuns. The monastery of the Grey friars, or Franciscans, the site of which is occupied by Sidney-Sussex College, was founded about 1224, and was very flourishing. The Bethlemite friars settled in Cambridge, in 1257, in a house in Trumpington-street, of which they had procured a grant. The friars De sacco, or De penitentia Jesu Christi, whose order was suppressed in 1307, settled in the same street in 1258. The brethren of St. Mary settled in the parish of All Saints, near the castle, about 1274. The priory of the Black friars, the site of which is occupied by Emanuel College, was founded before 1275. The Augustine friars are supposed to have settled here about 1290: their convent, which was in the parish of St. Edward, was founded by Sir Geoffrey Pitchford, Knt. The White friars, or Carmelites, the site of whose convent is occupied by the garden of the provost of King's College, settled first at Chesterton, and afterwards at the adjoining hamlet of Newnham, about 1249, from which they removed, in 1316, to a spot of ground just within the walls, given them by Edward II. A small priory of Gilbertines was founded by Bishop Fitzwalter, in 1291: the society occupied the old chapel of St. Edmund, opposite to Peter-House.

The castle, built in the reign of William the Conqueror, on the site of a Roman station, afterwards occupied by a Danish fortress, was, in early times, an occasional residence of the English sovereigns: after it had ceased to be so occupied, the buildings, which were extensive, went to decay: during the civil war it was made a garrison for the parliament. The county was in possession of it, subject to a fee-farm rent, so early as 1660; and the quarter sessions were regularly held in it from that time until after the building of the shire-hall: all that remains of the ancient building is a gate-house, which was long used as a prison, until the erection, about twenty-five years ago, of a new county gaol within the limits of the castle. Some of the earthworks that surround it are undoubtedly Roman. A somewhat curious piece of architectural antiquity exists in the ancient mansion-house of Merton Hall, in the parish of St. Giles, which has long borne the name of Pythagoras' School, though for what reason is unknown; the most remarkable part of the building is a large hall, measuring sixty-one feet by twenty-two: it had formerly an undercroft, with circular arches and plain pillars, apparently constructed in the early part of the twelfth century. There are several springs in the parish of All Saints, the water of which is strongly impregnated with iron. Amongst eminent natives of Cambridge were, Sir John Cheke, tutor, and afterwards secretary of state, to Edward VI.; Dr. Thirleby, first and only bishop of Westminster, and afterwards, successively, bishop of Norwich and Ely; Bishop Jeremy Taylor; Dr. Goldisborowe, Bishop of Gloucester; Dr. Townson, Bishop of Salisbury; Dr. Love, Dean of Ely; Thomas Bennett, who suffered martyrdom at Exeter, in 1530; and Richard Cumberland, the dramatist. Prince Adolphus Frederick, fifth and youngest surviving son of King George III., was created Duke of Cambridge, November 27th, 1801.

CAMBRIDGE, a hamlet in the parish of SLIMBRIDGE, upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Dursley. The population is returned with the parish. In the reign of Edward the Elder a battle was fought here between the Saxons and the Danes, in which the former were victorious.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the north-west by the county of Lincoln, on the north-east by the county of Norfolk, on the east by the county of Suffolk, on the south by the counties of Essex and Hertford, and on the west by the counties of Bedford, Huntingdon, and Northampton: it extends from $52^{\circ} 3'$ to $52^{\circ} 40'$ (N. Lat.), and from $25'$ (E. Lon.) to $10'$ (W. Lon.); and it contains eight hundred and fifty-eight square miles, or about five hundred and fifty thousand acres. The population, in 1821, amounted to 121,909.

At the time of the Roman invasion, Cambridgeshire formed part of the kingdom of the Iceni, being, according to Whitaker, inhabited by a tribe of that people, called the Cenomanni. In the first division of Britain by the Romans, it was included in Britannia Superior; in the second, in Britannia Prima; and in the last, in Flavia Caesariensis. During the Saxon Octarchy, it was part of the kingdom of the East Angles. On the subsequent division of England into three great districts, this county was comprised in that called Denelege, or the Danish jurisdiction. The Isle of Ely, from an early period, formed a separate district, with an independent jurisdiction, being called by the Saxons South-Girwa: Toubert, the husband of Ethelbreda, foundress of Ely abbey, gave it her in dower, and she bestowed it on that monastery, with all its liberties and privileges. On the Danish invasion and conquest of East Anglia, in the year 870, when King Edmund was put to death, the county was entirely laid waste; and for fifty years afterwards, during which East Anglia remained under the Danish dominion, Cambridge appears to have been one of their principal military stations: there it was that, in the year 921, the Danish army surrendered to King Edward the Elder. After the destruction of Ely by the Danes, King Burhred annexed the isle to the kingdom of Mercia. Again, in the year 1010, Cambridgeshire was ravaged by the same barbarous invaders, together with all the rest of the kingdom of East Anglia. After the battle of Hastings, and the consequent advance of the Conqueror into the interior of the kingdom, the Isle of Ely, on account of the deep fens which surrounded it, being a post of great strength, became the refuge of the Anglo-Saxon prelates and nobles who continued their resistance, in spite of repeated attempts to reduce it, under the command of the brave and vigilant Hereward: they held this post from 1067 to 1074, when it was surrendered through the treachery of the abbot and monks of Ely, to redeem from confiscation such of their lands as lay without the limits of the isle. During the civil wars in the reigns of Stephen, John, and Henry III., the county in general, and the Isle of Ely in particular, suffered severely from the devastations caused by the contending parties; and it was at Cambridge that the barons, on the death of John, were met in council by Louis the Dauphin. The only historical event of importance, from the reign of Henry III. to that of Charles I., is the proclaiming of Lady Jane Grey at Cambridge by the Duke of Northumberland, in 1553. At the beginning of the parliamentary war, Cambridgeshire and the Isle of Ely associated under Lord Grey of Werke for the parliament, and petitioned for arms for the defence of the county against the commissioners of array. Lord Clarendon enumerates this among the associated counties in which the king had no visible party, nor one fixed quarter. The university, however, voted its plate for the king's service. In 1643, Cromwell took possession of Cambridge for the parliament; and in 1645, the same commander, who had a considerable estate in that district, was sent down with three troops of horse to secure the Isle of Ely. In the month of August in the same year, the king marched towards Cambridge, but departed without attacking it. In June 1647, the parliamentary army, under Fairfax and Cromwell, had its head-quarters at Kennet, near Newmarket. At Childerley, near Cambridge, on the 7th of the same month, Fairfax and Cromwell waited on the king, and disavowed all participation in the seizure of his person by Cornet Joyce: on the 9th, the king was removed to Newmarket. The parliamentary army, while it remained in Cambridgeshire, had a general rendezvous on Triplow heath, and another near Royston.

This county (excepting fifteen parishes in the eastern part of it, which are in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, and the parish of Isleham, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Rochester), forms an archdeaconry in the diocese of Ely, province of Canterbury, comprising the deaneries of Barton, Bourne, otherwise Knapwell, Cambridge, Camps, Chesterton, Ely, Shengay, and Wisbeach; and contains one hundred and sixty-two parishes, of which sixty-six are rectories, eighty-four vicarages, and twelve perpetual curacies. For civil purposes it is divided into seventeen hundreds, viz., those of Armingford, Chesterton, Cheveley, Chilford, Ely, Flendish, Longstow, Northstow, Papworth, Radfield, Staine, Staploe, Thriplow, Wetherkey, Whittlesford, Wisbeach, and Witchford. It contains the city of Ely; the university, borough, and market town of Cambridge; the market towns of Linton, March, Thorney, and Wisbeach; and part of the market towns of Newmarket and Royston. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire, and two representatives each for the university and borough of Cambridge: the prevalent influence in county elections is possessed by the Dukes of Bedford and Rutland, and the Earl of Hardwicke. Cambridgeshire is within the Norfolk circuit: the assizes and quarter sessions for the county are held at Cambridge, where stands the county gaol: there are eighty-three acting magistrates. The Isle of Ely, having been restored with all its privileges to the abbey of Ely, after the re-establishment of that monastery by King Edgar, the abbots, and afterwards the bishops, exercised the privileges of a county palatine until the reign of Henry VIII., when these privileges were, in common with those of other palatinates, considerably abridged by act of parliament. The bishop is still custos rotulorum of the Isle of Ely, including the three hundreds of Ely, Wisbeach, and Witchford, his jurisdiction being entitled the royal franchise, or liberty, of the Bishop of Ely. The civil officers of this franchise are, a chief justice, who holds a court of pleas above 40s., under a commission from the bishop, and a court of Oyer and Terminer and gaol delivery, by virtue of a commission from the king; a chief bailiff, who exercises the same functions in the isle as the sheriff does in a county; a deputy-bailiff, two coroners, and several subordinate officers, all of whom are appointed by the bishop. The spring assizes and the April and October sessions for the isle are held at Ely; the summer assizes and the other sessions at Wisbeach; at each of these places there are a court-house and a gaol. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1829, amounted to £111,497, and the expenditure to £110,615, of which £94,369 was applied to the relief of the poor.

The surface of the county exhibits considerable variety: the parts adjoining the counties of Suffolk, Essex, and Hertford, have gently rising hills, with downs and open corn-fields, and a considerable portion of wood in the part contiguous to Suffolk, from Wood-Ditton to Castle-Camps; but in other parts there is a great scarcity of timber. Gogmagog hills, commencing about four miles south-east of Cambridge, though of no great height, yet being the highest in the county, command very extensive prospects. There is some pleasing scenery about Linton, Hildersham, and other villages in the valley through which the Granta runs, between Cambridge and Bartlow, which abounds with elm-trees. The views from the upper part of the Earl of Hardwicke's park, at Wimpole, are very rich. The northern part of the county, including the Isle of Ely, is for the most part fen land, and quite level, intersected by numerous canals and ditches, and containing many windmills, like those of Holland, and steam-engines for conveying the water from the land into channels formed for carrying it off to the sea: the enclosures are chiefly formed by ditches, and there are few trees except pollard willows. The great expanse of fen land in this part of the county comprises nearly half of that extensive agricultural district called the Bedford Level, the remainder being situated in the counties of Norfolk, Lincoln, Northampton, and Huntingdon. From the various remains that have been discovered in constructing the channels, it is supposed that at some remote period this county was all firm land, reduced to a marshy nature by frequent inundations of the sea, and by the obstruction of the old natural outlet, at Wisbeach, of the rivers Ouse, Nene, and Granta, and of several lodes and lakes. To prevent subsequent inundations, commissions were issued, from time to time, to enforce the repair of banks and sewers. The most important work of this kind, executed before the time of James I., was the great channel made by Bishop Morton, which carried off the overflowings of the Nene, and furnished water-carriage from Wisbeach to Peterborough. From the reign of Henry VI. down to that of James I., various commissions were granted for a general drainage, but no great progress was made under any of them: in consequence of these several failures, the king, in 1621, declared himself the principal undertaker, but was diverted from the design by other affairs towards the close of his reign. In 1630, Sir Cornelius Vermuyden, a Dutchman, at a session of sewers then held at Lynn, agreed to undertake this great work, on condition of having ninety-five thousand acres of the recovered lands insured to him, as a compensation for the expense and labour; but the landowners rejected his offer, and petitioned Francis, Earl of Bedford, who had a large property in the fens, to undertake the work on the same terms. The earl having acceded to their request, an instrument was drawn up, by which the agreement was confirmed, and various regulations for the management of the concern were determined upon: this instrument, the foundation of the laws whereby the Bedford Level Corporation is still governed, having been made and ratified at a session of sewers held at Lynn, in the year 1631, received the appellation of the Lynn Law. The Earl of Bedford associated with himself the Earl of Bolingbroke, Lord Gorges, and others, to whom he assigned shares. In 1635, the king granted the adventurers a charter of incorporation, with extensive privileges; and so rapid was the progress of the work, that in about three years afterwards, at a session of sewers held at St. Ives, in October 1638, the Great Level was adjudged to be drained according to the Lynn Law, and the ninety-five thousand acres were ordered to be allotted according to the terms of the agreement. Of this allotment, twelve thousand were made over to the king, as an acknowledgment of his gracious favour in countenancing and assisting the undertaking, and forty thousand of the remainder were made liable to taxation, for the purpose of maintaining and repairing the works: however, at a session of sewers held at Huntingdon in 1639, the whole proceedings of the last commission were annulled, the drainage was adjudged to be incomplete and defective, and it was determined that the earl and his associates had not performed their contract, and were not entitled to the land that had been allotted to them. The king (Charles I.) now proposed to undertake the whole concern, and the commissioners offered him fifty-seven thousand acres, in addition to the ninety-five thousand already mentioned, of which forty thousand were to remain to the adventurers, as a recompense for the expense incurred. In consequence of the national troubles that soon afterwards ensued, no attempt was made under the authority of the new commission to improve the drainage; meantime all the works went to decay, and remained in that condition until the year 1649, when an ordinance was passed by the Convention Parliament, declaring all the proceedings at Huntingdon null and void; and the whole management of draining the level on the general plan of the Lynn Law was committed to the care of William, Earl of Bedford, son and heir of Earl Francis, the original undertaker, who died in 1641. In 1662, an act of parliament passed for confirming the ordinance made during the interregnum, since called "the pretended act," in its most essential points: by this act taxes were laid on the ninety-five thousand acres, for maintaining the works of the level, and this taxation was further adjusted by an act of 1667. Twelve thousand acres were allotted to the crown, including two thousand granted by Charles I. to Jerome, Earl of Portland; and the remaining eighty-three thousand were vested in the Corporation of the Bedford Level, which, under this act, consists of a governor, six bailiffs, twenty conservators, and commonalty. The officers are elected annually on the Wednesday in Whitsun-week: the commonalty consists of all such persons as are possessed of a hundred acres in the fens; a conservator must be possessed of two hundred; the governors and bailiffs of four hundred acres each. The Great Level, comprising a tract of about four hundred thousand acres, has been, from an early period, divided into three districts, the North Level, the Middle Level, and the South Level; the greater part of the Middle Level, and a considerable portion of the South Level, are in Cambridgeshire, including the whole of the Isle of Ely, and a few parishes to the south-east of it, and consisting nearly of two hundred thousand acres. With a view of obtaining a still more effectual drainage, an act for making a navigable cut from Lynn to Eau-Brinck passed in the year 1795, and another act to amend the former in 1805: this long-projected undertaking was commenced in 1818, and completed in 1820, the objects proposed to be accomplished by it being twofold, namely, the improvement of the drainage above, and of the harbour of Lynn below, by cutting off a considerable bend in the river Ouse immediately above that port: the old bed of the river is rapidly being filled up, and upwards of seven hundred acres of land will soon be converted to agricultural purposes.

The substrata of the county are chalk, clunch, gravel, gault, sand, silt, and peat earth: the chalk extends through the hilly part, from Royston to Newmarket; the clunch, a calcareous substance found in large masses, but neither so white nor so soft as chalk, chiefly abounds in the parish of Burwell and Isleham, and is much used for lime and fire stones; the gault is a stiff blue clay, prevailing in the eastern and western parts of the county; the stratum of sand, which crosses Bedfordshire, begins in this county in the parish of Gamlingay; the silt, a sea sand very finely pulverised by the agitation of the waters, is found in the marsh land of several parishes in the northern extremity of the county, near Wisbeach, where it is used for mending the roads; the peat earth extends through the whole of the fen district. The soil is chiefly arable, and produces an abundant supply of corn, a considerable quantity of which is sent to the London market: the average produce of wheat on the uplands is calculated at twenty-four bushels per acre; of barley, oats, &c., at thirty bushels: the fen lands are more productive, particularly of oats, yielding on an average about forty bushels per acre: it is estimated that about one-fourth of the fen lands actually in cultivation is sown with cole-seed, the plant being for the most part eaten off by sheep. Hemp and flax are cultivated to a considerable extent in the parishes of Upwell, Welney, Outwell, Elm, and Wisbeach, particularly in the two first. The parishes of Chatteris, Mepal, Sutton, Swavesey, Over, Willingham, Cottenham, Ramp-ton, Landbeach, Waterbeach, Stretham, Ely, Littleport, Soham, and Fordham, constitute the principal dairy district, a great quantity of the butter produced in which is sent to London, and there sold under the name of Cambridge butter. In the parish of Cottenham alone, about one thousand eight hundred cows are kept; and in that of Willingham about one thousand two hundred: in these two parishes is made the cheese so much esteemed for its flavour, which goes by the name of Cottenham cheese: the parish of Soham also is celebrated for good cheese. The neighbourhood of Ely is noted for producing garden vegetables. Besides the stock common to the county, the oxen reared are usually of the Norfolk and Suffolk breed; the cows are mostly of the Cambridgeshire horned breed, although almost every parish contains various kinds: the native calves are preferred to those of Suffolk, the veal of the former being whiter. The greatest number of sheep is kept in the fens: the breed preferred is a cross between the Leicestershire and the Lincolnshire, but there are many others.

The principal rivers are the Ouse, the Cam or Granta, and the Nene. The Old Ouse crosses the county from west to east, entering it in the parish of Haddenham, near Earith bridge, and forms the southern and south-eastern boundary of the Isle of Ely, receiving the Cam at Upware, and, at a place called Prickwillow, the Lark, which is navigable to Bury St. Edmund's; it there becomes the boundary between the counties of Cambridge and Suffolk, and so continues to Brand Creek, where it receives the Little Ouse, and quits the county. The Ouse, in its modern course, enters the county about two furlongs to the north-west of Earith bridge, runs down the Hundred Feet, or New Bedford river, in a direction nearly north-east, and enters Norfolk a little to the west of Welney: it is navigable in its whole course through the county. The Cam or Granta, which is navigable to Cambridge, is formed by two small streams that unite between Grantchester and Harston, and falls into the old line of the Ouse near Thetford. The Nene, in its old course, enters at Benwick, and quits for Norfolk at Outwell: in its modern course it separates Huntingdonshire from the Isle of Ely, until it enters the isle at Moreton's Leam, whence it proceeds to the Cross Keys Wash. The rivers abound with fish: the pike and eels are especially plentiful: a considerable quantity of smelts is taken in the New Bedford river. The canals that intersect the Isle of Ely were made for the purpose of drainage, but many of them are also navigable. Vermuyden's canal commences at Ramsey: it enters the Isle of Ely near Ramsey Moor, and extends to Welche's Dam, where it joins the Old Bedford river, and, proceeding in the old course of that river, leaves the county a little to the west of Welney. The New Bedford river is the main channel for barges passing from the upper to the lower parts of the Ouse. The Old Bedford river, which runs parallel with the last from Earith to Denver sluice, is now seldom navigated, excepting the lower part of it, near Denver sluice, having been almost choked up since the making of the New Bedford river. A canal from Outwell to Wisbeach was made about thirty years ago. There is also a canal from Peterborough, by Stanground sluice and through Whittlesea dyke, to the Old Nene, a little below Benwick, and thence to March; and there are short cuts from the Ouse to Soham, Reach, and Burwell.

The great north road from London to Edinburgh enters the western part of Cambridgeshire at Royston, and quits it at Papworth St. Agnes, between the fifty-second and the fifty-third milestones. The road from London to Wisbeach, after crossing two angles of the county on its south-western border, re-enters it from Huntingdonshire at Chatteris ferry, and passes through March to Wisbeach. The road from London to Newmarket and Norfolk enters at Great Chesterford, and leaves the county about five miles beyond Newmarket. There are three turnpike-roads from Cambridge to London; one of them falls into the Newmarket road near Chesterford; the second quits the county near the eleventh milestone; and the third, branching from the latter at Hawkston, enters Huntingdonshire at Royston.

Few Roman antiquities have been discovered in Cambridgeshire, except on the site of the Roman station at Cambridge, the only one of importance within the limits of the county. The principal ancient roads that crossed it were, the Iknield-street, entering from Suffolk; near Newmarket, and quitting at Royston; the Ermin-street, which passed through it on the line of the present great north road; and the great Roman way from Colchester to Chester, which enters near Withersfield in Suffolk, and crosses the county from east to west, passing through Cambridge. The first and last, in different parts of their course, may be distinctly traced. Cambridgeshire is peculiarly rich in specimens of church architecture, Ely cathedral alone furnishing a nearly complete series of the variations in style that successively prevailed from the eleventh century to the sixteenth. The sepulchral monuments, from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century, are also numerous. Before the Reformation there were in this county thirty-two religious houses, including two houses of the Knights Templars, two preceptories of the Knights Hospitallers, and three Alien priories: there were four ancient colleges and eleven hospitals, one of which, St. John's Hospital at Cambridge, was converted into St. John's College. There are many monastic remains: those of Ely abbey are by far the most considerable. Of ancient castles there is little remaining, except the earthworks. The most considerable encampment is that called Handlebury, on the highest part of Gogmagog hills, supposed to be of British origin. The most remarkable earthworks are the trenches that extended from the woods on the east side of the county to the fens, the most entire of which is called the Devil's ditch; it runs seven miles, from Wood-Ditton to Reach, in the parish of Burwell, nearly in a straight line. Another trench, Fleam dyke, runs parallel with it, at the distance of seven miles, extending from the woodlands at Balsham to the fens at Fen-Ditton: a considerable part of it has been levelled.

CAMDEN-TOWN, a chapelry in the parish of ST. PANCRAS, Holborn division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.W.) from St. Paul's. The population is returned with the parish. It takes its name from Marquis Camden, lessee of the prebendal manor of Cantelows, on which it is situated. The principal part of it has been built within the last few years, and the buildings now in progress promise, when completed, to render it an elegant appendage to the western part of the metropolis. The houses are in general respectable and regularly built; the crescent, terrace, and other ranges of building in the upper part of it, are of handsome appearance, and command a partial, but pleasing, view of the Hampstead and Highgate hills. The streets, which are wide and regularly formed, are partially paved, and lighted with oil; and the inhabitants are supplied with water from a conduit into which it is conveyed from Hampstead. The Regent's canal passes through the northern part of the suburb. A veterinary college, in which lectures are delivered on the anatomy and diseases of the horse, was established in 1791, and subsequently confirmed by royal charter: it is under the management of a president, vice-president, directors, and a treasurer, who are elected annually by ballot; a subscription of two guineas per annum, or a donation of twenty guineas, qualifies persons for admission as members: the premises, which are neatly built of brick, include a spacious area, and comprise a school for the instruction of pupils, a theatre for dissections and the delivery of lectures, a museum for anatomical preparations, and an infirmary, in which is stabling for sixty horses, with paddocks adjoining. The chapel, erected in 1828, on ground given by Marquis Camden, who appoints the minister, is a neat edifice of brick, with a handsome stone portico of the Ionic order at the west end, above which rises a circular turret with a cupola. Near it are a chapel and a cemetery belonging to the parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in connexion with which parish also there are nine almshouses in Bayham-street. Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have each a place of worship. There is a National school, in which one hundred and fifty children of Camden and Kentish Towns are instructed.

CAMEL (QUEEN), a parish in the hundred of CATSASH, county of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.) from Ilchester, containing 712 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £17. 16. 8., and in the patronage of Miss Ann Mildmay. The church is dedicated to St. Barnabas. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This was a place of some note previously to its being burnt about the close of the sixteenth century. A charter was anciently granted, allowing a market to be held twice a week, and four fairs annually: the former has long been discontinued, and only two of the latter are now held, viz., one on Trinity-Tuesday, and the other on October 25th. Opposite the hamlet of Wales, by the bank of the river Camel, there is a spring, the water of which has been successfully used in scrofulous cases.

CAMEL (WEST), a parish forming, with the parish of Yeovilton, the south-eastern portion of the hundred of SOMERTON, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.) from Ilchester, containing 304 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £13. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints. In a hill, half a mile northward from this place, two catacombs, in which lay several human figures, regularly ranged in rows, were discovered near the close of the last century.

CAMELEY, a parish in the hundred of CHEWTON, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Pensford, containing 604 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 18. 4., and in the patronage of Lady Hipplesley. The church is dedicated to St. James. Several quarries of superior Pennant stone, much of which is sent to Bath, for the purpose of flagging the pathways, are wrought within the parish.

Seal and Arms.

CAMELFORD, a borough and market town (having separate jurisdiction) in the parish of LANTEGLOS, locally in the hundred of Lesnewth, county of CORNWALL, 15 miles (W. by S.) from Launceston, and 228 (W. S. W.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. This place, supposed to have been the Guffelford of the Saxon Chronicle, takes its name from a ford on the river Camel, and is generally thought to be the scene of a memorable battle between King Arthur and his nephew Mordred, about the year 542, in which the former was mortally wounded, and the latter killed on the spot. About a mile to the north of the town, where the road crosses a small brook, is a place called "Slaughter Bridge," in allusion to the carnage which then ensued. In 823, a battle took place between the Britons and the Saxons under Egbert, when the former were defeated with great loss. The town, though in a dreary part of the county, has a pure air, and is considered healthy; it is indifferently built, and not lighted, but the streets are spacious and roughly paved, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. There is a manufactory on a small scale for the spinning of yarn. The market is on Friday: the fairs are on the Friday after March 10th, May 26th, June 17th and 18th, and September 6th, chiefly for cattle. Camelford was made a free borough by Richard, Earl of Cornwall; its privileges were confirmed by charter of Henry III., in 1259; and in the 25th of Charles II. it received a charter of incorporation, by which the government is vested in a mayor, eight aldermen, and an indefinite number of freemen, assisted by a serjeant at mace and subordinate officers. The mayor, who is elected annually on the Monday after Michaelmas, by the aldermen, from their own body, is a justice of the peace within the borough. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here. The freedom of the borough is acquired by presentation from a jury of free burgesses empanelled by the mayor at his courts held at Easter and Michaelmas. The corporation hold a court every third week, in which civil actions to the amount of £50 within the borough are cognizable; but this is mere formality, it being immediately adjourned. The elective franchise was granted in the reign of Edward VI., since which time the borough has returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the free burgesses being householders residing in the borough, and paying scot and lot, whose number is about twenty: the mayor is the returning officer. The parliamentary influence is possessed by the Marquis of Cleveland, who is owner of great part of the property within the borough. The town-hall, begun in June 1806, was built at the expense of the Duke of Bedford, then proprietor of the borough: the lower part forms the market-place. Camelford does not possess a separate place of worship in connexion with the establishment, the parochial church being situated about a mile and a half to the south. An ancient chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, has long been desecrated. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

A charity school was founded, in 1679, by Sir James Smyth, and endowed with the tenement of Tregarth, producing £25 per annum, which is paid to the master: the school-room was rebuilt in 1823, by the corporation, who appoint the master, and nominate five children for gratuitous instruction. The renowned King Arthur is said to have been born at Tintagel castle, about five miles north-westward from the town.

CAMERTON, a parish in the hundred of WELLOW, county of SOMERSET, 6½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Bath, containing 1004 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £15. 9. 2., and in the patronage of Mrs. Jarret. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There are meeting-houses for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The Radford canal crosses this parish; and an old Roman Fosse-way traces its south-east boundary. Here is a coal mine, wherein impressions of fern, rushes, and other plants, have been discovered. Various relics of the Britons, Romans, and Saxons have been found.

CAMERTON, a joint township with Ryhill, in the parish of BURSTWICK, southern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, East riding of the county of YORK, 2½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Hedon. The population is returned with Ryhill.

CAMMERINGHAM, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7½ miles (N. N. W.) from Lincoln, containing 142 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 4. 2., and in the patronage of Lord Monson. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a modern building, constructed with the materials of the former edifice. Limestone is obtained here.

CAMMERTON, a parish in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Cammerton and Seaton, and containing 706 inhabitants, of which number, 86 are in the township of Cammerton, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Workington. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church, rebuilt in 1794, contains an effigy in full-length, the feet resting on a lamb, of a person called Black Tom of the North, whose seat here, according to tradition, was Barrow castle, now in ruins. There are some coal mines in this parish, which is bounded on the north by Solway Frith, and on the south by the river Derwent, whence passes a canal to the Seaton iron-works.

CAMPDEN (BROAD), a hamlet in the parish of CHIPPING-CAMPDEN, upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, 1 mile (S. E.) from Chipping-Campden, containing 250 inhabitants.

CAMPDEN (CHIPPING), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, comprising the market-town of Chipping-Campden, and the hamlets of Berrington, Broad Campden, and Wessington with Combe, and containing 1798 inhabitants, of which number, 1249 are in the town of Chipping-Campden, 29 miles (N. E. by E.) from Gloucester, and 90 (N. W. by W.) from London. This place, which is of very great antiquity, is supposed to have derived its name from an encampment formed prior to a battle between the Mercians and the West Saxons; or perhaps, with more probability, from a congress of the Saxon chiefs confederated for the conquest of Britain, that took place here in the year 687. In the fourteenth century it became noted as a staple town for wool, and was the residence of many opulent merchants, who exported a great quantity of that article to Flanders. On the emigration of the Flemings, who settled in England, and introduced the manufacture of woollen cloth, Campden lost its trade with Flanders, and its importance from that time rapidly declined. Sir Baptist Hicks erected a magnificent mansion here in the fifteenth century, which, at the commencement of the civil war in the reign of Charles I., its loyal owner demolished, to prevent its being garrisoned for the parliamentarians. The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale surrounded with hills richly wooded, and consists principally of one street, nearly a mile in length, neither paved nor lighted: the houses are in general ancient, and some of them fine specimens of the style of domestic architecture prevailing about the time of Elizabeth: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from numerous springs: the environs abound with fine scenery. On Dover Hill, about a mile from the town, is still preserved, on the Thursday in Whitsuntide, some memorial of an ancient celebration of athletic exercises, instituted in the reign of James I. by Robert Dover, which was resorted to by the nobility and gentry resident in the surrounding country; prizes were awarded to such as excelled in the games, which were continued until the time of the Commonwealth, when they were suppressed. The manufacture of silk and rugs is carried on. The market is on Wednesday: fairs are held on Ash-Wednesday, April 23rd, August 5th, and December 11th. In the 3rd of James I., Campden received a charter of incorporation, by which the government was vested in two bailiffs, a steward, twelve capital and twelve inferior burgesses, who had power to hold a court of session, and a court of record for the recovery of small debts; but the charter has been forfeited from neglect, and though the bailiffs are still appointed annually on the Wednesday before New Michaelmas-day, they exercise no local authority: a court leet is held once a year: the town is wholly within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. The court-house is situated nearly in the centre of the street, but possesses no claim to architectural description.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £20.6.8., and in the patronage of Lord Barham. The church, dedicated to St. James, and situated to the north of the town, in the hamlet of Berrington, is a spacious and handsome structure in the decorated style of English architecture, with a fine lofty tower, having lateral and angular buttresses, and crowned with pierced battlements and crocketed pinnacles: at the western angle of the north aisle is a circular turret, with a low dome; and at the western angle of the south aisle is an octangular turret, with a corresponding dome: some portions of the finely carved oak roof are still preserved in the north aisle, but in some instances the beauty and character of the interior have been defaced by modern alterations and repairs. It contains some beautiful sepulchral monuments to the memory of Sir Baptist Hicks, first Viscount Campden; Noel, Earl of Gainsborough; and other distinguished persons. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded in 1487, and endowed by Mr. John Fereby, or Verbey, with a moiety of the manor of Lynham in Oxfordshire; but, owing to mismanagement, the estate was sold, and another purchased, producing only £60 per annum, which, by a decree of Chancery in 1627, was vested in trustees for the maintenance of a master and an usher, who teach from thirty to forty boys: it has an interest in eight scholarships founded in Pembroke College, Oxford, by George Townsend, Esq., by will dated in 1682, for boys from the schools of Gloucester, Cheltenham, Chipping-Campden, and North Leach, whereby he ordained also that scholars on his foundation should be appointed to his donatives of Uxbridge and Colnbrook. A charity school, for clothing and instructing thirty girls, was endowed with £1000 by James Thynne, Esq. Almshouses for six aged men and the same number of women, were founded and endowed by Baptist, Lord Hicks, the first Viscount Campden, who rebuilt the market-house, and during his life gave £10,000 for charitable uses; he died in 1629, and was buried in the south aisle of the church. George Ballard, author of the Memoirs of learned British Ladies, was a native of Campden; he died at Oxford, in 1755. There are some petrifying springs in the neighbourhood.

CAMPSALL, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Askerne, Campsall, Fenwick, Moss, Norton, and Sutton, and containing 1898 inhabitants, of which number, 389 are in the township of Campsall, 8 miles (N. N. W.) from Doncaster. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £16.16.8., endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of R. Yarburgh, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

CAMPSEA-ASH, a parish in the hundred of LOES, county of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (E.) from Wickham-Market, containing 342 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £14.5., and in the patronage of Sir R. J. Woodford, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. In the reign of Richard I., Theobald de Valoins gave his estate in this place to his two sisters, that they might build a nunnery in honour of the Virgin Mary, which they accordingly founded, and Joan, one of the sisters, was the first prioress; it was of the order of St. Clare, or the Minoreesses, and at the dissolution was endowed with £182.9.5. per annum: a portion of the buildings still remains.

CAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, 3½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Silsoe, containing, with the chapelry of Shefford, 1028 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11.9.7., and in the patronage of Sir J. Osborne, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The manor, in which the small village of Campton, formerly called Camelton, is situated, was anciently possessed by the noble family of Lisle; but, upon the estates of this family devolving to the crown, it was annexed to the honour of Ampthill: the manor-house is now occupied as a school-house.

CANDLESBY, a parish in the Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Spilsby, containing 251 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 19. 4., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Benedict.

CANDOVER (BROWN), a parish in the hundred of MAINSBOROUGH, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from New Alresford, containing 274 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Woodmancot annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £23. 4. 2., and in the patronage of Alexander Baring, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CANDOVER (CHILTON), a parish in the hundred of MAINSBOROUGH, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N.) from New Alresford, containing 87 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 3., and in the patronage of Alexander Baring, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

CANDOVER (PRESTON), a parish in the hundred of BERMONDSPIT, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6 miles (N. by E.) from New Alresford, containing 472 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Nutley annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £18, endowed with £300 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Thomas Hall, in 1772, bequeathed £4. 4. per annum for the instruction of six poor children.

CANEWDON, a parish in the hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Rochford, containing 732 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £34. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a large structure in the later style of English architecture, with a massive western tower. Canute the Dane kept his court at Canewdon, from which circumstance its name is supposed to have been derived. The intrenchments of a strong encampment, supposed also to be Danish, including about six acres, encircle the manor-house. The river Crouch and Canewdon creek are navigable on the north of this parish.

CANFIELD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of DUNMOW, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Great Dunmow, containing 434 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13, endowed with £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. M. Wilson, Esq. Here are the keep-mound and intrenchments of a castle, from which this place was anciently called Canfield ad Castrum, or Castle-Canfield.

CANFIELD (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of DUNMOW, county of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Great Dunmow, containing 249 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £12. 0. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge.

CANFORD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of COGDEAN, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Wimborne-Minster, comprising the chapelry of Kingston, and the tythings of Longfleet and Parkston, and containing 2696 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, and a royal peculiar (including the town and county of the town of Poole, which was formerly in this parish), within the jurisdiction of the lord of the manor, rated in the king's books at £11. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of G. T. Brice, Esq. The church is a small building on a singular plan; it has a nave and a chancel, with a north aisle to each, and the tower is situated between these two aisles; there is also a south aisle to the nave and a south chapel to the chancel: one hundred and sixty-one additional sittings, one hundred and twenty-one of which are free, have been recently erected, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 for that purpose. The navigable river Stour runs on the north of this parish, where it is crossed by a bridge on the Poole and Wimborne road.

CANN (ST. RUMBOLD), a parish in that part of the hundred of SIXPENNY-HANDLEY which is in the Shaston (West) division of the county of DORSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Shaftesbury, containing 365 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £9. 2. 1., and in the patronage of the Earl of Shaftesbury.

CANNINGS (BISHOP'S), a parish in the hundred of POTTERNE and CANNINGS, county of WILTS, 3 miles (N. E.) from Devizes, containing, with the chapelry of St. James, and the tything of Chittoe, 2722 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £17. 19. 2. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a large and handsome structure, in the early style of English architecture.

CANNINGTON, a parish in the hundred of CANNINGTON, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Bridg-water, containing, with the hamlet of Edstock, with Beer, 1228 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 10., and in the patronage of W. Hodges, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. This is a place of considerable antiquity, having given name to the hundred, and it was once of much greater importance. Camden derives its name from having been occupied by a tribe of Britons, called the Cangi. The navigable river Parret flows on the north and east sides of this parish; and from a small harbour, called Coombwich, it is in contemplation to construct a canal to Bridg-water, to enable large vessels to sail directly up to that port. Mr. Rogers bequeathed £300 per ann., directing that £6 each should be annually given to twenty poor men, and the remainder to the poor of the parish generally. This was formerly the residence of the Cliffords, and is supposed to have been the birthplace of Fair Rosamond. A Benedictine nunnery was founded, in the reign of Stephen, by Robert de Courcy, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; it consisted of a prioress and six or seven nuns, whose revenue was estimated at £39. 15. 8. The buildings are now occupied by a society of nuns, who observe the rules of St. Benedict.

CANNOCK, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, comprising the townships of Cannock, Cannock-Wood, Cheslyn-Hay, Hednesford with Leacroft, Huntington, and Great Wyrley, and containing 2780 inhabitants, of which number, 766 are in the township of Cannock, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Penkridge. The living, which is remarkable for having been the first preferment of the famous Dr. Sacheverell, is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, endowed with £15 per annum and £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1300 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. Luke. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The village is supplied with water by means of a conduit and leaden pipes from Leacroft, about a mile distant, constructed by Bishop Hough. There are manufactories for edged tools at Church-bridge and Wedges Mill, which afford employment to about two hundred persons; the coal used is supplied from the immediate neighbourhood, as well as the iron-ore called Cannock-stone, or Cark. A court leet and a court baron are held annually, at which the constable and headborough, and the respective constables of the several townships, are chosen by juries; and special courts are called, when required, for the transfer of copyholds. Fairs are held on May 8th, August 24th, and October 6th, principally for cattle and sheep. A school, founded by John Wood, for the free education of children was, in 1727, enfeoffed with land by Thomas Wood, the income of which is £8 per annum; and John Biddulph, Esq. gave a meadow and garden for the use of the schoolmaster; there are thirty scholars, but none are taught free at present. In 1725, Mrs. M. Chapman bequeathed a small sum for the education of three or four children. A National school has also been recently erected at the expense of Mrs. Walhouse. This place in ancient times was a forest or chase belonging to the Mercian kings. Castle Ring, situated on the summit of Castle Hill, and supposed to have been a British encampment, is nearly a circular area of eight or ten acres, surrounded by a double trench occupying three or four acres more, exhibiting traces at its northern and southern entrances of various advanced works. Near it are the remains of a moat, enclosing an oblong square of about three acres, named the Old Nunnery, where a Cistercian abbey was founded in the reign of Stephen, which was shortly after removed to Stoneleigh in Warwickshire: a similar enclosure at a small distance is called the Moat Bank.

CANNOCK-WOOD, a township in the parish of CANNOCK, eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, containing 355 inhabitants.

CANNONBY (CROSS), a parish in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the market town and chapelry of Maryport, and the townships of Birkby, Cross-Cannonby, and Crosby, and containing 3870 inhabitants, of which number, 60 are in the township of Cross-Cannonby, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Maryport. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. John, is of early Norman architecture. This parish lies on the shore of the Solway Frith, and is bounded on the south by the river Ellen: it contains coal and freestone, and in a quarry of the latter, implements supposed to be Roman were found some years ago, from which it is thought that the stone used in erecting the Roman station at Ellenborough was obtained here.

CANON-PION, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Weobley, containing 634 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is principally in the early style of English architecture, with some fine screen-work; the font is ancient, with an octagonal top enriched with quatrefoil. A court leet is held once a year.

CANON-TEIGN, a hamlet in the parish of CHRISTOW, hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Chudleigh. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel of ease.

CANTELOSE, or CANTELOFF, a parish in the hundred of HUMBLEYARD, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (S. W.) from Norwich. The living is a rectory, annexed to the rectory of Hetherset in 1397, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich. The church, which was dedicated to All Saints, was served as a free chapel from the time of its annexation until the Reformation, when it was demolished.

CANTERBURY, an ancient city, and a county of itself, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Bridge and Petham, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, eastern division of the county of KENT, 26 miles (S. E. by E.) from Rochester, 16 (N. W. by W.) from Dover, and 55 (E. by S.) from London, containing 12,745 inhabitants, and, including the suburbs and portions of parishes which are without the liberties of the city, 15,373. This place, the origin of which is not distinctly known, is, from the discovery of numerous Druidical relics, supposed to have been distinguished at a very early period for the celebration of the religious rites of the Britons, prior to the Christian era. That it was a British town of considerable importance before the Roman invasion, is not only confirmed by the numerous celts, and other instruments of British warfare, that have been at various times found in the vicinity, but by the name of the station which the Romans fixed here on their establishment in the island, and which they called Durovernum, a name obviously derived from the British Dwr, a stream and whern, swift, being characteristic of the Stour, upon which it is situated. From this station three roads branched off to Rhutupis, Dubra, and Lemanum, now Richborough, Dovor, and Limne. By the Saxons, who, on their arrival in Britain, were established in this part of Kent, it was called Cantiwara-byrig, from which its present name is evidently deduced. Canterbury was the metropolis of the Saxon kingdom of Kent, and the residence of its kings, of whom Ethelbert having married Bertha of France, who had been educated in the principles of Christianity, allowed her by treaty the free exercise of her religion, and suffered her to bring over with her a limited number of ecclesiastics. The Christian religion had been partially promulgated during the occupation of the city by the Romans, and two churches had been built in the second century, one of which, on Bertha's arrival, was consecrated for her use by the Bishop of Soissons, and dedicated to St. Martin. During the reign of this monarch, Augustine, who had been sent by Pope Gregory to convert the Britons to Christianity, took up his station at Canterbury, where, through the influence of Bertha, he was courteously received: his mission was attended with success; the king, who soon became a convert, resigned to him his palace, which he converted into a priory for brethren of his own order; and, in conjunction with Ethelbert, he founded an abbey without the city walls, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. Being invested by the pope with the dignity of an archbishop, he made this city the seat of the metropolitan see, which distinction it has retained for more than twelve centuries, under an uninterrupted succession of ninety archbishops, many of whom have been eminent for their talents and their virtues, and distinguished by the important offices they have held in the administration of the temporal affairs of the kingdom. Among these may be noticed Dunstan, who governed the kingdom with absolute authority during the reigns of Edred and Edwy; Stigand, who, for his opposition to William the Conqueror, was displaced from his see; Lanfranc, his successor, who rebuilt the cathedral, and founded several religious establishments; the celebrated Thomas à Becket; Stephen Langton, who was raised to the see in defiance of King John; Cranmer, who, for his zeal in promoting the Reformation, was burnt at the stake in the reign of Mary; and Laud, who, for his strenuous support of the measures of his sovereign, Charles I., was beheaded during the usurpation of Cromwell. The abbey was intended as a place of sepulture for the successors of the archbishop in the see of Canterbury, and for those of the monarch in the kingdom of Kent: the cathedral, which was not completed at the time of Augustine's decease, was dedicated to our Saviour, and is still usually called Christ Church.

The city suffered frequently from the ravages of the Danes, of whom, on their advancing against it in 1009, the inhabitants, by the advice of Archbishop Siricius, purchased a peace for the sum of £30,000, obtaining from them an oath not to renew their aggressions; but in 1011, they again landed at Sandwich, and laid siege to the city, which, after a resolute defence for three weeks on the part of the inhabitants, they took by storm and reduced to ashes. In this siege, forty-three thousand two hundred persons were slain, more than eight thousand of the inhabitants were massacred, and among the prisoners whom they carried off to their camp at Greenwich was Alphege, the archbishop, whom they afterwards put to death at Blackheath, for refusing to sanction their extortions. Canute, after his usurpation of the throne upon the death of Edmund Ironside, contributed greatly to the rebuilding of the city, and the restoration of the cathedral; and, placing his crown upon the altar, gave the revenue of the port of Sandwich for the support of the monks. From this time the city began to revive, and continued to flourish till the Norman Conquest, when, according to Stowe, it surpassed London in extent and magnificence. In Domesday-book it is described, under the title "Civitas Cantuariæ," as a populous city, having a castle, which, as there is no previous mention of it, was probably built by the Conqueror, to keep his Saxon subjects in awe; the remains now visible are evidently of Norman character. In 1080, the cathedral was destroyed by fire, but was restored with great splendour, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity, by Archbishop Lanfranc, who rebuilt the monastic edifices, erected the archbishop's palace, founded and endowed a priory, which he dedicated to St. Gregory, and built the hospitals of St. John and St. Nicholas. In 1161, the city was nearly consumed by fire, and it suffered materially from a similar calamity at several subsequent periods. In 1170, the memorable murder of Thomas à Becket was perpetrated in the cathedral, as he was ascending the steps leading from the nave into the choir: his subsequent canonization tended greatly to enrich the city and the church, by the costly offerings of numerous pilgrims of all ranks, who came not only from every part of England, but from every place in Christendom, to visit his shrine. From this source a rich fund was obtained for the enlargement and embellishment of the cathedral, which rapidly recovered from the repeated devastations to which it was exposed, and from which it invariably arose with increased magnificence. Four years after the murder of Becket, Henry II. performed a pilgrimage to Canterbury, where, prostrating himself before the shrine of the martyr, he submitted to be scourged by the monks, whom he had assembled for that purpose. In 1299, the nuptials of Edward I. and Margaret of Anjou were celebrated with great pomp in this city, which, in the reign of Edward IV., was constituted a county of itself, under the designation of the "City and County of the City of Canterbury." Little variety henceforward occurs in the civil history of this city, the interests of which were so closely interwoven with the ecclesiastical establishments, that, upon their dissolution in the reign of Henry VIII., its prosperity materially declined.

The jubilees which, by indulgence of the pope, were celebrated every fiftieth year, in honour of St. Thomas à Becket, caused a great influx of wealth into the city, which owed much of its trade to the immense number of pilgrims who came to visit his shrine: according to the civic records, more than one hundred thousand persons attended the fifth jubilee, in 1420, when the number and richness of their offerings were incredible; the last of these jubilees was celebrated in 1520. The dissolution of the priory of Christ Church was effected gradually: the festivals in honour of the martyr were successively abolished, his gorgeous shrine was stripped of its costly ornaments, and the bones of the saint were, according to Stowe, ultimately burnt to ashes, and scattered to the winds: the revenue, at the dissolution, was estimated at £2489. 4. 9., a sum greatly inferior to the actual value of its numerous and extensive possessions. At this period part of the monastery of St. Augustine was converted by Henry VIII. into a royal palace, in which Queen Elizabeth held her court for several days. During her reign, the Walloons, driven from the Netherlands by persecution on account of their religious tenets, found an asylum at Canterbury, where they introduced the weaving of silk and stuffs; their descendants are still numerous in the city and its neighbourhood, and continue to use, as their place of worship, the crypt under the cathedral, which was granted to them by Elizabeth, and where the service is performed in the French language. Charles I., in 1625, solemnized his marriage with Henrietta Maria of France at this place; and during the war in the reign of that monarch, the city was occupied by a regiment of Cromwell's horse, that committed great havoc in the ecclesiastical buildings, and wantonly mutilated and defaced the cathedral, which they used as stabling for their horses. A political tumult occurred in 1647, in which originated the celebrated Kentish Association in favour of Charles I., that terminated in the siege of Colchester, and in the execution, after its capture, of Lord Capel, Sir Charles Lucas, and Sir George Lisle. Charles II., on his return from France at the Restoration, held his court in the royal palace at Canterbury, for three days; and, in 1676, that monarch granted a charter of incorporation to the emigrant silk-weavers settled in this city, who, on the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685, were joined by a considerable number of other artisans from France.

The city is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale environed with gently rising hills, from which numerous streams of excellent water descend, and is intersected by the river Stour, which, dividing and re-uniting its stream, forms several islands, on one of which, anciently called Birmewith, the western part of it is built. It still occupies the original site, and is of an elliptic form; the Romans surrounded it with walls that appear to have been built of flint and chalk, and to have included an area one mile and three quarters in circumference, defended by a moat one hundred and fifty feet in width; of these nearly the whole is remaining, and on that part which forms the terrace of the promenade, called Dane John Field, are four of the ancient towers in good preservation; the arches over the river have been taken down at various times, and of the six gates that formed the principal entrances, only the west gate, through which is the entrance from the London road, is standing; it is a handsome embattled structure, erected about the year 1380, by Archbishop Sudbury, who also rebuilt a considerable portion of the city wall, and consists of a centre flanked by two round towers, having their foundations in the bed of the western branch of the Stour, over which is a stone bridge of two arches, that has been widened for the accommodation of carriages and foot passengers, an approach having been cut through the city walls for each. The principal streets, intersecting at right angles, and the smaller streets, were originally paved under an act of parliament obtained in the reign of Edward IV.; they were subsequently made more convenient by an act passed in 1787, for the improvement of the city, and are now lighted with gas by a company established under an act obtained in 1822: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water conveyed into their houses from the river, by a company established in 1824, by act of parliament; and with excellent spring water brought from St. Martin's Hill, into a spacious conduit in one of the ancient towers on the city wall, whence it is distributed to the most populous parts of the city, at the expense of the corporation. The houses in some parts retain their ancient appearance, with the upper stories projecting; the greater part of the old Checquers Inn, mentioned by Chaucer, as frequented by pilgrims visiting Becket's shrine, has been converted into a range of dwelling-houses, extending from St. Bredman's church nearly half-way down Mercery-lane; and the remains of the palace of Sir Thomas More, in the dancing-school yard in Orange-street, are now used as a warehouse for wool: in other parts of the city the houses are in general handsome, and many of them modern and well built.

The environs are pleasant, and the surrounding scenery is agreeably diversified with simple and picturesque beauty: on the road leading into the Isle of Thanet are extensive barracks for cavalry, artillery, and infantry of the line: the cavalry barracks, erected in 1794, at an expense of £40,000, are a handsome range of brick building, occupying three sides of a quadrangle, and, with the several parades and grounds for exercise, comprise sixteen acres, enclosed with lofty iron palisades: the barracks for two thousand infantry, erected near the former in 1798, have been since made a permanent station for detachments of the royal horse and foot artillery: the barracks erected on the site of St. Gregory's priory, and in other parts of the city, have been taken down, and new streets of small houses occupy their places. To the south is Dane John Field, so called from a lofty conical mount said to have been thrown up by the Danes, when they besieged the city, or, more probably from its having been the site of a keep or donjon; it is tastefully laid out in spiral walks and shrubberies, and planted with lime-trees: on the city wall, by which it is bounded to the south-east, is a fine broad terrace with sloping declivities covered with turf; on the promenade is a sun-dial, supported on a handsome marble pedestal, sculptured with emblematical representations of the seasons, by Mr. Henry Weeks, a native artist: on the summit of the mount, from which a fine panoramic view of the city and its environs is obtained, a stone pillar has been erected, with tablets recording, among other benefactions, a vote of £60 per annum by the corporation for keeping the promenade in order. The Philosophical and Literary Institution is a chaste and elegant edifice of the Ionic order, with a handsome portico of four columns, erected by subscription in 1825, after the model of a temple on the river Illyssus in Greece: it comprises a spacious museum, in which an extensive and valuable collection of minerals, fossils, and natural curiosities, collected by Mr. W. Masters, Mrs. Masters, and others, is scientifically arranged in an order peculiarly adapted to assist the student in natural history, also an extensive and well assorted library, and a theatre, in which lectures on literary and scientific subjects are delivered every Tuesday evening throughout the year; the museum is open to the public daily, the price of admission being one shilling each. The theatre, a neat and commodious edifice, erected by Mrs.

Sarah Baker, was opened in 1790: opposite to it is a concert-room belonging to the members of the Catch Club, in which subscription concerts take place every Wednesday evening during the winter months. Assemblies are held in a handsome suite of rooms built by subscription; and races take place, in the month of August, upon Barham Downs, within three miles of the city: the course, on which there is a commodious stand, has been greatly enlarged.

The manufacture of silk, established by the Walloons under the auspices of Queen Elizabeth, and which had flourished in such a degree as to obtain from Charles I. a charter of incorporation, gave place in 1789 to the introduction of the cotton-manufacture by Mr. John Callaway, master of the company of weavers, who discovered a method of interweaving silk with cotton in a fabric still known by the name of Canterbury, or Chambray, muslin; what now remains of the silk manufacture, employing but few persons, is conducted by his grandson. A considerable trade in long wool is carried on, and there is an extensive manufactory for parchment; but the principal source of employment for the labouring class is the cultivation of hops, for the growth of which the soil is peculiarly favourable, and with extensive plantations of which the neighbourhood abounds: a great quantity of corn is also produced in the vicinity, and forms a material part of its trade. The city is geologically situated on the plastic clay of the London basin, with which red bricks and tiles are made; and, at a short distance to the south-east, flint imbedded in chalk is found in abundance, from which lime of an excellent quality is produced. There are numerous mills on the banks of the river, several of them extensive, particularly that called the Abbot's mill, from its having anciently belonged to the abbey of St. Augustine; it is now the property of the corporation, by whom it was purchased in 1543. Canterbury has been long celebrated for its brawn. Frequent attempts, attended with considerable expense, have been made to improve the navigation of the river Stour: an act was obtained, in 1825, to make it navigable to Sandwich, and to construct a canal from that port to a harbour to be formed near Deal, but the undertaking has not yet been commenced. In the same year an act was obtained for the formation of a railway to Whitstable, whence there is a regular conveyance by water to London: this has been carried into effect, and promises to be of great advantage to the trade of the city. The market for cattle, corn, hops, and seeds, is on Saturday, and the market for provisions daily: the cattle market is held on the site of the ancient city moat, in the parish of St. George without the walls; the corn, hop, and seed market is held in a spacious room in the Corn and Hop Exchange, a handsome building of the composite order, recently erected, and ornamented with the city arms and appropriate devices, behind which is a spacious area for the daily market for meat and vegetables; the market for eggs, poultry, and butter, is held in the ancient butter market, near Christ Church gate; and there is a convenient market-place for fish in St. Margaret's street: these markets are under the regulation of the corporation, by an act passed in 1824. The annual Michaelmas fair commences on the 10th of October, and continues during three market days.

The city, which at the time of the Conquest was governed by a præpositus, or prefect, appointed by the king, received from Henry II. a charter conferring peculiar privileges, in addition to those it previously enjoyed. Henry III. granted the city to the inhabitants at a fee-farm rent of £60, and empowered the citizens to elect two bailiffs, who were superseded by a mayor in the reign of Henry VI., who granted them the privilege of choosing a coroner. Edward IV. confirmed the preceding charters, remitted more than one-fourth of the fee-farm rent, and constituted the city a county of itself. Henry VII. limited the number of aldermen to twelve, and the common council-men to twenty-four; and Henry VIII., by an act in the 35th of his reign, empowered the mayor and aldermen to levy a fine of six shillings and eightpence per day upon all strangers who should keep shops, or exercise any trade in the city. James I., in the sixth year of his reign, confirmed all the former charters and privileges, and re-incorporated the citizens, under the title of the mayor and commonalty of the city of Canterbury. The government, under these several charters, is vested in a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen (including a chamberlain and sheriff), and twenty-four common council-men, assisted by a town-clerk, who is also coroner, a sword-bearer, mace-bearer, four serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor is chosen on Holy-rod day by the freemen, from among the twelve aldermen, who nominate two of their own body for election, and is sworn into office on the festival of St. Michael; the aldermen are selected from the common council-men by a majority of their own body, and the common council-men are chosen from the resident freemen, in the same manner; the sheriff is chosen annually by a majority of the mayor and aldermen, from among the twelve aldermen; and the recorder, chamberlain, and town-clerk, are elected by a majority of the corporation. The mayor, recorder, and such of the aldermen as have passed the chair, are justices of the peace. The freedom of the city is inherited by birth, or acquired by servitude, gift, marriage with a freeman's daughter, and by purchase. The power of purchasing their freedom was allowed to English-born Jews in 1829. The city is divided into six wards, named after the six ancient gates, over each of which two aldermen preside, who hold a court leet, with view of frankpledge, in October, when a constable, borseholder, and six commissioners of pavements are appointed for each ward. The corporation hold a court of burghmote on the first Tuesday in every month, at which the mayor or his deputy presides, assisted by the aldermen and common council-men, a majority of each of whom is necessary to constitute a court: this court, which is a court of record, and has been held from time immemorial, is convened by the blowing of a horn. They also hold courts of quarter session for the trial of capital offenders and misdemeanants, and a court of petty session on the first Thursday in every month, for determining minor offences. The mayor's court, which is also a court of record, is but rarely held; the last instance of its exercising jurisdiction in civil pleas was in February 1793. A court of requests is held every Thursday, under an act passed in the 25th of George II., for the recovery of debts under 40s., within the city and liberties; but the precincts of the cathedral, the archbishop's palace, St. Augustine's abbey, and other privileged places, are exempted from its jurisdiction. The guildhall is an ancient and lofty building, containing the various court-rooms for holding the city sessions, and apartments for transacting the business of the corporation; the interior is decorated with portraits of the most distinguished benefactors to the city, and with various pieces of ancient armour. In 1453, Henry VI. granted to the corporation the custody of his gaol at Westgate, which gate from that time at least, if not previously, has been used as a city gaol; considerable additions have been recently made to it, and a house for the gaoler was erected in 1829, in a style corresponding with the character of the original building; airing-yards have lately been formed, and other improvements effected. The city has continued to return two members to parliament since the 23rd of Edward I.; the right of election is vested in the freemen at large, the number of whom is about two thousand; the sheriff is the returning officer. The quarter sessions for the eastern division of the county are regularly held here, and the petty sessions on the first Saturday in every month; and a king's commission of sewers, having jurisdiction over the several limits of East Kent, sits four times in the year at the sessions-house. The sessions-house, and common gaol and house of correction, form an extensive pile of building within the precinct of the abbey of St. Augustine; the latter comprises nine divisions, with day-rooms and airing yards for the classification of prisoners, who are employed at the tread-wheels, and in various kinds of productive labour.

The primacy, though immediately delegated by the pope to the see of Canterbury, was not maintained without considerable difficulty; its establishment was violently opposed by the native British prelates, who refused to acknowledge the supremacy either of the archbishop or the pope. Offa, King of Mercia, attempted to divide the jurisdiction, and the archbishops of York persevered in asserting their claims; but the archbishop of Canterbury was ultimately acknowledged Primate and Metropolitan of all England. In this dignity he ranks as first peer of the realm, and, with the exception of the royal family, takes precedence of all the nobility and chief officers of state; at coronations he places the crown upon the head of the sovereign; the bishops of London, Winchester, Lincoln, and Rochester, are respectively his provincial dean, subdean, chancellor, and chaplain; he is a privy councillor in right of his primacy, and has the power of conferring degrees in the several faculties of divinity, law, and physic, except within the immediate jurisdiction of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. The province of Canterbury comprehends the sees of twenty-one bishops, including the four Welch sees: the diocese comprises two hundred and sixty-nine parishes in the county of Kent; and nearly one hundred parishes in that and other counties are in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop. The ecclesiastical establishment consists of an archbishop, dean, archdeacon, twelve prebendaries, six preachers, six minor canons, six substitutes, twelve lay clerks, ten choristers, two masters, fifty scholars, and twelve almsmen. The cathedral, dedicated to our Saviour, originally the church of the monastery founded by St. Augustine, on the site of the palace of Ethelbert, King of Kent, rebuilt by Archbishop Lanfranc soon after the Conquest, and enlarged and enriched by several of his successors, is a magnificent and splendid structure, exhibiting in their highest perfection the richest specimens in every style of architecture, from the earliest Norman to the latest English, and is equally conspicuous for the justness of its proportions, the correctness of its details, and the richness of its decoration. Its form is that of a double cross, with a lofty and elegant tower rising from the intersection of the nave and the western transepts, in the later style of English architecture, with a pierced parapet and pinnacles, and having octagonal turrets at the angles, terminating in minarets. At the west end are two massive towers, of which the north-west is in the Norman style, and the south-west, though crowned with battlements, is of similar character, and little inferior to the central tower: between the western towers is a narrow entrance, through a sharply pointed arch, with deeply receding mouldings, surmounted by canopied niches, over which is a lofty and magnificent window of six lights, decorated with richly stained glass representing figures of the saints. The south-west porch, which is the principal entrance, is a highly enriched specimen of the later style, and is profusely ornamented with niches of elegant design; the roof is elaborately groined, and at the intersections of the ribs are numerous shields. The nave, which, with the western transepts, is also in the later style, is peculiarly fine; the roof is richly groined, and supported by eight lofty piers, which on each side separate it from the aisles, and of which the clustered shafts are banded, like those of the early English: the eastern part derives a grandeur of effect from the numerous avenues leading from it to the various chapels in different parts of the interior; of these the chapel of Henry IV. is conspicuous for the elegant simplicity of its design, and the beautiful fan tracery depending from the roof; the lady chapel, separated from the eastern side of the transept by a finely carved stone screen, is small, but exquisitely beautiful; the chapel of the Holy Trinity, in which was the gorgeous shrine of St. Thomas à Becket, opens into that part of the cathedral called Becket's Crown, where is preserved the ancient stone chair in which the archbishops are enthroned: there are various other chapels equally deserving attention. A triple flight of steps leads from the nave into the choir, which are separated by a stone screen of exquisite workmanship: the roof, which is plainly groined, is supported on slender-shafted columns, alternately circular and octagonal, with highly enriched capitals of various designs; this part of the structure is chiefly in the early English, intermixed with the Norman, style, which prevails also in the triforium, and other parts of the choir, and in the eastern transept: the archbishop's throne, on the south side of the choir near the centre, and the stalls of the dean and prebendaries, are strikingly elegant; a new altar-piece, in accordance with the prevailing style of architecture, has been recently erected with the Caen stone of St. Augustine's monastery: the whole length of the cathedral from east to west is five hundred and fourteen feet, the length of the choir one hundred and eighty, the length of the eastern transepts one hundred and fifty-four, and the length of the western one hundred and twenty-four. Under the whole building is a spacious and elegant crypt, the several parts of which correspond with those of the cathedral; the western part is in the Norman style, and the eastern in the early style of English architecture: the vaulted roof is about fourteen feet in height, and supported on massive pillars, of which the prevailing character is simplicity and strength, though occasionally sculptured with foliage and grotesque ornaments. Near the south end of the western transept, Edward the Black Prince, in 1363, founded a chantry, and endowed it for two chaplains with his manor of Vauxhall, near London; there are some remains of the chapel, consisting of the vaulting of the roof, supported on one central column: near the centre of the crypt are the remains of the chapel of the Virgin, in a niche, at the east end of which was her statue, supported on a pedestal sculptured in basso relievo with various subjects, among which the Annunciation may be distinctly traced. The western part is still called the French church, from its having been given by Queen Elizabeth to the Walloons and the French refugees, and from the service being still performed there in the French language. The cathedral contains many splendid and interesting monuments, and other memorials of the archbishops, deans, and other dignitaries of the church, and of illustrious persons who have been interred within its walls. In the arches surrounding the chapel of the Holy Trinity are, the tomb of Henry IV. and his queen, Joan of Navarre, whose recumbent figures, arrayed in royal robes, and crowned, are finely sculptured in alabaster; the monument of Edward the Black Prince, whose effigy in complete armour and in a recumbent posture, with the arms raised in the attitude of prayer, is finely executed in gilt brass, and surmounted by a rich canopy, in which are his gauntlets and the scabbard of his sword; and the cenotaph of Archbishop Courteney, with a recumbent figure of that prelate in his pontificals. In the north aisle of the choir are the splendid monuments of the archbishops Chicheley and Bouchier. In the chapel of the Virgin are monuments to the memory of six of the deans; and in that of St. Michael are those of the Earl of Somerset, and the Duke of Clarence, second son of Henry IV., whose effigy, with that of the duchess in her robes and coronet, is beautifully sculptured in marble; also the monuments of Archbishop Langton and Admiral Sir George Rooke. In the south aisle of the choir are those of the Archbishops Reynolds, Walter Kemp, Stratford, Sudbury, and Meopham; and within an iron palisade, on the north side of Becket's

Crown, is the tomb of Cardinal Pole, the last of the archbishops who were buried in the cathedral: there are several monuments in the crypt, among which are some to the most distinguished individuals that have been connected with the county. The precincts of the cathedral comprehend an area three quarters of a mile in circumference: the principal entrance is on the south side, through Christ Church gate, erected by Prior Goldstone, in 1517, and exhibiting, though greatly mutilated, an elegant specimen of the later style of English architecture; the front is richly sculptured, and ornamented with canopied niches, and consists of two octangular embattled towers, with a larger and a smaller arched entrance between them, the wooden doors of which are carved with the arms of the see, and those of Archbishop Juxon. On the north side is the library, containing a valuable collection of books, and a series of Grecian and Roman coins; in the centre is an octagonal table of black marble, on which is sculptured the history of Orpheus, surrounded with various hunting pieces. A passage from the north transept of the cathedral to the library, leads into a circular room called "Bell Jesus," the lower part of which is of Norman character; it is lighted by a dome in the centre, under which is placed the font, removed from the nave of the cathedral. On the east side of the cloisters is the chapter-house, a spacious and elegant building, containing a hall ninety-two feet in length, thirty-seven in width, and fifty-four in height; on the sides are the ancient stone seats of the monks, surmounted by a range of trefoil-headed arches supporting a cornice and battlement; the east and west windows are large, and enriched with elegant tracery, and the roof of oak is pannelled, and decorated with shields of arms and other ornaments. The cloisters form a spacious quadrangle, on each side of which are handsome windows of four lights; the vaulted stone roof is elaborately groined, and ornamented at the points of intersection with more than seven hundred shields; against the north wall is a range of stone seats, separated from each other by pillars supporting canopied arches; on the east side are, a doorway leading into the cathedral, highly enriched, and an archway leading to the chapter-house; on the west side is an arched entrance to the archbishop's palace, the only remains of which are the porter's gallery and the surveyor's house. The treasury is a fine building in the Norman style of architecture, the staircase to which, in the same style, is of very curious design.

The city comprises the parishes of All Saints, St. Alphege, St. Andrew, St. George, the Holy Cross, St. Margaret, St. Martin, St. Mary Bredman, St. Mary Bredin, St. Mary Magdalene, St. Mary Northgate, St. Mildred, St. Peter, and St. Paul, all in the diocese, and, with the exception of St. Alphege and St. Martin, in the archdeaconry, of Canterbury. The living of All Saints' is a rectory, with which that of St. Mary in the Castle is consolidated, rated together in the king's books at £80, and united with that of St. Mildred's, rated in the king's books at £17. 17. 11., and in the patronage of the Crown. The living of the parish of St. Alphege is a rectory, exempt from archidiaconal visitation, and united with the vicarage of St. Mary Northgate, the former rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., and the latter at £11. 19. 4½., and in the patronage of the Archbishop. The living of St. Andrew's is a rectory, with that of St. Mary's Bredman united, rated together in the king's books at £22. 6. 8., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and in the patronage of the Archbishop for two turns, and the Dean and Chapter for one. The living of St. George's the Martyr is a rectory, with that of St. Mary Magdalene united, the former rated in the king's books at £7. 17. 11., and the latter at £4. 10., in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter. The living of St. Margaret's is a donative, endowed with £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Archdeacon. The living of St. Martin's is a rectory, exempt from archidiaconal visitation, and united with the vicarage of St. Paul's, the former rated in the king's books at £6. 5. 2½., and the latter at £9. 18. 9., and in the alternate patronage of the Archbishop and the Dean and Chapter. The living of St. Mary's Bredin is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £4. 1. 5½., endowed with £1000 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £2000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of H. Lee Warner, Esq. The living of St. Peter's is a rectory, with the vicarage of the Holy Cross united, the former rated in the king's books at £3. 10. 10., and the latter at £13. 0. 2½., in the alternate patronage of the Archbishop and the Dean and Chapter. Of the several churches, few possess any distinguishing architectural features; that of St. Martin is said to have been founded during the occupation of Canterbury by the Romans, and consecrated for the celebration of the Christian service prior to the conversion of Ethelbert. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, and a synagogue.

The king's free grammar school, coeval with the establishment of the cathedral, was founded by Henry VIII. for fifty scholars from all parts of the kingdom; the management is vested in the Dean and Chapter: belonging to it are two scholarships, of £3. 6. 8. per annum each, for natives of Kent, founded in Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and endowed with a portion of the revenue of Eastbridge hospital, by Archbishop Whitgift, in 1569; one of three exhibitions, of about £15 per annum each, founded in the same college by Archbishop Parker, in 1575, in the nomination of the Dean and Chapter, for such of the sons of their Norfolk, Suffolk, and Lincolnshire tenants as are educated in this school; a medical scholarship, founded by the same archbishop in Caius College, Cambridge, for a native of Canterbury educated at any of the schools in that city; and one of three scholarships founded in the same college, by John Parker, Esq., in 1580, in the patronage of the Archbishop, for a native of Canterbury educated at the king's school: it has also four scholarships at either university, founded in 1618 by Robert Rose, Esq., who endowed them with twenty-six acres of land in Romney Marsh; two exhibitions to any college in Cambridge, founded in 1625 by William Heyman, Esq., for scholars descended from his grandfather, tenable for seven years from the time of their leaving school, and, in the event of their taking orders, to be continued for three years longer; four scholarships, of £10 per annum each, established in St. John's College, Cambridge, by a decree of the court of Chancery, in 1652, in lieu of two fellowships and two scholarships founded in that college by Henry Robinson, Esq., in 1643, for natives of the Isle of Thanet, or, in failure of such, for boys in the county, if educated at this school; five exhibitions, of £24 per annum each, to Emanuel College, Cambridge, for bachelors of arts until they proceed to their master's degree, with preference to the sons of orthodox clergymen of this diocese, founded in 1719 by Dr. George Thorpe, prebendary of Canterbury; two Greek scholarships, of £8 per annum each, founded in the same college by the Rev. John Brown, B. D.; and one exhibition, of £9 per annum, to any college in Cambridge, to cease on taking the degree of M.A., founded in 1728 by Dr. George Stanhope, Dean of Canterbury. A society of gentlemen educated at the King's school, established for more than a century, hold an anniversary meeting, when, after service at the cathedral, where a sermon suitable to the occasion is delivered by a clergyman educated in the school, a collection is made for the purpose of founding additional scholarships for students in this establishment: by the liberality and exertions of its members a fund has been raised, that has enabled them to found an exhibition of £60 per annum, to be held for four years with any of the preceding; and another of the same value is about to be added to the numerous advantages enjoyed by scholars on this foundation, which, from the zealous attention bestowed upon its management by the Dean and Chapter, promises at least to preserve, if not to increase, the high reputation it has so long maintained: in addition to the annual examinations previously established, quarterly examinations, of which the first took place in November 1829, have been instituted under two of the prebendaries, chosen for that office: Among the eminent men who have received the rudiments of their education in this school may be noticed the celebrated Dr. Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood; Dr. Marsh, Bishop of Peterborough; and Lord Tenterden, the present Lord Chief Justice of the court of King's Bench. The Blue-coat school was established by the mayor and commonalty, to whom Queen Elizabeth had granted an hospital founded prior to the year 1243, by Simon de Langton, Archdeacon of Canterbury, for poor priests, with all the lands belonging to it, which, by an act passed in the 1st of George II., was, for the use of the poor, transferred to guardians incorporated by the same act, upon their undertaking also to provide for sixteen poor boys of the city, to be called Blue-coat boys: the estate at present produces £795. 8. 6. per annum; and sixteen boys, nominated by the mayor and commonalty, are clothed, maintained, and instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and, on leaving school, are apprenticed with premiums, which, though originally fixed at £5, are, according to circumstances, increased to £21. The Grey-coat school is supported by the Dean and Chapter, the mayor and commonalty, and other subscribers: two boys and one girl are annually apprenticed from this school by the trustees of Nixon's charity. Two schools, for children of both sexes, are conducted on Dr. Bell's plan, having been united to the National Society in 1812, in which upwards of four hundred children are instructed.

Eastbridge hospital is supposed to have been founded by Archbishop Lanfranc, for the entertainment of pilgrims, and endowed by succeeding archbishops, for a master, five brothers, and five sisters resident, and an equal number of non-resident brothers and sisters, above the age of fifty, who must have lived in the city or suburbs for seven years; the former receive £20 per annum, and the latter £2. 16. 8. per annum, each: the vacancies are filled by nomination of the mayor, who appoints two candidates, one of whom is elected by the master. A school for twenty children was annexed to it by an ordinance of Archbishop Whitgift, confirmed by act of parliament in the 27th of Elizabeth; it is endowed with a manor and an estate at Blean, and with an investment of £2624 in the three per cent. consols., arising from legacies and fines for the renewal of leases: the present income is £331. 15. 10½.; the master of the hospital has an annual income of £90. 18. 7½., calculated upon an average balance of receipts and expenditure for several years; the schoolmaster has a salary of £30 per annum, with apartments in the hospital; there are thirty scholars at present in the school. Maynard's hospital was founded, about the year 1312, by Mayner le Rich, an opulent citizen, who endowed it with lands and tenements for the support of three unmarried brothers, one of whom is prior and reader, and four unmarried sisters: they are a corporate body by prescription, having a common seal, and, exclusively of their apartments and share of fines for the renewal of leases, receive each £18. 2. 6. per annum from the general funds. Cotton's hospital, adjoining, was founded in 1605, by Leonard Cotton, who endowed it for one aged widower and two widows, who receive £18. 11. 6. per annum each. These hospitals, which are united, are under the management of the mayor and aldermen, of whom the senior alderman is generally appointed master; the right of appointing the brothers and sisters is vested in the mayor. Jesus' hospital was founded, in 1596, by Sir John Boys, the first recorder of the city, for a warden, nine brothers, and nine sisters, above fifty-five years of age, and resident within the city for seven years, with preference to one brother and one sister of the kindred of the founder, if above the age of fifty: there are at present eight brothers and four sisters, who receive each a fixed sum of £20 per annum, and a considerable amount as surplus money: by the statutes, the warden is bound to instruct twenty children of the parishes of St. Mary Northgate, St. Paul, St. Mildred, St. Alphege, and St. Dunstan, who are called out-brothers, and clothed at the expense of the establishment; six of them are to be apprenticed annually: the mayor and aldermen, the Dean of Christ Church, and the Archdeacon of Canterbury, are visitors, and audit the accounts annually. The Rev. George Hearne, in 1805, bequeathed £37 per annum, long annuities, for the support of a Sunday school for the parishes of St. Alphege and St. Mary Northgate, which was sold in 1812 for £637. 5., and appropriated to the purchase and adaptation of a building for a National school, in which fifty-six children of those parishes are instructed. Mr. Robert Dean purchased premises for the use of a Sunday school in the parish of the Holy Cross, which he then endowed with £200 stock, and in 1818 left £800 in the four per cents., as a further endowment for teaching children on the other days of the week: there are also several smaller bequests for the instruction of poor children in the various parishes. St. John's hospital, without the North gate, was founded in 1084, by Archbishop Lanfranc, who endowed it with £70 per annum for poor infirm, lame, and blind men and women; at the time of the dissolution its revenue was £93. 15., and it is now nearly £200: the establishment consists of a prior, reader, fifteen brothers, and fifteen sisters resident, who receive each £8 per annum, with a share of some legacies left in trust to the corporation; and three brothers and three sisters non-resident, who receive something less, and do not participate in the legacies: the archbishop has the exclusive patronage, and appoints the master and prior. John Smith, Esq., in 1644, bequeathed £200 to build almshouses, and £32 per annum for their endowment. Smith's hospital, in the suburb of Langport, without the liberties of the city, for four brothers and four sisters born within the manor of Barton, was founded in 1662, by Mrs. Ann Smith, who endowed it with lands, and with a reserved rent payable by the proprietor of Barton Court, who has the sole patronage, amounting together to £171. 7. 4½. per annum, of which sum she appropriated £32 to the inmates of the hospital; £20 to the apprenticing of poor children of Hornsey, in the county of Middlesex; £20 to the minister of St. Paul's, in this city; and the residue to the apprenticing of children of that parish, with which eight children are placed out annually. Cogan's hospital was founded, in 1657, by Mr. John Cogan, who, by will, gave his mansion to the corporation in trust, for the residence of six clergymen's widows; the endowment has been augmented by numerous subsequent benefactions. The Rev. John Aucher, D.D., by deed in 1696, gave a rent-charge of £60 for six clergymen's widows, with preference to those in Cogan's hospital; and a society raises annually by subscription, £36, which is divided among three widows of clergymen. Harris' almshouses, in Wincheap, were founded in 1726, by Thomas Harris, Esq., who endowed them with houses and land producing £21 per annum, for five poor families, two of the parish of St. Mary Magdalene, two of that of Thannington, and one of St. Mildred, not receiving parochial aid. The Kent and Canterbury infirmary was opened for the reception of patients on the 26th of April, 1793; under the auspices of the late Dr. William Carter, and patronised by the principal inhabitants of the city and county: the institution is liberally supported by annual subscriptions of £2. 2., which sum (or a donation of £21) constitutes a governor; it is well regulated under the direction of a committee and a weekly board for superintending the domestic arrangements. The building, which is spacious and well adapted to the purpose, was erected on part of the ancient cemetery of St. Augustine's abbey, and contains apartments for a house surgeon and sixty patients, the latter receiving the gratuitous attendance of two physicians and four surgeons.

Of the numerous monastic establishments that anciently flourished here, the principal was the abbey which St. Augustine, in conjunction with King Ethelbert, founded for monks of the Benedictine order, and dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £1412. 4. 7.: the remains consist principally of the gateway entrance, a beautiful specimen of the decorated style of English architecture, with two embattled octagonal turrets highly ornamented with canopied niches, and enriched with bands, mouldings, and cornices; between these turrets is the entrance, through a finely pointed arch, in which are the original wooden doors richly carved. One of the towers, called St. Ethelbert's tower, was a fine structure in the Norman style, highly ornamented in its successive stages with a series of intersecting arches; part of it fell down in 1822, and part has been since taken down from apprehension of danger; a portion of the base of the tower, and some trifling remains of the church belonging to the abbey, are still existing. At the north-west of the cemetery are the remains of the chapel of St. Pancras, rebuilt in 1387, on the site of a previous chapel, said to have been a pagan temple, resorted to by Ethelbert before his conversion: the remains of this once splendid abbey have been converted into a public-house; the gateway is now a brewery, the room over it a cock-pit, the church a tennis-court, and the area a bowling-green. In Northgate-street was a religious house, founded in 1084, by Archbishop Lanfranc, for secular priests, and dedicated to St. Gregory, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £166. 4. 5.: the remains, consisting of parts of the walls, arches, and some windows in the Norman and early English styles of architecture, have been converted into a pottery, and a tobacco-pipe manufactory. To the south-east of the city was a Benedictine nunnery, founded by Archbishop Anselm, and dedicated to St. Sepulchre, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £38. 19. 7.: this convent obtained celebrity from the pretended inspiration of Elizabeth Barton, one of the nuns, called the holy maid of Kent, who, for denouncing the wrath of the Almighty upon Henry VIII., for his intended divorce of Catherine of Arragon, was hanged at Tyburn, with her confederate, Richard Deering, cellarer of Christ Church. To the right of the city, on the road to Dover, was an hospital dedicated to St. Lawrence, for leprous monks, founded by Hugh, Abbot of St. Augustine's, in 1137, and endowed for a warden, chaplain, clerk, and sixteen brothers and sisters, of whom the senior sister was prioress: the revenue, at the dissolution, was £39. 8. 6. In the parish of St. Peter was an hospital, founded by William Cockyn, citizen, and dedicated to St. Nicholas and St. Catherine, which, in 1203, was united to that of St. Thomas Eastbridge. In the parish of St. Alphege was a priory of Dominicans, or Black friars, founded about the year 1221 by Henry III., the only remains of which are the hall, now a meeting-house for Baptists; and near the hospital for poor priests was a priory of Franciscans, or Grey friars, founded by the same monarch in 1224, which was the first house of that order established in the kingdom; the remains consist chiefly of some low walls and arches: there are also slight vestiges of a convent of White friars that once existed here. Numerous relics of British and Roman antiquity have been discovered; among the latter are, aqueducts, tessellated pavements, vases, and coins; and a Roman arch, called Worthgate, considered to be one of the finest and most ancient structures of the kind in England, has been carefully removed from that part of the castle yard which was crossed by the new road from Ashford, and reconstructed in a private garden. There are some chalybeate springs, and one slightly sulphureous, in the extensive nursery-grounds of Mr. W. Masters, near the west gate; and without the north gate is a fine spring of water, where a bath, called St. Rhadigund's bath, has been constructed, with requisite accommodation. Dr. Thomas Linacre, founder of the Royal College of Physicians, in London; Dr. Thomas Nevile, master of Magdalene College, and afterwards master of Trinity College, Cambridge, who was sent by Archbishop Whitgift to tender the English crown to King James; William Somner, author of the Antiquities of Canterbury, and of a Saxon Glossary; and W. Frend, M. A., author of the Ephemeris, were natives of this city. Among other literary characters that have flourished here may be noticed the Primate Langton, who first divided the Old and New Testaments into chapters; Osbern, a monk in the eleventh century, who wrote in Latin the life of St. Dunstan, and who, from his skill in music, was called the English Jubal; and John Bale, Prebendary of Canterbury and Bishop of Ossory, the Protestant historian and biographer. Isaac Casaubon, whom, on account of his learning, James I. invited over from France, and Meric, his son, were both installed prebendaries.

CANTLEY, a parish in the hundred of BLOFIELD, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Acle, containing 251 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of R. Gilbert, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. An allotment of thirteen acres of land was awarded on the enclosure of some waste land, which lets for £8 per annum, forming part of a salary of £30 paid to a schoolmaster, who has also a dwelling-house free, for teaching forty-five scholars.

CANTLEY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (E. by S.) from Doncaster, containing 577 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 5½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. W. Childers, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Wilfrid. In this parish is a cold bath, called "St. Catherine's well," that attracts numerous visitors, for whom requisite accommodation has been prepared.

CANTSFIELD, a township in the parish of TUNSTALL, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Kirkby-Lonsdale, containing 120 inhabitants.

CANVEY - ISLAND, a chapelry partly in the parishes of NORTH and SOUTH BENFLEET, BOWERS-GIFFORD, LAINDON, PITSEA, and VANGE, in the hundred of BARSTABLE, and partly in the parishes of LEIGH, PRETTLEWELL, and SOUTHCHURCH, in the hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, 6½ miles (E. N. E.) from Leigh. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rector of Laindon. The chapel is dedicated to St. Catherine: divine service is performed by the vicar, or curate, of South Benfleet. This island, situated near the mouth of the Thames, is about five miles in length and two in breadth, and contains three thousand six hundred acres: it is encompassed by branches of that river, but there is a passage over the strand at low water, the river being on the south side two miles wide. Numerous flocks of sheep feed here, though the low grounds are subject to inundations, one of which spread so suddenly, in 1735, that many of the sheep and other animals were drowned before they could be driven to the high grounds. Several of the inhabitants are engaged in the fishery. A fair is held on the 25th of June.

CANWELL, an extra-parochial liberty, in the southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Tamworth, containing 24 inhabitants. In 1142, a priory of Benedictine monks was founded by Geva Riddell; it subsequently went to decay, and became a poor cell for one monk, and was granted to Cardinal Wolsey by Henry VIII., towards the endowment of his two intended colleges.

CANWICK, a parish within the liberty of the city of LINCOLN, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Lincoln, containing 223 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Wardens of the Mercers' Company, London. The church is dedicated to All Saints. In this parish are springs strongly impregnated with iron.

CAPEL, a parish in the second division of the hundred of WOTTON, county of SURREY, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Dorking, containing 876 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is principally in the early style of English architecture. In Gough's additions to Camden it is mentioned that, in the reign of Elizabeth, the peaty earth of a mound on the moors within the parish glided down, and covered the lower parts, until it stopped at a farm.

CAPEL (ST. ANDREW), a hamlet in the parish of BUTLEY, hundred of WILFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Orford, containing 157 inhabitants. This was formerly a distinct parish; the church, which was dedicated to St. Andrew, is in ruins.

CAPEL le FERNE, a parish in the hundred of FOLKESTONE, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Folkestone, containing 195 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Alkham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CAPEL (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (S. E. by E.) from Hadleigh, containing 561 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Little Wenham, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. Joseph Tweed.

CAPESTHORNE, a chapelry in the parish of PRESTBURY, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Macclesfield, containing 65 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of D. Davenport, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

CAPHEATON, a township in the parish of KIRK-WHELPINGTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 13 miles (W. S. W.) from Morpeth, containing 225 inhabitants. Several Roman coins, silver vessels, &c., were discovered near Capheaton Hall by some labourers, in the early part of the last century. A school-room has been erected in the village by Sir John Swinburn, Bart., whose ancestors have resided here from a very early period.

CAPLAND, a tything partly in the parish of BEER-CROCOMBE, and partly in that of BROADWAY, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Ilminster. The population is returned with Broadway. Here was anciently a chapel subordinate to Beer-Crocombe.

CAPLE, a chapelry in the parish of TUDELEY, partly in the Lowey of TONBRIDGE, but chiefly in the hundred of WASHLINGSTONE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Tonbridge, containing 330 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket.

CAPPENHURST, a township in the parish of SHORWICK, higher division of the hundred of WIRRELL, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Chester, containing 161 inhabitants.

CARBROOKE, a parish in the hundred of WAYLAND, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Watton, containing 771 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 12. 6., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir William Clayton, Bart. The church, built in the early part of the reign of Henry VI., and dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, has a lofty square tower, two aisles, and a chancel, and contains sixteen stalls, with several ancient monuments. A preceptory of Knights Templars was founded by Roger, Earl of Clare, who died in 1173, and subsequently given by Maud, his widowed countess, who amply endowed it, to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, as a commandery: at the dissolution it was valued at £65. 2. 9. Adjoining it was a chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist; they both stood on the southern side of the present churchyard, but there are not any remains of either of them.

CARBURTON, a chapelry in the parish of EDWINSTON, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSET-LAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Worksop, containing 154 inhabitants.

CAR-COLSTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 9 miles (S. W. by S.) from Newark, containing 213 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 1. 10½., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Farmery. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CARDEN, a township in the parish of TILSTON, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Malpas, containing 195 inhabitants. A detachment of dragoons from the parliamentary garrison at Nantwich, on the 12th of June, 1643, plundered Carden Hall, and made prisoner its owner, John Leche, Esq.

CARDESTON, a parish in the hundred of FORD, county of SALOP, 6 miles (W.) from Shrewsbury, containing, with the township of Watlesborough, 297 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £3, and in the patronage of Sir B. Leighton, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. This parish is bounded on the south by the river Severn, and contains coal and limestone, but the latter only is worked.

CARDINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WRX-AMTREE, county of BEDFORD, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Bedford, containing, with the chapelry of East Cotts, 1194 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 17., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains several ancient monuments, also a tablet in memory of the great philanthropist, John Howard, who lived some years at this place, and served the office of sheriff for the county in 1773; and a splendid modern monument by Bacon, the last of his works, erected in 1799 to the memory of Samuel Whitbread, Esq., whose family first settled here in 1650, at a house called the Barns. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and at Cotton End is one for Particular Baptists. The navigable river Ouse runs along the northern side of the parish.

CARDINGTON, a parish in the hundred of MUNSLOW, county of SALOP, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Church-Stretton, containing 687 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £6. 2. 6, and in the patronage of R. Hunt, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. There is an endowed school, the estate belonging to which produces £25 per annum. A species of very fine quartz, considered equal in quality to that brought from Caernarvonshire, for the use of the potteries, is found here; the parish abounds also with clay.

CARDINHAM, a parish in the hundred of WEST, county of CORNWALL, 3½ miles (E. N. E.) from Bodmin, containing 775 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £24. 17. 8½., and in the alternate patronage of E. J. Glynn, Esq. and the Rev. Thomas Grylls. The church is dedicated to St. Mewbred. At a copious spring called Holy Well are vestiges of an old chapel. The manorial custom of free bench formerly prevailed here: the river Fowey passes through the parish. Here was anciently a castle, of which only the circular intrenchment is remaining; and on some high ground there is a similar intrenchment, comprehending an area of two acres, called Berry Castle. At the north-east extremity of the parish are two large tors, or rocks of granite, one called St. Bellarmine's Tor, and the other Cornet Quoit stone.

CAREBY, a parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (N.) from Stamford, containing 51 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 17. 1., and in the patronage of Lord Gwydir. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen.

CARGO, or CRAGHOW, a township in that part of the parish of STANWIX which is in CUMBERLAND ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 3¼ miles (N. W.) from Carlisle, containing 274 inhabitants.

CARHAM, a parish in the western division of GLENDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3½ miles (W. S. W.) from Coldstream, comprising the townships of Carham with Shidlaw, Downham, Hagg, New Learmouth, West Learmouth, East Mindrim, West Mindrim, Moneylaws, Preston, Tythehill, Wark, and Wark Common, and containing 1370 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, and in the patronage of A. Compton, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. According to Leland, a battle was fought here between the Saxons and the Danes, in which eleven bishops and two English counts were slain. In 1018, it was the scene of a sanguinary contest between the English and the Scotch, in which the latter were victorious; the loss of the English was extremely great, and the event, according to some authors, is stated to have produced such an impression on Aldun, Bishop of Durham, that he died of a broken heart. Another contest occurred in 1370, between the same people, respectively under the command of Sir John Lelburn and Sir John Gordon, in which the Scots, after a severe and arduous conflict, were again victorious, the English general, Sir John Lelburn, and his brother, having been made prisoners. An abbey of Black canons, founded at an unknown period, as a cell to the priory of Kirkham, in Yorkshire, was burnt in the 24th of Edward I., by the Scots under Wallace, whose encampment in a neighbouring field has bestowed on it the name of Campfield. The village is pleasantly situated on the south bank of the Tweed, and is surrounded by several plantations of young forest trees: there is a beautiful and extensive prospect into Scotland from a hamlet situated on a hill, called Shidlaw, on the south side.

CARHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of CARHAMPTON, county of SOMERSET, 1½ mile (S. E.) from Dunster, containing, with the chapelry of Rode-Huish, 587 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Wells, rated in the king's books at £11. 8., and in the patronage of Mrs. Langham. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children. The petty sessions are holden here. This place, which gives name to the hundred, probably received its appellation from the British Saint Carantacus, or Carantac, who was the son of Keredic; prince of Cardigan, and who retired hither, built an oratory, and spent the remainder of his life in acts of devotion, preferring the life of a recluse to the government of his father's kingdom. In the grounds of the vicarage have been found numerous skeletons, and the foundation of an ancient building, supposed to be the remains of this chapel, which is stated to have been formerly used as the parish church. Near Dunster Park is an old encampment in excellent preservation; it is octagonal, with double ramparts and a ditch, and there are several outworks in connexion with it. In making a road through the parish, an ancient cairn was removed, when a perfect sepulchre, seven feet long, was discovered, containing a human skeleton; the place has been surrounded by a railing. Twenty poor children are educated under a schoolmistress for £5 a year, the interest of a bequest from Richard Escott, in 1785; an annuity of £3 has been left for the same purpose.

CARISBROOKE, a parish in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1 mile (W. S. W.) from Newport, comprising the hamlets of Billingham, Bowcomb, and Carisbrooke, and part of the environs of the borough of Newport, and containing 4670 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Newport and Northwood annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £23. 8. 1½., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary; the tower is in the later style of English architecture. This place derives its principal importance from its castle, or fortress, which stands on a commanding conical eminence rising above the village of Carisbrooke, and occupying about twenty acres. Its foundation is of very remote antiquity: the Saxon annals state that it was besieged and taken by Cerdric in 530; it received considerable additions immediately after the Conquest, and at subsequent periods: some state it to have been founded by the Romans, as a few of their coins have been discovered in the neighbourhood; but the appearance of it, especially the keep, clearly shews it has been principally a Norman erection. The whole was greatly improved in the time of Elizabeth, and surrounded by an extensive fortification, with five bastions and a deep moat, to which is attached a terrace-walk of three quarters of a mile in length: these works were raised by the inhabitants, and those who did not labour were obliged to contribute pecuniary aid. The ancient fortress, a rectangular parallelogram including the keep, an irregular polygon, occupies about an acre and a half of ground, the latter being raised on an artificial mound, to which there is an ascent of seventy-two steps, and from its summit an extensive and beautiful prospect, embracing a great portion of the island, and parts of the New Forest and Portsdown hills opposite. Here, on days of public rejoicing, and during the residence of the governor, the British flag is displayed. Within the castle are the ruins of an ancient guard-house, and the chapel of St. Nicholas, built in 1738, on the site of a more ancient one, in which the mayor and high constables of Newport are sworn into office annually. The castle was attacked and taken by Stephen, in 1136, when Baldwin, Earl of Devonshire, took refuge there, after declaring in favour of the Empress Maud; and in the reign of Richard II., it successfully resisted an attack of the French, who plundered the island. Carisbrooke Castle is, however, most remarkable for being the place in which Charles I. was confined for thirteen months, previously to his being delivered up to the parliamentary forces, and whence he made one or two unsuccessful attempts to escape: his children were also subsequently imprisoned in it. It has always been the residence of the governor of the Isle of Wight, and generally contains a strong garrison. Opposite to it, on a rising ground, stands the church, also an ancient structure, with an embattled tower, to which was formerly annexed a monastery of Cistercian monks, founded by William Fitz-Osborn, marshal to the Conqueror, who captured the island, at the same time that William conquered the kingdom; but the remains of the monastery have been converted into a farm-house, still called the Priory. On the banks of a rivulet, at the bottom of the castle hill, the village of Carisbrooke is pleasantly situated; but it was of much more consequence formerly than it is at present, having been a market town, and considered the capital of the island.

CARKIN, a township in the parish of FORCETT, western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 7½ miles (E. by N.) from Greta-Bridge, containing 24 inhabitants.

CARLATTON, an extra-parochial liberty, in ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 9½ miles (E. S. E.) from Carlisle, containing 54 inhabitants. This district comprises one thousand six hundred acres. Several coins, supposed to be Roman, have been discovered in ploughing a field forming part of the Low Hall estate; and at a farm called Saugh-tree-gate there is a cairn.

CARLBY, a parish in the wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5½ miles (N. by E.) from Stamford, containing 186 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 1. 10½., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen.

CARLEBURY, a hamlet in the parish of CONISCLIFFE, south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 5½ miles (W. by N.) from Darlington. The population is returned with the township of High Coniscliffe. Tradition informs us that this and several other villages in this district were burnt in one of the incursions of the Scots. At Carlebury hills, in the time of Charles I., a severe battle was fought between the royalists and a party of the parliamentary forces; and some human bones have since been dug up, presumed to have belonged to those who were slain. Extensive quarries of limestone exist here.

CARLETON, a township in the parish of DREGG, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from Ravenglass, containing 144 inhabitants.

CARLETON, a township in that part of the parish of ST. CUTHBERT, CARLISLE, which is in CUMBERLAND ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 2½ miles (S. E.) from Carlisle, containing 201 inhabitants. At Newlands, in this township, is a quarry of excellent blue freestone, in appearance like marble.

CARLETON, a chapelry in the parish of RED-MARSHALL, south-western division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Stockton upon Tees, containing 140 inhabitants. This place was restored to the see of Durham by royal charter, during the episcopacy of Bishop Flambard, the people of Northumberland having previously retained it.

CARLETON, a township in the parish of POULTON, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, ¾ of a mile (W. N. W.) from Poulton, containing 356 inhabitants. In 1697, Elizabeth Wilson, endowed a school with £14. 9. 4., which has been increased by subsequent benefactions, the annual income amounting to about £23; the average number of scholars is thirty.

CARLETON, a parish in the hundred of LODDON, county of NORFOLK, 8½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Norwich, containing 79 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of Sir Charles Rich, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CARLETON, a parish in the western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Stokesley, containing 260 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Joseph Reeve, Esq. The church is a small modern structure. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Extensive alum-works were formerly carried on here, but since the discovery of richer beds of that mineral nearer the sea they have been discontinued; various petrifications of shells and fishes have been found.

CARLETON, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by E.) from Snaith, containing 775 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Snaith, and in the patronage of William Day, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The village is agreeably situated on the northern bank of the river Aire, across which there is a bridge on the road to Snaith. There is a small school, to which Mrs. E. Fisher, in 1726, left £4 per annum, arising from land, for teaching ten poor children to read; and there are four almshouses, to each of which Miles Stapleton, Esq. gives an annuity of £4.

CARLETON, a township in the parish of PONTEFRACT, upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLD-CROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by E.) from Pontefract, containing 132 inhabitants.

CARLETON, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWXCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (S. E.) from Otley, containing 1918 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 2. 1., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is an hospital or almshouse for twelve poor women, founded agreeably to the will of Ferrand Spence, who died in 1698. Six of the women are chosen from the town of Market Bosworth, in the county of Leicester. The hospital contains separate apartments for the women, also a chapel, out offices, garden, &c. The total income is about £280. A school was built by Elizabeth Wilkinson, who, in 1709, endowed it with land for clothing and educating four boys; the income is £120 per annum; twenty boys are educated, four of them being also clothed.

CARLETON-FOREHOE, a parish in the hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Wymondham, containing 130 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 17. 1., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Wodehouse. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The distinguishing appellation is derived from four hills, supposed to have been artificially constructed, on one of which the court for the hundred was anciently held.

CARLISLE, an ancient city, inland port, and market town, having separate jurisdiction, situated in the ward and county of CUMBERLAND, 302 miles (N. N. W.) from London, on the great western road to Edinburgh and Glasgow, containing 15,476 inhabitants. It was anciently called Caer-Luil, or Caer-Leol, implying the city of Luil, a British potentate, by whom it is stated to have been founded. The Romans, on selecting it for a station, changed the name to Lugovallum, which is probably derived from Lugus, or Lucus, a tower or fort in the Celtic tongue, and vallum, in allusion to Hadrian's vallum that passed near it. From its earliest foundation till the union of the English and Scottish kingdoms, it suffered those shocks of incursive warfare, to which, as a border town, it was peculiarly exposed, and by which it has been repeatedly overwhelmed. In the reign of Nero it is stated by the Scottish historians to have been burnt by the Caledonians, during the absence of the Romans from the island, who in the time of Agricola repaired it, and constructed fortifications as a barrier against the future attacks of the invaders. Soon after their final departure it was probably again destroyed, for, in the seventh century, it was rebuilt by Egfrid, King of Northumberland, in whose reign it rose into importance. About the year 875, it was demolished by the Danes, and lay in ruins till after the Norman conquest, when it was restored by William Rufus, who, in 1092, built and garrisoned the castle, and sent a colony from the south of England to inhabit the city, and cultivate the neighbouring lands. The fortifications were most probably completed by David, King of Scotland, who in 1135 took possession of Carlisle, and resided there for several years, the whole county having been subsequently ceded to him by Stephen: the Scottish historians attribute the building of the castle and the heightening of the walls to this monarch. After the disastrous battle of the Standard, in 1138, this city was the sanctuary of David, who in 1150 conferred the honour of knighthood upon Prince Henry, son of the Empress Matilda, and afterwards Henry II., with whom and the Earl of Chester he formed an alliance against Stephen. The counties of Cumberland and Northumberland having been given to Henry II., in 1157, by Malcolm IV., Carlisle was besieged in 1173, by William the Lion, brother and successor to Malcolm, by whom the garrison was reduced to the greatest distress, from which it was relieved by his capture at Alnwick: the city was afterwards taken by his successor, Alexander, but was surrendered to the English in 1217. In 1292, a great part of it was destroyed by a conflagration, originating in the vindictive malice of an incendiary, who set fire to his father's house: the priory, the convent of the Grey friars, and the church, were all consumed; the convent of the Black friars alone escaped. The public records and charters being thus destroyed, the city was taken into the king's hands, and the government was vested in justices of assize. After the battle of Falkirk, in 1298, Edward I. marched with his army to Carlisle, where he held a parliament; in 1306, he appointed here a general rendezvous of the forces destined against Scotland, under Prince Edward; and the year following, after celebrating his birthday at Carlisle, in the last stage of a decline, he reached Burgh on the Sands, where he died on the 7th of July, 1307. In 1315, Carlisle was besieged by Robert Bruce, who had been crowned King of Scotland, but was resolutely defended by its governor, Andrew de Hercla, afterwards Earl of Carlisle, who, in the year 1322, being accused of holding a treasonable correspondence with the Scots, was arrested by Lord Lucy, in the castle of which he was governor, degraded from his honours, and executed. The Scots, in 1337, laid siege to the city, and fired the suburbs; and the former, in 1345, was burnt by them, under the command of Sir William Douglas. In 1352, Edward III., in consequence of the importance of Carlisle as a frontier town, and of the many calamities it had suffered, renewed its charter, which had been destroyed in the conflagration of 1292. In 1380, a party of borderers invested the city, and fired one of the streets; and in 1385, an unsuccessful effort was made to capture it. In 1461, Carlisle was attacked by a Scottish army in the interest of Henry VI., who burnt the suburbs: this is the only event respecting it that occurred during the war between the houses of York and Lancaster. During Aske's insurrection it was besieged, in 1537, by a party of eight thousand rebels under Nicholas Musgrave and others, but without effect; the leading insurgents, except Musgrave, were apprehended, and, together with about seventy others, executed on the city wall. In 1568, Mary, Queen of Scots, in the hope of finding an asylum from the hostility of her subjects, took fatal refuge in the castle; and in 1596, Sir William Scott, afterwards Earl of Buccleuch, attacking that fortress before day-break, to rescue a noted borderer, celebrated in the ballads of those times as "Kinmont Willie," effected a breach, and triumphantly bore him away. In the following year the city was visited by a destructive pestilence, that destroyed more than one-third of the population.

On the union of the two kingdoms, and the accession of James to the English throne, the importance of Carlisle as a frontier town having ceased, the garrison was reduced. At the commencement of the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the citizens embraced the royal cause; and the city being besieged by the parliamentary army under General Leslie, after a vigorous resistance, and incredible hardships on the part of the inhabitants, it was surrendered upon honourable terms: during this siege, a coinage of one shilling and three shilling pieces was issued from the castle, which, though very scarce, are still to be met with in the cabinets of the curious. In 1648, the city was retaken by Sir Philip Musgrave, for the royalists, who entrusted it to the custody of the Duke of Hamilton, by whom it was garrisoned with Scottish troops; at the close of the war it was surrendered by treaty to Cromwell. A dreadful famine, in 1650, caused by the consumption of the garrison, compelled the inhabitants to petition parliament for assistance; more than thirty thousand persons are said to have been destitute of bread and of money to purchase seed. The celebrated George Fox, founder of the Society of Friends, was imprisoned in the dungeons of the castle in 1653, on account of his religious tenets. During the rebellion in 1745, the young Pretender laid siege to Carlisle, which, from the weakness of its garrison, surrendered in three days, when the mayor and corporation, on their knees, presented to him the keys of the city, and proclaimed his father king, and himself regent, with all due solemnity. On the approach of the Duke of Cumberland, the Pretender retreated, leaving four hundred men in the garrison, who, unable to sustain a siege, surrendered on condition of being reserved for the king's pleasure; the officers were sent to London, where, having suffered death as traitors, their heads were sent down and exposed in the public places of the city. Cappock, whom the Pretender had created Bishop of Carlisle, was hanged, drawn, and quartered, and nine others, concerned in the rebellion, were executed in the city. The castle is situated at the north-west angle of the city, on the summit of a steep acclivity overlooking the Eden: it is of an irregular form, and consists of an outer and an inner ward; the former, two sides of which are formed by part of the city walls, is quadrangular, and contains no buildings of importance, except an armoury, in which ten thousand stand of arms were formerly deposited, and which is now converted into barracks for the infantry of the garrison, the cavalry being quartered on the innkeepers. The inner ward is triangular, and contains the keep, or dungeon tower, into which the armoury has been lately removed; it is square, and of great strength, having a circular archway leading from the outer into the inner ward, and is, no doubt, that part of the castle built by William Rufus. The other parts are evidently of later date, and correspond with the times of Richard III., Henry VIII., and Elizabeth, by all of whom it was partly rebuilt and repaired: a great part of the buildings erected by Elizabeth has been taken down. It is the head of the ancient royal manor of the soccage of Carlisle, which includes part of the city, and five hundred acres of land in its immediate vicinity.

Carlisle is pleasantly situated on a gradual eminence at the confluence of the rivers Eden and Caldew, which, with the Petterel, almost environ it. The four principal streets diverge from the market-place, and have several minor ones branching from them; they are well paved, and lighted with gas by a company formed pursuant to an act obtained in 1819, who have erected works at an expense of £10,000; the houses in general are handsome and well built, and the inhabitants have it in contemplation to conduct water into their houses by means of pipes leading from the new prison, where there is a capacious reservoir, into which it is raised from the river Caldew by a tread-wheel. In 1827, a police act, for watching, regulating, and improving the city and its suburbs, was obtained, ordaining the appointment of fifty commissioners once in three years, in addition to the higher civil and ecclesiastical authorities, whereby a police establishment has been formed: the magistrates attend at the police-office as occasion requires. A very handsome bridge of white freestone was erected over the Eden, in 1812, from a design by R. Smirke, jun., at an expense to the county of about £70,000; it consists of five elliptical arches, and is connected with the town by an arched causeway: two stone bridges, of one arch each, were built over the Caldew, on the west side of the city, in 1820; and a bridge of three arches over the Petterel, about a mile from the town, is now being erected. The environs abound with genteel residences;

the view embraces the course of the river Eden, as it winds through a fertile and well cultivated tract of country. In 1818 and 1819, a subscription was begun for the relief of the poor, who by this means were employed in completing and forming various walks near the town; the most interesting of these is the promenade on the slope and summit of the hill on which the castle stands, a terrace-walk on the opposite bank of the Eden, and a raised walk along the south margin of that river. A subscription library was established here in the year 1768, and a news-room has also lately been added to it: in January 1830, some ground was purchased opposite the Bush Inn, for the erection of a new subscription library and news-room, the foundations of which were soon afterwards laid. A commercial news-room was opened in the year 1825; and an academy of arts, for the encouragement of native and other artists in sculpture, painting, modelling, &c., was instituted in the year 1823, in which annual exhibitions are held: a mechanics' institution was formed in the year 1824. The theatre, which is a building possessing no claim to architectural notice, was erected about fourteen years since; it is constantly open during the races, and at other times. The races were first established here about the middle of the last century, and the first King's plate was given in the year 1763; they continue so be held annually in the autumn upon a fine course called the Swifts, which is situated on the south side of the Eden, and they are generally very numerous and respectably attended.

The trade principally consists in the manufacture of cotton goods and gingham for the West India market, in which upwards of one thousand looms are employed in the town, and a greater number in the adjacent villages: there are ten gingham and check manufactories; nine cotton-spinning factories, employing eighty thousand spindles; a small mill for weaving calicoes; a carpet-manufactory; several hat-manufactories; three iron-foundries; four tan-yards; and four breweries: there are also several fisheries on the river Eden, for the regulation of which an act of parliament was passed in 1804. In 1819, a canal was begun from Carlisle to the Solway Frith at Bowness, a distance of eleven miles, and finished in 1823, at an expense of about £90,000, by means of which vessels of small burden can come up to the town. The number of vessels belonging to the port, in 1829, was forty, averaging sixty-seven tons' burden; these are chiefly employed in supplying the city and the neighbourhood with iron, slate, salt, and other merchandise, and in conveying grain, oak-bark, alabaster, freestone, lead, staves, &c., and other produce of the place, to different towns on the coast. A rail-road from Carlisle to Newcastle is about to be formed, the expense of which is estimated at £260,000. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday: fairs for cattle and horses are held on August 26th and September 19th; during their continuance all persons are free from arrest in the city. There are also fairs, or great markets, on the Saturday after Old Michaelmas-day, and on every Saturday following till Christmas; these fairs are held on the sands, near the bridge across the Eden. In April there is a great show-fair for cattle, when prizes are distributed by the Agricultural Society. The Saturdays at Whitsuntide and Martinmas are great hiring days for servants.

This city received its first charter from Richard I.; it was renewed by Edward III., and confirmed by Charles I. in 1637. The government is vested in a mayor, recorder, two bailiffs, or sheriffs, twelve aldermen, and twenty-four common council-men, assisted by a chamberlain, two coroners, a town-clerk, a sword-bearer, three serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor is elected annually from among the aldermen, by a majority of the mayor, aldermen, bailiffs, and common council-men, on the Monday after Michaelmas-day, when the bailiffs and coroners are also chosen in like manner: the aldermen are chosen from the common council-men, by the mayor and aldermen; and vacancies in the common council are filled up from the freemen, by the court of aldermen. The mayor, recorder, and two senior aldermen are justices of the peace within the city, and hold a court of session quarterly for the trial of all but capital offenders; the mayor and bailiffs also hold a court of record every Monday, for the recovery of debts to any amount, and have the power of issuing process to hold to bail in actions for debt. A court is also held weekly on Monday, at which the mayor presides, for the recovery of debts under 40s. These courts are held in the town-hall, an inconsiderable structure in the centre of the town, near which are the moot-hall and council-chamber. There are eight fraternities, or companies, viz., Grocers, Tanners, Skinners, Butchers, Smiths, Weavers, Tailors, and Shoemakers, who have each their public room, all in the same building, called guilds, where they hold a general meeting annually on Ascension-day. The freedom of the city is inherited by birth, and acquired by an apprenticeship of seven years to a resident freeman, and by gift from the corporation. The assizes for the county are held regularly, and the Easter and Midsummer quarter sessions (the remaining two being held at Cockermouth and Penrith) take place in the new court-houses, erected in 1810 by act of parliament, at an expense of £100,000, from a design by Robert Smirke, jun., on the site of the ancient citadel that flanked the eastern gate: they consist of two large circular towers, one on each side of the entrance into the city, in the decorated style of English architecture, and contain two court-rooms, with apartments for the grand jury, counsel, and witnesses: one is appropriated to the Crown, and the other to the Nisi Prius bar. From the former is a subterraneous passage to the county gaol and house of correction, a noble building completed under the same act, in 1827, on the site of the ancient convent of the Black friars, at an expense of £42,000, and surrounded by a stone wall twenty-five feet high. The borough first exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the free burgesses who have been previously admitted members of one of the eight fraternities, whether resident or not, the number of whom is about one thousand; the mayor is the returning officer.

The diocese of Carlisle originally formed part of the diocese of Lindisfarne; but the see being removed from that place to Durham, and considerable inconvenience being felt from the distance of Carlisle from that city, Henry I., in 1133, constituted it a distinct bishoprick, and appointed to the episcopal chair Athelwald his confessor, who was prior of a monastery of Augustine canons, founded here in the reign of William Rufus, by Walter, a Norman priest, and completed and endowed by this monarch. It comprises the whole of Cumberland, except the ward of Allerdale above Derwent, which forms part of the diocese of Chester, and the parish of Alston, which is in the diocese of Durham; and the county of Westmorland, except the barony of Kendal, which also forms part of the diocese of Chester; and contains one hundred and two parishes, throughout the whole of which the bishop, or his chancellor, exercises sole ecclesiastical jurisdiction, the powers of the archdeacon having been anciently resigned to him for an annual pension, in consequence of the smallness of the diocese rendering their concurrent jurisdiction inconvenient. The revenue of the priory, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £482. 8. 1. This monarch dissolved the monastic establishment in 1540, and instituted a dean and chapter, composed of a dean, four prebendaries, and eight minor canons, and endowed this body with the whole, or the greater part, of the possessions of the dissolved priory, constituting the bishop, by the same charter, visitor of the chapter; he also appointed a subdeacon, four lay clerks, a grammar master, six choristers, a master of the choristers, and inferior officers. The advowson of the prebends has, since 1557, belonged to the bishop, who also has the patronage of the archdeaconry; the deanery is in the gift of the Crown.

The cathedral, dedicated to St. Mary, is a venerable structure, exhibiting different styles of architecture: it was originally cruciform, but the western part was taken down, to furnish materials for the erection of a guard-house, in 1641; and during the interregnum, part of the nave and the conventual buildings was also pulled down for repairing the walls and the citadel; it has a square embattled central tower, and the east end is decorated with pinnacles rising above the roof. It consists of a choir, north and south transepts, and two remaining arches of the nave, walled in at the west end and used as a parish church: the choir is in the decorated style of English architecture, with large clustered columns enriched with foliage, and pointed arches with a variety of mouldings; the clerestory windows in the upper part are filled with rich tracery, and the east end has a lofty window of nine lights, of exquisite workmanship, abounding in elegance of composition, and harmony of arrangement, which render it superior to any in the kingdom; the aisles are in the early English style, with sharply-pointed windows and slender-shafted pillars; the remaining portion of the nave and the south transept are of Norman architecture, having large massive columns and circular arches, being evidently the part built in the reign of William Rufus. There are monuments to the memory of some of the bishops, and one recently erected to that of Archdeacon Paley, who wrote some of his works whilst resident in this city, and who, with his two wives, was buried in the cathedral.

Carlisle stands within the two parishes of St. Mary and St. Cuthbert, both in the diocese, and locally in the archdeaconry, of Carlisle. St. Mary's includes the townships of Abbey-street, Castle-street, Fisher-street, Scotch-street, Caldew-gate, Ricker-gate, and Cumberdale; also the chapelry of Wreay, which is without the city, and in Cumberland ward. St. Cuthbert's includes the townships of Botchard-gate, Botchardby, Brisco, and English-street, within the city; and the townships of High Blackwell, Low Blackwell, Carleton, Harraby, and Upperby, without the city, and in Cumberland ward. The parochial church of St. Mary is part of the nave of the cathedral: the living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, Bishop of Lindisfarne, is a plain edifice, rebuilt in the year 1778, at the expense of the inhabitants, upon the site of the ancient structure: the living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £1200 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter. Two new churches, or chapels of ease, were completed in September 1830, at an expense of £13,212. 0. 10., of which £4030 was subscribed by the inhabitants, and the remainder granted by the parliamentary commissioners: the first stone of each was laid on September 26th, 1828; they are in the early style of English architecture, each having a tower surmounted by a spire. There are meeting-houses for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Presbyterians, besides a Roman Catholic chapel. The grammar school was founded by Henry VIII., on instituting the dean and chapter; the endowment is £190 per annum, of which the dean and chapter and the mayor and corporation contribute each £20 per annum; the remainder arises from an estate in the parish of Addingham, purchased in 1702, with a gift of £500 by Dr. Smyth, a former bishop: the management is vested in the Dean and Chapter. Dr. Thomas, Bishop of Rochester, left £1000 stock, directing the dividends to be applied to the benefit of two sons of clergymen, instructed here, and sent to Queen's College, Oxford. Dr. Thomas, Dr. Tully, and the Rev. J. D. Carlyle, a learned orientalist, received the rudiments of their education here; the last is interred in the church of St. Cuthbert. The girls' charity school, founded in 1717, is endowed with lands purchased with a donation of £40, by Mr. Nicholas Robinson, in 1719, and one of £320 by Mr. Samuel Howe, in 1722: the dean and chapter contribute £5, and the corporation £2 annually. A Lancasterian school was instituted in 1813, and a National school in 1817: a female infant school was established in 1806. St. Patrick's day and Sunday school, for the instruction of children of all religious denominations, was erected in 1826, and is supported by subscription. Near the English gate are some almshouses for decayed freemen, or their widows. The dispensary, established in 1782, and the house of recovery from fever, erected in 1820, are supported by voluntary subscription. A savings bank was opened in 1818; and a general infirmary for the whole county is about to be erected: there are various benevolent societies and charitable donations. Near the city was an hospital, dedicated to St. Nicholas, founded prior to the 21st of Edward I., for thirteen leprous persons, which, at the dissolution, was assigned toward the endowment of the dean and chapter. In the city walls, near the castle, an ancient vaulted chamber, having a recess at each end, and accessible only by an opening through the wall, has been lately discovered; it is supposed to have been a reservoir, or fountain, in the time of the Romans. In the reign of William III., a Roman Triclinium with an arched roof still existed, and, from an inscription on its front which Camden read "Marti Victori," is supposed to have been a temple in honour of Mars. A large altar was lately found, inscribed Deo Marti Belatucardro; and, a few years since, a Prefericulum, ten inches and a quarter high, having the handles ornamented in bas relief with figures sacrificing: the latter is now in the British Museum. In the castle yard is a bas relief of two figures hooded and mantled. Carlisle confers the title of earl on the family of Howard.

CARLTON, a parish in the hundred of WILLEY, county of BEDFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Harrold, containing 429 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consolidated in 1769 with that of Chellington, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 6. 8. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a tablet on which is recorded the long incumbency of the Rev. Thomas Wills, who was minister of Carlton and Chellington three score and ten years. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. This parish was formerly much intermixed with that of Chellington, but, under an act of enclosure in 1801, a distinct boundary has been established.

CARLTON, a parish in the hundred of RADFIELD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Newmarket, containing, with the chapelry of Willingham, 363 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of Lord Dacre. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Sir Thomas Elliot, author of a Latin dictionary, and other works, resided here, and dying in 1546, was buried in the church.

CARLTON, a chapelry in the parish of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by W.) from Market-Bosworth, containing 218 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. The Ashby de la Zouch canal crosses the south-west angle of this chapelry.

CARLTON, a hamlet in the parish of GEDLING, southern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Nottingham, containing 1345 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This is an extensive hamlet; the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of hosiery. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CARLTON, a parish in the hundred of HOXNE, locally in that of Plomesgate, county of SUFFOLK, $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile (N. by W.) from Saxmundham, containing 126 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consolidated, in 1679, with the rectory of Kelsale, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £3. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. B. Bence. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CARLTON, a chapelry in the parish of HUSTHWAITHE, within the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, East riding, locally in the wapentake of Birdforth, North riding, of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Easingwold, containing 169 inhabitants.

CARLTON, a township in the parish of COVERHAM, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Middleham, containing 280 inhabitants.

CARLTON, a township in the parish of ROTHWELL, lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Wakefield, containing, with Lofthouse, 1396 inhabitants.

CARLTON, a township in the parish of GUISELEY, upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (S. E.) from Otley, containing 158 inhabitants.

CARLTON, a township in the parish of ROYSTON, wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Barnesley, containing 326 inhabitants.

CARLTON (CASTLE), a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Louth, containing 62 inhabitants. The living is a rectory not in charge, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John Forster, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross. Here was once a populous market town, enjoying many privileges granted by Henry I.: there are three artificial mounts, each surrounded by a moat, on one of which was the baronial castle of Sir Hugh Bardolph.

CARLTON (EAST), comprising the united parishes of St. Mary and St. Peter the Apostle, in the hundred of HUMBLEYARD, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Wymondham, containing 262 inhabitants. The living of St. Mary's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of the Corporation of Norwich: that of St. Peter's the Apostle is also a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Crown: the y are in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich. The church of St. Peter was converted into a parsonage-house, and has subsequently fallen into ruins.

CARLTON (EAST), a parish in the hundred of CORBY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Rockingham, containing 63 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £12. 16. 3., and in the patronage of Sir J. H. Palmer, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There are five almshouses in this parish, the inmates of which receive five shillings per week from the estate of Sir J. H. Palmer.

CARLTON (GREAT), a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.S.E.) from Louth, containing 242 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage not in charge, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school was erected by Sir Edward Smith, Bart., in 1716, which is endowed with £20 per annum, besides an annuity of £10 given by Sir John Monson, on condition that the master should teach the poor children of Great and Little Carlton, Burton, Broxholm, and those of his tenants at Saxilby; four acres of land were also added on enclosing the lordship of Carlton Castle.

CARLTON in LINDRICK, a parish in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Worksop, containing 888 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £15. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a large structure principally in the Norman style of architecture. This appears to have been a place of some importance before the Conquest, from the many vestiges of antiquity still visible. A considerable trade is carried on in malt, which is chiefly disposed of at Manchester and Stockport.

CARLTON (LITTLE), a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (E.S.E.) from Louth, containing 114 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 16. 10½., and in the patronage of John Forster, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Edith.

CARLTON le MOOR-LANDS, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (S.W. by W.) from Lincoln, containing 294 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Stapleford annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 0. 10., and in the patronage of Lord Middleton. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The parish is bounded on the east by the river Brant, and on the west by the Witham.

CARLTON (NORTH), a parish in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Lincoln, containing 171 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lord Monson.

CARLTON (SOUTH), a parish in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Lincoln, containing 194 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lord Monson. The family of Monson have endowed a school here, which is under their exclusive control.

CARLTON upon TRENT, a chapelry in the parish of NORWELL, northern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Newark, containing 287 inhabitants. At the distance of a quarter of a mile east of the village is a ferry over the Trent, which bounds the chapelry.

CARLTON-COLVILLE, a parish in the hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W. by W.) from Lowestoft, containing 714 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 10. 7½., and in the patronage of the Rev. George Anguish. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This parish has the lake Lothing on the north, and the navigable river Waveney on the north-west.

CARLTON-CURLIEU, a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Market-Harborough, containing, with the chapelry of Illston on the Hill, 174 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18. 15. 10., and in the patronage of Sir J. H. Palmer, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The ancient manor-house is curious, affording a specimen of the style of building in Queen Elizabeth's time.

CARLTON-ISLEBECK, or MINIOT, a chapelry in the parish of THIRSK, partly in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, East riding, and partly in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Thirsk, containing 221 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Sand-Hutton, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York.

CARLTON-RODE, a parish in the hundred of DEPWADE, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from New Buckenham, containing 869 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of Sir R. J. Buxton, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints: the tower was completed in 1502, and the whole was repaired and ornamented in 1717, at the expense of a few benefactors. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. This parish is said to take its distinguishing appellation from the existence of a remarkable rood, or cross, that stood in Rode-lane; but it is more probable that it was so called from its ancient lord, Walter de Rode, who lived in the reign of Henry III.: it is remarkable for a singular tenure, by which certain lands were held, namely, that the lord of the manor should carry to the king, in whatever part of England he might be, a hundred herrings in twenty-four pies, when they first came into season, which the town of Yarmouth was bound to supply, and send to the sheriffs of Norwich, who were to convey them to the lord of the manor: this custom was observed in the early part of the last century, by agreement between the sheriffs of Norwich and the lord of this manor, or his deputy. Here was a free chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, now in ruins.

CARLTON-SCROOP, a parish in the wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Grantham, containing 148 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 1. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Earl Brownlow. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

CARNABY, a parish in the wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Bridlington, containing 130 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £300 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir W. Strickland, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

CARNFORTH, a township in the parish of WARTON, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 6 miles (N. by E.) from Lancaster, containing 294 inhabitants. A dreadful fire, in 1810, destroyed twelve houses in the village, remains of which may still be seen.

CARPERBY, a township in the parish of AYSGARTH, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 9 miles (W. by N.) from Middlewich, containing 283 inhabitants.

CARRINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of BOWDON, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Altrincham, containing 531 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £1000 private benefaction, £1000 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Stamford. The chapel, dedicated to St. George, was consecrated in 1759.

CARRINGTON, a parochial chapelry in the eastern division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from New Bolingbroke, containing 139 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with Frith Ville and West Ville, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln. The chapel was consecrated in 1818. Carrington was formerly in the parish of Helpringham, but was constituted a parochial chapelry in 1812, by an act of parliament, on the occasion of a very extensive drainage of fen lands.

CARROCK, or CANNOCK, PASSAGE, a chapelry in the parish of St. VEEP, hundred of WEST, county of CORNWALL, 1 mile (N. E.) from Fowey. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel, which was dedicated to St. Canneck, is now in ruins.

CARROW, a hamlet in the parish of WARDEN, north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Hexham. The population is returned with the parish. It is stated to have been the Roman station Procolitia, garrisoned by the Cohors Prima Batavorum, on the line of Severus' military way; vestiges of the works are visible on an elevated situation, where two altars, now in the Durham library, have been found. About half a mile south-westward are traces of a square fort, now called Broomdykes.

CARSHALTON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the second division of the hundred of WALINGTON, county of SURREY, 11 miles (S. S. W.) from London, containing 1775 inhabitants. In Domesday-book this place is called Aulton, signifying Old Town, and this name it retained until the reign of John, when it was called Cersalton, of which the present name is a variation. The village is pleasantly situated near Banstead Downs, on a dry and chalky soil: the river Wandle runs through the parish, and, being joined in its course by other streams issuing from springs in the neighbourhood, forms in the centre of the village a broad sheet of water, through which passes the public road, constructed by subscription among the inhabitants, at an expense of £700, and renewed by the same means in 1828, when a bridge was erected, which cost £500. The environs are pleasingly diversified with rural scenery, and contain numerous elegant mansions, inhabited principally by London merchants. Near the churchyard is a fine spring, called Queen Ann Boleyn's well, that queen, as it is said, having been gratified with the flavour of the water; it is arched over with stone, and kept in good repair. The trade has lately much declined: a calico-printing establishment, on a large scale, has been discontinued; but there are extensive bleaching-grounds, and, on the banks of the river, within the limits of the parish, are several mills for the manufacture of snuff, paper, flocks, and leather, besides three large flour-mills: there are also some limekilns. A branch from the Wandsworth and Croydon railway extends to Hack bridge, in this parish. The market, granted in the reign of Henry III., has long been discontinued; but a pleasure fair is held on the 1st and 2nd of July. Carshalton is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Croydon, for the recovery of debts under £5: a court for the manor is occasionally held.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £11. 12. 6., and in the patronage of John Cator, Esq.: the vicars have received the great tithes since 1726. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient structure, containing portions in the early and decorated styles of English architecture; the chancel, which is built of flint, appears to be the oldest part, to which the other parts, built of brick, have been subsequently added; the steeple is between the chancel and the nave. The interior contains some ancient and interesting monuments belonging to the families of Felloses and Scawen; and there are two brasses, representing Sir Nicholas Gaynesford and his lady, with a group of children. There is a Roman Catholic chapel connected with a seminary in the parish. A National school, for an unlimited number of children, is supported by subscription. Christopher Muschamp, Esq., in 1660, bequeathed £200, to be invested in the purchase of land, which now produces £25 per annum, for apprenticing poor children; and in 1726, Edward Felloses, Esq. gave an annuity of £20, directing that half of it should be appropriated to the same purpose, and the remainder given to the poor, for whose benefit there are also some smaller bequests. A bronze figure of Cupid, about three inches and a half in height, and a brass bust of a man, both found in the river, were in 1794 exhibited to the Society of Antiquaries. Dr. Radcliffe, the munificent benefactor to the university of Oxford, resided here in the latter part of his life. Carshalton Grove has been stripped of its trees, and those beauties which once rendered it a source of considerable attraction have greatly faded.

CARSINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Wirksworth, containing 270 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 1. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a small ancient building, without a steeple, and scarcely distinguishable from the cliffs that overhang it. The village is situated in a valley surrounded by hills, in which there are quarries of limestone and lead mines. The Peak Forest railway passes through the parish. A school for twenty poor children of this parish and the adjoining township of Hopton was founded by Mrs. Temperance Gill, in 1726; it has an endowment of £60 per annum, arising from land. John Oldfield, an eminent nonconformist divine, was ejected from the benefice of this parish, in 1662; his son, Dr. Joshua Oldfield, of some literary celebrity, was born here, in 1656. Mr. Ellis Farnsworth, an able translator from the Italian, was presented to the rectory in 1762. Carsington is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CARSWELL (ABBOT'S), county of DEVON.—See KERSWELL (ABBOT'S).

CARTER-MOOR, a hamlet in the parish of PONTELAND, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Newcastle upon Tyne. The population is returned with the township of Kirkley, to which Carter-Moor has been annexed, having been previously a distinct township.

CARTHORP, a township in the parish of BURNESTON, wapentake of HALLIKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Bedale, containing 301 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here are the remains of a Roman camp.

CARTMEL, a parish in the hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the market town of Cartmel, the chapelries of Broughton, Cartmel-Fell, and Staveley, and the townships of Lower Allithwaite, Upper Allithwaite, Lower Holker, and Upper Holker, and containing 4923 inhabitants: the town of Cartmel stands in the townships of Lower Allithwaite and Upper Holker, 14 miles (N. W. by N.) from Lancaster, and 254 (N. N. W.) from London. This place, supposed to have derived its name from the British words Kert, a camp, and mell, a fell, or small mountain, according to Camden, was given to St. Cuthbert in 677, by Egfrid, King of Northumberland, with all the Britons inhabiting it. In 782, Ethelred, upon his restoration to the throne of that kingdom, allured from their sanctuary at York the sons of Alfwold, who had been advanced to the crown upon his expulsion, and put them to death at this place. In 1188, William Mareschall, Earl of Pembroke, founded a priory for regular canons of the order of St. Augustine, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, endowing it with all his lands at "Kertmell," and with other possessions, besides many privileges, among which was the exclusive right of appointing guides to conduct travellers over the extensive sands that bound this parish on the south: the establishment, at the dissolution, consisted of ten religious and forty-eight servants, and the revenue was estimated at £212. 11. 10.: the conventual church, which was also parochial, was purchased by the parishioners. The town is situated in a vale surrounded by lofty hills of varied aspect, behind which the vast fells of Conistone rise majestically to the north; the houses, with the exception of a row lately erected on the north side of the town, of modern and handsome appearance, are in general built of stone, rough-cast and white-washed: the environs abound with scenery strikingly diversified by richly wooded eminences and barren hills. The parish is bounded on the south by the bay of Morecambe, into which it extends for a considerable distance, where at low water there is a passage over the sands to Bolton: the longer course over these sands is nine miles; the shorter, over that part called the Leven sands, is four miles: guides are usually waiting to conduct over both. The scenery is romantically wild, and in some parts picturesquely beautiful. Between lake Windermere and the river is Furness point, separated from Walney island by a narrow channel, the entrance of which is defended by the Pile of Fouldrey, built by one of the abbots, on a rock in the sea. The parish abounds with rocks of limestone and marble, but very little trade is carried on; there are cotton-mills at Upper Holker. The market, formerly on Monday, is now on Tuesday: the fairs are on Whit-Monday and the Monday after October the 23rd; and cattle fairs are held on the Wednesday before Easter and November 5th.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lord George Cavendish. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious cruciform structure in the early style of English architecture, with a curious tower: after having been suffered to remain in a state of neglect for nearly a century after the dissolution of the priory, during which time the conventual buildings had been removed, it was substantially repaired, in 1640, by George Preston, Esq., of Holker: the chancel contains some richly carved stalls and fine tabernacle work; on the north side of the altar is the tomb of William de Walton, one of the priors, and on the opposite side is a magnificent altar-tomb, with recumbent figures of one of the Harringtons and his lady, supposed to be Sir John Harrington, who accompanied Edward I. into Scotland, besides many other sepulchral monuments. The free grammar school, built in 1790, appears to have risen out of a parochial school supported by the churchwardens and sidesmen of the parish: various subsequent donations and legacies have produced an endowment of £117. 0. 3. per annum, of which the master receives £110: there are about fifty scholars, one-half of whom are instructed in the classics, and the rest in English only; those that learn writing and arithmetic pay a small quarterage to the master. Dr. Edmund Law, Bishop of Carlisle, whose father was curate of one of the chapels in the parish for forty-nine years, received the rudiments of his education in this school. In a wood in the vicinity, about twenty years ago, six hundred and eighty Roman coins were dug up, dated from 193 to 253, which are now in the possession of Lord George Cavendish; and at Broughton a coin of the Emperor Adrian was discovered. Three miles to the south of the town is a spring, called Holy Well, the water of which is efficacious in relieving from the pains of gout, and in nephritic and cutaneous diseases; and at Pit farm, in this parish, is an intermitting spring.

CARTMEL-FELL, a chapelry in the parish of CARTMEL, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 8 miles (W.S.W.) from Kendal, containing 371 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord George Cavendish, as lessee under the Bishop of Chester. The chapel is dedicated to St. Anthony. The inhabitants of a part of this chapelry contribute to the chapel of Winster, in the county of Westmorland, whither they resort for greater convenience.

GARTWORTH, a township in the parish of KIRK-BURTON, upper division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Huddersfield, containing 1211 inhabitants. There are fulling and scribbling mills, and the manufacture of woollen goods is carried on to a considerable extent.

CARWOOD, county of SALOP.—See SIBDON-CARWOOD.

CARY-COATS, a township in the parish of THOCKINGTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 12 miles (N.) from Hexham, containing 50 inhabitants.

CASHIO, or CASHIOBURY, a hamlet in the parish of WATFORD, hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of St. ALBANS, county of HERTFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.W.) from Watford, containing 789 inhabitants. In the time of the early Britons this was a place of importance, having been the seat of Cassibelaunus, King of the Cassii, from whom it derived its name; the Saxon kings of Mercia also made it their residence, and Offa included it in the possessions that he gave to the monastery of St. Albans, and called it Albaneston, which was again changed by the Normans into Caisho, since converted into Cashio. Edward IV. constituted it a liberty, and it continued annexed to the crown from the period of the dissolution until James I. granted the whole liberty of the monastery of St. Albans to Robert Whitmore, Esq., and John Eldred, Gent.

CASSINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WOORTON, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Oxford, containing, with the hamlet of Worton, 393 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Six boys are annually clothed, educated, and apprenticed, from the produce of an estate bequeathed by Henry Alnutt.

CASSOP, a township in the parish of KELLOG, southern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by E.) from Durham, containing 78 inhabitants. The village stands on part of a range of hills that abound with limestone, commanding an extensive prospect of a variegated tract in the north-western direction.

CASTERTON, a township in the parish of KIRKBY-LONSDALE, LONSDALE ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 2 miles (N.E.) from Kirkby-Lonsdale, containing 277 inhabitants. It is supposed to have received its name from an ancient castle, every vestige of which has been removed. A chapel formerly stood at Chapel-head close, near which is a well, called St. Coume's, probably a contraction of St. Columbe, the tutelar saint of the chapel.

CASTERTON (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of EAST, county of RUTLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Stamford, containing 335 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Pickworth annexed, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £11. 2. 11., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. This was anciently a Roman station, several coins having been discovered; it was subsequently demolished by the Picts and Scots, who ravaged the island as far as Stamford, whence they were driven back to their own territories by the Saxons under Hengist. Its former name was Brig-Casterton, from a bridge over the Gwash, or Wash, here; it received its present prefix to distinguish it from Little Casterton, a small village adjoining. The barony was held by various lords, until it reverted to the crown in the reign of Henry VIII., in consequence of its possessor, John, Lord Hussey, being attainted of high treason and beheaded at Lincoln, for joining a commotion raised in Lincolnshire, on account of the alterations in religion, and is now the property of the Marquis of Exeter.

CASTERTON (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of EAST, county of RUTLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from Stamford, containing 84 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £6. 15. 5., and in the patronage of the Earl of Pomfret. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a spacious neat structure; the pillars and arches are late Norman, and the windows exhibit the early and the decorated styles of English architecture.

CASTLE-ACRE, a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of FREEBRIDGE, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N.) from Swaffham, containing 1100 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of T. W. Coke, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a spacious and ancient structure, with a lofty square embattled tower; the east window of the chancel is ornamented with the arms, and a window in the nave with a figure in complete armour, of Earl Warren, in stained glass. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. Castle-Acre, now an inconsiderable village, noted chiefly for the remains of its ancient castle and priory, from the former of which it takes the prefix to its name, appears, from the vestiges of a Roman road leading from Thetford to Brancaster, the discovery of a tessellated pavement, and, lately, of several coins (among which were some of Vespasian and Constantine), to have been a Roman station, on the site of which the castle was probably erected. Fairs for toys and pedlary are held on St. James' day and August 5th. The magistrates for the division hold a meeting once a fortnight; and a manorial court is held annually in October.

The castle was built by William Warren, first earl of Surrey, to whom the manor, with one hundred and thirty-nine others, was given by the Conqueror, and who made it the head of all his lordships: it was probably enlarged by his descendant, who, in 1297, entertained Edward I. as his guest: there are sufficient remains to indicate the extent of this massive pile, which, with its appendages, comprised an area of more than eighteen acres, surrounded by an embattled wall seven feet in thickness, and strengthened by three lofty buttresses built over the broad and deep moat by which the castle was surrounded. The buildings were of a circular form, and erected on the slope of a gentle eminence; below the outer wall, which reached nearly to the river, was a terrace-walk, commanding a fine view of the adjacent country: they consisted of an outer and an inner ward, in the latter of which was the keep, a lofty circular building of extraordinary strength. Through the area, in a direction from north to south, passes the principal street, at the north end of which, leading into the inner ward, is a fine arched entrance, with an outer and an inner gate, and between them a portcullis, defended by two circular bastions; at the south end of the street are traces of a similar gateway, and nearly in the centre is another gateway, leading into the outer ward, which was enclosed by an embattled wall of stone and flint, considerable portions of which are remaining; and on the eastern side of the same street, near the north gate, are the remains of the chapel that belonged to the castle, now converted into a dwelling-house. To the west of the castle are the ruins of the priory, founded by the same Earl Warren, in 1085, for monks of the Cluniac order, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and subordinate to a similar establishment, by the same founder, at Lewes, in the county of Sussex: its revenue, at the dissolution, was £324. 17. 5. The greater part of the west front of the priory church, a spacious cruciform structure with two towers at the west end, and a massive central tower, is still remaining, and, with the exception of a large window of later insertion over the entrance, is an elegant specimen of the most enriched style of Norman architecture. The conventual buildings, now converted into a farm-house and offices, are of later date, and, from the remains, their extent and arrangement may be distinctly ascertained: a large room, now called the prior's dining-room, has a fine oriel window, in which are the arms of the priory, of the earls Warren and Arundel, of Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, and of France and England, all in stained glass: at the east end are vestiges of an altar, over which is a fine large window.

CASTLE-CAMPS, a parish in the hundred of CHILFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Linton, containing 618 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £16. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Governors of the Charter-house, London. The church is dedicated to All Saints. At this place are the ruins of a magnificent castle, formerly the seat of the Veres, earls of Oxford, one of whom received it by grant from Henry I., as lord high chamberlain of England; and it appears that they likewise held the manors of Tingrey and Weelfelmeston by sergeantry of chamberlainship to the queens of England at the coronation of their kings: the site is now occupied by a farm-house, but the moat and some slight vestiges are still visible.

CASTLE-CARROCK, a parish in ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Brampton, containing, with the outside quarters, 346 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £5. 12. 11., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a neat structure, rebuilt of freestone in 1828, by a rate on the inhabitants, with the exception of £60 given by the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches (for which sixty-four free sittings have been set apart), and the expense of building the chancel, which was defrayed by the rector. The former edifice is supposed to have been built out of the ruins of an ancient castle that stood within an intrenchment near the village, the lines of which are distinctly visible: there is also another intrenchment at a short distance; and on the summit of a fell are two cairns, one of which, called Hespeckraise, is of considerable magnitude. By the removal of another cairn near Geltbridge, about 1775, a human skeleton was discovered in a species of coffin made of rude stones. The parish contains both limestone and freestone: near the church is a mineral spring, the water of which is of the same quality as that of the Gilsland spa. On the enclosure of the moors, pursuant to an act passed in 1801, an allotment of twenty acres was assigned for the endowment of a school. This place is bounded on the east and north by the small river Gelt, which rises in the royal forest of Geltsdale, a hilly tract of moorland, forming the south-eastern part of the parish, and held on lease by the Earl of Carlisle.

CASTLE-CARY, a market town and parish in the hundred of CATSASH, county of SOMERSET, 11 miles (E. N. E.) from Somerton, and 113 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 1627 inhabitants. This place probably derived its name from an ancient castle originally belonging to a lord of the name of Carey, which was defended against King Stephen by its owner, Lord Lovell, one of whose descendants having embraced the cause of the deposed monarch, Richard II., was dispossessed of it by Henry VII.: the site is still called the Camp, and weapons of iron have been found in it occasionally; the only remains are some slight traces of the intrenchments. Charles II., after the battle of Worcester, took refuge in the manor-house. The town is pleasantly situated, and consists of two parts, extending together nearly a mile, partially paved, but not lighted: the houses are neatly built and amply supplied with water: the air is salubrious, the environs abound with pleasing scenery, and in many other respects this place affords an agreeable and retired residence. The market is on Tuesday, but it is very small; a great cattle market is held on each Tuesday in the seven weeks preceding Christmas: the fairs are on the Tuesday before Palm-Sunday, May 1st, and Whit-Tuesday, for cattle, broad cloth, and other merchandise. Courts leet and baron for the manor are held annually. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £11. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a handsome structure, occupying an elevated situation; the archdeacon holds his visitations in it. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan

Methodists. In 1779, two sums of £10 each, given respectively by John Francis and David Llewellyn to the poor, were applied to the erection of a place of confinement for malefactors, previously to their committal to the county gaol; these sums, on the recommendation of the commissioners for inquiring concerning charities, are to be refunded from the parish rates, and made available to the benefit of the poor.

CASTLE-CHURCH, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 1 mile (S. W.) from Stafford, containing 1118 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £700 royal bounty, and £1500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. Near that part of the town of Stafford lying in this parish is a Roman Catholic chapel, built in 1822, by the late Edward Jerningham, Esq.; it is a small but elegant structure, containing seventeen of the old stalls taken from Lichfield cathedral, and has a noble organ. There is a school adjoining, founded and endowed by the same benevolent individual, which is open to children of all religious denominations.

CASTLE-COMBE, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, 6½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Chippenham, containing 635 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of H. Scroop, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, appears to be of very ancient date; it consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and a chancel, with a tower at the west end about eighty feet high, supported by angular buttresses with pinnacles. Castle-Combe is a considerable village, and was anciently celebrated for a castle built in the early part of the thirteenth century, by Walter de Dunstanville, son-in-law of Reginald, Earl of Cornwall, which was dismantled before the close of the fourteenth: it stood on a hill north of the village, where the remains of its intrenchments are still discernible. A market was obtained for this place by Bartholomew, Lord Badlesmere, one of its ancient possessors; it has been discontinued, but the market cross remains in the centre of the village.

CASTLE-EATON, a parish in the hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, 5 miles (N. W.) from Highworth, containing 334 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Shepherd and another. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CASTLE-MORTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Upton upon Severn, containing 788 inhabitants. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Longdon, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £5. 8. 6½. The church, dedicated to St. Gregory, is a very ancient structure, with a fine old tower and steeple: opposite to it is an artificial mound, fifty feet high, surrounded by a moat, or ditch, supposed to have been thrown up to protect the church during the civil war in the reign of Charles I. There are charitable bequests for the poor amounting to about £30 per annum.

CASTLE-NORTHWICH, a township in that part of the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH which is in the second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, containing 575 inhabitants.

CASTLE-RISING, a borough and parish (formerly a market town) having separate jurisdiction, locally in the Lynn division of the hundred of Freebridge, county of NORFOLK, 43 miles (W. N. W.) from Norwich, and 102 (N. by E.) from London, containing 343 inhabitants. Prior to the year 1176, a castle was built by William D'Albini, the first earl of Sussex, on a hill to the south of the town, and, according to the author of the Munimenta Antiqua, on the site of one of King Alfred's great castles, of which some arches, included within the subsequent buildings, are supposed to be remains. In this castle, Isabel of France, queen of Edward II., after the death of Mortimer, was detained in confinement, from the year 1330 until her decease in 1358: the principal remains are the shell of the keep, a square tower, the walls of which are three yards in thickness, with some ornamented doorways and windows in the Norman style of architecture, though greatly dilapidated; the site of the great hall and some vestiges of the state apartments may be traced: the whole was surrounded by a deep moat and a bold rampart, on which was a strong wall with three turrets; the principal entrance is over a ruined bridge of one circular arch, defended by a tower gateway. This was formerly a considerable sea-port, inferior only to those of Lynn and Yarmouth, in this county; but the harbour becoming choked up with sand, its trade declined, and, from the consequent decrease of its population, the market, which was held twice a week, has been discontinued for many years: the vicinity was formerly subject to inundation from the sea, to prevent which an embankment has been constructed, and is kept in an effective state. The government was originally vested in a mayor, twelve aldermen, and an indefinite number of burgesses, aided by a recorder, high steward, &c.; there are now two aldermen only, who alternately elect each other to the office of mayor: the county magistrates, in some cases, have concurrent jurisdiction. Of the rank which this place held as an ancient borough it still retains a memorial, in the precedence given to the name of the mayor in the king's commission of the peace for the county. The elective franchise was conferred in the last year of the reign of Philip and Mary, since which time the borough has returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the free burgesses, the number of whom has been reduced to two or three; the mayor is the returning officer.

The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Roydon consolidated, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the rector, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Hon. Col. Howard. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is an ancient structure in the Norman style of architecture, with a square tower rising from the centre; the west front, which is richly ornamented, is a fine specimen of that style; the entrance is enriched with varied mouldings, and on each side of the large window above it are series of intersecting arches: the font is very ancient and highly ornamented. A National school is supported by the family of Howard and the rector. Near the church is an hospital, containing thirteen apartments, a large hall, kitchen, and a chapel, built in 1613, by Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, who endowed it with a rent-charge of £100 for twelve aged women and a governess. To the west of the castle is a square mount, one acre in extent, and to the east of it a circular mount surrounded by a ditch; the former is by some supposed to have been a Roman camp, though by others both are thought to have been thrown up by the people of Lynn, when they besieged the castle, and compelled the Earl of Arundel to relinquish his claim to one-third of the customs of their port. There are some chalybeate springs in the parish.

CASTLE-THORPE, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (N.N.E.) from Stony-Stratford, containing 348 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Hanslope, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here was the ancient castle of the barony of Hanslope, the site of which exhibits traces of very extensive buildings; it was taken and demolished in 1217, by Fulke de Brent, when it was garrisoned by its owner, William Manduit, one of the barons who were in arms against Henry III.

CASTLEFORD, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Castleford and Glass-Houghton, and containing 1434 inhabitants, of which number, 1022 are in the township of Castleford, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Pontefract. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £20. 13. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is supposed to occupy the site of a Roman camp, as this place was anciently a station belonging to that people, antiquaries identifying it with Legiolium, or Lagetium, described in Antoninus' Itinerary as being situated on the river Aire, where it was crossed by a ford on the line of the ancient Herman-street, which passed between Doncaster and York; coins and other remains of the Romans have been frequently discovered. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Castleford is a thriving village, having an extensive pottery and a mill for grinding flint: it is situated at a short distance from the junction of the Aire and the Calder, the latter of which, in 1698, was made navigable to Wakefield. There is a peculiar regulation for the payment of tithes in this parish, sanctioned by an act of parliament; the rector receives twenty-eight quarts of wheat for every pound sterling paid by the tenant to his landlord on arable land, and twenty quarts for every two pounds on grazing land. It is related that the citizens of York being pursued by Ethelred's army, in 750, turned at this place, and committed great slaughter on their pursuers.

CASTLETON, a parish in the hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Tideswell, containing, with the chapelry of Edale, 1428 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. 6., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is a small ancient edifice, the arch, with its mouldings entire, separating the nave from the chancel, being a fine specimen of early English architecture; the pews are of oak curiously carved, but the exterior has been greatly modernised. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school has been endowed with about £23 per annum, by Richard Bagshaw and others, for the education of poor children, in which there are about twenty-three scholars. Castleton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. It is said to have taken its name from a castle built by William Peverell, natural son of the Conqueror, who gave him this honour, along with thirteen other lordships in the county, which, from its situation upon a steep and high peak, was called the Castle of the Peak, or Peak Castle; but from various records it appears that a castle existed here previously, supposed to have been erected by Edward the Elder, or his heroic sister Ethelfleda, as, at the Conqueror's survey, it was described "Castelli Wi Peverel in Pechivers," and in the reign of Edward the Confessor it was the property of Earl Gundeburne. The extent of the ruins evinces the former magnitude of the building, the castle yard, the walls of which are in some places twenty feet high and nine feet thick, occupying almost the entire summit of the hill; the keep, consisting of two stories almost entire, and standing at the south-western point of this high and precipitous limestone rock, towering above the mouth of the great cavern of the peak, is fifty feet in height, the whole being nearly isolated, and only to be approached with difficulty from the north. Part of the arch of the principal gateway at the north-east corner is still visible, appearing to be formed of hewn grit-stone. The castle remained in the possession of the Peverells until the attainder of the third William, when it was granted by Henry II. to his son John, Earl of Montaigne, afterwards King John; and, during the absence of his brother Richard I., Hugh Nonant, Bishop of Coventry, possessed it. In 1204, King John appointed Hugh Neville governor, but the disaffected barons seized it and kept possession until the reign of Henry III. From that period it had various occupiers, until settled by Edward III. upon his son, the Earl of Richmond, commonly called John of Gaunt, who having married Blanch, youngest daughter of Henry, Duke of Lancaster, in 1359, his father, in 1362, created him Duke of Lancaster, and then the castle in the peak became part of the duchy of Lancaster, and continues so to the present time. It was used in preserving the records of the miners' court down to the reign of Elizabeth, when they were removed to Tutbury castle. His Grace the Duke of Devonshire now possesses it, as lessee under the crown.

Castleton is a considerable village, situated at the foot of the Castle hill; the inhabitants principally derive their support from the mining district by which it is surrounded: it was fortified by a rampart, the ditch being still visible, and called the Town ditch, extending from the ravines at the base of the rock, to the out-works connected with the castle, the ruins of which are boldly prominent on the verge of the hill. About half a mile east of the town is the site of an hospital, founded by King Stephen. The whole of this district abounds with greater natural curiosities than almost any other portion of the empire. Immediately under the walls of the castle is Peak Cavern, or the Devil's Cave, a succession of vast and magnificent excavations, formed in the interior of this stupendous rock. The approach to it is by the side of a clear stream, flowing from limestone rocks, that here rise to the height of two hundred and sixty feet on each side, and from the entrance to the cave, which is in a dark and gloomy recess, consisting of a tolerably well formed arch, forty-six feet high and one hundred and twenty feet wide, and exhibiting a checquered diversity of coloured stones, from which a fluid that soon petrifies is continually dropping. Immediately within the arch is a cavern of nearly the same extent, and in depth about ninety feet, where some twine-makers have established their residence and manufactory. Here the light disappears, and the rest of the cavern must be explored by torch-light. The arch leading to the next chamber is narrow and low, until arriving at a spacious opening called the Bell-house; at the end is a stream of water forty-two feet broad, over which it is necessary that visitors should be ferried. On landing, another vast vault, two hundred feet square and one hundred and forty feet high, presents itself: at the end of this is another stream generally crossed on foot; here the passage leads to what is termed Roger Rains' house, a projecting pile of rocks on which water is incessantly dropping. The next excavation is called the Chancel, which leads to what has been denominated the Devil's Cellar, and then follow numerous other immense cavities, that have received various appellations, such as Half-way House, Great Tom of Lincoln, &c., the whole extending two thousand three hundred feet from the entrance, and supposed to be six hundred and forty-five feet in depth from the summit of the mountain.

About a mile from this is the Speedwell mine, situated near the foot of what is called "the Winnets," from the gusts of wind that constantly prevail here, in consequence of the formation of this mountainous range: the mine was formerly worked for lead, but it proved unprofitable. The descent is by about one hundred steps, beneath an arched vault, leading to the sough, or level, where a boat conveys the explorer over a very broad stream, bounded by an immense gulph, the depth of which has never been accurately ascertained, though sounded by a line of three hundred and fifty feet; and above, the roof of the cavern is invisible, even with the aid of rockets and Bengal-lights. The rushing of the superfluous water through an artificial gate into this profound chasm, which has already swallowed forty thousand tons of rubbish, arising from the blasting of the rocks, without the least apparent diminution of its depth, produces an appalling effect. A little further west is the Odin lead mine, said to have been worked by the Saxons, who honoured it with the name of one of their deities, and, although in operation for so many centuries, few mines in the county are yet more productive, affording employment to about one hundred and forty persons. At some distance beyond this, raising its majestic head one thousand three hundred feet above the vale of Castleton, is the "Mam Torr," or Mother hill, having also received the name of the "Shivering Mountain," from the fragments of shale and grit-stone almost continually falling from its south side, and which have formed an elevated mount in the valley, called "Little Mam Torr." On its summit are the remains of a camp, supposed to be Saxon, with the greater part of the rampart entire; and on the south-west side are two barrows, in one of which, when opened a few years since, were found a brass celt and fragments of an unbaked urn. Near this mountain is the Water Hull mine, where the beautiful and peculiar fluor spar, locally termed "Blue John," is procured, the most esteemed of which are the violet-blue and rose-coloured, which are worked into elegant vases, urns, &c.: here is also found, between the schistus and limestone, a species of elastic bitumen, that burns with a bright flame; another variety, less elastic, is formed of filaments, and is called wood bitumen. About half a mile midway in this mountainous ravine, which exhibits in many places proofs of volcanic origin, is a place called the Cove, where large masses of basaltic rocks are conspicuous, in which are imbedded quartz, chrystals, &c. Such an assemblage of natural curiosities renders the neighbourhood of Castleton one of the most interesting districts in the kingdom.

CASTLETON, a parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, 1 mile (E.N.E.) from Sherborne, containing 174 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Earl Digby. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

CASTLETON, a township in that part of the parish of ROCHDALE which is in the hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S.E. by S.) from Rochdale, containing 7894 inhabitants, many of whom are employed in the woollen and cotton manufacture. The name is derived from an ancient castle, one of the twelve Saxon castles in the county, the keep of which still remains. Part of the town of Rochdale is situated within this township, where are the cisterns for supplying the town with water, and the gas-works for lighting it. The inhabitants participate in the benefactions made to the parish both for scholastic and charitable purposes.

CASTLETON, a hamlet in the parish of MARSHFIELD, upper division of the hundred of WENTLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W.) from Newport. The population is returned with the parish. Here anciently stood a castle, occupied, if not built, by the Normans, to protect their conquest of Wentloog, the only remains of which are some small ruins of the citadel, and the chapel, converted into a barn; near the site is a barrow. On the level summit of an adjoining hill there is a circular encampment, called Pen-y-Park-Newydd.

CASTLE-VIEW, an extra-parochial liberty adjoining the borough of Leicester, in the hundred of GUTH.

LAXTON, county of LEICESTER, containing 149 inhabitants.

CASTLEY, a township in the parish of LEATHLEY, upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Otley, containing 110 inhabitants.

CASTON, a parish in the hundred of WAYLAND, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Watton, containing 432 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with those of Rockland All Saints and St. Andrew annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £11. 19. 2., and in the patronage of the Rev. B. Barker. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CASTOR, a parish in the liberty of PETERBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Peterborough, comprising the chapelries of Sutton and Upton, and the hamlet of Ailesworth, and containing 959 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £52. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and held in commendam with the see of Peterborough. The church, dedicated in 1124 to St. Keneburgha, who founded a nunnery here, is a spacious cruciform edifice, with a beautiful Norman tower of two stages, surmounted by a spire, rising from the intersection: the three arches on the south side of the nave are semicircular, resting on massive round pillars; the opposite three are pointed, and supported by hexagonal columns. This village, and the opposite one of Chesterton, occupy the site of the Roman station Durobrinae, by the Saxons called Dor-mancester; a great quantity of coins from Trajan to Valens, fragments of urns, tiles, &c., have been discovered. The Roman highway, called Ermin-street, commenced here, and proceeding some distance, branched off into two divisions, the remains of which are still visible, one being called the Forty foot way, leading to Stamford, and the other Long Ditch, or High-street, running by Lolham-Bridges, through West Deeping, into Lincolnshire; together with what is termed Lady Keneburgha's way, which is supposed to have been an ancient paved way leading from a fortress at the other side of the Nyne, which runs through the parish, to a castle on the hill, where the Roman governor resided: the place was destroyed by the Danes. Mr. John Landen, an eminent mathematician, was born here, in 1719.

CATCHBURN, a township in that part of the parish of MORPETH which is in the eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by E.) from Morpeth, containing, with Morpeth Castle, Park-house, and Stobhil, 153 inhabitants.

CATCHERSIDE, a township in the parish of KIRKWHELFINGTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 15 miles (W.) from Morpeth, containing 15 inhabitants.

CATCLIFFE, a township in that part of the parish of ROTHERHAM which is in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (S.) from Rotherham, containing 202 inhabitants. Here is a manufactory for glass. In 1702, George Beardsall devised £10 per annum for a master, for which he teaches ten poor children.

CATCOTT, a chapelry in the parish of MOORLINCH, hundred of WHITLEY, county of SOMERSET, 7 miles (E. N. E.) from Bridg-water, containing 579 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, and in the patronage of Lord Henniker.

CATEBY, a chapelry in the parish of SPROT-BROUGH, northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Doncaster, containing 169 inhabitants.

CATESBY-ABBEY, a parish in the hundred of FAWSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Daventry, containing, with the hamlet of Newbold-Grounds, 114 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of T. and M. Scrafton, Esqrs. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In that part of the parish which is named Upper Catesby are some small remains of a Benedictine nunnery, founded by Robert de Esseby in the reign of Richard I.; its revenue, at the dissolution, was estimated at £145 per annum: there are also the remains of an intrenchment, named Arbury camp. Of the family of Catesby, one was beheaded after the death of his master, Richard III., and another suffered for being concerned in the Gunpowder Plot.

CATFIELD, a parish in the hundred of HAPPING, county of NORFOLK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Coltishall, containing 581 inhabitants. The living consists of a discharged rectory and vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Norwich and the Earl of Shrewsbury, alternately. The church is dedicated to All Saints: the chancel is a fine specimen of the later style of English architecture.

CATFOSS, a township in the parish of SIGGLES-THORNE, northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, East riding of the county of YORK, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Beverley, containing 49 inhabitants.

CATHERINE (ST.), a parish in the hundred of BATH-FORUM, county of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Bath, containing, with a part of the liberty of Easton and Amrill, 127 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Bath-Easton, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells. The valley of St. Catherine is enriched with much picturesque scenery. Catherine Court was formerly the country residence of the abbot of Bath.

CATHERINGTON, a parish in the hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Alton (South) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Petersfield, containing 798 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £9. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. Joseph Hutchinson. The church is dedicated to St. Catherine. The parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. William Appleford, porter of St. Mary's College, Winchester, founded a school in 1695, and endowed it with lands in the parish of Drayton, producing at present £15 per annum, for which forty-five children of both sexes are instructed.

CATHERSTON-LEWSTON, a parish in the hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Lyme-Regis, containing 27 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £2. 16. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John Ross, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CATMERE, a parish in the hundred of COMPTON, county of BERKS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from East Ilsley, containing 89 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £5. 5. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of J. A. Houblon, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. Here was formerly a market on Monday, granted in 1306, by Edward I., together with a fair on the festival of St. Margaret.

CATON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Lancaster, containing 1107 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Lancaster. This extensive chapelry and township lies on the southern bank of the Lune, and presents so many features of beautiful scenery as to have elicited an eulogium from the poet Gray, in a letter to Dr. Wharton. Here are several cotton-manufactories: coal and slate are found in the chapelry. Some Roman relics have been discovered, especially an ancient stone pillar with an inscription to the Emperor Adrian, found in the bed of the Fisherbeck, in 1803, besides a milliarium six feet in height, on the course of a Roman way that passed near the place. There are two trifling benefactions for teaching poor children.

CATSFIELD, a parish in the hundred of NINFIELD, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, 3 miles (S. W.) from Battle, containing 575 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is in the early and decorated styles of English architecture.

CATTAL, a township in the parish of HUNSGORE, upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Wetherby, containing 207 inhabitants.

CATTERAL, a township in the parish of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Garstang, containing 704 inhabitants. The village contains one of the oldest and most extensive print-works in the county, situated at the confluence of the West Calder with the river Wyre.

CATTERHAM, a parish in the second division of the hundred of TANDRIDGE, county of SURREY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Godstone, containing 435 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £8. 0. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. James Legrew. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The Croydon railway passes through this parish. A school-house has been built by Thomas Clarke, for the use of which a master teaches six poor children.

CATTERICK, a parish comprising the townships of Ellerton upon Swale, Kiplin, Scorton, Uckerby, and Whitwell, in the eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING; the chapelry of Hudswell, in the western division of the wapentake of HANG; and the chapelry of Hipswell, and the townships of Appleton, Brough, Catterick, Colbourne, St. Martin's, Killerby, Scotton, and Tunstall, in the eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, and containing 9788 inhabitants, of which number, 561 are in the township of Catterick, 5 miles (S. E.) from Richmond. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £25. 2. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Anne, is partly in the early style of English architecture, and partly of later date. This is a place of great antiquity, having been the site of a Roman station of some note, called Cataractonium, where the Ermin-street branches off in two directions; numerous Roman relics have been discovered at different periods. It also flourished during the Saxon times, but in the devastations of the Danes it was utterly destroyed, and is at present of little importance. A school, in which twelve children are instructed, and an hospital for six poor widows, were founded in 1658, by the Rev. Michael Syddall, formerly vicar of the parish, and endowed with £45 per annum, of which the schoolmaster receives £20, with a house to reside in. At the distance of a mile to the north is Catterick bridge, over the river Swale, on which was formerly a chapel; and opposite is a race-course.

CATTERLEN, a township in the parish of NEWTON-RIGNY, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Penrith, containing 124 inhabitants.

CATTERTON, a township in that part of the parish of TADCASTER which is in the ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Tadcaster, containing 63 inhabitants.

CATTISTOCK, a parish in the hundred of CERNE, TOTCOMBE, and MODBURY, Cerne subdivision of the county of DORSET, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Dorchester, containing 382 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £13. 13. 9., and in the patronage of P. Broadley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. On a hill in the eastern part of the parish is an ancient circular fortification of about four acres, called the Castle, surrounded by a double rampart, with entrances at the north-east and west: towards the middle of the area the ground rises into a long barrow; and near the north entrance is a round tumulus, the top of which consists of flint stones.

CATTO, a joint township with Landmoth, in that part of the parish of LEAK which is in the wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Thirsk. The population is returned with Landmoth.

CATTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of CROXALL which is in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Burton upon Trent, containing 89 inhabitants. This place is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CATTON, a parish in the hundred of TAVERHAM, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Norwich, containing 639 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 3. 9., and endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. In 1724, John Norman bequeathed land for teaching and apprenticing some of his relations; and, after sixty years, as his estate increased, to be applied to the erection and endowment of an hospital for boys.

CATTON, a parish comprising the townships of Kexby, and West Stamford-Bridge with Scoreby, in the wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, and the townships of High Catton, Low Catton, and East Stamford-Bridge, in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, and containing 973 inhabitants, of which number, 198 are in the township of High Catton, and 177 in that of Low Catton, 9 miles (E. N. E.) from York. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £21. 12. 8½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CATTON, a township in that part of the parish of TOPCLIFFE which is in the wapentake of BIRDFOURTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (S. W.) from Thirsk, containing 99 inhabitants.

CATWICK, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Beverley, containing 190 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £10. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is in the later style of English architecture.

CATWORTH (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Kimbolton, containing 529 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £17. 16. 10½., and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. Sir Wolston Dixie, who was lord mayor of London in 1585, and a considerable benefactor to Emanuel College, Cambridge, having also founded a free school at Bosworth, in Leicestershire, was born here.

CATWORTH (LITTLE), a chapelry in the parish of LONG STOW, hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Kimbolton. The population is returned with the parish.

CAUDERY, a joint township with Rudyard, in that part of the parish of LEEK which is in the southern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD. The population is returned with Rudyard.

CAULDON, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Ashbourn, containing 350 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Wilmot. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. At Caldun-Low are lime-works, from which the greater part of the surrounding country is supplied with lime. The small river Hamp separates this parish from that of Waterfall, and in its course enters the ground at Waterhouses, continuing a subterraneous progress for upwards of five miles.

CAULDWELL, a chapelry in the parish of STAPENHILL, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Burton upon Trent, containing 157 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Giles.

CAULK, a parish in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Ashby de la Zouch, containing 63 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of Sir George Crewe, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. There are some lead mines in the parish. A convent of Augustine friars, in honour of St. Mary and St. Giles, was founded here before 1161, and afterwards removed to Repindon; the remains still exist, having been converted into a mansion, called the Old Abbey. The poor inhabitants are eligible to the hospital at Ticknall, founded by Charles Harpur, Esq., in 1770.

CAUNDLE (BISHOP), a parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, 5 miles (S. E. by E.) from Sherborne, containing, with Caundle-Wake, 312 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £11. 10., and in the patronage of Earl Digby.

CAUNDLE-MARSH, a parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Sherborne, containing 62 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £5. 16. 3., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

CAUNDLE-PURSE, a parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Milborne-Port, containing 142 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 8., and in the patronage of Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter: in the chancel, under a plain marble tombstone, are interred the remains of Dr. Highmore, a distinguished writer on medical and anatomical subjects. There is a fine old mansion of stone in this parish, said to have been a hunting seat belonging to King John. Dr. Mew, Bishop of Winchester, was born here, in 1618: the year following his translation from the bishoprick of Bath and Wells to that of Winchester, he was commanded by the king to proceed against Monmouth, in the rebellion, and had the management of the artillery at the battle of Sedgmoor, where he rendered considerable service, and was rewarded with a rich medal.

CAUNDLE-STOURTON, a parish in the hundred of BROWNSHALL, Sturminster division of the county of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Milborne-Port, containing 325 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, and in the patronage of Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart.

CAUNTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Newark, containing 467 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage with Beesthorpe, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, rated in the king's books at £4. 2. 1. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. Various attempts to discover coal have been made in this parish, but hitherto without success.

CAUSEY-PARK, a township in the parish of HEBURN, western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Morpeth, containing 88 inhabitants. Here was a chapel, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, now in ruins.

CAVE (NORTH), a parish in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of North Cave, South Cliff, and Drewton with Everthorp, and containing 1091 inhabitants, of which number, 783 are in the township of North Cave, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Market-Weighton. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £10. 7. 6., and in the patronage of Henry Barton, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. Four poor children are educated free, for the use of a school-room, which was erected by subscription.

CAVE (SOUTH), a parish partly within the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, and partly in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the market town of South Cave, and the townships of Brounfeet and Flaxfleet, and containing 1190 inhabitants, of which number, 885 are in the town of South Cave, 27 miles (S. E.) from York, and 183 (N. by W.) from London. The living is a discharged vicarage, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of South Cave, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of E. W. Barnard, Esq. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a neat edifice, erected in 1601. There are three places of worship belonging to the Methodists. This place lies at the western extremity of the Wolds. The surrounding country is very pleasing, the eminences affording many delightful views of Lincolnshire and the Humber, which bounds the parish for three miles. At the market, which is held on Monday, considerable quantities of corn are sold for the supply of many of the manufacturing towns in the West riding; it is shipped on the Humber, and the return cargoes consist of coal, freestone, lime, flags, and a variety of other necessary commodities. A fair is held on Trinity-Monday. The petty sessions for the wapentake of Howdenshire take place here. A manorial court is held in October, at which a constable is appointed. About fifty children are taught on the National system, in a school which is supported by voluntary subscriptions and an endowment of £16 per annum. In the vicinity of the town is Cave Castle, a large and splendid structure, embattled and crowned with numerous turrets; the interior exhibits a corresponding style of magnificence, and is enriched with a noble collection of paintings, by the first artists, including a fine portrait of the celebrated American general, Washington, whose ancestors possessed a portion of the estate, and resided here prior to their emigration to Virginia, in the middle of the seventeenth century.

CAVENDISH, a parish in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Clare, containing 1215 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £26, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Jesus' College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The village is situated upon the river Stour: it was the birthplace of John Cavendish, Esq., who, being in attendance upon Richard II., assisted Walworth, Lord Mayor of London, in slaying the rebel Wat Tyler, which the populace at this place having heard, they, under John Raw, a priest, and Robert Westbroom, seized his uncle, Sir John Cavendish, Lord Chief Justice of the court of King's Bench, and beheaded him at the market-cross in Bury, with the prior of Bury; but Dr. Spencer, the warlike bishop of Norwich, raised forces and slew many of them immediately after. By deed in 1696, Thomas Grey gave land for teaching fifteen poor boys, apprenticing two, and sending one or two to college. The noble family of Cavendish, of which the Duke of Devonshire is the representative, derives name from this place, which at an early period was in their possession.

CAVENHAM, a parish in the hundred of LACKFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Mildenhall, containing 261 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 5. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The river Lark is navigable on the north of this parish, where it is crossed by Temple bridge.

CAVERSFIELD, a parish partly in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, but chiefly in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (N.) from Bicester, containing, with a portion of the township of Bicester-Market-End, 208 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £8 per annum private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late Joseph Bullock, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. Some suppose this to have been the place where Carausius, the Roman commander, assumed the purple in 287, and where he was afterwards slain by Caius Alectus, one of the thirty tyrants: on Bayard's Green, about a mile from the church, are faint traces of Carausius' camp.

CAVERSHAM, a parish in the hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, 1 mile (N.) from Reading, containing 1317 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, was part of the first endowment of Nutley abbey, in Buckingham-shire, the society of which here founded a cell to that monastery, in which was a chapel, where, at the time of the dissolution, was superstitiously exhibited the angel with one wing, who was stated to have brought to Caversham the spear-head by which our Saviour was pierced on the cross. The village is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Thames. Charles I. was for a short time kept a prisoner here. Caversham gives the inferior title of viscount to Earl Cadogan.

CAVERSWALL, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of TORMONSLow, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Cheadle, containing, with the township of Weston-Coyney with Hulme, 1082 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £7. 5. 3., and in the patronage of T. H. Parker, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains several old monuments, and one to the lady of the late Earl St. Vincent. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parish is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Caverswall Castle, originally founded by Sir William de Caverswall in the time of Edward II., and rebuilt in that of Elizabeth, or James I., was garrisoned for the parliament in 1645, and at the commencement of the French revolution, in 1789, was purchased, with some adjoining fields, for the English Benedictine nuns of Ghent, who had been driven from their house and possessions in Belgium, and who have since added a neat chapel of the Doric order to the building.

CAVIL, a joint township with Portington, in the parish of EASTRINGTON, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE; East riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (N.N.E.) from Howden. The population is returned with Portington.

CAWKWELL, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Horncastle, containing 34 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 8. 6½., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CAWOOD, a parish (formerly a market town) partly in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, East riding, but chiefly in the lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding, of the county of YORK, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from York, and 187 (N. by W.) from London, containing 1127 inhabitants. This place was the residence of the archbishops of York, having been given by King Athelstan to Wulstan, the fifteenth archbishop; and here they had a magnificent palace, or castle, in which several of the prelates lived and died, and in which Cardinal Wolsey was arrested by the Earl of Northumberland, on a charge of treason, in the reign of Henry VIII. This castle was dismantled, and in part demolished, at the conclusion of the parliamentary war, since which time, being abandoned by the archbishops, it has remained in a state of gradual dilapidation, and has nearly fallen into ruin; the remains of the great gateway, and some few fragments, are now the only vestiges. The town is pleasantly situated near the western bank of the river Ouse, over which is a good ferry: the houses are neatly built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. There is a manufactory for hop-sacking. The market, which was on Wednesday, has been discontinued for many years: fairs for cattle are held on May 12th and December 19th. The quarter sessions for the liberty of Cawood, Wistow, and Otley, are held here; and the Archbishop of York, and the magistrates for the division, hold a court of session twice a year for the trial of felonies: a manorial court is held under the archbishop. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Wistow in the Cathedral Church of York, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean of Ripon. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A charity school for boys and girls was founded, in 1731, by the Rev. Samuel Duffield, who endowed it with land now producing a considerable annual income; and £12 per annum are paid to a schoolmaster for the instruction of five poor children of this parish, out of an estate producing £213. 9. per annum, vested in trustees for the repair of the highways, and the preservation of the embankments. Dr. Harsnett, Archbishop of York, who died in 1631, gave land for teaching five poor boys, and an additional plot for apprenticing boys. An almshouse was founded about 1723, by William James, Esq., who endowed it with land producing £76 per annum, for four aged persons, who receive each a yearly stipend of £18.

CAWSTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Reepham, containing 929 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £15. 13. 11½., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Agnes, is principally in the later style of English architecture. This manor is held in free socage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster, in token of which two maces are carried before the lord, or his steward, one bearing a brazen hand surmounted by a ploughshare; and the other a bearded arrow. Fairs are held on February 1st, and the last Wednesdays in April and August, that in August being a large sheep fair.

CAWTHORNE, a parish in the wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of York, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Barnesley, containing 1518 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. S. Stanhope, Esq., and certain other landowners. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is principally in the later style of English architecture. Two hundred and fifty sittings, two hundred and eight of which are free, have recently been added, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £250 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A free school was founded in 1639, with a small endowment, for which six boys are taught. The Barnesley canal terminates in this parish: at its head, at Barnby bridge, is a large basin, with wharfs, warehouses, and a wet dock, besides conveniences for boat-building. A rail-road extends from this basin to the extensive collieries here, and in the adjoining parish of Silkstone. A great quantity of limestone is burnt; and there are some veins of iron-stone. There is a mineral spring, the water of which is slightly impregnated with sulphuretted hydrogen.

CAWTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of BOURNE, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. by W.) from Bourne, containing 69 inhabitants.

CAWTHORPE (LITTLE), a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, locally in that of Louth-Eske, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Louth, containing 130 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £3. 4. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and endowed with £600 royal bounty; it is sequestrated. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

CAWTON, a township in that part of the parish of GILLING which is in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Helmsley, containing 105 inhabitants.

CAXTON, a small market town and parish in the hundred of LONGSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Cambridge, and 49 (N. N. W.) from London, containing 406 inhabitants. This place, one of the oldest post towns in the country, is situated on the Roman Ermin-street, which passes through the town from Holm to Papworth: the houses are in general irregularly built and of mean appearance; there are some good inns, and the trade of the place arises chiefly from its situation on the old north road to York. The market, granted to Baldwin Freville in 1247, is on Tuesday: fairs, principally for pedlary, are held on May 5th and October 18th. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £7. 12. 4., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, contains several memorials of the Barnard family, and a handsome monument to the memory of Mary, wife of John Hanson. Robert Langwith, in 1581, bequeathed £31. 10. per annum for the benefit of eight of the poorest housekeepers, and for four sermons to be preached quarterly in the church. Matthew Paris, a Benedictine monk, who flourished in the reign of Henry III., and who wrote a history of the world from the creation to the year of his death, which happened in 1259, was a native of this place. It has been erroneously stated that Caxton, who introduced the art of printing into England, was born in this parish; his own memoirs refer his birth and education to the county of Kent.

CAYTHORPE, a parish in the wapentake of LOVE-DEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 9 miles (N. by E.) from Grantham, containing, with the hamlet of Friston, 567 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £20. 11. $10\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of C. J. Packe, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Vincent, is a curious cruciform structure, principally in the decorated style of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CAYTHORPE, a township in the parish of LOWD-HAM, southern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Nottingham, containing 285 inhabitants.

CAYTON, a parish in PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Cayton-Deepdale with Killerby, and Osgodby, and containing 519 inhabitants, of which number, 447 are in the township of Cayton-Deepdale, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Scarborough. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Seamer, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. A school is endowed with £15 a year.

CERNE, or CERNE-ABBAS, a market town and parish in the hundred of CERNE, TORCOMBE, and MODBURY, Cerne subdivision of the county of DORSET, 8 miles (N. N. W.) from Dorchester, and 120 (S. W. by W.) from London, containing 1060 inhabitants. The name of this place is derived from its situation on the river Cerne, and its adjunct from its ancient abbey. Eadwald, brother of King Edward the Martyr, became a hermit at this place; and in the reign of Edgar, Ailmer, Earl of Cornwall, began to erect a noble abbey, and completed it in 987, for Benedictine monks, dedicating it to St. Mary, St. Peter, and St. Benedict; it was plundered, or, as some say, destroyed by King Canute, but was soon restored, and flourished till the dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £623. 13. 2.: the remains consist principally of the gate-house, a stately square embattled tower of three stages, having two fine oriel windows above the arch, and in front various shields of armorial bearings; also a large stone barn, and a moat, with a double intrenchment that surrounded it. In 1644, the Irish troops in the service of Charles I. burnt several houses in the town; and in the following year, Cromwell, having been joined by Col. Holborne and the inhabitants, marched to oppose the king's forces that had advanced within three miles of the town, who retired on finding that he had been further reinforced with the regiments of Colonels Norton and Coke. The town is pleasantly situated in a valley surrounded by lofty hills, and consists of four or five streets, not lighted, and only partially paved; the houses are in general ancient, and possess little architectural beauty; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from a spring, called St. Augustine's well, which, as the legend asserts, burst out to provide St. Augustine with water for baptizing his Christian converts. Considerable improvement is taking place, including the erection of some handsome modern buildings, and the formation of a new road through the town from Dorchester to Sherborne. There are manufactories for dowlas, coarse linen, gloves, and parchment; the tanning trade is carried on to a considerable extent, and many women and children are employed in winding silk. The market, granted in the 15th year of the reign of King John, is on Wednesday; the fairs are on Whit-Monday, April 28th, and October 2nd, for cattle. The petty sessions for the Cerne subdivision of the county are held here.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 16., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lord Rivers. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, and supposed to have been erected on the site of the ancient hermitage, by one of the abbots of the monastery, in the fifteenth century, is a fine spacious structure in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower ornamented with octagonal turrets at the angles: it has recently received an addition of three hundred free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £150 for that purpose. There is a place of worship for Independents. Sir Robert Miller and Dame Margaret gave a rent-charge of £10 for apprenticing poor children. On the southern declivity of a steep chalk hill, called Trendle Hill, to the north of the town, a gigantic figure has been traced, representing a man holding a knotted club in his right hand, and extending his left arm; it is one hundred and eighty feet high, and well executed; the outlines are two feet broad, and two feet deep; between the legs is an illegible inscription, and above, the date 748. It is by some antiquaries referred to the Saxon times, and supposed to represent one of their deities; by others it is thought to be a memorial of Cenric, son of Cuthred, King of the West Saxons, who was slain in battle; and according to vulgar tradition, it was cut to commemorate the destruction of a giant who ravaged that part of the country, and was killed by the peasants: the figure is occasionally repaired by the inhabitants of the town.

CERNE (NETHER), a parish in the hundred of CERNE, TOTCOMBE, and MODBURY, Cerne subdivision of the county of DORSET, 5½ miles (N.N.W.) from Dorchester, containing 60 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, endowed with £40 per annum private benefaction, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of F. J. Browne, Esq. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children.

CERNE (UP), a parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, being a detached portion of the Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, 9 miles (N.N.W.) from Dorchester, containing 84 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £5. 18. 4., and in the patronage of J. White, Esq.

CERNEY (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of RAPSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (N.) from Cirencester, containing, with the tythings of Calmsden and Woodmancote, 562 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £21. 10. 7½., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of University College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Roman Fosse-way traces the eastern boundary of this parish, in which may also be seen vestiges of a Roman fortress with circumvallations. Races are annually held here.

CERNEY (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, county of GLOUCESTER, 3½ miles (S.E. by S.) from Cirencester, containing 922 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. The church, dedicated to All Saints, consists of a nave, chancel, north aisle, and north transept, with a low central tower and spire; the south porch is of Norman architecture, with grotesque heads terminating the mouldings; between the nave and the chancel is a pointed arch rising from slender columns, the capitals of which are decorated with rich foliage; the chancel, with a fine east window of three lights, is of later date than the other parts of the edifice. The Thames and Severn canal passes through this parish.

CHACKMORE, a hamlet in the parish of RADCLIVE, hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 1½ mile (N.N.W.) from Buckingham. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel of ease, but it is now in ruins.

CHAD-KIRK, a chapelry in the parish of STOCKPORT, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 3½ miles (E. by S.) from Stockport, with which the population is returned. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Stockport. The chapel is dedicated to St. Chadd.

CHADD (ST.), a chapelry in the higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 2½ miles (E. by S.) from Malpas. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the first portion of the rectory of Malpas, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £2900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of the first portion of Malpas.

CHADDENWICKE, a joint tything with Woodlands, in the parish and hundred of MERE, county of WILTS, 1½ mile (E.) from Mere. The population is returned with Woodlands.

CHADDERTON, a chapelry in the parish of OLDHAM cum PRESTWICH, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 7 miles (N.E. by N.) from Manchester, containing 5124 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £1900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Prestwich. The chapel is dedicated to St. Margaret. This was the birthplace of Dr. Lawrence Chadderton, an eminent divine at the period of the Reformation, of which he was a zealous promoter. There are different establishments for the spinning of cotton, the weaving of silk, and the manufacture of hats: the chapelry abounds with coal, which, by means of a branch of the Ashton canal, is conveyed to Manchester, Stockport, and other manufacturing towns in the vicinity. On the lawn in front of Chadderton Hall is a tumulus, on lowering which, at different periods, several relics of antiquity have been discovered.

CHADDESSEN, a parish in the hundred of APPLE-TREE, locally in that of Morleston and Litchurch, county of DERBY, 2½ miles (E.) from Derby, containing 486 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of Sir Robert Wilmot, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary; there is a stone stall in the chancel. The Derby canal passes through the parish. In 1638, an almshouse for six poor persons was founded and endowed by Edward Wilmot, Esq.; the inmates are nominated by Sir Robert Wilmot, who repairs the almshouses, and each receives two shillings per week. There is a small donation by Robert Walker for the education of three children; and, in 1813, John Berrysford left £16. 4. per annum, to be distributed amongst the widows and orphans of the parish.

CHADDESLEY-CORBETT, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, county of WORCESTER, 5 miles (W.N.W.) from Bromsgrove, containing 1343 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £17. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Cassy, is a fine spacious edifice of red freestone, combining different styles of English architecture, with some Norman portions, of which latter, the font is a fine specimen. Here is a free school, endowed with land and tenements, out of the annual produce of which the master is entitled to a salary of £40, and an usher to one of £10, but only a master is appointed; the remainder, amounting on an average to about £170 per annum, is applied towards the support of the poor; the present school-room was built in 1809. Mrs. Margaret Delabere erected and endowed an almshouse for five aged widows, who receive £10 per annum each. At the hamlet of Harvington, in this parish, is a Roman Catholic chapel, the rebuilding of which was completed in 1825, by subscription, the late Sir Charles Throckmorton, Bart. being the chief contributor. The same benevolent individual founded a school, and endowed it with a rent-charge upon the Harvington estate; it is kept in a building adjoining the moated manor-house, which is now the residence of a farmer; about thirty boys and girls, principally the children of Roman Catholics, are instructed on the Lancasterian plan, and provided with books and stationery.

CHADDLEWORTH, a parish in the hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, 6½ miles (W.S.W.) from East Ilsley, containing, with the tything of Woolley, 448 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £9. 4. 7., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. In 1720, a school was founded and endowed in this place, by Mr. William Saunders, for the education of eight poor boys, who are also clothed and apprenticed, of which number, two belong to Chaddleworth; the income is £40 per annum. Mrs. Susannah Wynne gave also an annuity of £10 for teaching ten poor children of this parish. In 1160, a priory was founded for regular canons of the order of St. Augustine, which was dissolved by Wolsey, at which period the revenue amounted to £71. 10. 7.

CHADLINGTON (EAST), a chapelry in that part of the parish of CHARLBURY which is in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Chipping-Norton, containing 125 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHADLINGTON (WEST), a tything in that part of the parish of CHARLBURY which is in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Chipping-Norton, containing 508 inhabitants.

CHADSHUNT, a chapelry in the parish of BISHOP'S ITCHINGTON, Kingston division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 2¼ miles (N.E. by N.) from Kington, containing 37 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Bishop's Itchington, and in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Colwich and Bishop's Itchington in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints. The inhabitants of Gaydon marry and bury at Chadshunt, which obtained a separate register in 1813, having previously been included in Bishop's Itchington. In the burial-ground of the chapel was anciently an oratory, containing an image of St. Chad, to which numerous pilgrimages and offerings were made.

CHADWELL, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ROTHLEY which is in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (N.N.E.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing, with the hamlet of Wycomb, 101 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHADWELL (ST. MARY'S), a parish in the hundred of BARSTABLE, county of ESSEX, 3 miles (S.) from Orsett, containing 202 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £17. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. P. Herringham. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. This parish is bounded on the south by the Thames. In a wood near the highway leading to Stifford are several ancient excavations, termed Danes' Holes. Tilbury Fort is partly in this parish.

CHADWICK, a hamlet in the parish of BROMSGROVE, upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, county of WORCESTER, 3½ miles (N. by E.) from Bromsgrove, with which the population is returned. Here was formerly a chapel, now demolished.

CHAFFCOMBE, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, county of SOMERSET, 3¼ miles (S. by W.) from Ilminster, containing 225 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 10. 2½., and in the patronage of Earl Poulett. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

CHAGFORD, a market town and parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, 15 miles (S. W. by W.) from Exeter, and 186 (S. W.) from London, containing 1503 inhabitants. This place, originally held by Dodo, a Saxon, was given by William the Conqueror to the Bishop of Constance; and in 1328 was made one of the Stannary towns by Edward III., who invested the lords of the manor with the power of inflicting capital punishment. In 1643, an action took place between the royalists and the parliamentarians, in which Sir Sidney Godolphin was killed; and in the same century a fire occurred, in which the charter for holding the market, and other records, were destroyed. The town is pleasantly situated near the river Teign, and sheltered by hills of romantic form; the houses are irregularly built, but the environs abound with pleasing and picturesque scenery. On the banks of the Teign a large woollen-manufactory has been established. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on the last Thursday in March, the first Thursday in May, the last Thursday in September, and the last Thursday in October. The Stannary court, in which the principal business respecting the mines is transacted, is held here. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £39. 0. 10., and in the patronage of Mrs. Grace Hames. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a handsome structure, and contains a richly executed monument to the memory of Sir John Widdon, Chief Justice of the court of King's Bench in the reign of Mary. The sum of about £12 is annually paid to a schoolmaster, out of the rental of certain church lands, for teaching ten poor boys, who are appointed by the churchwardens; and a schoolmistress receives £7 per annum, arising from a benefaction of £200 by John Weekes, about 1790, for instructing six children. At the hamlets of Great Weeke and Teigncombe, in this parish, are the remains of ancient chapels: there was a chapel also at Rushford.

CHAIGLEY, a joint township with Aighton and Bailey, in that part of the parish of MITTON which is in the lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Clitheroe. The population is returned with Aighton.

CHAILEY, a parish in the hundred of STREET, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Lewes, containing 946 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £9. 4. 2., and in the patronage of T. B. Bowen, Esq., and another. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is principally in the early style of English architecture. There is a place of worship for dissenters. In 1770, Thomas Tempest bequeathed £40, producing £3. 10. per annum, for teaching four poor children. A National school for both sexes has been established.

CHALBURY, a parish in the hundred of BADBURY, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 5 miles (N. by E.) from Wimborne-Minster, containing 135 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 2½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Pembroke. The village is situated on rising ground, commanding a fine view of the Needles and the British channel. A particular sort of fine sand, used by founders, is obtained here. At Didlington, in this parish, there was anciently a chapel, now a farm-house, near which foundations of houses are often discovered in turning up the ground.

CHALCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from Banbury, containing 485 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £7. 17., endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Charles Fox, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

CHALDON, a parish in the first division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, county of SURREY, 3 miles (N.E.) from Gatton, containing 166 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 7½., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Welton. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Croydon railway passes through this parish. Here are some quarries of a soft species of stone, which is not much used; and in the chalk-pits are frequently found incrustations of marine shells.

CHALDON-HERRING, a parish in the liberty of BINNDON, locally in the hundred of Winfrith, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Wareham, containing 240 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 0. 10., endowed with £1400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Thomas Lyte, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. This parish is bounded by the English channel on the south, where there is a signal station. Chaldon-Boys, or West Chaldon, now comprising only one farm, was formerly a manor and a distinct parish; the church having become desecrated, the living, a rectory, was consolidated with the vicarage of Chaldon-Herring, in 1446.

CHALE, a parish in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Newport, containing 473 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £14. 3. 11½., and in the patronage of the Rev. C. Richards. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, stands at the foot of St. Catherine's hill, the loftiest in the island, being seven hundred and fifty feet above the level of the sea; a chapel, dedicated to St. Catherine, was erected on its summit in 1323, the tower of which still serves as a land-mark. The land and sea views are remarkably fine from this hill; and on the south-western declivity is a rude chasm, called Black-Gang Chine, which, as seen from the shore, has a striking effect. The navigation of Chale bay is exceedingly dangerous, owing to the rocks, upon which vessels are frequently driven by the violence of the surf. A school here is endowed with £16. 14. 6., being a rent-charge purchased with the sum of £150 given by Robert Weekes, in 1784, and other benefactions.

CHALFIELD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of BRADFORD, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Melksham, containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Little Chalfield and Cottles, 100 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir H. B. Neale, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Catherine.

CHALFIELD (LITTLE), an extra-parochial liberty, locally in the parish of Great Chalfield, hundred of BRADFORD, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Melksham. The population is returned with the parish.

CHALFONT (ST. GILES), a parish in the hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E.) from Amersham, containing 1104 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £19. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is of very great antiquity. Here are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Independents: in the cemetery attached to the former lie the remains of William Penn, founder of the colony of Pennsylvania. A charity school, now conducted on the National system, has been endowed by Sir Hugh Palliser with £30 per annum, and by Mrs. Molloy with an additional sum of £20 per annum, for twenty children of each sex: there are eight almshouses for poor men and women. During the plague that raged in London in 1665, Milton resided at this place, where he completed his celebrated poem of "Paradise Lost;" the house in which he lived is now occupied by a poor family. Here are the remains of an ancient monastery, the chapel of which is attached to the mansion of Vach, and in the park is a monument erected by the late Sir Hugh Palliser to the memory of Capt. Cook, the celebrated circumnavigator.

CHALFONT (ST. PETER'S), a parish in the hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Beaconsfield, containing 1351 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church, rebuilt in 1726, is a plain brick edifice, with quoins and window and door-cases of stone brought from the ruins of the Roman station of Verulam, now St. Albans; it contains some ancient gravestones with brasses. This parish is intersected by a tributary stream of the Colne, called Missbourne, upon which there is a silk-mill, affording employment to about fifty women. The petty sessions for the division are holden here; and a court baron is held by the lord of the manor. At Gerrard's Cross the Earl of Portland built a school, which is supported by his descendant, who appoints the master, paying him a salary for teaching poor boys of this and the adjoining parishes; and a fund is now accumulating for the purpose of endowing another school.

CHALFORD, a chapelry in the parish of LITTLE BARRINGTON, lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, 1½ mile (N. E.) from Minchin-Hampton. The population is returned with the parish. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The village is scattered along the banks of the river Frome, in a romantic valley, through which passes the Stroudwater canal. Broad cloth is manufactured to a great extent, and among the numerous clothing-mills on the river is one said to have been erected about 1560, when the introduction of the trade into Gloucestershire took place. A petrifying spring flows from the side of the hill to the south of the river.

CHALFORD, a liberty in the parish of ASTON-ROWANT, hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Tetsworth. The population is returned with the parish.

CHALGRAVE, a parish in the hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, 3½ miles (N. by W.) from Dunstable, containing 710 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united in 1772 to the rectory of Hockcliffe, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a venerable edifice in the ancient style of English architecture, and contains two antique tombs with statues of knights in armour. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists at Tebworth, where was formerly a chapel endowed with thirty-six acres of land. Here is a charity school for forty boys; besides which, four boys from this parish are admitted into Hockcliffe school. There are endowed almshouses for six elderly maidens, and two for six widows. At Chalgrave Field, in this parish, in June 1643, a battle took place between the royalists under Prince Rupert and a detachment of troops from the army of the Earl of Essex, in which the latter were defeated; several officers in the service of the parliament were killed, and the celebrated patriot Hampden was mortally wounded.

CHALGROVE, a parish in the hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 5¼ miles (S. W.) from Tetsworth, containing, with the liberty of Rafford, 569 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £10. 5. 5., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

CHALK, a parish in the hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 1½ mile (E. S. E.) from Gravesend, containing, with the parish of Denton, 424 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £6. 3. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is very ancient, and has various figures carved over the entrance, the origin and meaning of which have caused much controversy among antiquaries. This parish is bounded on the north by the Thames, and is intersected by the Thames and Medway canal; it contains the villages of East and West Chalk, the former lying on the margin of an extensive marsh. There is a considerable manufactory for gun-flints, which are esteemed the best in Europe: a fair is held on Whit-Monday. In 1598, William, Lord Cobham, by will, vested £4. 6. 8. in the Warden and Commonalty of Rochester bridge, for one poor family of this parish, to inhabit Cobham College; and in 1710 a bequest, consisting of a rent-charge of £2. 18., was made by James Fry, and vested in the mayor and corporation of Gravesend, for teaching ten boys of Milton and Chalk.

CHALLACOMBE, a parish in the hundred of SHERWILL, county of DEVON, 10 miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnstaple, containing 240 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 9. 2., and in the patronage of Earl Fortescue. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

CHALLOCK, a parish in the hundred of FELBOROUGH, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 4¼ miles (E.) from Charing, containing 381 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Godmersham, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Cosmus and St. Damien, is a spacious edifice in the ancient style of English architecture, with an embattled tower, steeple, and beacon turret. A fair is held on the 8th of October, for horses, cattle, and pedlary; a grant for which, and for a market now disused, was obtained in the 38th of Henry III., by Henry de Apulderfield, then lord of the manor, whose mansion is said to have stood upon a spot called Apulderfield's Garden, in the Earl of Winchelsea's park.

CHALLOW (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of LETCEMB-REGIS, hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, 1½ mile (W.) from Wantage, containing 256 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The Wilts and Berks canal passes through this chapelry.

CHALLOW (WEST), a chapelry in the parish of LETCEMB-REGIS, hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Wantage, containing 156 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The Wilts and Berks canal crosses the chapelry.

CHALTON, or CHALKTON, a parish in the hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Alton (South) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5½ miles (S. S. W.) from Petersfield, containing, with the chapelry of Idsworth, 559 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Clanfield united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £20. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

CHALVEY, a hamlet in the parish of URTON, hundred of STOKE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1½ mile (N.) from Eton. The population is returned with the parish. Here is a place of worship for Independents.

CHALVINGTON, a parish in the hundred of SHIPLEAKE, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, 5 miles (W.) from Hailsham, containing 181 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Augustus Elliott Fuller, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is principally in the decorated style of English architecture.

CHAMBOIS, a township in the parish of BEDLINGTON, eastern division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, but situated on the eastern side of the county of Northumberland, 7¼ miles (E. by S.) from Morpeth. The population is returned with the parish. The village is situated on the coast, at the mouth of the river Wansbeck; there is a small harbour, where corn, timber, and grindstones are shipped; some spacious granaries were built during the late war with France, at which period a great quantity of grain was sent from this place.

CHAPEL, or PONTISBRIGHT, county of Essex.—See PONTISBRIGHT.

CHAPEL en le FRITH, a market town and parish in the hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 41 miles (N. W. by N.) from Derby, and 167 (N. W. by N.) from London, on the road from Sheffield to Manchester, comprising the townships of Bowden's Edge, Bradshaw-Edge, and Coomb's Edge, and containing 3234 inhabitants. This town is pleasantly situated on the declivity of a hill rising from a vale embosomed in the mountains that bound this extremity of the county: it is partially paved, but not lighted, and is amply supplied with water. A small subscription library has been recently established. The principal branch of manufacture is that of cotton, in which more than three hundred persons are employed: about one hundred persons are engaged in the manufacture of paper, chiefly for the London newspapers; and there are a rope-walk and a forge for iron near the town: coal is found in the parish. There is also a large establishment for warehousing goods, this place being a medium of communication between Manchester and Sheffield. The Peak Forest canal passes within three miles to the north-west, and by means of a railway communicates with the Peak Forest lineworks, about three miles to the east of the town: there is a reservoir in this parish that occasionally supplies the canal with water. The market, which is on Thursday, has greatly declined: the fairs, most of which are very insignificant, are on the Thursday before February 13th, March 24th and 29th, the Thursday before Easter, April 30th, Holy Thursday, and the third Thursday after, for cattle; July 7th, for wool; the Thursday preceding August 24th, for sheep and cheese; the Thursday after September 29th, and the Thursday before November 11th, for cattle. The High Peak court, for the recovery of debts under £5, at which the steward of the Duke of Devonshire presides, is held every third week. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the resident freeholders, of whom a committee of twenty-seven, chosen in equal numbers from the three "Edges" into which the parish is divided, elect the minister, by a majority. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a neat edifice in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower, which, with the south front, was rebuilt in the beginning of the last century, at the expense of the parishioners. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school was founded in 1696, by Mrs. Mary Dixon, who endowed it with a house and land producing £18 per annum; this endowment was augmented by Robert Kirke, Esq., with a piece of land now let for £2. 10. per annum: nineteen scholars are taught reading and writing in this establishment. There is also a school at Bowden's Edge, founded by Mrs. Mary Bagshaw, who endowed it with £5 per annum, for the instruction of eight girls. A fund amounting to £13. 7. 6. per annum, arising from various benefactions, is applied to the apprenticing of poor children; and there are various bequests for distribution in bread and clothing to the poor. At Barmoor-Clough, about two miles to the east of the town, is an ebbing and flowing well; and on a hill two miles to the south are the vestiges of a Roman encampment, from which a Roman road leads to Brough, about eight miles distant.

CHAPEL-HILL, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of RAGLAND, county of MONMOUTH, 4¼ miles (N.) from Chepstow, containing 464 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Beaufort. Within this parish stood the stately abbey of Tintern, founded by Walter de Clare, in 1141, for Cistercian monks, and dedicated to St. Mary: its revenue, at the time of the dissolution, was estimated at £256. 11. 6. The ruins present a picturesque object on the margin of the river Wye, in a district abounding with fine scenery; they consist of nearly the entire walls of the splendid church, in a style forming a transition from the early English to the decorated, and are remarkable for harmony of design and delicacy of execution.

CHAPEL-POINT, or PORT-EAST, a sea-port and chapelry in the parish of GORRAN, eastern division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, 7½ miles (E. by S.) from Tregony. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is in ruins. A great quantity of pilchards is taken and cured; some coal is also imported.

CHAPEL-SUCKEN, a township in the parish of MILLOM, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 12 miles (S. E. by S.) from Ravenglass, containing 251 inhabitants.

CHAPEL-THORPE, a chapelry in the parish of GREAT SANDALL, lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Wakefield. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Great Sandall, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. James.

CHAPELWICK, a chapelry in the parish of ASH-BURY, hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS. The population is returned with the parish.

CHARBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of LOOSEBARROW, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Blandford-Forum. The population is returned with the parish of Morden. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to the vicarage of Morden, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 3. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Richard Erle Drax, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is now used only as the burial-place of the Drax family. Over the door of a small arched building in the grounds of Charborough House is an inscription, dated 1686, commemorating the meeting of some patriotic individuals, who here concerted the plan of the Revolution, in 1688.

CHARCOMBE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of KILMERSDON, county of SOMERSET.

CHARD, a parish, and one of the four unconnected portions forming the eastern division of the hundred of KINGSBURY, county of SOMERSET, comprising the market-town of Chard, the tythings of Crim-Chard, Old Chard, South Chard, and Tatworth with Forton, and containing 3106 inhabitants, of which number, 1330 are in the town of Chard, 13 miles (S. E. by S.) from Taunton, and 139 (W. S. W.) from London. This place was of considerable importance during the Octarchy, and was by the Saxons called Cerdre, a name supposed to be derived from Cerdic, the founder of the kingdom of Wessex. In the 28th of Edward I. it was constituted a borough, and continued to send members to parliament until the 2nd of Edward III., since which time its privileges have been discontinued. In the parliamentary war a battle took place here, in which a party of royalists, under the command of Col. Penruddock, was defeated. The town is situated at the southern extremity of the county, and upon the highest ground between the North and the South seas, so that the course of a stream, issuing from a spring in one of the streets, may easily be diverted either into the English or the Bristol channel: it consists principally of two streets, intersecting each other; the houses are in general well built, and the inhabitants are supplied with water conveyed by leaden pipes into four conduits, from a spring at the western extremity of the town. The market is on Monday, and is noted for the sale of potatoes: the fairs are on the first Wednesdays in May, August, and November. The ancient assize-hall is now used as the market-house, to which is attached an extensive range of shambles, covered with a tiled roof, and supported on brick pillars. The town is governed by a portreeve and two bailiffs, chosen annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The town-hall is a very ancient edifice, and was formerly used as a chapel.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £36. 18. 9., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome cruciform structure, with a low tower at the west end: in the north-east corner of the south transept is a splendid monument, having the effigies of William Brewer and his wife, kneeling before an altar, with their family behind them; in the south corner of the same transept, and in various parts of the church, are other handsome and interesting monuments. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. An unendowed school was established by the portreeve and burgesses, to whom a house, a garden, and a field containing about one acre, were devised on certain conditions, by William Symes, in 1671: the master, who resides on the premises rent-free, receives from two to three guineas per annum from each pupil, and has the privilege of taking boarders. An hospital, or almshouse, for poor people of the parish was founded, in 1668, by Richard Harvey, Esq., of Exeter, who endowed it with two estates in the counties of Cambridge and Norfolk, formerly producing £844. 4. per annum, but, within the last few years, the income has been somewhat diminished by the reduction of the rents. In May 1831, the gardener of Henry Host Henley, Esq., of Leigh House, near this town, dug up in the garden a Roman urn, containing a great number of gold coins of the Emperor Claudius, very fresh and bright.

CHARDSTOCK, a parish in the hundred of BEAMINSTER-FORUM and REDHONE, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Chard, containing 1256 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Chardstock in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £14. 2. 6. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. A great quantity of cider is made in this parish: the river Ax runs through it.

CHARFIELD, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Wickwar, containing 344 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £10. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. P. Jones. The church, dedicated to St. James, is principally in the later style of English architecture, with a low tower.

CHARFORD (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of FORDINGBRIDGE, New Forest (West) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Fordingbridge, containing, with the tything of South Charford, 132 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 4. The church, which was dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is in ruins. In the Saxon annals this place is called "Cerdickford," from Cerdic, who defeated the Britons near a ford on the Avon, and subsequently became the founder of the West Saxon kingdom.

CHARFORD (SOUTH), a tything in the parish of NORTH CHARFORD, hundred of FORDINGBRIDGE, New Forest (West) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, containing 75 inhabitants.

CHARING, a parish in the hundred of CALEHILL, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, $13\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Maidstone, containing 1103 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the diocese of Canterbury, exempt from archidiaconal jurisdiction, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, consists of an aisle, a transept, a lofty chancel, with a chapel on the south side of it, and a square tower, with a small turret at one of the angles: it is chiefly in the later style of English architecture, and contains several ancient monuments; it sustained considerable injury from a fire in 1590. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Fairs are held on April 29th and October 29th, for horses, cattle, and pedlary. A free school, endowed with £30 per annum, was founded in 1761, by Elizabeth Ludwell, who also established two exhibitions, of the yearly value of about £35 each, at Oriel College, Oxford, with preference to natives of this parish. The archbishops formerly had a palace here, erected before the Conquest, the remains of which have been converted into a farm-house and out-offices. Various Roman antiquities and a Roman way have been discovered in the neighbourhood.

CHARLBURY, a parish comprising the chapelries of East Chadlington and Chilson, and the tything of West Chadlington, in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, and the hamlets of Fawler, Finstock, and Wallcott, in the hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Woodstock, and containing 2877 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Shorthampton annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £25. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This was formerly a market town: four fairs are still held annually, on the 1st of January, the second Friday in Lent, and the second Friday after May 12th, for live stock; and on October 10th, for cheese and cattle. A free grammar school was founded by Mrs. Ann Walker, who endowed it with land, and placed it under the special visitation of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford.

CHARLCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of HAMP-TON and CLAVERTON, locally in that of Bath-Forum, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Bath, containing 124 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £5. 15. 10., and annexed to the mastership of the free grammar school at Bath, in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Bath, as trustees. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small ancient edifice, which tradition relates was formerly the mother church to Bath, and received an annual acknowledgment of a pound of pepper from the abbey there. At Thelesford, in this parish, a small priory of the order of the Holy Trinity, for the redemption of captives, was founded, in the reign of John, by Sir William Lucy, Knt.

CHARLCOTE, a parish in the Warwick division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Kington, containing 331 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of George Lucy, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. This parish is bounded on the west by the river Avon, which, on the south, receives the tributary stream Heile. The mansion-house, of brick faced with stone, is a fine specimen of the style of domestic architecture that prevailed in the time of Elizabeth.

CHARLCOTT, a tything in the parish of WHIT-CHURCH, hundred of EVINGAR, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S. by E.) from Whitchurch, with which the population is returned. It is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

CHARLES, a parish in the hundred of SHERWILL, county of DEVON, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from South Molton, containing 322 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £9. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Blackmore. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

CHARLESTOWN, a sea-port in the parish of ST. AUSTELL, eastern division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, 1 mile (E. S. E.) from St. Austell, with which the population is returned. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This place is situated on the western side of St. Austell bay, and in 1790, when known by the name of Porthmear, contained only nine inhabitants; but since that period, owing to the spirited exertions of Charles Rashleigh, Esq., to whom it owes its modern name, it has become a thriving port, and is still increasing in extent and importance. The harbour is secured by a commodious pier, and defended by a battery of heavy ordnance on Crinnis Cliff; it contains an outer and an inner basin, the latter being capacious enough to admit vessels of five hundred tons' burden. Here are yards and dry docks for building and repairing large ships, and a rope and twine manufactory: a great quantity of lime is burnt; but the chief trade of the place consists in its extensive pilchard fishery, for which several seans have been put on, and receiving-houses erected. Most of the china clay brought from St. Stephen's is shipped at this port.

CHARLESWORTH, a chapelry in the parish of GLOSSOP, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Chapel en le Frith, containing 1005 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

CHARLETON, a parish in the hundred of COLL-ridge, county of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Kingsbridge, containing 618 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £31. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Morley. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHARLETON, a hamlet partly in the parish of NEWBOTTLE, and partly in that of KING'S SUTTON, hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Brackley. The population is returned with Newbottle. On a neighbouring hill, called Rainsborough, is a double-trenched oval camp, about half a mile in circumference, with the inner rampart more elevated than the outer, having two entrances on the north and two on the south; urns, glass vessels, and other relics have been discovered here; and a little to the eastward, near a smaller intrenchment, a gold coin of Vespasian has been found.

CHARLETON (QUEEN), a parish in the hundred of KEYNSHAM, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.E.) from Pensford, containing 147 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Miss Dickenson. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. This place obtained its distinguishing appellation from having been settled on Catherine Parr, queen of Henry VIII. The salubrity of the air made it anciently a place of considerable resort, particularly in 1574, when the plague swept away two thousand persons at Bristol. The road to Bath formerly passed through the village. A fair, granted by Elizabeth, on her progress through this place in 1573, is held annually on the 20th of July. In 1760, Mary Freeman left £500, producing £25 per annum, for clothing and teaching twenty boys, and for supplying them with books.

CHARLEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Loughborough, containing 42 inhabitants. The ancient forest of Charley, or Charnwood, twenty miles in circuit, was disforested soon after the Conquest; its privileges were restored by Henry II., but finally abolished by Henry III. A society of eremites, of the order of St. Augustine, settled here in the reign of Henry II., by the favour of Robert Blanchmains, Earl of Leicester; but in the time of Edward II. it was united to one at Ulvescroft, where a priory of regular canons, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, continued until the dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £101. 3. 10.

CHARLEY, a township in the parish of FAREWELL, southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Lichfield. The population is returned with the parish.

CHARLINCH, a parish in the hundred of CANNINGTON, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Bridg-water, containing 251 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 15. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. Dr. Starky. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Gothelney House, an old building of the fifteenth or sixteenth century, is now occupied as a farm-house.

CHARLTON, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of WANTAGE, county of BERKS, $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile (N. E.) from Wantage, containing 215 inhabitants.

CHARLTON, a tything in that part of the parish of HENBURY which is in the upper division of the hundred of HENBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Bristol, containing 296 inhabitants.

CHARLTON, a parish partly in the hundred of BEWSBOROUGH, but chiefly within the liberty of the cinque-port of DOVOR (of which it is a member), lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, 1 mile (N. N. E.) from Dovor, containing 790 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £32, and in the patronage of the Rev. John Monins. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, has lately received an addition of two hundred and fifty-eight free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £200 towards defraying the expense. Charlton, it is conjectured, was the Portus Dubris of the Romans, several anchors and fragments of wreck having been discovered at various times.

CHARLTON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of BLACKHEATH, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from London, containing 1626 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £10. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir T. M. Wilson, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Luke, was rebuilt of brick about 1640; it has a square embattled tower at the west end, and in the windows are various armorial bearings in stained glass; it contains some pieces of ancient armour, banners, and several handsome monuments, among which last is one to the memory of the Right Hon. Spencer Perceval, who was interred here. A charity school was built by Sir William Langhorn, who endowed it, in 1714, with a bequest of £300; it is conducted on the National system, and affords instruction to sixty boys and forty girls. Sir William also left £1000 to increase the rector's income. An infant school is supported by subscription, and there are four ancient almshouses. Charlton, in old records called Cerletone and Ceorletone, from Ceorle, the Saxon term for husbandman, is a neat village, situated on rising ground, commanding a fine prospect of the Thames. A weekly market on Monday, and a fair on Trinity eve, were formerly held here, under a grant from Henry III. to the monks of Bermondsey, who possessed the manor from the close of the eleventh century until the period of the dissolution of religious houses: the market has been long discontinued; the fair, now held on St. Luke's day, is termed Horn fair, from the numerous articles made of horn brought for sale from London. The jurisdiction of the court of requests for the recovery of debts under 40s., which is held alternately at Bromley, Greenwich, and Woolwich, extends over this parish, the inhabitants having the right to nominate six commissioners. Sir Thomas Wilson, as lord of the manor, holds a court leet occasionally. In the vicinity are many neat villas; and nearly opposite the church stands the manor-house, a spacious building crowned with turrets, erected in 1612, in front of which there is a row of cypresses said to be the first planted in England. In 1665, the neighbourhood suffered severely from the plague, and from a violent tempest.

CHARLTON, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of KILMERSDON, county of SOMERSET, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from Frome. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel.

CHARLTON, a tything in the parish of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of WHITESTONE, county of SOMERSET, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (E. S. E.) from Shepton-Mallet, with which the population is returned.

CHARLTON, a tything in the parish of SINGLETON, hundred of WESTBURN and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, containing 199 inhabitants.

CHARLTON, a tything in the parish of DONHEAD ST. MARY, hundred of DUNWORTH, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Shaftesbury. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel.

CHARLTON, a parish in the hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Malmesbury, containing 563 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Westport St. Mary, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

CHARLTON, a parish in the hundred of SWANBOROUGH, county of WILTS, 4 miles (S. W.) from Pewsey, containing 193 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 15. 6., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Here was an Alien priory, founded in 1187, as a cell to the abbey of L'isle Dieu, and granted at the suppression of Alien houses to St. Katherine's Hospital, London. About a mile to the westward are the remains of an intrenched camp, with a spacious prætorium, called Casterley, the area of which, comprising sixty acres, is intersected from north to south by a broad fosse.

CHARLTON, a hamlet in the parish of CROPTHORN, middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Pershore, containing 277 inhabitants.

CHARLTON (ABBOT'S), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Winchcombe, containing 87 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Francis Pyson, Esq.

CHARLTON (CROSS), an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of KILMERSDON, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N.) from Frome.

CHARLTON (EAST), a township in the parish of BELLINGHAM, north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Bellingham, containing 143 inhabitants.

CHARLTON (KING'S), a parish in the hundred of CHELTENHAM, county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Cheltenham, containing 1607 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Jesus' College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has lately received an addition of two hundred and twenty sittings, of which one hundred and sixty are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £200 toward defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A manorial court is annually held. The sum of £6 a year is paid to a schoolmaster for the instruction of six poor children, out of the rental of land producing £30 per annum, given by Samuel Cooper, about the year 1743; the remainder is applied to the relief of the poor. A day and Sunday school, in which upwards of one hundred children are taught, is supported by subscription. The amount of divers benefactions has also been laid out in the purchase of land, now producing £39 a year, which is distributed among the deserving poor. The new road to Cirencester passes through the parish. There is a hill called Battledowns, the scene of a battle during the parliamentary war, in which many of the inhabitants who adhered to the royal cause were slain. A mineral spring, similar in its properties to the Cheltenham water, has been lately discovered in this parish.

CHARLTON (NORTH), a township in the parish of ELLINGHAM, southern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Alnwick, containing 230 inhabitants. A school erected by John Cay, Esq. has been endowed with £5 per annum by Lord Crewe's trustees, and yearly benefactions amounting to about £4 in addition.

CHARLTON upon OTMORE, a parish in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Bicester, containing, with the hamlet of Fencot with Murcot, 581 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £21. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHARLTON (SOUTH), a township in the parish of ELLINGHAM, southern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Alnwick, containing 170 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, but at present there are no remains.

CHARLTON (WEST), a township in the parish of BELLINGHAM, north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, containing 187 inhabitants.

CHARLTON-ADAM, a parish in the hundred of SOMERTON, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (E.) from Somerton, containing 377 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 14. 7., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of H. P. Collins, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. A chantry, or free chapel, dedicated to St. Stephen, was anciently founded here by Lord Henry Fitz-Richard, by permission of the prior of Brewton, under whom he held the manor. The old Roman Fosse-way from Bath to Ilchester proceeds through this parish.

CHARLTON-HORETHORNE, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of HORETHORNE, county of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Wincanton, containing 489 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 5., and in the patronage of Charles Gilbert, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. In the 22nd of Edward I., a charter was obtained by Henry de Lacy, for a weekly market, and an annual fair on the eve and day of St. Thomas the Martyr; the market has been disused. There was anciently a chantry chapel within the manor, dependent on the priory of Kenilworth.

CHARLTON-MACKREL, a parish in the hundred of SOMERTON, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (E.) from Somerton, containing 309 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £16. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. P. Brymer. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a handsome edifice in the ancient style of English architecture, repaired and embellished at the expense of the present incumbent. This parish is bounded on the south by the river Cary, across which there is a bridge of two arches, on the line of a modern road that passes along the course of the old Roman Fosse-way.

CHARLTON-MARSHALL, a parish in the hundred of COGDEAN, locally in that of Pimperne, Shaston (East) division of the county of Dorset, 1½ mile (S. S. E.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 304 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Spetisbury, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol. The village is situated upon the navigable river Stour: poor children are entitled to participate in the benefit of education at Spetisbury free school.

CHARLTON-MUSGRAVE, a parish in the hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, county of SOMERSET, 1 mile (N. N. E.) from Wincanton, containing 366 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £13. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. Paul Leir. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen. Dr. William Musgrave, physician and antiquary, was born here, in 1657; he died in 1721.

CHARLWOOD, a parish in the first division of the hundred of REIGATE, county of SURREY, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Reigate, containing 1134 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £19. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. H. Wise. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, contains several ancient monuments of the family of Sanders and others. A charity school was founded, in 1637, by the Rev. John Bristow, and endowed with a house let for £8 per annum, for teaching four children. Within this parish is Kilman bridge, so termed from a sanguinary battle fought near it, between the Danes and the inhabitants of Surrey and Sussex, in which the former were totally defeated.

CHARMINSTER, a parish in the hundred of GEORGE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 2 miles (N. W. by N.) from Dorchester, containing 556 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Stratton annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. Trenchard, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHARMOUTH, a parish in the hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of the county of Dorset, 2 miles (N. E. by E.) from Lime-Regis, containing 607 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 16. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of F. P. Henville, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Matthew. The ancient village of Charmouth derives its name from being situated at the mouth of the river Char, over which there is a bridge; it lies on the coast of the Bristol channel, at the foot of a steep hill, round the north-western side of which the road was directed in 1758, and is considerably resorted to as a watering-place. The neighbouring cliffs abound with martial pyrites, bitumen, and other inflammable matter, which, after heavy rains, have been seen to burn with a vivid flame, particularly in the year 1751. Two sanguinary battles were fought here between the Danes and the Saxons; the first, in 833, ended in the retreat of the latter, under King Egbert, and the return of the former to their ships; the second, in 840, terminated also in the defeat of the Saxons, under King Ethelwolf, who commanded in person; but the Danes so little improved their victory, as to embark precipitately without booty. After the battle of Worcester, Charles II. and his suite fled hither, with an intention to escape into France; but having been disappointed, the monarch quitted the place; soon after which, a blacksmith having discovered, from the manner of shoeing the horse of Lord Wilmot, who had tarried behind, that the party came from the north, a pursuit was immediately commenced, but without success. In the 7th of Edward I. license was granted to the abbot of Ford for a weekly market on Monday, and a fair annually on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Matthew, to be held at this place.

CHARNDON, a hamlet in the parish of TWYFORD, hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 7½ miles (W. S. W.) from Winslow, containing 165 inhabitants.

CHARNES, a township (formerly a chapelry) in the parish of ECCLESHALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Eccleshall, containing 91 inhabitants. The chapel has been destroyed.

CHARNEY, a chapelry in that part of the parish of LONGWORTH which is in the hundred of GANFIELD, county of BERKS, 4½ miles (N. by W.) from Wantage, containing 243 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Peter. In the vicinity is a circular fortification, called Cherbury Castle, surrounded by a double trench, resembling that of Badbury in Dorsetshire, and traditionally said to have been a castle belonging to Canute the Great.

CHARNHAM-STREET, a tything in that part of the parish of HUNGERFORD which is in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, containing 348 inhabitants.

CHARNOCK-HEATH, a township in the parish of STANDISH, hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (S. E.) from Chorley, containing 823 inhabitants.

CHARNOCK-RICHARD, a township in the parish of STANDISH, hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Chorley, containing 794 inhabitants.

CHARSFIELD, a parish in the hundred of LOES, county of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (W. by N.) from Wickham-Market, containing 549 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of W. Jennens, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

CHART, a joint tything with Pitfold, in that part of the parish of FRENHAM which is in the hundred of FARNHAM, county of SURREY, 5½ miles (N. W.) from Haslemere, containing, with Pitfold, 710 inhabitants.

CHART (GREAT), a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of CHART and LONGBRIDGE, lathe of SORAY, county of KENT, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Ashford, containing 659 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £25. 6. 0½, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This parish, called by the Saxons Sybertes Chert, and in Domesday-book termed Certh, lies chiefly on the Quarry hills, the southern part being within the Weald, the boundary of which runs east and west, to the north of the church. Chart, now a small village, was anciently of some importance, having had a weekly market, and a great fair on the 5th of April, for sheep and oxen; the market is disused, but the remains of the market-house were formerly visible in the field where the fair is still held: the town was burnt by the Danes. From its elevated position, the village commands an extensive and picturesque view of the surrounding country. On the 1st of May, 1580, a violent earthquake was felt here.

CHART (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of CALEHILL, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 9 miles (S.W. by W.) from Charing, containing 303 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £13. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHART (SUTTON), a parish in the hundred of EYTHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 5 miles (S.E. by S.) from Maidstone, containing 500 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 12. 8½, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was, with its beautiful spire, destroyed by lightning in 1779, but has since been rebuilt; it stands near Sutton-Valence, on the summit of an eminence, the slope being occupied by the village. This parish, in Domesday-book called Certh, is intersected from east to west by the Quarry, or northern range of hills, here forming the boundary of the Weald: the southern declivity, both from its genial aspect and the richness of the soil, is well adapted to the culture of vines.

CHARTER-HOUSE on MENDIP, a district within the liberty of WITHAM FRIARY, though locally in the hundred of Winterstoke, county of SOMERSET, 5½ miles (E.N.E.) from Axbridge, containing 115 inhabitants. Here was a cell to the priory of Witham, which, as part of the possessions of that establishment, was granted away in the 36th of Henry VIII.

CHARTHAM, a parish in the hundred of FELBOROUGH, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 3½ miles (S.W. by W.) from Canterbury, containing, with the chapelry of Horton, which is situated in the hundred of Bridge and Petham, 855 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £41. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is of early decorated architecture, with very fine windows and some remains of richly stained glass: the roof is of wood and the tower of flint, both being of later date than the stone work: it contains a monumental arch and some old brasses, and in the chancel lie the remains of Dr. John Reading, chaplain to Charles I., and author of some religious tracts. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Stour, which is crossed near the village by an ancient bridge of five arches, called Shalmsford bridge, passes through the parish, in which there are paper and seed mills. Numerous tumuli, raised over the slain in the decisive conflict between Cæsar and Cassivelaunus, lie thickly scattered at the distance of about three quarters of a mile from the church, on the road to Canterbury, on opening which, urns, fibulae, &c. have been discovered.

CHARTINGTON, a township in the parish of ROTHBURY, western division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3¼ miles (N.W. by N.) from Rothbury, containing, with Bankland, 79 inhabitants. Here are the ruins of an ancient massive castle, that originally belonged to a family of the name of Cartington, long since extinct. An almshouse for Roman Catholic widows was founded by Lady Mary Charlton, who endowed it with a rent-charge of about £6.

CHARTLEY-LODGE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 7½ miles (N.E. by E.) from Stafford, containing 11 inhabitants.

CHARWELTON, a parish in the hundred of FAWSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 6 miles (S.W. by S.) from Daventry, containing 232 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £20. 2. 11., and in the patronage of Sir Charles Knightley, Bart. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has a curious octagonal font supported on a square pedestal, and richly ornamented in a peculiar style.

CHASELEY, a parish forming, with the parishes of Eldersfield and Staunton, a separate portion of the lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, 3 miles (S.W. by W.) from Tewkesbury, containing 337 inhabitants. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £5. 14. 7., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Longdon. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is an ancient edifice, with a tower and spire. Thomas Turberville, in 1728, left a house and land, the rent-charge upon which, with other charitable gifts, produces £17 per annum, which is applied to the education of girls.

CHASEWATER, a hamlet partly in the parish of St. KEA, and partly in the parish of KENWYRN, western division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Truro. A chapel is now being erected under the late act of parliament for building additional churches, towards defraying the expense of which the commissioners granted £3000; it will contain one thousand five hundred and four sittings, of which one thousand two hundred and two will be free. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. In the neighbourhood are several rich copper mines: the Chasewater mine has a steam-engine, which, at the time of its erection in 1813, was the most powerful then constructed: the adit of this mine, in its course of twenty-five miles, receives the waters of many others, and discharges itself into a creek in Falmouth harbour.

CHASTLETON, a parish in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Chipping-Norton, containing 250 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £9. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of P. T. Adams, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A battle was fought here in 1016, between Edmund Ironside and Canute, when the latter was defeated with great slaughter. In the vicinity are vestiges of a Danish fortification.

CHATBURN, a township in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Clitheroe, containing 552 inhabitants.

CHATCULL, a township in the parish of ECCLES-HALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 71 inhabitants.

CHATHAM, a market town and parish, partly within the jurisdiction, and adjoining the city, of ROCHESTER, but chiefly in the hundred of CHATHAM and GILLINGHAM, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 8 miles (N. by E.) from Maidstone, and 30 (E. by S.) from London, containing 15,268 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Ceteham and Cettham, derives its name from the Saxon Cyte, a cottage, and Ham, a village, and, till it rose into importance as the seat of one of the principal naval arsenals in the kingdom, was, as its name implies, only an inconsiderable village of cottages. Previously to the Conquest, the lord of the manor espoused the cause of Harold, and for his loyalty to that prince was, after the accession of William, deprived of his possessions, which were conferred upon Crevecoeur, one of the Normans who accompanied the Conqueror to England. The town is situated on the south-east bank of the river Medway, and on the north side of Chatham hill, and, though extensive, is irregularly built, partly from the nature of the ground, and partly from the large space occupied by its vast naval establishments. The dock-yard for the royal navy was commenced in the reign of Elizabeth; it then occupied the site of the present ordnance wharf, and was protected by Upnor castle, which that queen caused to be erected for its defence. In 1622, it was removed to its present situation, and greatly enlarged by Charles I., who erected capacious storehouses, and constructed new docks, to enable ships to float in with the tide: it was still further improved by Charles II., in whose reign the Dutch Admiral de Ruyter, having cast anchor at the Nore with fifty sail of the line, sent his vice-admiral, Van Ghent, with seventeen of his lightest vessels and eight fire-ships, to destroy the shipping in the river Medway. The vice-admiral attacked and took Sheerness, though gallantly defended by Sir Edward Spragge, blew up the fortifications, burnt the storehouses, and, sailing up the Medway with six of his men of war and five fire-ships, destroyed three vessels in the river, and came in front of Upnor castle, at that time defended by Major Scot, whose warm reception of the assailant frustrated his attempt on Chatham.

The dock-yard occupies an extensive area, nearly a mile in length, enclosed on the land side by a high wall, and defended by strong fortifications, principally of modern erection; the entrance is through a spacious gateway, flanked by two embattled towers. The houses of the commissioner and the principal officers are spacious and handsome buildings, and the various offices in the several departments of the yard are neat and commodiously arranged: the numerous storehouses, one of which is six hundred and sixty feet in length, contain an immense quantity of every article necessary for the building and equipment of ships of the largest dimensions, all arranged with such order and exactness, that upon any emergency a first-rate man of war may be equipped for sea in a few days. The mast-house is two hundred and forty feet in length, and one hundred and twenty feet wide; many of the masts deposited in it are three feet in diameter and forty yards in height; the timber for making them is constantly kept floating in two capacious basins. The new rope-house is one thousand one hundred and ten feet in length, and fifty feet wide; by the aid of powerful machinery, cables of great dimensions are twisted here, some of them being one hundred fathoms in length, and twenty-five inches in circumference: the sail-loft is two hundred and ten feet long: the smith's shop, where anchors of the largest size are made, of which some weigh five tons, contains forty forges, for the manufacture also of the iron-work necessary for ship-building. At the north-eastern extremity of the dock-yard are the saw-mills, recently erected on a very extensive scale, under the superintendence of Mr. Brunel, and worked with powerful machinery propelled by steam; in the sawing-room, which is ninety feet square, are fixed eight saw-frames, each capable of carrying from one to thirty saws, and two circular saw benches, with windlasses and capstans for supplying them with wood, the whole set in motion by an engine which produces eighty strokes of the saws in a minute. To the north of the mills, where the ground is appropriated to the stowage of timber, is a canal, which, on entering the rising ground, passes under a tunnel, three hundred feet long, into an elliptic basin, forty-four feet deep, of which the longer diameter is ninety feet, and the shorter seventy-two, from which the timber, having been floated into the basin from the river by means of the canal, is raised by machinery with extraordinary velocity. Connected with the steam-engine of the saw-mills are extensive water-works, for the supply of the dock-yard; and on the iron pipes laid down for that purpose in various parts of the yard are fire-plugs, from which, when opened, rises a jet d'eau above the summits of the highest buildings. There are four wet docks sufficiently capacious for first-rate men of war; and a new stone dock upon a still larger scale has been recently constructed. There are six slips or launches for building ships of the largest dimensions. Among the many fine vessels launched from this dock-yard may be noticed, the Royal Sovereign, of one hundred guns, built just before the Restoration of Charles II.; the new Royal George, of one hundred guns, built in 1788; the Royal Charlotte, of one hundred guns; the Ville de Paris, of one hundred and ten; the Howe, of one hundred and twenty guns; the Trafalgar, of one hundred and four guns; and the Prince Regent, of one hundred and twenty guns: the Waterloo, of one hundred and twenty guns; the London, of ninety-two, and the Monarch, of eighty-four, are now on the slips. The principal officers of the establishment are, a commissioner (who is now the commissioner belonging to Sheerness), a master attendant, master shipwright, clerk of the cheque, store-keeper, clerk of the survey, clerk of the rope-yard, master rope-maker, master sail-maker, master boat-builder, master joiner, master blacksmith, master mason and bricklayer, master house-carpenter, master painter, boatswain, warden, and surgeon. In time of war the number of artificers and labourers employed in this dock-yard exceeds three thousand. Within the walls is a neat brick chapel, erected in 1811, at an expense of £9000, for the accommodation of the families resident within the limits of the yard, and of the division of Royal Marines in garrison here. The ordnance wharf occupies a narrow site of land between the church and the river, to the west of the dock-yard, and still called the Old Dock: the guns belonging to each ship are deposited in separate tiers, with the weight of metal and the name of the ship to which they belong marked on them: the gun-carriages are laid up under cover, and immense quantities of cannon-balls and bomb-shells are piled up pyramidally in various parts of the wharf: the armoury contains hostile weapons of every kind, ranged in admirable order. The principal officers of this establishment are a storekeeper and deputy storekeeper. A large building has lately been erected for the grinding of paint, and the rolling and smelting of lead by steam.

Prior to the year 1760, the defence of the arsenal was entrusted principally to guard-ships in the river; to forts erected on its banks, especially at Sheerness, which, after the attempt made by the Dutch in 1667, had been enlarged, with new fortifications, mounted with heavy ordnance; to Upnor castle, built by Queen Elizabeth; and to a small fort below Gillingham, erected by Charles I. In 1758, an act of parliament was passed for the purchase of land, and for the construction of such works as might be requisite for the perfect security of this important arsenal, under the provisions of which act, the extensive fortifications called the Lines were constructed: these works commence above the ordnance wharf, on the bank of the Medway, and are continued round an area one mile in extent from south to north, and half a mile from west to east (including the church of Chatham, the village of Brompton, which is principally inhabited by the artificers in the yard, and the barracks, magazines, &c.), to beyond the northern extremity of the dock-yard, where they again meet the river. These fortifications were enlarged during the American war, and strengthened by the erection of a strong redoubt on the summit of an eminence commanding the river. In 1782 another act was passed, for their further improvement, under which considerable additions have been made to the lines, and they are now considered to constitute, next to Portsmouth, the most complete and regular fortress in the kingdom. Forts Pitt and Clarence, two strong redoubts flanking the southern extremity of the lines, are situated on the heights overlooking the town, and commanding the upper part of the river; since the conclusion of the war, the former has been used as an hospital for invalids. The lower, or marine barracks, adjoining the upper extremity of the dock-yard, consist of a uniform range of brick building, enclosing a spacious quadrangle: the upper barracks, in Brompton, are also neatly built of brick, and are extensive and commodious: the new artillery barracks, built in 1804, are a fine range, forming three sides of a quadrangle, and containing apartments for the officers, lodgings for one thousand two hundred men, and requisite stabling; the open side of the quadrangle commands a fine view of the Medway in the fore-ground, and of the Thames in the distance: the artillery hospital, a neat building, erected in 1809, contains wards for one hundred patients, with convenient apartments and offices for the medical establishment. Near the entrance into the town from Rochester are the premises formerly used as a victualling-office, for supplying with provisions ships lying at Chatham, Sheerness, and the Nore; they were leased by government of the Dean of Rochester, and at the expiration of the lease were converted to private purposes. The town was much improved under the provisions of an act passed in 1772, for paving it, and for lighting it, but the streets are still very narrow and inconvenient for carriages. A Philosophical and Literary Institution was established in 1827, the members of which are about to erect a building for the reception of their library, and the collection of natural curiosities, antiquities, &c.: the expense is estimated at £2000. There are two subscription libraries, one the United Service library, and the other the Marine library. Races are held annually in August, on the extensive plain without the lines. The market is on Saturday: fairs, for three days each, are held on May 15th and September 19th. Chatham is partly within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and partly within the limits of the city of Rochester: it is also within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Rochester, for the recovery of debts under £5.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a neat plain structure of brick; the original edifice having been destroyed by fire, at the commencement of the fourteenth century, a new one was built under the sanction of a bull from the pope, who granted an indulgence of one year and forty days to all who should contribute to the work; in 1635 it was repaired and enlarged for the increased population arising from the dock-yard, and the steeple was rebuilt by the commissioners of the royal navy; in 1788, the body of the church was taken down, and rebuilt of brick upon a larger scale, and the churchyard being found too small, the Board of Ordnance gave three acres of ground, at a short distance from the church, for a cemetery, which was consecrated in 1828. A new church of the Grecian Doric order, with a tower, and containing one thousand six hundred and twenty-four sittings, of which one thousand and ninety are free, was completed in 1821, at an expense of nearly £15,000, which was defrayed by the parliamentary commissioners. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Perpetual Curate of Chatham. The living of the dock-yard chapel is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Lords of the Admiralty. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. An edifice for a school was built in 1828, at an expense of £1600, defrayed by one hundred shareholders of £15 each, who have each the privilege, on payment of £6 per annum, of sending one boy to be instructed in the classics and in modern languages: the head-master has a salary of £300, the second one of £150, and the third one of £100. A National school, chiefly supported by subscription, has a small endowment of about £6. 13. 4., arising from tenements bequeathed by Mrs. Elizabeth Petty, in 1723. Melville, or Marine hospital, is a handsome range of building at a short distance from Chatham, begun in 1827, and finished in the following year, at an expense of £70,000, for the use of the whole naval department; it is built of brick and stuccoed; the front consists of three pavilions, containing apartments for the accommodation of three hundred and forty patients; a colonnade extends the whole width, which is three hundred and twenty-two feet; and at the back are neat houses for the officers of the establishment. In 1078, Gundulph, Bishop of Rochester, founded and endowed an hospital for lepers, which he dedicated to St. Bartholomew, of which the chapel only is remaining: the estate has been vested in the Dean of Rochester, who is governor and patron: there are at present four brethren, two of whom are in holy orders, and officiate as chaplains. An hospital for decayed mariners and shipwrights was founded by Sir John Hawkins, in 1592, in which twelve pensioners have each a separate house, an allowance of eight shillings per week, and an annual supply of coal: the management is vested in twenty-six governors, of which number five are elective. A fund, commonly called the chest, for the relief of sailors who have been disabled in the service, was established by Sir Francis Drake and Sir John Hawkins, Knts., in 1588, when, after the defeat of the Spanish Armada, the seamen of the royal navy agreed to contribute a portion of their pay for the relief of their distressed brethren: this chest was removed to the royal hospital at Greenwich in 1802, and the management of the funds, which was vested in the principal naval officers, has been transferred to the first lord of the admiralty, the comptroller of the navy, and the governor of Greenwich hospital. Numerous Roman remains were discovered in forming the fortifications. Chatham gives the title of earl to the family of Pitt.

CHATHILL, a township in the parish of ELLINGHAM, southern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Alnwick, containing 27 inhabitants.

CHATLEY, a hamlet in that part of the parish of GREAT LEIGHS which is in the hundred of WITHAM, county of ESSEX, 4 miles (S. by W.) from Braintree, containing 486 inhabitants.

CHATSWORTH, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bakewell. The population is returned with the parish of Edensor. Chatsworth, as part of the duchy of Lancaster, is within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Chapel en le Frith, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The splendid mansion of Chatsworth was begun in 1687, and completed in 1706, by William Cavendish, first duke of Devonshire, upon the site of a more ancient edifice, which was taken down about the close of the seventeenth century, and in which Mary, Queen of Scots, passed a considerable portion of her long captivity in England. Sir John Gell garrisoned it for the parliament, in 1643, but capitulated to the Earl of Newcastle, who, in December of the same year, placed Col. Eyre, with a sufficient force, therein, to hold it for the king. In 1645, it withstood the siege of four hundred parliamentarians under Col. Gell, who, at the expiration of fourteen days, raised the siege, and retired to Derby. After the battle of Blenheim, in 1704, Marshal Tallard, the French general, having been made prisoner on that occasion, was sent to reside here.

CHATTERIS, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of WITCHFORD, Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Ramsey, containing 3283 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Ely, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Rev. Dr. Chatfield. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The river Ouse forms a boundary of the parish. A Benedictine nunnery was founded and endowed, about the year 980, by Alfwen, wife of Earl Ethelstan, by the counsel of her brother Ednod, first abbot of Ramsey, who was afterwards raised to the see of Dorchester, and murdered by the Danes in 1016: its revenue, at the dissolution, was estimated at £112. 3. 6. Chatteris is a franchise under the Bishop of Ely, who holds a court leet for appointing officers, in a house called the guildhall, given to the parish, with other premises and lands, producing together nearly £70 per annum, which is distributed amongst infirm old men and widows. There is a National school, supported by subscription, wherein from two to three hundred children of both sexes are instructed. At Hunny farm are the subterraneous remains of a chapel, supposed to have contained the bones of St. Huna. In 1757, on opening a tumulus near Somersham ferry, several human skeletons, military weapons, an urn, and a glass vase were found.

CHATTERLEY, a township in the parish of WOLSTANTON, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Newcastle under Line, containing 204 inhabitants.

CHATTISHAM, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Hadleigh, containing 231 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is dedicated to All Saints and St. Margaret. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a school with a small endowment for teaching six boys.

CHATTON, a parish in the eastern division of GLENDALÉ ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 miles (E.) from Wooler, containing 1460 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £12. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Northumberland. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, was rebuilt about 1763. The parish contains coal and limestone.

CHAWLEY, a tything in the parish of CUMNER, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Abingdon, containing 70 inhabitants.

CHAWLEY, a parish in the hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, county of DEVON, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Chulmleigh, containing 792 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £25. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Hon. N. Fellowes. The church, dedicated to St. James, has a low steeple covered with oak shingles, and contains some elegant screen work. A charity school is liberally supported by subscription. Fairs for cattle are held May 6th and December 11th.

CHAWTON, a parish in the hundred of ALTON, Alton (North) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Alton, containing 417 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £11. 5. 5., and in the patronage of Edward Knight, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. One of the sources of the river Wey is in this parish. The village is situated in a valley watered by land springs, called Lavants, which occasionally spread over the adjacent lands.

CHEADLE, a parish in the hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Stockport, comprising the townships of Cheadle-Bulkeley, Cheadle-Moseley, and Handforth with Boxden, and containing 6508 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £13. 0. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir J. D. Broughton, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the later style of English architecture, with side aisles and a tower, and contains some monuments of the Brereton and Bulkeley families. There are places of worship for Methodists and Roman Catholics in this parish. The village, situated near the Bollin, is remarkable for the beauty and salubrity of its situation, and its very neat and cleanly appearance. The chief employment of the inhabitants is in the spinning, bleaching, and printing of cotton. There are two manors in the parish, Cheadle-Bulkeley and Cheadle-Hulme, or Moseley: for the former a court is held in October; and for the latter, on the first Thursday after June 24th. A school, built by subscription among the inhabitants, was endowed by John Robinson, in 1788, with land let for about £40 per annum; and Mr. Stubbs also bequeathed land for teaching children.

CHEADLE, a market town and parish in the southern division of the hundred of TORMONSLow, county of STAFFORD, 14 miles (N. N. E.) from Stafford, and 147 (N. W. by N.) from London, containing 3862 inhabitants. This place is situated in a valley environed by hills, which, though formerly barren, have been recently planted with forest trees, and are gradually assuming the appearance of verdure and cultivation. The town, which is intersected by the roads from Newcastle to Ashbourn, and from Leek to Uttoxeter, consists of one principal and four smaller streets; the houses are indifferently built: the inhabitants are supplied with water from a rivulet called the Tean, and from springs: the environs, though on the confines of the moor lands, are not unpleasant, and abound with numerous seats; the summit of a hill, called Monkhouse, to the west of the town, is a favourite walk, commanding an extensive prospect of the surrounding country. The principal branch of manufacture is that of tape, which is extensively carried on in the town; and adjoining it are large brass-wire works: the neighbourhood abounds with coal, and copper-ore has been discovered, though not in sufficient quantity to repay the expense of working the mine. The Caldron branch of the Trent and Mersey canal passes within four miles of the town, by Oakmoor, where some copper works have been established. The market is on Friday; a small square has been recently appropriated for the market-place: the fairs are on Holy Thursday and August 21st, for cattle. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £12. 9. 2., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is an ancient structure, principally in the decorated style of English architecture; and, though much mutilated and disfigured by alterations and repairs, it still retains some features of its original character: it has a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, the New Connexion of Methodists, or Kilhamites, and Roman Catholics. A charity school was founded, in 1685, by Mr. Stubbs, who endowed it with a rent-charge of £20, for the instruction of six children of this parish and six of the parish of Kingsley; to this endowment the trustees of Mr. Andrew Newton added £30, the interest of which is paid to the master, who has also a house rent-free: there are twelve scholars on the foundation, all of the parish of Cheadle, who are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic. Mr. Fowler, in 1663, gave a rent-charge of £6; Mr. Charles Beech, in 1726, bequeathed land and money producing together £26 per annum; and Mrs. Francis Grosvenor, of Hale Hall, in 1727, gave a rent-charge of £10, all for distribution among the poor.

CHEAM, a parish in the second division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, county of SURREY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from Ewell, containing 792 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the exempt deanery of Croydon, which is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £17. 5. 5., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a small structure built of flint; the chancel contains some monuments to the Lumley family, who were anciently lords of the manor, and one of whom sold his collection of books to James I., which laid the foundation of the royal library now in the British Museum. It is remarkable, that of six successive rectors between 1581 and 1662, five became bishops, namely, Watson, Andrews, Mountain, Senhouse, and Hackett. About half a mile south-west from the village was situated the magnificent palace called Nonsuch, begun by Henry VIII., and finished by Henry, Earl of Arundel, which was Queen Elizabeth's favourite seat, and kept up as a royal residence till the execution of Charles I., when it came into the possession of Algernon Sidney, and at the Restoration was granted to the Duchess of Cleveland, who pulled down the house and disparked the land. There is a vein of fine clay, useful for making moulds for casting metals and for tobacco pipes.

CHEAPSIDES, an extra-parochial liberty, in the wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, East riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Howden. The population is returned with Scalby.

CHEARSLEY, a parish in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Thame, containing 263 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. This parish is supposed to have been the scene of a battle which Cerdic and Cynric fought with the Britons, in 527, mentioned in the Saxon Chronicle as having occurred at Cerdicesleagh.

CHEBSEY, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (E. by S.) from Eccleshall, containing, with the township of Cold Norton, 421 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. The church is dedicated to all Saints: the cemetery formerly contained a tall pyramidal stone, supposed to be the memorial of a bishop who was reputed to have been anciently slain near this place. Chebsey is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CHECKENDON, a parish in the hundred of LANGTREE, county of OXFORD, 6½ miles (S. E.) from Wallingford, containing 295 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £19. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of University College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. This parish is entitled to send two poor men to the almshouse, and four poor children to the school, established at Goring, under the will of Mr. H. Allnutt, in 1724; it has also the right of sending four children to the school at Woodcote, founded by Mrs. Newman.

CHECKLEY, a joint township with Wrinehill, in the parish of WYBUNBURY, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from Nantwich, containing, with Wrinehill, 211 inhabitants.

CHECKLEY, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of TORMONSLow, county of STAFFORD, 5½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Uttoxeter, containing, with the hamlet of Tean, and the liberty of Madeley-Holme, 2070 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £20. 2. 6., and in the patronage of Thomas Hutchinson, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints, is an ancient structure, and contains a fine marble tomb, with recumbent figures. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A large tape-manufactory, supposed to be the most extensive of its kind in Europe, was established here in 1748, the proprietors of which, aided by a trifling annuity, support schools for children of both sexes. A fair is held on Easter-Tuesday.

CHEDBURGH, a parish in the hundred of RISBRIDGE, county of SUFFOLK, 6½ miles (S.W.) from Bury St. Edmund's, containing 240 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Ickworth united, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Bristol. The church is dedicated to All Saints: one hundred and forty sittings, eighty of them free, have been recently added, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £150 for that purpose.

CHEDDER, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of WINTERSTOKE, county of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (E.S.E.) from Axbridge, containing 1797 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, within the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Wells, rated in the king's books at £23. 16. 8. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a large and handsome structure, with a square tower one hundred feet high, surmounted by pinnacles. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This place is of considerable antiquity, having been the occasional residence of the Saxon monarchs, and in the possession of Alfred the Great, who bequeathed his hunting seat at Chedder, together with his brugge of Ax, and the wet moor, now Nedmore, to his son. The name is generally deduced from Ced, a brow or height, and Dwor, water; a broad, clear, and rapid stream flows through the parish, on which are some paper-mills. The village consists of three or four irregular streets, in one of which stands a dilapidated hexagonal market-cross; it was once a considerable market town, the grant having been made to Joceline, Bishop of Wells, in the 19th of Henry III., but it is now principally celebrated for its excellent cheese. Several of the inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of paper, and the knitting of worsted stockings. Fairs for horned cattle and sheep are held on May 4th and October 29th. In 1751, Sarah Comer bequeathed the residue of her estate, amounting to £6052 three per cents., producing an annual dividend of £181. 11. 4., which is under the direction of trustees, who pay one-fourth to the churchwardens for the relief of decayed housekeepers, one-fourth for distribution among the general poor, a fourth to a schoolmaster for instructing thirty-five boys and thirteen girls, and the remainder for apprenticing children. Chedder cliff, a vast chasm more than a mile in length, and appearing as if the mountain had been rent by an earthquake from the summit to the base, exhibits a combination of rocky precipices and gloomy caverns, some of the rocks towering eight hundred feet above the level of the valley. The principal cavern is about one hundred feet high at the entrance, and afterwards sinks three hundred feet beneath the rocks, branching out into several collateral apartments, and producing a perfect and pleasing echo: the sides and roof are covered with stalactites that have assumed a variety of fanciful forms. A carriage road winds through this valley, opening at intervals upon the wildest and most magnificent scenery, while huge masses of rock impend on each side, with threatening aspect. The hills above the village, in common with other parts of the Mendip range, abound with metallic ores, but they are not at present worked.

CHEDDINGTON, a parish in the hundred of CORTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (N. W.) from Ivinghoe, containing 341 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Trustees of the Earl of Bridgewater. The church is dedicated to St. Giles.

CHEDDLETON, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of TORMONSLow, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Leek, containing, with the townships of Basford and Cunsall, 1525 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £300 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. Edward Powys. The church is dedicated to St. Edward. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Caldon branch of the Trent and Mersey canal, and the Uttoxeter canal, pass through the parish; the latter terminates near the village. Here are coal and lime wharfs, a silk-throwing mill, and an ale and porter brewery. At a field near Ferry hill is the shaft of a very ancient cross, eleven feet high, standing on three circular stone steps. In 1724, James Whitehall bequeathed £200 for teaching children, and £30 to build a school-room, to which charity John Bagnall gave a rent-charge of £5, the whole yielding £13 per annum, which is paid to the master.

CHEDDON-FITZPAINE, a parish in the hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Taunton, containing 272 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £13. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. F. Warre. The navigable river Tone runs on the south of the parish, and the Taunton and Bridgewater canal passes through it. A school for children of both sexes is supported by some small bequests, and is under the direction of the minister.

CHEDGRAVE, a parish in the hundred of LONDON, county of NORFOLK, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Beccles, containing 302 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Sir W. B. Proctor, Bart. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has a fine Norman door, and the steeple stands at the north-eastern end.

CHEDINGTON, a parish in the hundred of BEAMINSTER-FORUM and REDHONS, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Beaminster, containing 164 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 8. 4., and in the patronage of William Hody Cox, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. Chedington is an upland and healthful village, with scarcely a level field within the bounds of the parish; the hills, which are principally composed of a hard durable fossil rock, afford rich views over the counties of Devon, Dorset, Somerset, and Wilts, and partially of the English and Bristol channels. On one of them are the remains of a Roman encampment; and in the fields below it, the site of a Roman villa. The river Axe separates the parish on the south and south-east from that of Beaminster.

CHEDISTON, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Halesworth, containing 427 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Halesworth, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. 6. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHEDWORTH, a parish in the hundred of RAPS-GATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from North Leach, containing 975 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, contains a stone pulpit. In 1760, a Roman hypocaust was discovered at Lestercomb Bottom, in this parish, with a brick floor and pillars, a spring, and a cistern, the bricks of which bore the inscription "a'rviri." On a hill a little above is a large tumulus, in which, on the removal of a large stone set upright at its mouth, a great quantity of human bones was exposed. The rental of about one hundred and fifty acres of land is applied to the support of two schoolmasters and the vicar. Chedworth gave title of baron to the family of Howe, which became extinct on the death of John, Lord Chedworth.

CHEDZOY, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Bridgewater, containing 472 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £38. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Rev. Dr. Coney. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Roman coins have frequently been discovered within this village; and, in 1701, some earthen urns and a fibula were dug up near the church. A slight shock of an earthquake was felt on January 4th, 1682.

CHEESEBURN-GRANGE, a township in the parish of STAMFORDHAM, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, containing 101 inhabitants.

CHEETHAM, a chapelry in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by W.) from Manchester, containing 2027 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, and in the patronage of the Rev. C. W. Ethelston, who built the chapel, a plain brick edifice, in 1793. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, with a burial-ground and a school attached. A charity school has been erected and is supported by subscription.

CHELBOROUGH (EAST), a parish in the hundred of TOLLERFORD, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Beaminster, containing 96 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Rev. Blakeley Cooper.

CHELBOROUGH (WEST), a parish in the hundred of TOLLERFORD, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Beaminster, containing 56 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £4. 15. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Rolle.

CHELDON, a parish in the hundred of WITHERIDGE, county of DEVON, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Chulmleigh, containing 96 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstable, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £4. 18. $6\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Hon. N. Fellowes. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHELFORD, a chapelry in the parish of PREST-BURY, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Knutsford, containing 203 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mr. Parker. The chapel was rebuilt in 1776. Five roads meet in the village; and the Birtles and Henbury brooks unite immediately below the chapel, forming a fine sheet of water, which empties itself into a brook called Peover-leye. A school was built by the late Rev. John Parker, who endowed it with about £17 per annum.

CHELL, a township in the parish of WOLSTANTON, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 3½ miles (N. by W.) from Hanley, containing 400 inhabitants.

CHELLASTON, a parish in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, 4½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Derby, containing 338 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is in the later style of English architecture; the tower has been replaced by a bell turret of wood. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Derby canal passes in the vicinity. Chellaston is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CHELLESWORTH, or CHELSWORTH, a parish in the hundred of COSFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 1½ mile (S. W.) from Bildeston, containing 311 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CHELLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WILLEY, county of BEDFORD, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Olney, containing 121 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united in 1769 to that of Carlton, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

CHELMARSH, a parish in the hundred of STORTESDEN, county of SALOP, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Bridgenorth, containing 458 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £6. 5. 8., and in the patronage of Sir J. Sebright, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The navigable river Severn runs at a short distance eastward from the village.

CHELMERTON, a chapelry in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 4½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Tideswell, containing 262 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of BAKEWELL. The chapel has some remains of a rood-loft and screen work. There are meeting-houses for Wesleyan Methodists and Presbyterians. The village is situated at the foot of an eminence, on the summit of which are two barrows, close to each other, the circumference of the larger being about two hundred and forty feet; in this, when opened in 1782, several human skeletons were discovered, in rude stone coffins, with bones and teeth perfect. The manufacture of ribands is carried on here. There is a charity school, to which Mr. Brocklehurst, who died in 1792, gave £200, now vested in the commissioners of the Leek and Burton road, and producing £13 per annum, which is applied to the instruction of fifteen children. Chelmerston is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CHELMONDISTON, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 6½ miles (S. S. E.) from Ipswich, containing 366 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The navigable river Orwell forms the northern boundary of this parish.

CHELMSFORD, a market town and parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, of which it is the chief town, 29 miles (N. E. by E.) from London, on the road to Yarmouth, containing, with the hamlet of Moulsham, 4994 inhabitants. This place, which is within a short distance of the Casarmagus of the Romans, derives its name from an ancient ford on the river Chelmer, near the natural confluence of that river with the Cann, into which its stream is previously diverted by an artificial channel near the bridge. In the reign of Edward the Confessor, and at the time of the Norman survey, it was in the possession of the bishops of London; and two buildings, still called Bishop's Hall and Bishop's Mill, seem to indicate its having been either permanently, or occasionally, their residence. In other respects it was an inconsiderable place till the reign of Henry I., when Maurice, Bishop of London, built a stone bridge of three arches over the river Cann; and, diverting the road, which previously passed through Writtle, made Chelmsford the great thoroughfare to the eastern parts of the county, and to Suffolk and Norfolk. From this period the town increased in importance; and its trade so much improved, that, in the reign of Edward III., it sent four representatives to a grand council at Westminster. A convent for Black, or Dominican, friars was established at an early period, the foundation of which has been erroneously attributed to Malcolm, King of Scotland: in this convent, of which only the site is visible, Thomas Langford, a friar, compiled a Universal Chronicle, from the creation to his own time: its revenue, at the dissolution, was £9. 6. 5. During the late war with France, two extensive ranges of barracks, for four thousand men, were erected near the town, both of which have been taken down; and at a short distance from it, a line of embankments, defended by star batteries, was raised to protect the approaches to the metropolis from the eastern coast, of which some traces are still remaining.

The town consists of one principal and three smaller streets, well paved, and lighted with gas; the houses, several of which, on both sides of the town, have gardens extending to the river, are in general modern and well built; and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from a spring at the distance of half a mile, conveyed by pipes into a reservoir, over which is a handsome dome, supported on six columns of the Doric order. It has been much improved under the inspection of commissioners appointed by act of parliament, whose powers were extended by a subsequent act obtained in 1822. A handsome iron bridge has been recently constructed over the Chelmer; and an elegant stone bridge, of one fine arch, was erected in 1787, over the river Cann, connecting the town with the hamlet of Moulsham, and replacing an ancient bridge erected by Bishop Maurice, which, though calculated to endure for ages, had become too narrow in the improved state of the approaches to the town. The theatre, a neat and commodious edifice, is opened occasionally: assemblies and concerts take place periodically in the shire-hall; and races, which continue for three days, are held in the latter part of July, on Galleywood common, about two miles from the town, where there is an excellent two-mile course, of which one mile has been recently improved at a considerable expense, and on which a stand has been erected, capable of accommodating two hundred persons. The trade consists principally in corn, which is sent to London, and in the traffic arising from the situation of the town as a great public thoroughfare: there are several large corn-mills on the banks of the Chelmer. A navigable canal to the river Black-water, twelve miles distant, was constructed in 1796, and has greatly contributed to increase the trade. The market is on Friday, for corn, cattle, and provisions: fairs are held on May 12th and November 12th, the latter principally for cattle.

The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty sessions for the division every Tuesday and Friday; and constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor, who also holds a court baron occasionally. The assizes and sessions for the county, and the election of knights for the shire, are regularly held here. The shire-hall is an elegant and commodious structure, fronted with Portland stone, and having a rustic basement, from which rise four handsome pillars of the Ionic order, supporting a triangular pediment: the upper part of the front is ornamented with appropriate figures, in basso relievo, of Wisdom, Justice, and Mercy; in the lower department are the several court-rooms, and an area for the use of the corn market; and in the upper part is a spacious assembly-room, extending the whole length of the building, over which are rooms for the grand jury and witnesses, and other apartments. The old county gaol, a spacious and handsome stone building in the hamlet of Moulsham, was completed in 1777, at an expense of upwards of £18,000: it comprises different departments for the classification of prisoners; in the front is the gaoler's house, and within the walls an infirmary and a chapel; the prisoners are employed in various kinds of work, the profits of which are applied toward the support of the establishment: it is appropriated exclusively to the reception of persons confined for debt, and of prisoners committed for trial. Adjoining the gaol, and incorporated with it, is the house of correction, now used only for convicted female prisoners: it was built in 1806, at an expense of about £7500. The new house of correction at Springfield Hill, on the road to Colchester, is a very extensive and well arranged building of brick, ornamented with stone, begun in October 1822, and completed in 1825, at an expense of £55,739. 17. 0½., and capable of containing two hundred and fifty-four prisoners, of whom two hundred and eighteen may be confined in separate cells:

it comprises seven distinct ranges of building, radiating from a spacious area comprehending, with the site of the buildings, nearly nine acres, in the centre of which is the governor's house, including a neat chapel, and commanding a view of fourteen yards, for the proper classification of the prisoners; in eight of these yards are tread-wheels, together furnishing labour for two hundred and thirteen at one time; in two others are capstans, and, in one, a windlass and machinery for raising water: there are fourteen day-rooms, two of which are used as workshops for shoemakers, eight store-rooms, one of which is used as a work-room for tailors, an infirmary, a lazaretto, a bath, and other requisite offices. Two of the tread-wheels are attached to a mill which grinds corn for the use of this prison, the county gaol, and the house of correction at Barkins: the profits of the tread-mill, from the 1st of July, 1828, to the 30th of June, 1829, were £220. 13. 5½.

The living is a rectory, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, rated in the king's books at £31. 2. 6., and in the patronage of Lady St. John Mildmay. The church is dedicated to St. Mary; the body has been lately rebuilt, at an expense of £15,000, the former having fallen down in 1800, from the unskilfulness of some workmen, who, in digging a vault, undermined two of the principal pillars: it is a stately structure in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles and surmounted by a lofty spire. In this church the archdeacon holds his court, and the wills and records of grants of administration are deposited in an office over the south porch. A collection of books, presented by Dr. Plume, of Maldon, for the use of the clergy resident in the neighbourhood, is kept in the chancel, the east end of which is ornamented with a finely painted window, representing the Incarnation, Crucifixion, and Resurrection of our Saviour, and figures of the four Evangelists. There are two places of worship for Independents, and one each for the Society of Friends and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded and endowed, in 1552, by Edward VI.: in addition to the classics, a course of English instruction has been introduced. This school, in common with those at Maldon and Brentwood, has an exhibition of £6 per annum to Caius College, Cambridge: the management is vested in four hereditary trustees. The school-house was rebuilt by R. Benyon, Esq., in 1792, on the site of a more ancient one erected by Sir John Tyrrell, Bart. Philemon Holland, translator of Camden's Britannia, and a native of Chelmsford; John Dee, a celebrated mathematician; Sir William Mildmay, Bart., founder of Emanuel College, Cambridge; and Dr. Plume, Archdeacon of Rochester, received the rudiments of their education in this establishment. A charity school, for the maintenance, clothing, and instruction of fifty boys, founded in 1713; and a similar school for twenty girls, founded in 1714, are supported by subscription: there are also a Lancasterian, a National, and an infant school, for children of both sexes. Six almshouses in the hamlet of Moulsham, founded by Sir Thomas and Lady Mildmay, in 1565, were rebuilt by William Mildmay, Esq., in 1758: four almshouses in Baddow-lane, erected by the sale of a barn given by William Davis, in 1520, for the use of the poor, have also been rebuilt, and two tenements added at the expense of the parish.

CHELSEA, a parish in the Kensington division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, containing, with part of the chapelry of Knightsbridge, 26,860 inhabitants. This place was anciently called Chelcheth, or Chelchith, probably from the Saxon Ceosl, or Cesol, sand, and Hythe, a harbour, from which its present name is derived. In 785, a synod for the reformation of the religion in England was assembled here by the legates of Pope Adrian. The beauty of its situation on the Thames, which is wider here than in any part above London bridge, made it, at an early period, the residence of illustrious persons, whose superb mansions procured for it the appellation of the village of palaces. Among these was the residence of the chancellor, Sir Thomas More, at the north end of Beaufort-row, which, after being successively in the occupation of several distinguished characters, was taken down by Sir Hans Sloane in the year 1740. The bishops of Winchester had a palace at the upper end of Cheyne-walk, which, under an act of parliament passed in 1823, enabling the bishop to alienate it from the see, was taken down in 1824. Queen Elizabeth had a palace here; and Sir Robert Walpole resided for some time in a mansion previously belonging to the crown, on the site of which a fine edifice was erected, in 1810, by General Gordon. The mansion and gardens of the Earl of Ranelagh were converted into a place of public amusement, which, after having been fashionably attended for a considerable time, was closed in 1805, and the buildings taken down; the site is now occupied by dwelling-houses. Chelsea comprehends the old town on the bank of the river, over which is a bridge of wood leading to Battersea in Surrey, and the new buildings erected since 1777, and called Hans Town, in honour of Sir Hans Sloane, a former lord of the manor. In the old town is Cheyne-walk, containing many handsome and substantial houses, commanding an interesting view of the Thames and the scenery on its opposite bank: in the new town are, Sloane-street, a regular range of respectable houses, nearly a mile in length, Sloane-square, and Upper and Lower Cadogan-places: the streets are partially paved, and well lighted with gas, under the superintendence of forty commissioners, including the rector and the churchwardens, appointed annually by act of parliament obtained about the year 1820; the inhabitants are supplied with water by the Chelsea Water Works Company, incorporated in 1724. The Botanical Gardens were established in 1673, by the Company of Apothecaries, to whom Sir Hans Sloane granted, at a quit-rent of £5 per annum, four acres of ground on the bank of the river; they contain a great variety of medicinal plants systematically arranged, a hothouse, greenhouses, and a library in which are many volumes of natural history: lectures are delivered periodically to the students, by a demonstrator appointed for that purpose: in the centre of the gardens is a fine statue of Sir Hans Sloane, by Rysbrack; and in front of the river are two remarkably fine cedars of Libanus. A second botanic garden, occupying more than six acres, well stocked with plants arranged after the Linnæan system, in seventeen compartments, was established in 1807, near Sloane-street, where lectures are delivered annually in May and June.

The Royal Hospital for veteran soldiers, a spacious and handsome structure of brick, ornamented with columns, quoins, and cornices of stone, erected after a design by Sir Christopher Wren, at an expense of £150,000, towards defraying which Sir Stephen Fox, the projector, and grandfather of the Rt. Hon. C. J. Fox, contributed £13,000, was begun in the reign of Charles II., and completed in that of William III.: the buildings occupy a spacious quadrangle, in the centre of which is a fine statue in bronze of Charles II.; the east and west sides, which are three hundred and sixty feet in length, comprise wards for the pensioners, and the governor's house; in the centre of the north side is a large vestibule, lighted by a handsome dome, with the great hall on one side, in which the pensioners dine, and on the other, the chapel, a neat and lofty edifice, containing a handsome altar-piece, in which is a good painting of the Resurrection; the south side of the quadrangle is open to the river, affording a fine view of the extensive gardens, which reach to its margin: there are smaller quadrangles, in which are the infirmaries and various offices, formed by the addition of wings to the extremities of the north side of the large quadrangle: on the north side of the college is an enclosure of thirteen acres, planted with avenues of trees. The establishment consists of a governor, lieutenant-governor, a major, adjutant, deputy-adjutant, treasurer, secretary, two chaplains, a physician, surgeon, apothecary, comptroller, steward, clerk of the works, and subordinate officers: the number of in-pensioners is about five hundred, and the number of out-pensioners indefinite; the annual expenditure is from £700,000 to £800,000. York hospital, situated in this parish, is a receptacle for wounded soldiers arriving from foreign stations, who are waiting for a vacancy in the royal college. The Royal Military Asylum was founded, in 1801, by His Royal Highness the late Duke of York, for the support and education of the orphan children of soldiers, and of those whose fathers are serving on foreign stations: there are seven hundred boys and three hundred girls, who are instructed, on Dr. Bell's plan, in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and the latter in needlework; the boys, on leaving the asylum, enter the army with their own consent; the girls are placed out apprentices. The premises, which are handsomely built of brick, and ornamented with stone, form three sides of a quadrangle: the west front consists of a centre, with a handsome stone portico of the Doric order, connected with two wings by an arcade. There are two soap-manufactories, a brewery, and an extensive floor-cloth manufactory: a considerable trade is carried on in coal; and in the neighbourhood are large tracts of ground cultivated by market-gardeners. The county magistrates hold a petty session here for the hundred every Tuesday; and four headboroughs, nine constables, and other officers, are appointed at the court held for the manor.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Middlesex, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Earl Cadogan. The old church, dedicated to St. Luke, is a small edifice, partly in the early and partly in the decorated style of English architecture, with a low tower surmounted by a campanile turret; it is chiefly of brick, and was rebuilt in the early part of the sixteenth century: at the end of the north aisle is a chapel in the decorated style, and at the extremity of the south aisle is a chapel erected by Sir Thomas More, in 1520: the church was enlarged and the tower added about the year 1670. Among the many interesting monuments are those of Sir Thomas More; Dr. Edward Chamberlayne, author of "The present State of England;" Thomas Shadwell, poet-laureat in the reign of William and Mary; Sir Hans Sloane, and others. A new church, also dedicated to St. Luke, and containing two thousand and five sittings, of which nine hundred and twenty-seven are free, was erected in the year 1824, at an expense of £40,000, of which the parliamentary commissioners granted £8,785. 12. 4.; it is a magnificent structure in the decorated and later styles of English architecture, with a lofty square tower crowned with dome turrets at the angles; the west front is strikingly beautiful, and the aisles are surmounted by a pierced parapet, continued round the architrave of the east end, which is decorated with minarets: the interior has an impressive grandeur of effect, arising from the loftiness of the nave, which has a triforium and a fine range of clerestory windows, and is separated from the aisles by clustered columns and pointed arches of graceful elevation. The old parish church is now used as a chapel: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Chelsea. The chapel in Sloane-street, containing one thousand four hundred and two sittings, of which six hundred and fifty are free, was erected in 1830, at an expense of £5849. 17. 4., by grant from the parliamentary commissioners: it is a handsome edifice in the later style of English architecture, with two minaret turrets at the west end: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Chelsea. An episcopal chapel, called Park chapel, was built by Sir Richard Manningham, in 1718. There are two places of worship for Baptists, three for Independents, and one for Wesleyan Methodists. In 1694, John Chamberlayne, Esq. gave £10 per annum, of which £5 was to be paid to a master, for teaching five poor children, one of them to be apprenticed to a waterman, with a premium of £5; and in 1705, William Petys erected a school-room in the old churchyard, with a dwelling for the master; there are forty scholars, of whom thirty are clothed, and two apprenticed annually by the above legacy, aided by subscription. The National school in connexion with Park chapel, and the Chelsea National school, in which one hundred and fifty boys and eighty girls are instructed, are supported by subscription: for the latter, a handsome range of buildings, comprising two large school-rooms, between which are houses for the master and mistress, has been erected behind the new church, and in a style corresponding with the architecture of that splendid structure, to which they form no inelegant appendage. The western grammar school, recently established, was opened in 1829: the funds requisite for its erection and maintenance were subscribed in shares of £15, each holder, on the payment of a small sum, being entitled to present one pupil, who receives a classical and liberal education on moderate terms. Mrs. Martha Bromsall, in 1804, gave a house and premises, the proceeds from the sale of which have been vested in the purchase of £315 new four per cents.; the dividends are distributed among poor house-keepers: there are some other bequests for charitable purposes. John King, A. M., editor of some of the tragedies of Euripides; and Dr. Thomas Martyn, Regius

VOL. I.

Professor of Botany at Cambridge, and a distinguished writer on botany, were natives of this parish.

CHELSEFIELD, a parish in the hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 6½ miles (S. E.) from Bromley, containing 756 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £24. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the early style of English architecture, with a tower and spire at the north-east angle of the nave. At Farnborough, in this parish, there is a chapel of ease. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children.

CHELSHAM, a chapelry in the parish of WARLINGHAM, second division of the hundred of TANDRIDGE, county of SURREY, 7 miles (S. E.) from Croydon, containing 217 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. Leonard, is in the early style of English architecture. On Bottle hill, in this neighbourhood, are the remains of a Roman camp, of an oblong form, and surrounded by a single trench.

CHELTENHAM, a market town and parish in the hundred of CHELTENHAM, county of GLOUCESTER, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Gloucester, and 95 (W. N. W.) from London, containing, according to the last census, 13,396 resident inhabitants, since which the number has increased to about 22,000. This place takes its name from the small river Chilt, which rises at Dowdswell, in the vicinity, and runs through the town in its course to the Severn. Prior to the Conquest, the manor belonged to Edward the Confessor, and was afterwards held by the Conqueror; in 1199 it was granted to Henry de Bohun, Earl of Hereford, who exchanged it with King John for other lands: it was next given to the abbey of Feschamp in Normandy, and subsequently to the nunnery of Sion in Middlesex, on the dissolution of which it reverted to the Crown. Cheltenham derives its importance from the mineral springs, the oldest of which was noticed in 1716: since that time various others have been discovered, possessing different proportions of chalybeate, aperient salts, chiefly sulphate of soda, sulphate of magnesia, and oxyde of iron held in solution by carbonic acid; the last was discovered in 1803, by Dr. Thomas Jameson, according to whose analysis it contains a greater proportion of sulphureous gas than the others, and, in many instances, bears a strong affinity to the Harrogate water: they are efficacious in the cure of jaundice and other diseases of the liver, in dyspepsia, and in complaints arising from the debilitating influence of hot climates. In 1721, the old well, or spa, to the south of the town, was enclosed, and in 1738 Captain Henry Skillicorn erected over it a brick pavilion, supported on four arches, built a pump-room, and laid out walks for the accommodation of visitors. In 1780, the number of lodging-houses amounted only to thirty; but since the visit of George III., in 1788, Cheltenham has been rapidly rising into note as a fashionable place of resort, and is at present eminent for the elegance of its buildings, the extent and variety of its accommodations, and the rank and number of its visitors, of whom, in the course of the season, there are generally not less than fifteen thousand.

The town is pleasantly situated on an extensive plain, sheltered on the north and east by the Cotswold hills, and consists of numerous fine streets, the prineipal of which is more than a mile and a half in length, containing many handsome ranges of building, interspersed occasionally with houses of more ancient date and less pretending character: to the south are a crescent and colonnade, and the upper and the lower promenade, lately built; and on each side are dwellings, displaying much beauty and variety of architectural decoration. The masonic hall, in Portland-street, is a handsome edifice in the style of a Roman mausoleum, completed in 1823, and decorated in front and on one side with the insignia of the order of free masonry. The streets are well paved, and lighted with gas, by an act passed in the 59th of George III., and amended in the 2nd of George IV.: the Gas-light and Coke Company was formed pursuant to an act passed in 1819; and in 1824 an act was obtained for the establishment of water-works, under the direction of a company. About half a mile toward the south is the Montpellier spa: the pump-room, a spacious and handsome rotunda, has a noble colonnade in front, above the centre of which is the figure of a lion couchant; adjoining it is a long room with a viranda, and part of the building is fitted up as a conservatory. Near this spa a very handsome range of houses has been built, and a new road formed, leading more directly into the town, at the expense of P. Thompson, Esq. Nearer the town, in the same direction, is the Imperial spa, an elegant building in the Grecian style of architecture, opened in 1818; in front of the pump-room is a portico of the Ionic order, copied from a temple on the bank of the river Ilissus at Athens, and over the centre is a colossal statue of the Goddess of Health. The old well, or original spa, has been enlarged by the erection of a new pump-room in 1803. There are also the old chalybeate spa, opened in 1802; the Cambray chalybeate spa, discovered in 1807; and Alstone spa, opened in 1809. On the north side of Cheltenham is Pittville, where a new town has been planned, on a magnificent scale, by Joseph Pitt, Esq.: the pump-room, of which the first stone was laid on the 4th of May, 1825, is a splendid edifice, in the erection of which more than £20,000 has been expended; the centre of this building, which is crowned with a finely proportioned dome, embellished with richly painted glass, is decorated with a beautiful colonnade of the Ionic order, surmounted by a statue of Hygeia; and the wings are ornamented with statues of Æsculapius and Hippocrates: in front are extensive gardens, tastefully laid out; and at the foot of the hill on which it stands is a fine sheet of water, terminated at each end by a bridge of fanciful architecture. There are warm, cold, medicated, and vapour baths, furnished with every appendage requisite for their use, and under the direction of experienced persons; hotels of the first order, affording every accommodation; and several hundred lodging-houses, many of which are splendidly fitted up for the reception of visitors of the highest rank. The various libraries, reading-rooms, and musical-repositories, are richly stored and well conducted: concerts and assemblies take place regularly during the season, under the superintendence of a master of the ceremonies, in a splendid suite of rooms completed in 1816. The theatre has been rebuilt upon a more enlarged plan, and is opened regularly by the Cheltenham company: races take place annually in July, on an adjoining eminence.

The trade, exclusively of the ordinary business necessary for the supply of the inhabitants and the numerous visitors, consists principally in malt and in various kinds of medicinal salts, for the preparation of which latter there is an extensive manufactory on the road to Bath. Coal is brought from Staffordshire, Shropshire, and the Forest of Dean, by the river Severn to Gloucester, whence it is conveyed by a rail-road to the wharfs at the western extremity of the town. The market is on Thursday and Saturday: the fairs are on the second Thursday in April, August 5th, the second Thursday in September, and the third Thursday in December, for cattle and cheese; there are also statute fairs on the first and second Thursday after Michaelmas day. The market-house, a handsome and commodious building, was erected in 1823, at the expense of Lord Sherborne; it is approached by an arcade from the High-street. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session for the division at the public office, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; a high bailiff and constables are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor; and the local affairs are under the control of commissioners appointed by an act passed in the 2nd of George IV. By an ancient manorial custom, confirmed by act of parliament, land descends as by common law, but the eldest female inherits solely. The new gaol, near St. George's square, is a convenient edifice, erected in 1814.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, and in the patronage of the Society for the purchase of Livings. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient cruciform structure, in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture, with a square tower rising from the intersection and surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire; on the east side of the north transept is a grand circular window, fifteen feet in diameter, divided into thirty-three compartments, and filled with tracery of the decorated and later styles intermixed; the east window of the chancel and others are also fine compositions: an antique altar-piece, presented by the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester, has been lately erected; there is also a piscina in the chancel: the churchyard, which is extensive, is planted with double rows of lime-trees; and there is an ancient stone cross of one single shaft, with an ascent of several steps. The church of the Holy Trinity, in Portland-street, a handsome structure in the later style of English architecture, was erected by subscription, having been finished by Lord Sherborne, and was consecrated in 1823: St. John's, in Berkeley-place, was built at the expense of the present incumbent: another church has lately been erected in Suffolk-square; the living of each of these is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of trustees elected by the subscribers, for a term of forty years, at the expiration of which the right of presentation becomes vested in the Perpetual Curate of Cheltenham. A new free church is also just completed, at an expense of £6500, half of which has been defrayed by a grant from the parliamentary commissioners, the remainder having been raised by subscription among the inhabitants. A new burial-ground has also been purchased by the parishioners, but it has not yet been enclosed. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, those in the connexion of the late Countess of Huntingdon, Independents, Wesleyan and other Methodists, and Roman Catholics.

The free grammar school was founded and endowed, in 1574, by Richard Pates, Esq.; the endowment, augmented by Queen Elizabeth, produces, in addition to a rent-free residence, a salary of £30 per annum to the master, who is appointed by the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. There are eight scholarships in Pembroke College, Oxford, founded in 1682 by George Townsend, Esq., for boys from Gloucester, Cheltenham, Chipping-Campden, and North Leach, with preference in presentation to his donatives of Uxbridge and Colnbrook: the same benefactor also founded and endowed a school here, for the instruction of poor boys in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and similar schools in the parishes of Winchcombe, Chipping-Campden, North Leach, and Nether Guiting, or Blockley, for apprenticing whom he appropriated part of the income, which amounts to £207 per annum; the apprentice-fee, originally £5, is, according to circumstances, augmented to £15 or £20. The Rev. William Stansby, in 1704, gave land producing £25 per annum, subject to a rent-charge of £8, the residue being applied to the same purpose. A portion of an endowment by Lady Capel, amounting to £37. 10. per annum, is paid to a schoolmaster for the instruction of poor children. The National school, a school for girls under the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester, and an infant school, the building for which was erected in 1830, are supported by subscription. Almshouses for six aged persons were founded and endowed by Richard Pates, Esq., in 1574. The dispensary and casualty ward, established in 1813, and lately enlarged, is supported by subscription; and there are many other charitable institutions, among which may be noticed the female orphan asylum, the Cobourg society for the relief of indigent married women in child-birth, and the Dorcas society: there is also a bank for savings.

CHELVESTON, a parish in the hundred of HIGHAM-FERRERS, county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Higham-Ferrers, containing, with Caldecott, 317 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Higham-Ferrers, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children.

CHELVEY, a parish in the hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, county of SOMERSET, 8 miles (W. S. W.) from Bristol, containing 62 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £4. 9. 7., and in the patronage of Lady Anne Tynte. The church is dedicated to St. Bridget.

CHELWOOD, a parish in the hundred of KEYNSHAM, county of SOMERSET, 2 miles (S. E.) from Pensford, containing 222 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £5. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard; the tower was rebuilt in 1772. There is an endowed chapel belonging to the Independents. The parish contains extensive mines of coal.

CHELWORTH, a tything in the parish of St. Sampson, borough of CRICKLADE, hundred of HIGH-

WORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W.) from Cricklade. The population is returned with the parish.

CHENIES, a parish in the hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Amersham, containing 595 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The old manor-house, which formerly belonged to the Cheynes, lords of the manor, and was much improved by Lord Russell, in the time of Henry VIII., yet exists at the west end of the church. Attached to it is a chapel, built in 1556, by Anne, Countess of Bedford, according to the will of her deceased lord, John, Earl of Bedford, which is used as a place of sepulture by the family; in the vault underneath are upwards of fifty coffins, with inscriptions bearing date from 1591 to 1819. Here is a large paper-mill. A National school has been established, and there is an hospital for ten poor persons, founded and endowed in 1603, by Anne, Countess of Warwick, daughter of the second earl of Bedford. John Russell, Esq., ancestor of his Grace the Duke of Bedford, was raised to the peerage in 1538-9, by the title of Baron Russell of Cheyneys, which his descendants have continued to bear.

CHEPSTOW, a port, market town, and parish, in the upper division of the hundred of CALDICOTT, county of MONMOUTH, 15 miles (S. by E.) from Monmouth, and 131 (W.) from London, containing 3008 inhabitants. This place, called by the Britons Cás Gwent, and by most antiquaries supposed to have risen from the ruins of the ancient city Venta, about four miles to the west, derives its present name from the Saxon Chepe, a market, and Stowe, a town: it obtained also the name Striguil from the earls of Pembroke, to whom it belonged at the time of the Conquest, and who, from their residing in a neighbouring castle of that name, were called lords of Striguil, by which designation the manorial courts are still held. Soon after the Conquest, a strong castle was erected, probably by William Fitz-Osborn, Earl of Hereford, on the summit of a rocky precipice overhanging the river Wye, of which there are considerable remains richly overspread with ivy, and forming a picturesque and stately object from various points of view. About the same time the town was fortified with strong walls of considerable extent, several portions of which, together with the bastions erected for their defence, are still remaining. In the reign of Stephen, a priory of Benedictine monks was founded here, and dedicated to St. Mary, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £32. 4. During the parliamentary war, the inhabitants adhered firmly to the royal cause, and the castle was not surrendered to the parliamentary forces till after a vigorous siege, in which it sustained considerable damage. On the Restoration of Charles II., Henry Marten, one of those who sat in judgment on Charles I., was confined in the castle till his death.

The town is beautifully situated on the river Wye, near its confluence with the Severn, and is built on the slope of a hill, among the lofty cliffs that rise abruptly from the western bank of the river: a handsome iron bridge has been erected over the Wye, at the joint expense of the counties of Gloucester and Monmouth, of which the river forms the line of separation: it consists of several spacious and well paved streets, in which are many handsome well built houses, and is lighted with oil, towards defraying the expense of which the late J. Bowcher, Esq. bequeathed £1000; but it is very ill supplied with water, the inhabitants being obliged to procure it at the distance of a mile and a half. There is a small theatre, opened occasionally. The trade principally consists in navy timber, oak-bark, and iron; ship-building is carried on to a considerable extent, for which there are convenient docks on the banks of the Wye. The river, at spring tides, rises to the height of sixty feet at Chepstow bridge, and affords convenient access to the harbour: seventy-two ships, of an aggregate burden of five thousand eight hundred and five tons, belonged to the port in 1829: in 1826, the number of vessels entered inwards from foreign parts was thirteen British, and of those cleared outwards, three. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday; and there are also great markets on the last Monday in every month for horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, and wool: the fairs are on the Friday and Saturday in Whitsun-week, the Saturday before June 20th, August 1st, and the Friday before October 29th. The county magistrates here hold petty sessions for the division. The old passage over the Severn, within two miles of the town, has been greatly improved by the erection of stone piers, and the establishment of a regular steam-packet by some gentlemen in the neighbourhood, assisted by the Duke of Beaufort, who is lord of the manor; it may now be crossed with safety at any time of the tide: the ferry is under the direction of a superintendent, and governed by salutary regulations.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the alternate patronage of Edward Bearan, Esq. and Mrs. Burr. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, and formerly the conventual church of the priory, exhibits a fine specimen of Norman architecture at the western entrance, and contains the tomb of Marten, who died in the castle. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. A charity school for thirteen poor children was endowed with land, in 1605, by Richard Clayton, Esq. A National school for an unlimited number of children of both sexes, and a philanthropic institution, are supported by subscription. Sir William Montagu's hospital, for thirteen aged persons, was founded by that gentleman, in 1614, and endowed with land. Powis' almshouse, for six men and six women, was founded, in 1716, by Thomas Powis, Esq., who bequeathed £1800 for its erection and endowment.

CHERRILL, a parish in the hundred of CALNE, county of WILTS, 3 miles (E.) from Calne, containing 346 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Calne, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Treasurer in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. James. On the summit of a hill near the village is Oldborough, or Oldbury, camp, to which it is supposed the Danes retreated after the battle of Ethandune; and on its slope is the figure of a white horse, one hundred and fifty-seven feet long, in the attitude of trotting, cut out of the turf on the chalk rock; it was executed about forty years ago, under the direction and at the expense of Dr. Christopher Allsop, an eminent physician of Calne, and from its lofty situation, this being the highest land between London and Bath, is visible at the distance of twenty or thirty miles, in almost every direction. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children.

CHERRINGTON, a parish in the Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 3½ miles (S.E.) from Shipston upon Stour, containing 316 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £11. 10. 7½., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Nicholl. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

CHERRITON, a parish in the hundred of FOLKESTONE, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 2½ miles (W. by N.) from Folkestone, containing, exclusively of the officers and men employed in the preventive service, 1121 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the vicarage of Newington united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £16. 12. 6., and in the patronage of J. D. Brockman, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is in the early style of English architecture.

CHERRITON, a parish in the hundred of FAWLEY, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (S. by W.) from New Alresford, containing, with the tything of Beaworth, 599 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacies of Kilmeston and Titchbourn annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated in the king's books at £66. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. A battle was fought here in the reign of Charles I., called Alresford fight. The parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. Twenty poor children are instructed by a schoolmistress, for £12 per annum, the produce of a bequest by the Rev. Morgan Jones.

CHERRITON (BISHOP), a parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, 6½ miles (S.W.) from Crediton, containing 753 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £22. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHERRITON (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of HORETHORNE, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S.W. by S.) from Wincanton, containing 216 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £8. 12. 1., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Gatehouse. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

CHERRITON (SOUTH), a hamlet in the parish of HORSINGTON, hundred of HORETHORNE, county of SOMERSET, 3½ miles (S.S.W.) from Wincanton. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, but it has been demolished.

CHERRITON-FITZPAINE, a parish in the western division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, 4½ miles (N.E. by N.) from Crediton, containing 1002 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £37. 6. 8., and in the patronage of — Harris, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The tythings of Bradley and Fulford are partly in this parish, but are wholly returned with the parish of Crediton. There is an almshouse for six poor people, founded and endowed in 1594, by Andrew Scott, besides a small endowed charity school.

CHERRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of LONGTREE, county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Tetbury, containing 215 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Brettingham. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a small ancient edifice, with a nave, chancel, south transept, and low tower at the west end, exhibiting, in some parts, traces of the early English style. The Rev. Joseph Trapp, Professor of Poetry at Oxford, and the translator of Virgil, was born here, in 1672; he died in 1747. There is a trifling endowment for teaching poor children.

CHERRINGTON, a township in the parish of EDMOND, Newport division of the hundred of BRADFORD (South), county of SALOP, containing 192 inhabitants.

CHERTSEY, a market town and parish in the second division of the hundred of GODLEY, county of SURREY, 13 miles (N. N. E.) from Guildford, and 20 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 4279 inhabitants. At this place Cæsar is supposed, on landing in Britain, to have crossed the Thames to attack Cassibelaunus, King of the Trinobantes, whose army had encamped on the opposite shore: the stakes driven into the bed of the river to obstruct the passage of the Roman legions were, according to Bede, remaining in the eighth century, and vestiges of them may still be traced about a quarter of a mile below the bridge. During the Octarchy, the South Saxon kings had their residence in this town; and it became noted for a Benedictine monastery, founded in 666, by Erkenwald, afterwards Bishop of London, which, having been burnt to the ground in the war with the Danes, was refounded by King Edgar, and dedicated to St. Peter. In this abbey Henry VI. was privately interred; but his remains were subsequently removed, and deposited, with appropriate solemnities, in the royal chapel at Windsor. At the dissolution, its revenue was £774. 13. 6.: some portions of the outer walls remain, and on the site, and with part of the materials, of the abbey a private mansion, called the Abbey House, has been erected. The town is pleasantly situated upon the Thames, over which is a handsome stone bridge of seven arches, built in 1785, at an expense of £13,000, defrayed jointly by the counties of Surrey and Middlesex: the houses are in general neatly built of brick; the streets are partially paved, but not lighted; and the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water from springs. The trade is principally in malt and flour; the manufacture of coarse thread, and the making of iron hoops and brooms, are carried on to a considerable extent; a great quantity of bricks is also made in the neighbourhood. The Guildford and Petworth canal passes within two miles of the town, and joins the river Wey at Weybridge, affording a facility of conveyance for the several articles of manufacture, and for a great quantity of vegetables, which are cultivated in the environs for the London market. The market, chartered by Queen Elizabeth in 1559, is on Wednesday: the fairs are on the first Monday and Tuesday in Lent, for cattle; May 14th, for sheep; and August 6th and September 25th, for toys and pedlary: a court of pie-powder is attached to the fair in Lent. The town is governed by a bailiff, appointed for life by letters patent from the Exchequer, and, together with the hundred, is exempt from the jurisdiction of the high sheriff for the county, but is within that of the county magistrates, who hold a meeting for the division on the first and third Wednesdays in every month. Headboroughs and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor, held on Tuesday in Whitsun-week, who also holds a court baron on the following day at Hardwick Court, now a farm-house, but once the manorial mansion, in which Henry VI. resided when a child.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £13. 12. 4., and in the patronage of the Master and Wardens of the Haberdashers' Company, as trustees to certain orphans. The church, dedicated to All Saints, a handsome structure in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower, was rebuilt by subscription in 1808: it contains a tablet to the memory of the celebrated statesman, Charles James Fox, and several monuments to the Mawbey family. There are places of worship for Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians. A charity school, originally for the instruction and clothing of twenty-five boys and twenty-five girls of this and the adjoining parishes of Thorpe, Egham, and Cobham, was founded, in 1725, by Sir William Perkins, who, during his lifetime, appropriated two houses for school-rooms, and, at his decease, endowed them with £3000 Bank Stock; this sum, augmented by an accumulating annual surplus, being vested in the same and other species of stock, produces at present nearly £400 per annum: the school, by permission of the court of Chancery, has been extended, upon the National plan, for the instruction of two hundred and thirty boys and one hundred and thirty girls, of whom thirty of each sex belonging to this parish are clothed. There are some almshouses, which are at present chiefly under the management of the overseers. The tolls and profits arising from stallage in the market and fairs were granted by Queen Elizabeth to the poor, for whose benefit there are also various other charitable benefactions. Near the town is St. Anne's hill, commanding an extensive prospect, formerly the residence of the late Rt. Hon. Charles James Fox, and now occupied by his widow, in which are some tessellated pavements collected from the ruins of the abbey: the water of St. Anne's well was formerly in repute for its efficacy in curing diseases of the eye. The poet Cowley lived for some time in an ancient house in the town, called the Porch House, in which he died: Mr. Day, author of "Sandford and Merton," also resided in the vicinity.

CHESEL, a hamlet in the parish of WEST WINTERSLOW, hundred of ALDERBURY, county of WILTS, 8 miles (E. by N.) from Salisbury. The population is returned with the parish. About a mile from this place is a curious earthwork, of an oval form, containing five acres, and supposed to have been a Roman amphitheatre; on the north side is a large rampart.

CHESELBORNE, a parish in the hundred of WHITEWAY, Cerne subdivision of the county of DORSET, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 336 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £18. 10. 5., and in the patronage of Lord Rivers. In the churchyard is an ancient stone cross.

CHESHAM, a market town and parish in the hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 30 miles (S.E.) from Buckingham, and 29 (N. W. by W.) from London, comprising the chapelry of Lattimers, with its hamlets of Waterside and Botley, and the hamlets of Ashley-Green, Billington, Chartridge, and Hundridge with Ashridge, and containing 5032 inhabitants. The town is situated in a pleasant and fertile valley, watered by a brook flowing through it into the river Colne, which rises in the neighbourhood: it consists of three streets, and was formerly noted for its extensive manufacture of wooden ware and turnery, which has of late much declined: the prevailing branch of employment for the labouring class is the making of shoes for the London market; and many females are occupied in making lace and straw-plat: there are several mills worked by the brook for the manufacture of paper, and a small silk-mill worked by machinery. The market days are Wednesday, for corn, which is pitched in the market-place, and Saturday, for straw-plat and provisions: fairs are held on April 21st and July 22nd, for cattle; and September 28th, a statute fair. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, formerly consisting of the medieties of Chesham-Leicester and Chesham-Woburn, each rated in the king's books at £13. 1. 5½., but consolidated in 1767, and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient cruciform structure, with a square embattled tower surmounted by a low spire; in the chancel is a monument, from an elegant design by Bacon, to the memory of Nicholas Skottowe, Esq. There are four places of worship for dissenters, two of which are for Baptists. A National school for an unlimited number of boys has been established, and is supported by subscription. Almshouses for four aged persons were founded by Mr. Thomas Weedon, citizen and draper of London, and endowed with £35 per annum. A mineral spring has been lately discovered. At Ashridge, in this parish, a college for a rector and twenty brethren was founded, in 1283, by Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £447. 18.

CHESHAM-BOIS, a parish in the hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. by E.) from Chesham, containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a rectory and a donative, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, contains a curious pulpit and painted window of some antiquity; it was formerly a chapel of ease to the vicarage of Chesham. The northern part of this parish is crossed by a branch of the river Coln, on which there are a paper-mill and a corn-mill.

CHESHIRE, a maritime county, and a county palatine, bounded on the north by the æstuary of the Mersey, the county palatine of Lancaster, and a small part of the county of York; on the east by the counties of Derby and Stafford; on the south by the county of Salop, and a detached portion of the county of Flint; on the west by the counties of Denbigh and Flint, and the æstuary of the Dee; and on the north-west by the Irish sea. It extends from 53° to $53^{\circ} 36'$ (N. Lat.), and from $1^{\circ} 46'$ to $3^{\circ} 22'$ (W. Long.); and includes, according to Holland's survey, six hundred and seventy-six thousand six hundred acres, or about one thousand and fifty-seven square miles. The population, in 1821, amounted to 270,098. The name is a contraction of Chestershire. At the time of the Roman invasion, this county formed part of the territory occupied by the Cornavii. In the first division of Britain by the Romans, it was included in Britannia Superior; and, in their subsequent subdivision, it became part of Flavia Cæsariensis. After the establishment of the Saxon dominion, this portion of the British territory remained free from it until the year 607, when the defeat of the Britons, by Ethelfred, King of Northumberland, rendered so memorable by the subsequent massacre of the monks of Bangor, took place here: several British princes, however, having assembled an army, marched towards Chester, defeated Ethelfred with great slaughter, and drove him away: nor was this district again subjected to the Anglo-Saxon power until the year 828, when Chester was taken by King Egbert, and made part of the kingdom of Mercia. About the close of the year 894, according to the Saxon Chronicle, an army of Danes, advancing from Northumberland by forced marches, took possession of Chester. Thither King Alfred marched with his forces, but arrived too late to prevent the Danes seizing the fortress: the Saxons, however, by destroying all the cattle and corn in the neighbourhood, and intercepting the provisions, drove the Danes to such extremities, that they quitted the city, and retreated into North Wales. Upon the division of England into three great districts by Alfred, Cheshire was included in that called Mercenlege, or the Mercian jurisdiction. From this period, except the rebuilding of Chester, which had been destroyed by the Danes, and the erection of several fortresses, nothing remarkable occurred until the year 981, when the coast was laid waste by pirates. In the reign of William the Conqueror, Cheshire acquired the privileges of a county palatine; that sovereign having granted to his nephew, Hugh d'Averanches, or d'Avranches, commonly called Hugh Lupus, the whole county, to hold as freely by the sword as he himself held the kingdom of England by the crown.

The next two centuries after the Norman Conquest are chiefly distinguished by the inroads of the Welch, and the preparations made by the English sovereigns to resist them, or to make irruptions into their country. During this time the city of Chester was the usual place of rendezvous for the English army; and all that part of the county bordering on Wales suffered extremely, not only from the ravages of the enemy, but from the destruction caused at intervals by the command of the English sovereigns, to prevent the Welch being benefited by plunder. From such a series of inroads and retaliations the county endured all the evils of a border warfare, until the final subjection of Wales to the English crown: the barony of Halton was held under the Earl of Chester, by the service of leading the vanguard of the earl's army, whenever he should march into Wales. The only event worthy of notice that occurred in the baronial wars, during the reigns of John and Henry III., is the capture of Chester, in 1264, by the Earl of Derby. Soon after, Henry, Earl of Lancaster, appeared in arms against Richard II.; having received encouragement from the inhabitants of the city and the county, he came to Chester, and stayed there several days, mustering his army within sight of the city. At Chester, also, the Duke of Lancaster and the king remained one night, on their way towards London, after the conference at Flint. A few years afterwards the inhabitants of Cheshire took part in the rebellion of the Percies, the event of which was particularly disastrous to them; the greater part of the knights and esquires of the whole county, to the number of two hundred, with a great many of their retainers, being slain in the decisive battle of Shrewsbury, July 22nd, 1403. With the exception of Chester having been for a short time the head-quarters of the Duke of Lancaster's army, the county does not appear to have been the scene of any military transactions, from the reign of Henry III. to that of Charles I.; but the warlike prowess of the Cheshire heroes during that period has been highly extolled in the English annals. Soon after the commencement of the parliamentary war, an attempt was made by the principal persons of this county, who were nearly equally divided between the king and the parliament, to preserve its internal peace; and a treaty of pacification was entered into at Bunbury, on the 23rd of December, by Robert, Lord Kilmorey, and others, under the sanction of the commissioners of array; but the articles then agreed upon were rendered nugatory by an ordinance of parliament, which required the inhabitants to maintain and assist the common cause, pursuant to their former resolutions; and for their better encouragement, Sir William Brereton, a gentleman of the county, and one of its representatives in parliament, was sent down with a troop of horse and a regiment of dragoons for their protection; the king, on the other hand, sent Sir Nicholas Byron, with a commission, by which he was appointed Colonel-General of Cheshire and Shropshire, and governor of Chester, which was made the head-quarters of the royal party. Sir Nicholas, on his arrival in Cheshire, soon raised a considerable force, and had frequent skirmishes with the parliamentary troops. Sir William Brereton, on the other hand, having taken possession of Nantwich for the parliament, fortified it, and fixed his head-quarters in that town. About the end of November 1643, a considerable body of troops arrived from Ireland, for the king's service, and were ordered to remain at Chester, under the command of Lord Byron, the governor's nephew, who employed them on various services, and with their assistance reduced several parliamentary garrisons. In the month of December, Lord Byron, with his Irish regiments, defeated the whole of the parliament's forces, under the command of Sir William Brereton, at Middlewich. Nantwich being now the only garrison in Cheshire in possession of the parliament, was besieged during the greater part of January 1644, but was relieved by Sir Thomas Fairfax and Sir William Brereton, whose united forces defeated Lord Byron's army, the remains of which, with their commander, retreated to Chester on the 25th. Stockport was taken by Prince Rupert, without any resistance, on the 25th of May.

On the 25th of August, a severe action was fought at Old Castle-heath, near Malpas, in which the royalists were defeated. The king advancing towards Chester with a large force, about the middle of May 1645, the parliament abandoned all their garrisons except Tarvin and Nantwich. On the 27th of September the battle of Rowton and Hoole-heath, near Chester, was fought, in which the king's army, commanded by Sir Marmaduke Langdale, being overpowered by the joint forces of General Poyntz and Colonel Jones, the latter of whom had hastened from the siege of Chester to the general's assistance, was defeated and put to flight, the event having been witnessed by the king himself from the walls of Chester. On the 3rd of February, 1646, the garrison of Chester, after a vigorous and obstinate defence under Lord Byron, surrendered on honourable terms; and upon this the parliament became masters of the whole county.

When the royalists in the north made an attempt to restore the king, in May 1648, the gentlemen of Cheshire in the interest of the parliament fortified the castle and city of Chester, for which they received the thanks of that body; they engaged also to raise three regiments of foot and one of horse, if they should be wanted, for the defence of the county. After the defeat of the Duke of Hamilton, at Preston, that nobleman retreating with about three thousand horse, the remains of the Scottish army, through Nantwich towards Uttoxeter, in August 1648, the gentlemen of the county took about five hundred of them. In August 1651, the Scottish army, under Charles II., was quartered for a short time at Nantwich, previously to the battle of Worcester; after which decisive action, a party of the king's cavalry, on their retreat northward, passing through Sandbach, it being the fair day, were attacked by the country people, and a hundred of them taken prisoners. During the months of June and July, 1655, many of the principal gentry were sent prisoners to the castle at Chester, on suspicion of being disaffected to Cromwell's government. In August 1659, Sir George Booth, who, as it was afterwards known, had a commission from Charles II., appointing him commander-in-chief of all his forces in Cheshire, Lancashire, and North Wales, here appeared in arms at the head of an army of upwards of three thousand men; he was accompanied by the Earl of Derby, Lord Cholmondeley, Lord Kilmorey, and several of the principal gentlemen of the county: they mustered upon Rowton heath, and there read and published a declaration, setting forth, that they took up arms for a free parliament, and to deliver the nation from the slavery of its oppressors. But General Lambert being sent by the parliament with an army against Sir George Booth, the hostile parties met at Winnington bridge, near Northwich, on the 16th of August, when an action ensued, in which Booth's forces were soon defeated. After the engagement Lambert marched to Chester, which was then held by Col. Croxton, who immediately surrendered it. To punish the revolters, the parliament passed a vote on the 17th of September, dissolving the corporation of the city of Chester, and depriving it of its independent jurisdiction. On the eve of the Revolution, Henry, Lord Delamere, having heard of the landing of the prince of Orange, raised a great force in Cheshire and Lancashire, declared in his favour, and immediately set forwards on his march to join him; meanwhile Lord Molineux and Lord Aston seized Chester for King James. In the rebellion of 1745, the young Pretender led his followers through Cheshire, on his way to Derby; and, on the approach of the Duke of Cumberland, retreated by the same route.

This county is within the diocese of Chester, and province of York: it forms an archdeaconry, and comprises the seven deaneries of Chester, Frodsham, Macclesfield, Nantwich, Malpas, Middlewich, and Wirrall, containing eighty-seven parishes, of which forty-six are rectories, twenty-three vicarages, and eighteen perpetual curacies. For civil purposes it is divided into the seven hundreds of Broxton, Bucklow, Eddisbury, Macclesfield, Nantwich, Northwich, and Wirrall. It contains the city and port of Chester (which, however, is a county within itself), and the market towns of Altrincham, Congleton, Frodsham, Knutsford, Macclesfield, Malpas, Middlewich, Nantwich, Northwich, Sandbach, Stockport, and Tarporley. The grant of this county, made by the Conqueror to his nephew Hugh Lupus, constituted the representative of the latter the first hereditary earl in England: by the terms of this grant he acquired jura regalia within the county, in the exercise of which he created eight parliamentary barons, one of whom was hereditary constable, and another hereditary steward; he assembled parliaments, and established courts of law. His descendants continued to enjoy this sovereignty until the death of John, Earl of Chester, in 1237, who having no male issue, Henry III. seized on the county of Chester, gave other lands in lieu of it to the sisters of the deceased earl, and bestowed the earldom on his son, Prince Edward. Richard II., having erected it into a principality, amongst his other titles, styled himself Princeps Cestrie: this act was abrogated by his successor, and Cheshire again became a county palatine, and continued, under the king's eldest sons, as earls of Chester, to be governed, as in the time of its ancient earls, by a jurisdiction separate from, and independent of, the parliament of England. The city of Chester was separated from the county and erected into a county of itself by Henry VII., in the 21st year of his reign. The ancient privileges of the county palatine were much abridged in the 27th of Henry VIII., prior to which time the Lord High Chancellor of England did not appoint justices of peace, justices of quorum, or of gaol delivery, within the county. The authority of the earl in the palatinate was as absolute as that of the king throughout the realm: he had power to pardon for treason and felony, and to rescind outlawries; to make justices of eyre, assize, gaol delivery, and of the peace; and all original and judicial writs, and indictments for treason and felony, with the process thereupon, were made in his name. In consequence of this curtailment of its privileges, the county petitioned that it might send knights and burgesses to the parliament of the realm, in accordance with which an act was passed in the year 1542, enacting that thenceforward two knights should be returned to parliament for the county palatine, and two burgesses for the city of Chester. The authority of the judges and officers of the great session of the county palatine, which, says Lord Coke, is the most ancient and honourable remaining in England, extends over the counties of Chester and Flint, for both which one seal is used: the king's writ does not run in the county palatine, all writs issuing from the superior courts being directed to the chamberlain of Chester, who issues his mandate to the sheriff. The chamberlain has, within the county palatine and the county of the city of Chester, the jurisdiction of chancellor; and the court of Exchequer at Chester is the Chancery court, whereof the chamberlain, or his deputy, is the sole judge in equity; he is also judge at the common law within the said limits: the other officers of the court are, the vice-chamberlain, baron, seal-keeper, filizer, examiner, six clerks or attorneys of the court, and some inferior officers. There is also within the county palatine "the Justice of Chester," who has jurisdiction of all pleas of the crown and common pleas of all matters arising therein, as also of fines and recoveries levied and suffered, as well within the county palatine as the city of Chester; and no inhabitant of the county can be compelled by any writ or process to answer elsewhere to any matter or cause, except in cases of treason, and on writ of error. The assizes, and the Epiphany and Easter quarter sessions for the county palatine, are held at Chester; the Midsummer and Michaelmas quarter sessions take place at Knutsford. The county gaol is at Chester, and the house of correction at Knutsford. There are sixty-nine acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1829, amounted to £137,886, and the expenditure to £136,772, of which £98,105 was applied to the relief of the poor.

The cotton manufacture is carried on to a considerable extent in several parts of the county, especially in Stockport and its vicinity, Macclesfield, Marple, and Congleton. There are numerous silk-mills at Congleton, Macclesfield, Stockport, and Sandbach. The weaving of ribands is carried on at Congleton, and that of silk handkerchiefs at Macclesfield, where silk ferret also is made: at Knutsford is a considerable manufacture of thread. The manufacture of hats for exportation at Stockport, Macclesfield, and Nantwich, and of shoes at Sandbach is considerable. Some woollen cloths are made at the north-eastern extremity of the county, in the parish of Mottram: tanning is extensively carried on throughout the county, more especially in the middle and northern parts.

The surface of the county being almost uniformly level, and not abounding in wood, has little picturesque beauty. The principal hills are those on the borders of Derbyshire, which extend along the eastern side of the parishes of Astbury, Prestbury, and Mottram; a range of hills in the hundred of Broxton; Bucklow hills; Frodsham hills; and Alderley-Edge, a singular isolated hill, in the hundred of Macclesfield. According to Mr. Holland, there are six hundred and twenty thousand acres in cultivation, including parks and pleasure-grounds; twenty-eight thousand in waste lands, commons, and woods; eighteen thousand in marshes and mosses; and ten thousand in sea-sands, within the æstuaries of the Mersey and the Dee. The prevailing soil is a mixture of clay and sand, the clay for the most part predominating. There is a considerable extent of black moor, or peat-moss land, chiefly in that part of the hundred of Macclesfield which borders on Derbyshire and Yorkshire; there are some mosses of smaller extent in the neighbourhood of Coppenhall and Warrington, but Coppenhall moss has been greatly improved. In former times Cheshire contained some very extensive forests, of which those of Delamere and Macclesfield were the principal: the former, comprising ten thousand acres of land, lay waste until within the last twenty years, but five thousand have been planted with forest trees, under the direction of government, and the remainder either planted or in a state of cultivation. Though there are, exclusively of this, but few extensive woods, the quantity of timber growing in the county in hedge-rows and coppices greatly exceeds that in the majority of counties: the estates of the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, the Marquis of Cholmondeley, and Earl Grosvenor, in particular, abound with fine timber. Vale Royal received its distinguishing epithet from Edward I., who founded a Cistercian monastery within its limits, which was fifty-three years in building, having been begun in 1277, and completed in 1330, at an expense of £32,000. There are several small lakes, called meres, or pools. Combermere is a fine piece of water, nearly three quarters of a mile in length, close to the site of Combermere Abbey. Bar-mere, in the parish of Malpas, is nearly of the same extent: the other principal ones are, the Mere, which gives name to a township in the parish of Rosthern, Comberbachmere, Oakhanger-mere, Pick-mere, Rosthern-mere, and Chapel-mere and Moss-mere, two beautiful sheets of water in the front of Cholmondeley castle. The richest and most extensive views are those from Alderley-Edge, Halton and Beeston castles, Mowcop and Shuttingslow hills, Carden Cliff, and Overton Sear, and from the western edge of Delamere Forest: in most of these views Beeston castle, situated on a precipitous and isolated rock of sand-stone, is a prominent object.

The staple productions of the county are cheese and salt, both having, from a very early period, been among its principal articles of exportation. The richest and best cheese is produced from land of an inferior quality; but the greatest quantity from the richest land. Among the districts most celebrated for making the prime cheese are, the neighbourhood of Nantwich for a circuit of five miles, the parish of Over, the greater part of the banks of the river Weaver, and several farms near Congleton and Middlewich. It is calculated by Mr. Holland, in his survey, that the number of cows kept for the dairy in this county is about thirty-two thousand; and that the quantity of cheese annually made is about eleven thousand five hundred tons. The greater part of the cheese, particularly that made in the southern part of the county, is sold to the London cheesemongers, through the medium of factors who reside in the neighbourhood: some is sent by the Mersey to Liverpool, some inland by the Staffordshire canal, and a considerable quantity by other canals, to the markets at Stockport and Manchester. The manufacture of salt yielded a considerable revenue to the crown before the Norman Conquest. About a century ago the salt made here was not more than adequate to the consumption of this and a few adjoining counties; but partly in consequence of improvements in the art of making it, and partly from other causes, the manufacture of white salt has greatly increased. From May 1805 to May 1806, the quantity produced at the brine-pits, exclusively of that made at Nantwich and Frodsham, which was disposed of for home consumption, amounted to sixteen thousand five hundred and ninety tons and seventy-seven bushels. The annual average of white salt sent down the Weaver from Winsford and Northwich, for ten years prior to 1814, was one hundred and thirty-nine thousand three hundred and seventeen tons, principally for the supply of the fisheries of Scotland, Ireland, the ports on the Baltic, the United States of America, Newfoundland, and the British Colonies. The discovery of the rock-salt in 1670 forms an important era in the history of this staple commodity. There are now ten or twelve pits of rock-salt worked in the neighbourhood of Northwich, in the townships of Witton, Marston, and Wincham, from some of which one hundred tons are raised in a day: some of the mines are worked in a circular form, and are three hundred yards in diameter. The rock-salt is sent down the Weaver from Northwich: about a third of it is refined at the salt-works at Frodsham and on the Lancashire side of the Mersey; but the greater part is carried to Liverpool, whence it is exported to Ireland and the ports on the Baltic. The average quantity annually sent down the Weaver from Northwich, for ten years prior to 1814, was fifty-one thousand one hundred and nine tons. In 1805 there were two thousand nine hundred and fifty persons employed in the salt manufacture. Potatoes are cultivated to a great extent in the neighbourhoods of Altrincham and Frodsham, and in the hundred of Wirrall; in the parish of Frodsham alone, it is calculated that one hundred thousand bushels have been raised annually. They are chiefly sent to the Lancashire markets by the river Mersey, and by the Duke of Bridgewater's canal: the town of Manchester is supplied with an abundance of potatoes and other vegetables from the neighbourhood of Altrincham, and that of Liverpool both from Frodsham and the hundred of Wirrall; a great quantity of early potatoes is raised in Wirrall by a peculiar mode of cultivation, and carried to market early in May.

Among the mineral products, coal is found abundant and of good quality in a district in the north-eastern part of the county, extending about ten miles from north to south, in which, especially in the townships of Poynton and Worth, are very extensive collieries that supply the populous town of Stockport. At Denwall, in the hundred of Wirrall, is a colliery, first opened about the year 1750, which extends a mile and three-quarters from high water mark under the river Dee, having two canals under the river, one of which is carried to the extremity of the works: the coal is chiefly exported to Ireland. There are lead-works at Alderley-Edge, where also a considerable quantity of cobalt has been procured, and conveyed to Ferrybridge, in Yorkshire, having been there manufactured into small little inferior in colour to that imported from Saxony. There are several quarries of excellent freestone, of which those of Runcorn, Marley, and Great Bebington, are the chief; the quarries at Runcorn being situated near the Duke of Bridgewater's canal, a considerable quantity of stone is sent from them to Manchester, Liverpool, and Chester. Marl exists in almost every part of the county, and is extensively used for manure. A great quantity of oak and fir timber has been dug out of some of the mosses, and used for fuel, and sometimes for the interior of buildings.

The principal rivers are the Dee, the Mersey, the Weever, the Dane, the Bollin, the Peover, the Wheelock, and the Tame. The Dee rises in Merionethshire, runs through Bala Pool, and, after skirting the counties of Denbigh and Flint, becomes a boundary to Cheshire near Shocklach, passing by Farndon to Aldford, where it enters the county. It then flows past Eaton Hall and Eccleston to Chester, where it is received into an artificial channel, the first sod of which was dug on the 20th of April, 1733, and carried along the marshes, under Hawarden castle, to its æstuary, where it spreads over an extent of sands in some parts seven miles in breadth. The navigation of this river, by which, in former times, vessels were brought up to the walls of Chester, became so much obstructed by sands, from the frequent changing of the channel, as to occasion the total ruin of the haven of Chester, before the year 1449: to remedy this, a new quay, or haven, was made, nearly six miles from Chester, about the middle of the following century. In 1560, a pecuniary collection for the new haven at Chester was made in all churches throughout the kingdom; and, in 1567, there was an assessment for the same purpose in the city: it was at length completed, and for many years all goods and merchandise brought to, and conveyed from, the port of Chester, were there loaded and unloaded. In the year 1700, an act passed to enable the mayor and citizens of Chester to recover and preserve the navigation upon the river Dee. The projectors of this work were incorporated by the name of the River Dee Company; a subsequent act passed, in 1732, empowering them to enclose a large tract on the banks of the river, called the White Sands, on the condition of their making a navigable line from the sea to Chester: this new cut was begun the next year, and completed in 1754. In the year 1763, one thousand four hundred and eleven acres of land were recovered from the sea; six hundred and sixty-four acres in 1769, and three hundred and forty-eight in 1795; forming, by means of these and subsequent works, an extensive tract of reclaimed land. The new channel was at first intended only for vessels of two hundred tons' burden, but it is now navigable for ships of six hundred tons: the Dee is navigable for barges up to Bangor bridge. The Mersey is formed by the junction of the Etherow and Goyt rivers, between Compstall bridge and Marple bridge, whence it passes to Stockport, from which place to Liverpool it forms the boundary between Cheshire and Lancashire: opposite Warrington, where it meets the tide, it is only forty yards wide: at Runcorn-gap, where it communicates with the Trent and Mersey, or Grand Trunk canal, and with the Duke of Bridgewater's canal, its breadth is three hundred yards; below the gap it immediately spreads into a grand æstuary three miles in width, receiving in its course the navigable river Weever, from Northwich and Frodsham. As it proceeds northward from Runcorn, it gradually diminishes for six miles, and opposite Liverpool its width is only three-quarters of a mile; but it forms a fine channel, at least ten fathoms deep, at low water, very commodious for shipping: at the distance of about five miles, measuring by the Cheshire coast, it falls into the Irish sea, by two or three different channels, much obstructed by sands, but the passage is rendered secure by means of various land-marks, buoys, and lighthouses, and the good system of pilotage established by the Liverpool merchants; the whole course of this river is forty-four miles in length. The Weever rises on Bulkeley heath, and never quits the county; it passes by Nantwich to Winsford bridge, and thence to Northwich, where it joins the Dane, and soon afterwards the Peover; after this junction it passes by Frodsham to Weston, where it empties itself into the Mersey, after a course of about thirty-three miles: this river, in its natural state, having been navigable only at high tides, and for six miles above Frodsham bridge, a company of Cheshire gentlemen, in the year 1720, entered into a subscription, for the purpose of procuring an act of parliament to make it navigable from Frodsham bridge to Winsford bridge, a distance of about twenty miles. All incumbances brought on by the undertaking were discharged in the year 1778, since which time a considerable surplus, arising from tonnage, &c., has been annually paid into the county treasury, in aid of the rate, as provided by the act, after payment of the interest to the shareholders. The expense of erecting the public buildings on the site of Chester castle has been wholly defrayed out of the revenue of the Weever navigation. In consequence of the great increase of the salt trade, an additional cut, about four miles long, has been made from the Weir, near Frodsham bridge, to Weston-point, to prevent the delays formerly occasioned by the shallowness of the river at neap-tides. The Dane rises in Macclesfield Forest, near the Three Shire Mere, and after forming for some distance a boundary between Staffordshire and Cheshire, enters the latter county within two miles of Congleton, from which town it passes near Middlewich to Northwich, where it falls into the Weever, after a course of about twenty-two miles. The Bollin rises also in Macclesfield Forest, from several sources, and passes by Macclesfield to Rixton, where it falls into the Mersey, after a course of about twenty miles. The Peover is formed by the junction of two streams that meet at Chelford, and falls into the Weever near Northwich, after a course of about fifteen miles. The Wheelock is formed by the union of three streams near Sandbach, and falls into the Dane at Croxton, after a course of about twelve miles. The Tame rises in Yorkshire, and during almost the whole of its course, which is about ten miles, forms a boundary between Cheshire and Lancashire, falling into the Mersey near Stockport.

The canals that intersect various parts of the county are, the Duke of Bridgewater's, the Trent and Mersey, or Grand Trunk canal, the Ellesmere canal, the Chester and Nantwich and the Peak Forest canals. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal was begun in 1761; the communication between Manchester and Liverpool was opened in 1772, and the whole of the works at first projected were finished in 1776: this canal, which commences on the Duke of Bridgewater's estate, at Worsley, in Lancashire, enters Cheshire near Ashton on the Mersey, and passes near Altrincham to Runcorn, where it joins the Mersey, being conducted through a chain of ten locks: at this place is a rise of ninety-five feet, the only deviation from the level in the course of the canal, except at the vale of the Bollin, between Lymm and Altrincham, where an embankment has been made for the purpose of preserving it. The first act for making the Trent and Mersey, or Grand Trunk, canal passed in 1766: this canal communicates with the Duke of Bridgewater's at Preston-brook, and passes by Northwich and Middlewich, not far from Sand-shire: in its course through Cheshire there are four tunnels; one at Preston on the Hill, one thousand two hundred and forty-one yards in length; another at Barnton, in the parish of Great Budworth, five hundred and seventy-two yards long; another at Saltersfield, in the same parish, three hundred and fifty yards; and another at Hermitage, one hundred and thirty yards. The Ellesmere canal communicates with the Mersey at Whitby, at a place now called Ellesmere port; it passes through the eastern extremity of the hundred of Wirrall, and the south-east part of that of Broxton, to Chester, where it joins the Dee and the Chester canal: a branch from Whitchurch, completed in 1806, enters Cheshire at Grindley brook, and forms a junction with the Chester and Nantwich canal in the township of Hurleston, after a course in this county of eleven miles. The act for making the Chester and Nantwich canal passed in 1772, and the work was completed in 1778. The Peak Forest canal, the first act for which passed in 1794, enters Cheshire from Lancashire, crossing the river Tame at Duckenfield, and quits the county near Whalley bridge: it is carried over the river Mersey, near Marple, by an aqueduct of three arches, of sixty feet in the span, and seventy-eight feet high, the whole height being one hundred feet.

One of the great roads from London to Holyhead enters Cheshire in the township of Bridgemere, and passes through Nantwich, Tarporley, and Chester, three miles and a half beyond which it enters Flintshire, its course through this county being about thirty miles in extent. All the roads from London to Manchester pass through Cheshire; one of them enters it near Church-Lawton, passes through Knutsford and Altrincham, and quits the county a little beyond Cross-Street in the parish of Ashton: the road by way of Leek enters near Bosley mills, and passes through Macclesfield and Stockport: that through Buxton and Matlock enters at Whalley bridge, and passes through Stockport. The road from London to Liverpool enters Cheshire at Lawton, and passes through Congleton and Knutsford to Warrington: at Monk's heath, another road branches off through Alderley, Chorley, &c., towards Manchester. A road from London to Warrington enters near Lawton, and passes through Sandbach, Middlewich, and Northwich, to Latchford, opposite Warrington.

Few Roman antiquities have been discovered except within the walls of the city of Chester, which was for more than two hundred years the station of the twentieth legion, it being the only Roman station in the county the situation of which has been clearly ascertained. The Romans having placed one of their principal towns in Cheshire, and, from its convenience as a military port, fixed there the head-quarters of one of the three legions, which formed the standing army of Britain, many detached remains of their roads are discernible within the limits of the county. There is also a road, which, from its name and course, is considered of British origin; this is the northern Watling-street: it enters the county from the north at Stretford, and passes through Northwich, over Delamere Forest, to Chester, proceeding to the coast of Caernarvonshire. The principal Roman roads, of which there are various traces, are, the great Roman way from Manchester to Worcester, and a road from Kinderton to the station of Chesterton, near Newcastle under Line. Other Roman roads of considerable importance cross the county from various quarters towards Chester.

The richest specimens of church architecture are Chester cathedral and Nantwich church. Within the limits of the county, before the dissolution, were thirteen religious houses, including one preceptory of the Knights Hospitallers; there were, besides, two colleges and nine ancient hospitals: there are considerable monastic remains, especially of the abbey of St. Werburgh, at Chester. The most remarkable of the ancient mansion-houses is Little Moreton Hall; many others remain either wholly or in part, most of them having been converted into farm-houses. There are several customs peculiar to the county, but many of them are falling into non-observance; the most prevalent are the following:—On the first of May, the young men place large birchen boughs over the doors of the houses where the young women to whom they are paying their addresses reside, and an alder bough is often placed over the door of a scold. On Easter-Monday the young men deck out a chair with flowers and ribands, and carry it about, compelling every young woman they meet to get into it, and suffer herself to be lifted as high as they can reach into the air, or to be kissed, or pay a forfeit; this they call "heaving." On Easter-Tuesday, the women deck out a chair, and lift the men, or make them pay a fine: a similar custom prevails in some of the neighbouring counties. The most general custom peculiar to this county is the shouting, accompanied by particular ceremonies, of the marlers, or marl diggers, when any money has been given them.

CHESHUNT, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred and county of HERTFORD, 8 miles (S. by E.) from Hertford, comprising the three wards of Cheshunt-Street, Waltham-Cross, and Woodside, and containing 4376 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £26, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A new church, or chapel, is in progress of erection, the expense of which will be defrayed by grant from the parliamentary commissioners. Cheshunt College, for the instruction and preparation of young men for the ministry, was originally established at Talgarth, in the county of Brecon, South Wales, by the late Countess of Huntingdon, in 1768, who continued to support it until her death in 1791, when it was removed by the trustees to this place, and reopened on the 24th of August, 1792. A chapel was built in 1806, and in 1821 a new building was annexed for the accommodation of twenty additional students. The students, who, together with the masters, are appointed by the trustees, are boarded, and instructed in the knowledge of the Scriptures, in English composition on sacred subjects, in the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages, the elements of the mathematics, civil and ecclesiastical history, and geography; and, on leaving the college at the end of four years, or sooner if deemed able to commence the service of the ministry, are free to join any denomination of Christians they may prefer. The institution is supported by the interest on about £8000 stock, a portion of an estate called Cobham, and annual subscriptions, the whole producing about £1200 per annum.

The village is situated near the course of the river

Lea and the line of the New River, and is supposed to occupy the site of a Roman station, on the Roman road Ermin-street. The petty sessions for the division are holden here. In the parish was a bank separating the kingdoms of Mercia and East Anglia, during the Octarchy, the lands on one side of which the elder brother still inherits, and the younger those on the other side. To the north are some remains of a nunnery, founded in the reign of Stephen by Peter de Belengey, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, for nuns of the Sempringham order, in which Henry III. afterwards placed others of the Benedictine order: its revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £27. 6. 8. Cardinal Wolsey possessed the united manors of Andrews and Le Mote, in this parish, and received from the crown the appointment of bailiff of the honour, and keeper of the park of Cheshunt. Here stood also Theobalds, the favourite residence of Lord Burleigh, and afterwards of James I., who died at it in 1625; it became the occasional residence of Charles I., having been the place where he received the petition from both houses of parliament in 1642, a short time before he placed himself at the head of the army: the greater part of the palace, the park attached to which was ten miles in circuit, was taken down by the parliamentary commissioners for selling the crown lands, in 1650. Near the church is a house in which Richard Cromwell, after resigning the protectorate, lived in retirement, under the assumed name of Clark, till his death in 1712. Waltham-Cross, a considerable hamlet in this parish, is distinguished by a beautiful stone cross, erected by Edward I., in memory of his queen, Eleanor, who died at Hardeby, near Grantham, in Lincolnshire; similar crosses were erected at every town where the corpse rested, on its removal to Westminster, of which those of Geddington, Northampton, and Waltham alone remain. Roman coins of the reigns of Adrian, Claudius, Gothicus, and Constantine, were found at Cheshunt, and shewn to the Society of Antiquaries, in 1724. The free school was founded about 1642, and endowed with land by Robert Dewhurst, who built the school-house: it is under the management of twelve trustees: the master's salary is £20 per annum. The same benefactor also assigned twenty nobles each, for apprenticing six poor boys to handicraft trades, in corporate towns, appropriating five nobles to be paid as a premium, five in clothing, and the residue for expenses of indenture. There are a National school for boys, and a school of industry for girls. Almshouses for ten widows, at Turner's Hill, in this parish, are endowed with a donation of £500 from James I.: the income has been augmented by various additional benefactions. There are several minor donations for the benefit of the poor.

CHESLYN-HAY, a township in the parish of CANNOCK, eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 7 miles (S. E. by S.) from Penkridge, containing 548 inhabitants.

CHESSINGTON, a parish in the second division of the hundred of COPTHORNE, county of SURREY, 2½ miles (W. by N.) from Ewell, containing 150 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Malden, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester. The church is in the early style of English architecture. Here is a strong chalybeate spring, called Jessop's Well.

CHESTER, a city, port, and county of itself, locally in the hundred of Broxton, county palatine of CHESTER, of which it is the capital, 17 miles (S.) from Liverpool, 36 (S.W.) from Manchester, and 181 (N.W.) from London, through Coventry and Lichfield, and 190 through Northampton and Leicester, containing 19,949 inhabitants, and, including those portions of the parishes of St. Mary on the Hill, St. Oswald, and the Holy Trinity, which are without the limits of the city, 21,176. The origin of this ancient city has been ascribed to the Cornavii, a British tribe who, at the time of the Roman invasion, inhabited that part of the island which now includes the counties of Chester, Salop, Stafford, Warwick, and Worcester; and its British name, Caer Leon Vawr, city of Leon the Great, has been referred to Leon, son of Brüt Darian Lâ, eighth king of Britain. But there is no authentic account of Chester prior to the period when it was made the station of the twentieth Roman legion, after the defeat of Caracatus; and the more respectable historians deduce its names, Caer Leon Vawr, city or camp of the great legion, and Caer Leon ar Dwyfyr dwy, the city of the legion on the Dee, from its connexion with that people: it was also called Deunana and Deva, from the same river. The Romans occupied it from the year 46 till their departure from the island in 446, when it reverted to the Britons, from whom it was taken by Ethelfrith, King of Northumberland, who in 607 defeated them under the King of Powysland with great slaughter. But having regained possession of it, the Britons continued to hold it till 828, when Egbert, as sole monarch of England, annexed it to his other possessions. By the Saxons it was called Legancester and Legecester. It suffered greatly from the Danes in the ninth century: on their retreat, the walls were repaired by Ethelfreda, Countess of Mercia; after her death the Britons once more became its masters, but were again driven out by Edward the Elder. In 971-3, Edgar assembled a naval force on the Dee, on which occasion that king, as mentioned by some writers, was rowed from his palace on the southern bank of the river to the conventual church of St. John, by eight tributary kings, he himself taking the helm, to denote his supremacy.

On the division of England between Canute and Edmund Ironside, in 1016, Canute retained possession of Mercia and Northumbria, and Chester, which was included in Mercia, continued to form part of it till the Norman conquest, when William bestowed it, with the earldom, on his kinsman Hugh Lupus. At this time, according to Domesday-book, the city contained four hundred and thirty-one rateable houses. For more than two centuries after the Conquest it was the headquarters of the troops employed to defend the English border against the incursive attacks of the Welch; and, on account of its importance as a military station, was, during that period, more or less favoured by the reigning monarchs. In the war between Henry III. and the barons, Chester was held for the crown by the Earl of Derby, who captured it in 1264, till the battle of Evesham, in which the barons were defeated with the loss of their leader, and an end put to the contest. On the subjugation of Wales in 1300 by Edward I., several of the Welch chieftains did homage to his son, Edward of Caernarvon, then an infant, in Chester castle. Richard II., by an act of parliament, which was rescinded by his successor, erected the earldom of Chester into a principality, to be held only by the king's eldest son.

The city, in common with the whole county, suffered considerably from the sanguinary conflicts between the houses of York and Lancaster, during which it was visited by Margaret of Anjou. In 1554, the inhabitants experienced the severity of the persecution by which the reign of Mary was distinguished; and the martyrdom of George Marsh, a clergyman, who was burnt for preaching the tenets of Protestantism, was rendered memorable by an attempt of one of the sheriffs to rescue him, which was defeated by the other. In 1634, the city suffered dreadfully from the plague; during its continuance, the court of Exchequer was removed to Tarvin, and the court of assize to Nantwich, and the fairs were suspended. In the memorable siege of the city by Sir William Brereton, in 1645, when the garrison was commanded by Lord Byron, the inhabitants experienced great privations for their adherence to the cause of Charles I., who had the mortification to witness, from the Phoenix tower and the great tower of the cathedral, the entire defeat of his army under Sir Marmaduke Langdale, and its pursuit by the enemy even to the very walls; the noble commander, after a gallant resistance, surrendered on honourable terms, Feb. 3rd, 1646. In 1659, Sir George Booth surprised and took possession of the city, but it was soon surrendered to the parliamentary forces under General Lambert. In 1688, the Roman Catholic Lords Molyneux and Aston raised a force, and made themselves masters of Chester, for James II.; but his abdication rendered further efforts useless. Under William III. it was chosen one of the six cities for the residence of an assay master, and allowed to issue silver coinage. In the rebellion of 1745, it was fortified against the Pretender, the last military event of importance recorded of a place celebrated as the rendezvous of troops from the earliest times.

Situated on a rocky elevation, on the northern bank of the Dee, and half encircled by a fine sweep of the river, the appearance of Chester is remarkable and picturesque. The city is entirely surrounded by a wall, and comprises four principal streets, diverging at right angles from a common centre, and extending towards the cardinal points; at the extremity of each is a gate, after which are respectively named Eastgate-street, Northgate-street, Bridgegate-street, and Watergate-street: this plan, strictly conformable to the Roman style of building, affords strong presumptive evidence of its Roman origin. Within the liberty of the city is an extensive southern suburb, called Hanbridge, which in feudal times generally fell a prey to the predatory incursions of the Welch, and thence obtained, in their language, the appellation of Treboeth, the burnt town. The streets, being cut out of the rock, are several feet below the general surface, which circumstance has led to a singular construction of the houses: level with the streets are low shops, or warehouses, over which is an open balustraded gallery, with steps at convenient distances into the streets. Along the galleries, or, as they are called by the inhabitants, "rows," are houses with shops; the upper stories are erected over the row, which, consequently, appears to be formed through the first floor of each house; and at the intersection of the streets are additional flights of steps. The rows in Bridge and Eastgate streets, running through the principal part of the city, are much frequented as promenades. Pennant considered them to be remnants of the ancient vestibules of the Roman houses; but other writers are of opinion that they were originally constructed for defence, especially against the sudden inroads of the Welch. The fronts of such of them as have not been modernised are bounded by a heavy wooden railing; and immense pillars of oak, supporting transverse beams, sustain the weight of the upper stories. Many of the houses in Bridge and Eastgate streets, having been rebuilt, are considerably improved and enlarged, and their appearance rendered light by iron railing. The streets, which are well lighted with gas, are indifferently paved, but the inconvenience to foot passengers, to whom the rows afford a sheltered walk, is little felt. The inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water, conducted through pipes from the Borrel on the Dee, by means of a steam-engine, into a reservoir in Northgate-street, constructed by Mr. Royle, of Chester, and capable of containing fifty thousand gallons. The city, both within and without the walls, has been much improved of late by the addition of well built houses: a new street has been made from St. Michael's church, leading to the new bridge, opposite Overleigh, which is formed on a level, and avoids the steep descent down Lower Bridge-street, and the ascent through Hanbridge; opposite to it Earl Grosvenor has erected a lodge, to form a grand entrance to the grounds of Eaton. This bridge, consisting of one arch of two hundred feet in the span, is constructed of Peckforton stone, with quoins of granite, at an expense of £40,000, from a design by Mr. Thomas Harrison. The old bridge, consisting of seven arches, has, within the last few years, been considerably widened and improved. Fine views of the city, the peninsula of Wirrall, the Welch hills, and the estuary of the Dee, are obtained from the walls, which afford a delightful and favourite promenade. There are two public libraries: the theatre, a small neat edifice, is open during the races, and generally throughout summer; and grand musical meetings are held at distant periods. The annual races, which attract much company from Wales and the neighbouring counties, commence on the first Monday in May, and terminate on the Friday following: the grand stand has been enlarged by Royle, and is capable of holding £1000, the produce being usually applied to increase the prizes: the races take place on the Rood-eye, a fine level beneath the city walls, belonging to the corporation. All ranks are admirably accommodated, a kind of verdant amphitheatre being formed by an ascent from the course to the walls; and, from the picturesque nature of the place, the spectacle is very imposing.

The port is not of much importance, owing to the shallowness of the water; but, by the exertions of the "River Dee Company," the channel has been deepened, the navigation improved, and a tract of ground, formerly sands, but now arable land, has been gained, by altering the course of the river, and making embankments, the last of which was completed in 1824. The commerce, both domestic and foreign, was formerly somewhat extensive, but is now chiefly confined to Ireland, though a few ships trade with the Baltic, Spain, Portugal, and the Mediterranean shores. The articles imported are linen, butter, provisions, timber, hides, tallow, feathers, iron, hemp, flax, kid and lamb-skins, fruit, oil, barilla, and wine: those shipped, chiefly coastwise, are, cheese (in large quantities), coal, lead, copper, calamine, and lead, copper, and iron ores. About 1736, Chester became a great mart for Irish linen, which trade increased so much, that the fairs were principally distinguished by the quantity sold annually at them, estimated at four millions of yards. The number of vessels that entered inwards from foreign ports, in 1826, was forty-one, and outwards thirteen, all British. The manufactures are inconsiderable: the principal articles are tobacco, snuff, white lead, shot, tobacco-pipes, and leather. The skin trade was formerly extensive, and is still of consequence; but the manufacture of gloves, in which several hundred persons were employed, has much declined. The city mills, standing on the western side of the old bridge, are complete and extensive: they were erected a few years since, the previous buildings having been burnt down, and formerly were a source of considerable profit to the earls of Chester, the inhabitants not being permitted to grind their corn elsewhere. Chester is connected with Liverpool by the Ellesmere canal, which commences at Ellesmere Port, on the Mersey, and here joins the Dee and the Chester canal: these canals originally belonged to separate companies, now united; they extend to Nantwich, Whitchurch, Ellesmere, and Llany-mynech, and uniting with the Montgomeryshire canal, form a line of communication by water of more than one hundred miles.

The market days are Wednesday and Saturday: the new market-place, comprising five distinct buildings, was erected at the expense of the corporation, in 1828. The fairs are on the last Thursday in February, for horses and cattle; and July 5th and October 10th, for articles in general, of which Irish linen, Manchester goods, Welch flannel, and Birmingham and Sheffield wares, are the principal. The two latter fairs were granted by Norman earls; and their antiquity is proved by the recorded jurisdiction of the Dutton family over the Cheshire minstrels, which is related to have originated in the deliverance of Earl Ranulph de Blundeville from a body of Welch invaders, by a band of minstrels and buffoons, under the command of Hugh Dutton, who had assembled at Chester fair; for which service Dutton was afterwards allowed to license minstrels and other itinerants, without their being accounted vagabonds. Fourteen days before the commencement of each general fair, a wooden hand, as the emblem of traffic and bargain, is suspended from the Pentice, adjoining St. Peter's church, where it remains during the fair (a period of twenty-nine days), when non-freemen are allowed to trade in the city; and during the continuance of the fairs, a court of pie-powder is held by the sheriffs. The Linen Hall, built about the year 1780, is a spacious pile of building, forming an oblong square; it comprises more than one hundred shops, ranged round the sides of the area, with a counting-house behind each; the upper apartment projects, and is supported by pillars, forming a covered walk all round: the entrances are in the east and west corners.

Corporate Seal.

Chester is one of the oldest corporate towns in England. At the Conquest, it ranked as a Gilda Mercatoris—a constitution somewhat similar to that of modern municipal corporations. It was chartered by its Norman earls, and additional privileges were conferred on the inhabitants by charters of Henry II. and John. Henry III. constituted the chief magistrate mayor. Edward II. granted to the corporation all the vacant lands within the liberty of the city; and Richard II. authorised the mayor, sheriffs, and commonalty, to hold courts of common law and other courts; which privileges were confirmed and extended by Henry IV. Henry VII., besides granting a more extensive charter, remitted four-fifths of the fee-farm rent of £100 per annum, which Henry III. and Edward I. had claimed from the citizens in consideration of continuing their privileges, and constituted the city a county of itself, under the style of the "City and County of the City of Chester." Parliament subsequently deprived the city of its privileges as a separate county; but this act was revoked at the Restoration. Charles II. disfranchised it in 1684-5: its privileges, however, were afterwards restored, with a discretionary power in the crown to displace the officers of the corporation. James II., availing himself of this prerogative, displaced the mayor, recorder, and other functionaries, but was induced, at the approach of the Revolution, to restore them to office. The charter of Henry VII. conferred on the freemen generally the important privilege of electing the officers of the corporation, which consists of a mayor, recorder, two sheriffs, twenty-four aldermen, and forty common council-men, assisted by a town-clerk, sword-bearer, mace-bearer, and subordinate officers. From the non-exercise of this privilege the election has, in effect, long been vested in the court of aldermen and common council, who now consider it their exclusive right. Several attempts have been made by the freemen to recover this lost power; but the question, after much litigation and expense, remains unsettled, and the practice continues as before. The mayor, recorder, and aldermen, who have passed the chair, are justices of the peace. The recorder and town-clerk are chosen by the corporation, who appoint, from among the common council-men, officers termed leave-lookers, whose business it is to inspect the markets and receive the dues; and, from among the senior aldermen, messengers for the superintendence of the walls of the city. The two aldermen next in rotation for the mayoralty are, respectively, by the same body, usually appointed treasurer and coroner. There are no less than twenty-four guilds, or trade companies, headed by aldermen, or wardens, and holding charters of incorporation under the city seal: by their constitution they are obliged, when required, to pay homage to the mayor, and to contribute certain sums yearly to the city plate, run for at the races on St. George's day.

By ancient usage, confirmed by the several charters, the mayor, assisted by the recorder, holds a crown-mote and a port-mote: the earliest rolls in these courts are of the date 1277: the jurisdiction of the crown-mote extends to all crimes except that of high treason, the mayor having power to pass sentence of death, and order execution, independently of the crown; and in the port-mote pleas to any amount are cognizable. There are also two ancient courts, one called "The Penitence court," which has cognizance of personal actions to any amount; and the other "The Passage court," held before the sheriffs and a jury, with appeal to the port-mote, to which records are removable by command of the mayor without writ. The courts of session are held in the exchange, where also the magistrates and members for the city are elected; and the assizes for the county are held in the castle. The exchange is a handsome brick building, finished in 1698; it is fronted with stone, supported by columns, and surmounted by a glazed cupola. On the ground-floor are the record-room and shops; and on the first floor the council and assembly-rooms, which are decorated with a picture of George III. by Sir Joshua Reynolds, and handsome portraits of the Grosvenor, Cholmondeley, Bunbury, and Egerton families, and of several charitable individuals. The sessions have been held here before the mayor since 1377. The freedom of the city is inherited by all the sons of freemen, and acquired by servitude and purchase. On the abridgment of the privileges of the county palatine, in 1541, an act passed, empowering the county to return two knights, and the city two burgesses to parliament. The election for the city is in the mayor, aldermen, and common councilmen, whether resident or not, and freemen resident in the city a year preceding, and not having received alms: the sheriffs are the returning officers. The number of freemen who polled, during the election of 1826, was one thousand five hundred. The preponderating influence is in the Grosvenor family, members of which, or their nominees, have generally represented the city.

Of the ancient castle, built by the Conqueror, there remains only a large square tower, called "Julius Agricola's Tower," now used as a magazine for gunpowder. Though of modern appearance, having recently been newly fronted, it is undoubtedly of great antiquity, and interesting as the probable place of confinement of the Earl of Derby; and in which Richard II., and Margaret, Countess of Richmond, were imprisoned. In the second chamber James II. heard mass, on his tour through this part of the kingdom, a short time previously to the Revolution. This apartment, when opened after many years of disuse as a chapel, exhibited, from the richness of its decorations, a splendid appearance, the walls being completely covered with paintings in fresco, as vivid and beautiful as when executed. The roof, from the rich effect produced by the ribs of the groined arches, springing elegantly from slender pillars, with capitals in a chaste and curious style, was equally striking. The remainder of the original structure, which was pulled down in 1790, contained a room termed Hugh Lupus' Hall, which was regarded as a superb specimen of baronial magnificence; it was ninety-five feet long and forty-five wide, with an antique roof of wood, curiously carved and resting upon brackets. The new edifice, which has excited general admiration, was erected from a design by Mr. Harrison, and under his inspection. The principal entrance is of the Doric order, resembling the Acropolis at Athens. Opposite to the great gate is the shire-hall, a magnificent structure, internally of the semicircular form, eighty feet in diameter, in height forty-one, and in width fifty: a semicircular range of twelve Ionic pillars supports the roof, which is finely ornamented in stucco, and the effect of the whole is highly imposing. The entrance to the gaol, which is appropriated to debtors and felons of the county, is on the right of the hall. At the eastern side of the yard are barracks, fronted with white freestone, and ornamented with Ionic pillars, capable of lodging one hundred and twenty men. On the western side is a corresponding building, used as an armoury, which will contain thirty thousand stand of arms. The castle is a royal fortress: the establishment consists of a governor, lieutenant-governor, ordnance-keeper, and barrack-master. The constableness of the tower is held by patent, and is free from municipal control. The castle, although within the city walls, is extra-parochial, as is also the township of Gloverstone, now merged into the county: the sheriffs for the city attend the execution of criminals for offences committed in the county, whom they receive in form at the verge of the city, and conduct to the drop in front of the gaol; for which service, the corporation, as keepers of the north gate, were formerly entitled to a toll. Sixteen persons are named in a record of the fourteenth century as being obliged, by their tenure in the city, and the exemptions they enjoyed, to conduct the malefactors, not only of the city, but also of the county palatine, to the gallows; and the occupiers of some houses held by this tenure still continue to pay a composition, called "Execution, or Gable rent," to be relieved from this duty.

Arms of the Bishoprick.

Chester, with part of the kingdom of Mercia, at an early period gave name to a diocese, which afterwards was incorporated with that of Lichfield. In 1075, Peter, Bishop of Lichfield, restored the see to Chester, whence it was a second time removed to Lichfield, by his successor, Robert de Lindsey. It again became a diocese under Henry VIII., who named it one of the six new sees created in 1541, and endowed it with a portion of the possessions of the abbey of St. Werburgh, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £1073. 17. 7. The first bishop was John Bird, previously a provincial of the Carmelites, and Bishop of Bangor. In 1547 this prelate granted the manors and demesnes of the bishoprick to the king, accepting impropriations of little value in exchange, and thus rendered it one of the least valuable of the English sees. Its temporalities in Chester consist only of the palace, which was rebuilt in 1752, by Bishop Keene, and its appendages, and two houses near St. John's church. The cathedral, originally the conventual church of St. Werburgh, was first dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, but subsequently placed by Ethelfreda under the patronage of the Saxon saint, Walmgha, daughter of Wulphen, King of Mercia. That princess, and Leofric, Earl of Mercia, were great benefactors to the church, as well as Hugh Lupus, who substituted Benedictine monks for Secular canons. On the dissolution of the abbey, a dean, six prebendaries, and six minor canons, were appointed in lieu of the abbot and monks, the last abbot being made dean: there are also a chancellor, registrar, sacrist, and precentor. At the dissolution the cathedral was dedicated to Christ and the Blessed Virgin: it stands on the eastern side of Northgate street, and, exclusively of some interesting remains of the abbey, the present building was erected in the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII. With the exception of the western end, it is, externally, a heavy irregular pile. The tower in the centre, originally intended to sustain a spire, is supported by massive piers, and is in the later style of English architecture. Within ten years, the exterior, which, from the soft nature of the stone, was greatly dilapidated, has undergone considerable repairs. The interior is elegant and impressive, and exhibits portions in the Norman and in the early and decorated styles of English architecture. The piers of the nave are in the decorated style, with flowered capitals; and the clerestory, which is in the later style, has a fine range of painted windows. To the east of the north transept are some chapels in the early English style; the south transept, which is larger than the north, and consists of a centre and two side aisles, is in the decorated style, and, being separated from the cathedral by a wooden screen, forms the parish church of St. Oswald. The choir has a chequered floor of black and white marble, and the stalls are adorned with light tabernacle work, skilfully executed; the bishop's throne, usually deemed Werburgh's shrine, is a beautiful specimen of workmanship in the style of the early part of the fourteenth century. The chapter-house, an admirable relic of antiquity in the early English style, stands in the eastern walk of the cloister: it was built by Earl Randolph the first, and became the burial-place of the earls of the original Norman line, except Richard, who perished by shipwreck. Under part of the prebendal houses is a fine Norman crypt, in good preservation, which supported the great hall of the monastery, and had lain concealed till it was cleared out and rendered accessible by Dr. Blomfield, the present bishop of London, who then presided over this see.

The city comprises the parishes of St. Bridget, St. John the Baptist, Little St. John, St. Martin, St. Michael, St. Olave, and St. Peter; and part of the parishes of St. Mary on the Hill, St. Oswald, and the Holy Trinity, and the precinct of the Cathedral Close; all in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester. The living of St. Bridget's is a rectory not in charge, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop: the church, lately built, is a chaste and elegant structure in the Grecian style of architecture, and of the Doric order; towards its erection the Bridge Committee gave £4000, and the parishioners £500. The living of St. John the Baptist's is a vicarage not in charge, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £2000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Earl Grosvenor: the church, formerly collegiate, and, on the removal of the see of Lichfield to Chester by Bishop Peter, used as the cathedral, consists of the nave and portions of the transepts of the ancient cruciform structure, of which the eastern part has been long since destroyed; the nave has massive Norman piers, with a triforium and clerestory of the early English character; the north porch, in the same style, is very beautiful; and the tower, a fine composition, though greatly mutilated, is detached from the church by the shortening of the western part of the nave. The living of Little St. John's is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £30 per annum private benefaction, £1200 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The living of St. Martin's is a rectory not in charge, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop. The living of St. Michael's is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop. The living of St. Olave's is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop. The living of St. Peter's is a discharged perpetual curacy, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop. The living of the parish of St. Mary on the Hill is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £52, and in the patronage of Earl Grosvenor: the church is a venerable building in the later style of English architecture. The living of St. Oswald's is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Bruera annexed, rated in the king's books at £8. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter: the parochial church is formed of the south transept of the cathedral. The living of the parish of the Holy Trinity is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £8. 15. 6., and in the patronage of the Earl of Derby. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, those in the connexion of the late Countess of Huntingdon, Independents, Welch and Wesleyan Methodists, New Connexion of Methodists, Sandemanians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics.

The free grammar school was founded by Henry VIII., who, in the 36th year of his reign, endowed it with a rent-charge of £108. 16., for two masters and twenty-four boys, from amongst whom the choristers of the cathedral are chosen, who receive annually from the funds of the school £6. 8. each, and the other boys half that sum: the age for admission is nine years, and the term of their continuance in the school four years: it has an exhibition for a scholar at one of the Universities. The school-room, originally the refectory of the monastery, is a fine specimen of the early style of English architecture, but retaining little of the ancient edifice, except a stone pulpit, and a staircase in good preservation. The Blue-coat school was founded in 1700, on the recommendation of Bishop Stratford, and endowed for the maintenance of thirty-five boys for four years, at the end of which they are apprenticed. In 1781, the revenue being augmented, a plan was adopted for educating one hundred and twenty day-scholars in addition; hence the origin of the Green-coat school. A similar school for girls was established in 1718, when they were only clothed and instructed, but the greater number is now boarded also, and, on leaving school, they are placed out in service. In 1811, Earl Grosvenor founded a school for instructing four hundred boys in reading, writing, and arithmetic; and the Countess established a similar school for four hundred girls: the school-rooms form a handsome building, erected by the earl, near St. John's church. The Diocesan school was instituted in 1812, under the patronage of Bishop Law, for the education of children in the principles of the church of England: the school-room, erected in 1816, will accommodate four hundred scholars. The infant school, and the working school, are of later establishment, and are supported by subscription. There are also various Sunday schools for both sexes, respectively supported by members of the church of England and dissenters.

Among the charities are divers bequests for the benefit of decayed freemen and freemen's widows; the principal is that by Mr. Owen Jones, who, in 1658, bequeathed the profits of a small estate in Denbighshire to the poor of the several city companies; which bequest, in consequence of the discovery of a lead mine, has of late enabled the trustees to distribute £400 annually. Earl Grosvenor founded ten almshouses for decayed freemen. Most of the parishes have also the distribution of benefactions; and three or four of them contain almshouses, the chief of which are for forty decayed freemen above sixty years of age. The house of industry, built in 1751, is pleasantly situated near the Rood-eye, and is under the control of the mayor, the aldermen who have passed the chair, and seventy-four guardians chosen from the several parishes. The general infirmary, a well built commodious structure, pleasantly situated on the western side of the city, is supported by a numerous body of subscribers, and possesses property to a considerable amount: it originated in 1756, from a bequest of £300 by Dr. John Stratford, and its expenditure is now nearly £3000 per annum. The establishment of fever-wards was proposed in 1774, and a few years afterwards carried into execution, chiefly through the exertions of Dr. Hargrath. There is also a lying-in institution, supported by subscriptions. A county asylum for lunatics, capable of accommodating one hundred patients, has lately been erected on the Liverpool road, from a design by Mr. William Cole, jun.: it cost upwards of £12,000, and is supported by a county rate and by payments from the more opulent patients, for whom superior accommodation is provided: the whole of the building, except the kitchens and governor's rooms, is heated by patent flues.

The walls of Chester rank amongst its principal antiquities, and are the only specimen of this species of ancient fortification in Britain remaining entire: they comprise a circuit of nearly two miles, and, in the narrowest parts, are sufficiently wide for two persons to walk abreast. Of the small towers, or turrets, erected within bow-shot of each other, only the Phoenix and Water towers exist. To keep them in repair, a small murage duty was granted by Edward I. on all merchandise brought to the town by sea. This revenue is not now very productive, in consequence of the principal articles of commerce being landed at Liverpool, and conveyed hither by canal; the corporation, however, continue the repairs. Besides the city gates before enumerated, and which, in comparison with the walls, are modern erections, there is a fifth, or postern, between East gate and Bridge gate, called New gate. The military importance of the city rendered the custody of four of the gates for centuries an honourable and lucrative office; it was held successively by the earls of Shrewsbury, Oxford, and Derby, and by Lord Crewe, and that of the fifth by one of the magistrates for the city. The custody of Water gate, connected with the office of issuing process for offences committed on the Dee, was sold, in 1778, by the Earl of Derby to the corporation. Among the ancient religious establishments may be noticed the monastery, or abbey, of St. John the Baptist, founded in 906, by Ethelred, Earl of Mercia, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £88. 16. 8.; the remains constitute the parish church of St. John: the monastery of St. Mary, of uncertain foundation, for Benedictine nuns, mentioned in Domesday-book, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £99. 16. 2.: the monastery of St. Michael, of which mention occurs in the charter of Roger, constable of Chester, and in the reign of Henry II.; a house of Grey friars in the parish of the Holy Trinity, probably founded by Henry III.; a house of Carmelites, and another of Black friars, in the parish of St. Martin; and, without the North gate, the hospital of St. John, which had a sanctuary and extensive privileges, and the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £28. 10.

In the neighbourhood of the castle were formerly numerous Roman antiquities, particularly at Nensfield, where remains of a tessellated pavement have been discovered. The esplanade, when cleared of the ancient parts of the castle, was given by government to the county, for the erection of the splendid public buildings which now ornament the site; but the right of establishing a fortification, whenever necessary, was reserved for the crown. The eastern wall is built over part of a Roman well; but a segment of the circle is left outside the esplanade, for the purpose of clearing it. In a cellar belonging to the Feathers hotel is a Roman hypocaust, in a remarkably perfect state; and in a close at the southern end of the bridge, termed Edgar's field, the supposed site of Edgar's palace, and adjoining a cavity in a rock, is a stone figure of the goddess Pallas, a relic alluded to by ancient writers. Remains of Roman altars, with figures and inscriptions, have at different times been discovered; one in a cellar in Eastgate-street, dedicated by Telarius Longus, of the twentieth legion, to the emperors Dioclesian and Maximian; another ascribed to Jupiter the Thunderer, now preserved with the Arundelian marbles at Oxford; another, in 1693, in Eastgate-street; one in 1779, in Watergate-street, now preserved in the grounds of Oulton Park; and, in 1821, one in a field in Great Boughton: the last was purchased by Earl Grosvenor, and is placed in a temple in the garden at Eaton Hall: it is of red sandstone, with bold mouldings, and has no ornament but the scroll which supports the thuribulum. Henry Potts, Esq., of this city, has in his possession the figure of a Retiarius, armed with his trident and net, and the principal portion of the shield of the secutor, found in the market-place in 1738. Randle Higden, Roger of Chester, and Bradshaw, mention subterraneous passages under the city; one of these was discovered about the commencement of the present century, extending in a south-eastern direction from the ruins of the abbey, but it was soon closed up.

Chester has been the birthplace of several eminent men, the most distinguished of whom were, four anti-quaries of the same family, all named Randle Holme; Dr. William Cowper, who made collections for a history of Chester; and the celebrated mathematicians, Edward Brerewood and Samuel Molyneux, the latter a friend and correspondent of Locke. In the church of the Holy Trinity were interred, Matthew Henry, the commentator on the Bible, and a pastor in this city from 1687 to 1713, to whose memory a brass tablet has been placed over the communion-table; and Parnell, the poet, October 24th, 1718. Chester gives the title of earl to the Prince of Wales, eldest son of the sovereign.

CHESTER (LITTLE), a township in that part of the parish of ST. ALKMUND, DERBY, which is without the limits of the borough, in the hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, containing 177 inhabitants. It is situated on the eastern bank of the Derwent, about 1 mile (N. N. E.) from the town, and occupies the site of the Roman station Derwentio, the most important in the county: it was of an oblong form, comprising nearly six acres. The wall that surrounded it was traced by Dr. Stukeley in 1721; but subsequent cultivation has removed every vestige. It stood on the line of the Ikniel-street, which here crossed the river; and is noticed in Domesday-book under the name Cestre, being therein described as parcel of the ancient demesne of the crown. Numerous foundations, coins of gold, silver, and copper, and other remains of Roman antiquity, have been discovered.

CHESTER le STREET, a parish comprising the chapelry of Great Lumley, and the townships of Lamb-ton and Little Lumley, in the northern division of EASINGTON ward; and the chapelries of Lamesley and Tanfield, and the townships of Beamish, Birtley, Chester le Street, Edmondsley, Harraton, Hedley, Kibblesworth, Lintz-Green, Pelton, Plawsworth, Ravensworth, Urpeth, Ouston, and Waldrige, in the middle division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM; and containing 13,936 inhabitants, of which number, 1892 are in the township of Chester le Street, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Durham. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the arch-deaconry and diocese of Durham, and in the patronage of Lord Durham and W. Joliffe, Esq., alternately. The church, anciently collegiate, is dedicated to St. Mary and St. Cuthbert, and is a well-built structure, partly in the early and partly in the later style of English architecture, with a tower square at the base, but octagonal above, supporting a beautiful spire, one hundred and fifty-six feet high, considered to be the handsomest in the north of England: the north aisle contains an interesting series, from the time of the Conqueror down to that of Elizabeth, of fourteen effigies carved in stone, and resting on the same number of altar-tombs, of the family of Lumley, of Lumley Castle. To this place Eardulph, the eighteenth prelate of the church of Lindisfarne, in 882, removed the relics of St. Cuthbert, an effigy of whom was subsequently found here, when the Danes made a devastating inroad on the coast; and having founded the church, it continued the head of the diocese, under a succession of eight bishops, until its removal to Durham, in 995. After this it was merely rectorial until 1286, when Bishop Anthony Beck founded a collegiate establishment, consisting of a dean, seven prebendaries, three deacons, and other ministers, which was included in the suppression of similar institutions in the 1st of Edward VI. There are places of worship for Independents and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The village is pleasantly situated in a valley, about a quarter of a mile west of the river Wear, on the road to Berwick; it occupies the site of the Roman station Condercum, on the line of the Roman military way leading to Newcastle: several Roman coins, and an altar much defaced, have been found. The Saxons named it Cuncestre, or Cuneagester. The manufacture of nails, ropes, tiles, &c. is carried on, and the neighbourhood abounds with coal: a market was formerly held weekly, but it has fallen into disuse. The river Wear is navigable to this place, where it is crossed by a bridge erected in 1821. On the 17th of November, 1771, this river overflowed its banks, and greatly damaged many of the houses and other property. A mechanics' institution was established in 1825; and a Sunday school is supported by voluntary contributions. A court leet is held twice a year by the Bishop of Durham, as lord of the manor, wherein small debts are recoverable; and the petty sessions for Chester ward take place every alternate Thursday: a coroner is also specially appointed for the division. Twelve poor children are educated from a bequest by Mrs. Teward, in 1718.

CHESTERBLADE, a chapelry in the parish of EVERCREECH, forming, with the remainder of that parish, and the parish of West Cranmore, a detached portion of the hundred of WELLS-FORUM, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Shepton-Mallet. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. There are vestiges of a Roman encampment on a small hill in the vicinity.

CHESTERFIELD, a parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, comprising the market town of Chesterfield, which has a separate jurisdiction, the chapelries of Brimington and Temple-Normanton, the townships of Hasland, Tapton, and Walton, and the hamlets of Calow, Newbold with Dunstan, and Pilsley, and containing 9190 inhabitants, of which number, 5077 are in the town of Chesterfield, 25 miles (N. by E.) from Derby, and 151 (N. N. W.) from London, on the road to Leeds. The Saxon name of this place, Ceaster, from which its present appellation is derived, indicates it to have been a Roman station. At the time of the Norman survey, when it was called Cestrefeld, it was only a bailiwick to Newbold, the latter being now a small hamlet in the parish; but within a century from that period, it appears to have risen again into such importance as to have obtained from King John, who conferred it upon William de Briwere, a charter of incorporation, with the privilege of two markets and a fair. In the reign of Henry III., a decisive battle was fought here between Henry, nephew of that monarch, and the barons, which terminated in the defeat of the latter, several of whom were slain. Robert de Ferrars, Earl of Derby, who had espoused their cause, being taken prisoner, was sent in chains to Windsor, and afterwards, by act of parliament, degraded from his honours and deprived of his estates. During the parliamentary war, another conflict took place between the royalists, under the command of the Earl of Newcastle, and the parliamentarians, in which the former obtained a signal victory. The town is situated on an eminence between the Rother and Hipper, which at this place are inconsiderable streams; the houses are of brick, roofed with stone; the streets are indifferently paved, but well lighted with gas, by an act of parliament obtained in 1825, and are plentifully supplied with water conveyed by pipes from Holme, two miles west of the town. There are a subscription library and a theatre: assemblies are held monthly in a suite of rooms at the Castle Inn; and races take place in autumn. An agricultural society has been established within the last few years, the members of which hold their meetings alternately at Chesterfield and Bakewell, generally in October. Several of the inhabitants are employed in tambour work, and the manufacture of bobbin net-lace, gloves, and hosiery: there are also a silk-mill and a cotton-mill; and in the vicinity are some productive mines of iron-stone and coal, and some foundries, in one of which, mill-work, machinery, and steam-engines are made; about three hundred men are employed in these works: there are also several potteries, chiefly for the coarse brown stone ware, which afford employment to about two hundred men. The Chesterfield canal, communicating with the Trent and the Humber, continued for forty-six miles by sixty-five locks, and passing under two tunnels, of which that at Norwood is nearly three quarters of a mile in length, was completed in 1777, at an expense of £160,000. The market is on Saturday: fairs, principally for cattle, are held on January 27th, February 28th, the first Saturday in April, May 4th, July 4th, September 25th, and November 25th, the last being toll-free; those in May and September, at the latter of which a great quantity of cheese is sold, are attended by the clothiers from Yorkshire.

Seal and Arms.

The government, by charter of incorporation granted by King John, and ratified by succeeding monarchs, enlarged by Queen Elizabeth, and confirmed by Charles II., is vested in a mayor, six aldermen, six brethren, and twelve capital burgesses, assisted by a chamberlain, town-clerk, and other officers, among whom are a master butcher and master brazier, whose duty it is to inspect the quality of the meat, and the accuracy of the weights and measures. The mayor is chosen by the corporation, on the Sunday preceding Michaelmas-day; both he and the mayor for the preceding year are justices of the peace: a constable is chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor, held in October. The petty sessions for the division are held here; and a court of record for the recovery of debts not exceeding £20 is held under the lord of the manor, by letters patent granted by King John to William de Briwere, and confirmed by Charles I., in the seventh year of his reign, to William, Earl of Newcastle, and Sir Charles Cavendish, then lords of the manor, the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundred of Scarsdale, eight miles round Chesterfield. The town-hall, standing in the market-place, was built in 1790: on the ground-floor is a prison for debtors, and a residence for the gaoler, above which is a large room for holding the sessions and transacting public business: there is also a house of correction, under the superintendence of the county magistrates, but it is too small to admit of the classification of prisoners.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £15. 0. 2½., endowed with £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a spacious cruciform structure, principally in the decorated, but partly in the early, and partly in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower rising from the intersection, and surmounted by a lofty spire, which, from the peculiar mode of putting on the lead with which it is covered, though perfectly upright, appears in every direction in which it is viewed to incline considerably from the perpendicular. The clerestory windows of the nave, and the east window of the chancel, are fine compositions in the later style; and in the south transept are a beautiful screen and rood-loft: there are two very antique monuments in the nave, and three in the chancel, to members of the family of Foljambe. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Sandemanians, and Unitarians. The free grammar school, for the endowment of which Godfrey Foljambe, Esq., in 1594, appropriated £13. 6. 8. annually, was founded in the reign of Elizabeth, and placed under the management of the mayor and corporation; the endowment, augmented by subsequent benefactions, produces annually £109. 10. 9., which sum, including £15 to the master and £15 to the usher, bequeathed by Cornelius Clarke, Esq. in 1690, is paid as a salary to the master, who is chosen by the mayor and corporation, subject to approval by the Archbishop of York, no usher having been appointed lately, in consequence of the small number of scholars, only five or six, attending the school. The school-house, to which are attached a garden and from four to five acres of land, was rebuilt by subscription in 1710: this school, in common with those of Ashbourn and Wirksworth, has the preference, next after the founder's relatives, to two fellowships and two scholarships, founded by the Rev. James Beresford, in St. John's College, Cambridge. A petty school, intended originally as preparatory to the grammar school, was founded in 1690, and endowed for the instruction of ten boys, by Cornelius Clarke, Esq.; the endowment was subsequently augmented by John Bright, senior, and John Bright, junior, Esqrs., for the instruction of an additional number of boys or girls, their nearest relatives, or, in default of such, of other children of the parish, nominated by the mayor and corporation; the present income arising from these endowments is £74 per annum: there is no school-room appropriated to this establishment, the children being taught in the master's house. A National school, in which one hundred and eighty boys and one hundred and twenty girls are instructed, was built in 1814, at an expense of £800, and is supported by subscription; and a Lancasterian school, in which one hundred and twelve girls are instructed, was erected in 1819. Mrs. Judith Heathcote, and other members of the same family, in 1619, appropriated estates producing £114 per annum to the apprenticing of poor children; the premium with each, originally fixed at £5, has been increased to £10, and, within the last ten years, one hundred and three boys have been apprenticed.

Thomas Large, Esq., in 1664, gave lands and tenements, now producing about £45 per annum, for the foundation and endowment of almshouses for three aged persons: to these two more were added, in 1751, by Mrs. Sarah Rose, who also left £200 for their endowment. Almshouses for six aged persons were founded, in 1668, by George Taylor, Esq., who endowed them with property now producing £22 per annum; he also gave in trust to the mayor and corporation £120, to be lent to young tradesmen at five per cent. interest. The dispensary, erected in 1800, is liberally supported by subscription. Godfrey Foljambe, Esq., in 1594, bequeathed the rectory of Attleborough, in the county of Nottingham, and an estate at Ashover, in this county, producing together about £640 per annum, of which, after paying £40 per annum to the minister, £13. 6. 8. to the master of the free grammar school, £20 to the master and fellows of Jesus' College, and £13. 6. 8. to the master and fellows of Magdalene College, Cambridge, the remainder is appropriated to the relief of the poor. Godfrey Wolstenholme, in 1682, gave a house let for £38. 5. per annum, which is distributed in coats and gowns to the poor; and Sir Godfrey Webster, in 1720, bequeathed £1100 South Sea stock, the dividends on which, amounting to £28. 13. 4., are annually distributed in sums of £1 each to poor persons. Mrs. Hannah Hooper, in 1755, gave £2000 three per cent. consols., the dividends on which, amounting yearly to £60, are paid to six poor widows who have been resident in the parish for seven years; and Mrs. Elizabeth Bagshaw, in 1802, gave £2000 three per cent. consols., the dividends on which are distributed, in sums of £1 each, to poor housekeepers: there are also various other charitable bequests at the disposal of the corporation. An hospital for lepers, founded prior to the 10th of Richard I., and dedicated to St. Leonard, existed here till the reign of Henry VIII.; and there was a guild or fraternity, dedicated to St. Mary and the Holy Cross, founded in the reign of Richard II., the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £19. The chantry of St. Michael, founded by Roger de Chesterfield in 1357, and the chantry of the Holy Cross, founded in the reign of Edward III., were also among the ancient religious establishments of this place. There were besides, prior to the Reformation, three free chapels, dedicated respectively to St. James, St. Thomas, and St. Helen: on the site of the last the present free grammar school was built. Chesterfield gives the title of earl to the family of Stanhope.

CHESTERFORD (GREAT), a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of UTTLESFORD, county of ESSEX, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Saffron-Walden, containing 755 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Little Chesterford annexed, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the alternate patronage of the Crown and the Marquis of Bristol. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient and spacious structure, and formerly contained a chantry founded in the reign of Henry VIII., by William Howden, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £9. 9. 7. The market has been discontinued: a fair for horses is held on the 5th of July. There is a free school, endowed with land by John Hart, Esq., and under the management of the Master and Fellows of St. Mary Magdalene's College, Cambridge: there are also several charitable bequests for distribution among the poor. This place, which is situated on the eastern bank of the river Granta, though now only an inconsiderable village, was anciently a town of considerable importance. It is by most antiquaries identified with the Camboricum of Antoninus, and the foundation of walls, enclosing a quadrangular area of fifty acres, was, till very lately, plainly discernible: that it was a Roman station is evident, not only from its name, and the numerous coins and other Roman antiquities discovered at various times, but from its contiguity to several Roman roads, of which the Ikniel and Ermin streets intersect each other in the immediate vicinity. Roman bricks, and coins of the earlier and later emperors, have been found in great quantities; of which, in 1769, a large number, in good preservation, was found in an earthen pot, by some workmen, who were digging up the foundation of the walls for materials to mend the road: in 1730, many coins and entire skeletons were discovered, besides a small urn of red clay, containing written scrolls of parchment, which were destroyed before they were decyphered; and in 1786 were found a bronze bust, fibulæ, gold and brass instruments, and utensils of various kinds, of which one of gold, in the form of a staple, and weighing eight pounds, lay buried under a rude mass of bronze: a stone trough, in the form of half an octagon, of which the four compartments were ornamented with human figures in relievo, was for a considerable time used as a reservoir for water in a smith's shop; it was subsequently in the possession of Dr. Gower, of Chelmsford, who referred it to that class of receptacles for ashes, called Quietoria. Besides the larger camp, or station, are several smaller camps; one near the church, in the grounds between which and the river are traces of an amphitheatre; at the distance of half a mile from the larger camp is another, called Hingeston barrows, and a third on the opposite side of the river. On an eminence, near the Roman road from Inckleton towards Newmarket, is Fleamsdyke, where there is a small square fort, probably the castra exploratorum, in the centre of which are vestiges of a building: the Roman road to Grantchester may be plainly discovered, forming a ridge of two hundred yards, in a direction towards the river, above Cambridge. The custom of Borough English, whereby the youngest son inherits prevails in this parish.

CHESTERFORD (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of UTTLESFORD, county of ESSEX, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Saffron-Walden, containing 192 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to the vicarage of Great Chesterford, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £11. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHESTERHOPE, a hamlet in the parish of CORSENSIDE, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Bellingham. The population is returned with the parish. Stones bearing Latin inscriptions have been found here, which are supposed to be relics of the Roman station at the adjoining village of Risingham.

CHESTERTON, a parish in the hundred of CHESTERTON, county of CAMBRIDGE, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. E.) from Cambridge, containing 1137 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £10. 12. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is principally in the decorated and later styles of English architecture. The name signifies the town next the castle or camp, Arbury camp being at a small distance from the village, three parts of the vallum of which are still remaining, enclosing a square area of nearly six acres, in which many Roman coins have been found, particularly a silver one with the head of Romulus on the obverse, and on the reverse Castor and Pollux on horseback. It appears that every one who kept a fire here, in 1154, was bound to pay a fly farthing, as it was called, to St. Peter's altar in the cathedral church of Ely; and the fourth farthing arising from this town and that of Grantchester used to be paid to the castle of Norwich, by the name of Ely ward penny, because that place received it before. In 1729, £5 per annum, out of money left to the parish for charitable uses, was appropriated, by a decree of the court of Chancery, towards the education of ten poor children. The remains of Cambridge castle are in this parish, and the river Cam runs through it.

CHESTERTON, a parish in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Stilton, containing 95 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £17. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Aboyne. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is principally in the early style of English architecture. Midway between this and Castor is the site of Durobrivæ, the fort of which was placed on the Huntingdonshire side of the river Nene; and at Castle field is a large tract, enclosed by a ditch and rampart, with the Roman road Ermin-street running through it obliquely. On making a turnpike road across the site of the ancient city of Durobrivæ, several stone coffins, urns, and coins, were dug up; and by the side of the high road near this place, in 1754, was found a coffin of yellowish stone, six feet two inches long, within which were a skeleton, three glass lachrymatories, some coins, and scraps of white wood inscribed with Greek and Roman letters.

CHESTERTON, a parish in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Bicester, containing 392 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHESTERTON, a township in the parish of WOLSTANTON, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Newcastle under Line, containing 974 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CHESTERTON, a parish in the Warwick division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Kington, containing, with the hamlet of Kington, or Little Chesterton, 231 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Willoughby de Broke. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. Here are the remains of an extensive Roman fortification, that gave name to Chesterton, which was once a populous town, situated on the line of the Roman Fosse-way.

CHESTERTON (LITTLE), county of WARWICK.—See KINGTON.

CHESWARDINE, a parish in the Drayton division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Drayton, containing 938 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of T. Smallwood, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. There is a small bequest for teaching four poor boys of this parish.

CHETNOLE, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of YETMINSTER, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Sherborne, containing 239 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Peter.

CHETTISCOMBE, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of TIVERTON, county of DEVON, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Tiverton, with which the population is returned. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHETTISHAM, a chapelry in the parish of ST. MARY, city and Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Ely, containing 91 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Ely. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael.

CHETTLE, a parish in the hundred of MONCKTON up WIMBORNE, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 7 miles (N. E.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 132 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 2. 9., and in the patronage of the Lord of the Manor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the early and partly in the later style of English architecture. Here is a fine old mansion, built in Sir John Vanbrugh's style, but it is unoccupied.

CHETTON, a parish in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Bridgenorth, containing, with the chapelry of Loughton, 573 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consolidated in 1760 with those of Deuxhill and Glazeley, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £11. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, has a Norman tower; the chancel is in the early English style, and the nave is of modern erection. There is a bequest of about £8 per annum for teaching poor children, which, with additional subscriptions, is applied to the instruction of about seventy children.

CHETWOOD, a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Buckingham, containing 131 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Barton-Hartshorn, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Nicholas, was made parochial in 1480; it is remarkable for some beautiful specimens of stained glass formerly belonging to a priory of Augustine monks, founded by Sir Ralph de Norwich, in 1244, which was dissolved on account of its poverty, in 1460, and annexed to the abbey of Nutley: there was also a hermitage, dedicated to St. Stephen and St. Lawrence, founded by a member of the Chetwode family, the representative of which claims suit and service, by prescriptive right, over this place and the neighbouring townships and hamlets of Barton, Tingewick, Preston with Cowley, Hillersdon, Gawcott, Lenborough, and Bucks Prebend-end; and accordingly requires the constables of all these villages, which were said to be included within the limits of an ancient forest of one thousand acres, called Rockwood, to be sworn at his court leet held here at Easter.

CHETWYND, a parish in the Newport division of the hundred of BRADFORD (South), county of SALOP, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by W.) from Newport, containing 566 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £10. 16. 3., and in the patronage of Thomas Borough, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a modern brick building. A school, now conducted on the National plan, is endowed with lands producing £30 per annum.

CHEVELEY, a parish in the hundred of CHEVELEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Newmarket, containing 521 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £16. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of James Thomas Hand. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A free grammar school was founded, in 1558, by John Ray, Esq., with an endowment of forty-nine acres and a half of land in the parish, producing an annual income of about £35, to which, in augmentation of the master's salary, Lord Dover added a farm at Worlington in Suffolk. In 1748, Mr. John Warren bequeathed £300 New South Sea annuities, for teaching girls to read and sew.

CHEVENING, a parish in the hundred of CODEHEATH, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Seven-Oaks, containing 812 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the exempt deanery of Shoreham, which is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £21. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is adorned with several elegant monuments of the Lenard family, and one to Lady Frederica Stanhope. Various bequests of the Stanhope family are applied in apprenticing children. The Pilgrims' path, which led towards Becket's shrine at Canterbury, passes here, and forms a boundary of the Weald of Kent. Here is a fine seat belonging to Earl Stanhope, at which the late earl established the improved printing press bearing his name: his lordship, celebrated for his various discoveries in mechanics and natural philosophy, died here, in 1816. A fair is held on the 16th of May.

CHEVERELL (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of SWANBOROUGH, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from East Lavington, containing 442 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Earl of Radnor. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A free school is endowed with a tenement and land producing an annual income of £5. 15., for which six children are taught.

CHEVERELL (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of SWANBOROUGH, county of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from East Lavington, containing 263 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 7. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Earl of Radnor. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CHEVETT, a township in the parish of ROYSTON, wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Wakefield, containing 27 inhabitants.

CHEVINGTON, a parish in the hundred of THINGOE, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Bury St. Edmunds, containing 590 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £16. 3. 9., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. White. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CHEW (MAGNA), a parish in the hundred of CHEW, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (W.) from Pensford, containing, with the tythings of Bishop-Sutton, Knowle, Knighton-Sutton, North Elm, and Stow, 1884 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Dundry annexed, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £30. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Lindsey. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a massive and spacious edifice, having a tower at the west end, surmounted by a balustrade, with a turret at one angle. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This was anciently a borough and market town; it is sometimes called Bishop's Chew, from being the property of the bishop of the diocese. Here was a considerable manufactory for cloth, but the only trade now carried on is in stockings and edge-tools, and that to a very limited extent. The petty sessions for the division are held here. Endowments in land and money, producing about £13 per annum, are appropriated to teaching and apprenticing poor children of the parish. In an enclosure to the north-east of the church are the remains of a Druidical temple, forming a double circle of huge stones. On an eminence, which commands a fine and extensive view towards the Bristol channel, is Bow-Ditch, a circular Roman camp, with triple intrenchments. A red bole, of an astringent quality, vulgarly termed redding, is found here: it has been used by apothecaries and for marking sheep, in most parts of England, from time immemorial.

CHEW-STOKE, a parish in the hundred of CHEW, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Pensford, containing 681 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 3. 4., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. P. Wait. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The parsonage-house has been converted into a work-house. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school for the education of twenty boys, twelve of whom are clothed, was built by subscription in 1718, to which various benefactions have since been made; the annual income is £86. A girls' school also is supported from this fund, and eight of the girls are clothed. Here are quarries of limestone, and of a reddish granulated stone suitable for building, in which are a few fossils and cornua ammonis. The foundations of a cell for four nuns, founded at St. Cross, by Elizabeth de Santa Cruce, are still discernible.

CHEWTON, a tything in the parish of MILTON, hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, New Forest (West) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Christchurch. The population is returned with the parish.

CHEWTON-MENDIP, a parish in the hundred of CHEWTON, county of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Wells, containing, with the tything of Widcombe, 1327 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Emborrow, Paulton, and Stone-Easton annexed, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £29. 11. 8., and in the patronage of J. Kingsmill, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, is in the decorated style of English architecture, with some Norman remains, having a fine tower one hundred and twenty-six feet high, surmounted by lofty pinnacles. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is an endowed school, supported by the income arising from a portion of land on Chew down, enclosed and appropriated to this purpose about a few years since: the annual rent is about £20, which is paid to the master who is allowed to take other scholars; he is expected to teach as many boys gratuitously as he receives pounds, they are taught reading, writing, and arithmetic. The school-house was repaired a few years since, to defray the expense of which a small portion of the income arising from the land was reserved by the trustees. A school for girls was established agreeably to the will of John Dory, who bequeathed the sum of £100, which was subsequently laid out in the purchase of lands at Comb Hill, comprising about sixteen acres, now let for £7 per annum, which, with the interest of £69, an accumulation of the rent of former years, is paid to the mistress for instructing fourteen girls. The village is situated amidst the Mendip hills, where there are extensive mines of lead-ore and lapis calaminaris; the former are not now worked, and the trade in the latter is much reduced. There is a fair for toys, &c. on Holy Thursday: the petty sessions for the division are held here. In the reign of Henry VIII., a dispute arose between the prior of Greenoar cell upon Mendip and the tenants within this manor, relative to some infringement on his rights by the miners, to settle which, the Lord Chief Justice came expressly into the county, and laid the basis of the laws by which the miners are now governed; any miner considering himself aggrieved, complains to the ledreeve, who summons a jury of twenty-four miners, from whose decision there is no appeal: various modes of punishment are applied, the highest being expulsion from the hills. Chewton gives the title of viscount to Earl Waldegrave.

CHICH, county of ESSEX.—See OSYTH (ST.).

CHICHELEY, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from Newport-Pagnell, containing 219 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of C. Chester, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

CHICHESTER, a city and market town, having exclusive jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Box and Stockbridge, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 62 miles (S. W. by S.) from London, containing 7362 inhabitants. This city, which is of very remote antiquity, derives the latter part of its name from its having been a Roman station; and the former, from its subsequent occupation by Cissa, about the close of the fifth century. About the year 47, Flavius Vespasian, who took possession of this portion of Britain, made this his headquarters, and threw up an intrenchment three miles in extent, some traces of which are still apparent. In the reign of Claudius Cæsar, the Romans, as it appears from an inscription upon a stone dug up in 1723, erected a temple here, and probably surrounded their station with walls. A curious piece of tessellated pavement was found in the bishop's garden, and the priory exhibits specimens of Roman architecture. About the close of the fifth century the city was taken from the Britons by Ella, whose son Cissa rebuilt it, and called it after his own name, Cissa's ceaster, fortifying it also with a strong intrenchment. It afterwards became the seat of the South Saxon kings, in whose possession it remained till the middle of the seventh century, when Wulfhere, the Mercian, invaded it, and took prisoner Athelwald, its king. Upon his embracing Christianity, he was reinstated in his dominions, but was afterwards slain in battle by Ceadwalla, a prince of Wessex, who subjugated the kingdom of the South Saxons. On the union of the Saxon kingdoms by Egbert, in the year 803, Chichester was a place of considerable importance: it suffered greatly from the Danes; and, at the time of the Conquest, had declined so much, that it had scarcely a hundred houses within the walls. It, however, regained its former consequence on the transfer of the South Saxon see from Selsea, where it had remained for more than three hundred years; and in the reign of Henry I., a cathedral was built by Bishop Ralph, which being destroyed by fire, that prelate erected a second edifice, far exceeding the former in magnificence, a considerable portion of which is incorporated with the present building. In 1189, the greater part of the city was destroyed by fire, and the cathedral, having sustained great injury, was repaired and enlarged by Siffied, the seventh bishop, whose effigy in marble is placed in a niche within the interior. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the citizens made an ineffectual effort for the royal cause; and, using the materials of the churches without the walls to strengthen the fortifications of the town, made a resolute stand against the parliamentary forces, who, after battering down the north-west tower of the cathedral, compelled them to surrender. In 1648, by Cromwell's orders, the cloisters of the cathedral, the bishop's palace, the deanery, and the canons' houses, were destroyed.

Chichester is pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence nearly surrounded by the Lavant, a small stream which flows at its base. It consists chiefly of four principal streets, meeting nearly at right angles in the centre of the town, where is an octagonal cross in the decorated style of English architecture, which is considered, in grandeur of design and elegance of execution, superior to every structure of its class in England: they were formerly terminated by four gates in the ancient embattled walls with which the city was surrounded; the last of these gates was taken down in 1773, and of the walls, some portions are remaining on the north and east sides, where spacious terraces were raised in 1725, covered with gravel, and shaded with rows of lofty elms, which have been lately widened and much improved, affording a pleasant promenade for the inhabitants, and highly ornamental to the city. The houses are in general handsome and well built; the streets are paved, and lighted with gas, under an act of parliament obtained in 1791, for the general improvement of the town, which is also amply supplied with water. The theatre, a neat plain edifice, was rebuilt in the year 1791: the assembly-rooms, in which assemblies are held every fortnight during the winter, and concerts also at similar intervals, were built by subscription in 1781. A public subscription library, situated in the churchyard, was established in 1794. There are several book clubs; and a mechanics' institution was formed in 1824. Races are held in August, at Goodwood, about five miles north of the city, where a new stand has been lately erected and the course greatly improved. The trade consists principally in malt, corn (of which a considerable quantity is sent coastwise), flour, timber, and coal. The Lavant empties itself into the sea at Dell-key, two miles distant from the town, where there is a small harbour, into which vessels can enter at high water; and a collector of customs is stationed to superintend the transactions of the port, which carries on a small foreign trade. Lobsters and prawns, caught at Selsea, about seven miles south of the town, and esteemed the finest on the coast, are sent in great quantities to the London market. A large quantity of salt is made at Itchenor, three miles from Chichester. A branch from the Portsmouth and Arundel canal, on the south side of the town, contributes greatly to facilitate and promote its trade. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday; and on every alternate Wednesday there is a large market for cattle, sheep, and hogs: the market-house, a convenient structure, was built in 1807: the corn market is held adjoining the Swan Inn, on Saturday, and also on the days of the cattle market. Fairs are held annually on St. George's day, Whit-Monday, St. James' day, Old Michaelmas-day, and on the 20th of October, the last being called the Sloe fair.

It is uncertain when the inhabitants were first incorporated: by charter granted in the 1st of James II. the government of the city is vested in a mayor, high steward, recorder, deputy-recorder, bailiff, and an indefinite number of aldermen and common council-men, assisted by a town-clerk, four serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor is chosen annually from among the body of aldermen, or from those who have served the office of bailiff, by a majority of the corporation, and sworn into office on the Monday before Michaelmas-day. The bailiff, who acts as sheriff, is chosen from the common council-men at the same time: the aldermen must have served the office of mayor; and the common council-men must have been nominated to the offices of portreeve and customor, by the mayor, who, from time immemorial, has appointed two burgesses annually to those nominal offices, by which appointment, or by gift, the freedom of the city alone is obtained. The mayor, the late mayor, recorder, deputy-recorder, and three of the senior aldermen chosen annually for that purpose, are justices of the peace, exercising exclusive jurisdiction for the city and its liberties, except the Close, which, though within the walls, is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. The corporation hold quarter sessions for the city and liberties, with power extending to capital offences, which was exercised in 1818, by executing a man for murder; but prisoners charged with capital offences have since been transferred to the judge on the circuit. A court of record is held every Monday, under the charter of King James, for the recovery of debts to any amount, at which the mayor presides. The guildhall is ancient, having been the chapel of a convent of Grey friars. The council-chamber, built by subscription in 1730, is handsome, having arcades formed by pillars of the Tuscan order. The common gaol was built in 1783; it contains only six apartments, five for males and one for females. The elective franchise was conferred in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time the city has returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the corporation, in the freemen at large, and in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, about six hundred in number, with the exception only of those of the extra-parochial district of Newtown, which is within the walls: the mayor is the returning officer. The preponderating influence is possessed by the Duke of Richmond and the Earl of Egremont.

Chichester is the seat of a diocese, the jurisdiction of which extends over the county of Sussex. The episcopal chair was first fixed at Selsea, in 681, and transferred to this place in 1070, when Stigand, chaplain to William the Conqueror, was appointed the first bishop of Chichester. The establishment consists of a bishop, dean, thirty-one prebendaries, of which four are residentiary, a procurator, chancellor, and treasurer. The cathedral, dedicated to St. Peter, was erected by Bishop Ralph, in the reign of Henry I., and subsequently repaired and enlarged by succeeding bishops: it is a spacious structure, exhibiting various Norman specimens, and of the early and decorated styles of English architecture, with a fine tower rising from the centre, surmounted by an octagonal spire, three hundred feet high, and having two fine towers on the west, of which the upper part of one was destroyed during the parliamentary war; and on the north, a fine bell tower and lantern, connected by flying buttresses, with octagonal turrets springing from the angles. The interior, which is four hundred and ten feet in length, and two hundred and twenty-seven in breadth along the transepts, is principally in the early English style; the Lady's chapel is of a later date: at the east end is a fine circular window; and the south transept, which contains a remarkably fine monument to the memory of Bishop Langton, has an elegant window of seven lights, in the decorated style. The cloisters, occupying three sides of an irregular quadrangle, are in the later style. The bishop's palace, which was repaired in 1725, contains an elegant chapel built in the thirteenth century. The deanery, built by Dean Sherlock, is a handsome edifice.

Chichester comprises the parishes of All Saints, or the Pallant, St. Andrew, St. Martin, St. Olave, St. Pancras (partly within and partly without the walls), St. Peter the Great, or the Subdeanery, St. Peter the Less, St. Bartholomew without, and the precinct of the Cathedral Close; all which were, by act of parliament in 1753, united for the better maintenance of the poor, under the inspection of perpetual guardians, consisting of the mayor, high steward, recorder, and thirty of the principal inhabitants. The livings, with the exception of that of All Saints', are all in the peculiar jurisdiction, and, with the exception of those of All Saints', St. Pancras', and St. Peter's the Less, in the patronage, of the Dean of Chichester. The living of All Saints' is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £5. 17. 6., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The living of St. Andrew's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., and endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant: the church is a neat edifice in the later style of English architecture. The living of St. Martin's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £1. 6. 8., and endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant: the church, which was rebuilt by Mrs. Dear, of this city, is a handsome structure in the decorated style of English architecture; the interior is richly ornamented, and contains a fine monument lately erected to the memory of that lady. The living of St. Olave's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £4. 18. 9., and endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty. The living of St. Pancras' is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. G. Bliss: the church, which was destroyed during the parliamentary war, and rebuilt by subscription in 1750, is a neat edifice in the early style of English architecture. The living of St. Peter's the Great is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £16. 8. 4., and endowed with £12 per annum private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant: the church is formed of the north transept of the cathedral. The living of St. Peter's the Less is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £1. 6. 8., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The living of St. Bartholomew's without is a discharged rectory, endowed with £600 royal bounty: the church, which was demolished during the parliamentary war, is now being rebuilt. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Huntingtonians, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians.

The prebendal, or free grammar, school was founded, in 1497, by Bishop Storey, and endowed with the prebend of Highley, which is annexed to the mastership, and tithes and land in other parts of Sussex, for the benefit of all children within the diocese: the management is vested in the bishop, who confirms the appointment of a master nominated by the Dean and Chapter: it was formerly free for all boys within the diocese, but in 1828 certain regulations were formed restricting that privilege to ten boys; for several years, however, the number on the foundation has been, and is still, very inconsiderable: the master is allowed to receive boarders. Archbishop Juxon; the learned Seldon; Collins, the poet; and the late Dr. Hurd, Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford; received the rudiments of their education in this school. A free school, for affording nautical education to twelve boys, viz., four from Chichester, and four from each of the villages of West Wittering and Harting, was founded, in 1702, by Oliver Whitby, Esq., who endowed it with lands now producing about £1230 per annum: the number of scholars has been augmented to twenty-five. Charity schools, for clothing and instructing twenty-two boys and twenty girls, are supported by subscription; the girls' school has accumulated a permanent annual income of £40. A school for the instruction of thirty boys, founded by one of the deans, was re-established by Queen Elizabeth, but the building is now occupied by two poor men and six women. There are also National and Lancasterian schools for boys and girls. St. Mary's Hospital, founded by one of the deans, in the reign of Henry II., for the maintenance of eight aged persons (two men and six women), was an ancient nunnery; the building consists of a refectory, on each side of which are rooms for the inmates, and, at the east end, a spacious chapel, in which divine service is performed twice every day: it is under the superintendence of the Dean and Chapter. The dispensary, established in 1784, and an infirmary, in 1827, about a mile north of the city, are supported by voluntary contributions. Mr. John Hardham, of London, bequeathed property producing £700 per annum, to be applied to the diminution of the poor-rates. An ancient hospital for lepers was founded in the reign of Richard I.; and to the south-east of the city was a house of Black friars, founded by Eleanor, queen of Edward I., and dedicated to St. Mary and St. Vincent. At St. Roche's hill, where was formerly a chapel dedicated to that saint, may be traced the remains of a circular Danish encampment. At Gowshill, about half a mile further, is an oblong camp; and on the same side, but nearer to the town, another of similar form, but larger, surrounded by a strong rampart and a single moat; they are both supposed to be Roman, and probably to have been occupied by Vespasian on his landing on this coast. Bradwardine and Juxon, archbishops of Canterbury; Lawrence Somercote, a great canonist and writer; and the poets Collins and Hayley, to whose memory a handsome tablet, by Flaxman, has been placed in the cathedral, by subscription among the citizens; were natives of this city. Chichester confers the title of earl on the family of Pelham.

CHICKERELL (WEST), a parish in the hundred of CULLIFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Weymouth, containing, with the extra-parochial liberties of Winterbourne-Herringstone and Winterbourne-Farringdon, 497 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 16. 0½., and in the patronage of Lord Bolton.

CHICKLADE, a parish in the hundred of DUNWORTH, county of WILTS, 1 mile (N.) from Hindon, containing 139 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 5. 3., and in the patronage of H. Edgell, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Here is a charity school.

CHICKNEY, a parish in the hundred of DUNMOW, county of Essex, 3½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Thaxted, containing 66 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of H. Cranmer, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHICKSANDS, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, 1½ mile (W. N. W.) from Shefford, containing 56 inhabitants. A priory for canons and nuns of the rule of St. Gilbert of Sempringham was founded, in 1150, by Pain de Beauchamp, and the Lady Roas, his wife; the two quadrangles, with the cloisters, remain entire, and have been converted into a modern mansion.

CHICKSGROVE, a tything in the parish of Tisbury, hundred of DUNWORTH, county of WILTS, 4½ miles (E. S. E.) from Hindon. The population is returned with the parish.

CHICKSTON, a hamlet in the parish of LITTLEHAM, eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, which was dedicated to our Saviour, but it has been destroyed.

CHICKWARD, a joint township with Pembers-Oak and Lilwall, in the parish of KINGTON, hundred of HUNTINGTON, county of HEREFORD, containing, with Pembers-Oak and Lilwall, 331 inhabitants.

CHIDDEN, a tything in the parish and hundred of HAMBLEDON, Portsdown division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 8½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Petersfield. The population is returned with the parish. It is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

CHIDDINGFOLD, a parish in the second division of the hundred of GODALMING, county of SURREY, 4½ miles (E. N. E.) from Haslemere, containing 909 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Haslemere annexed, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £26. 4. 7., and in the patronage of the Dean of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the early style of English architecture, with some later additions.

CHIDDINGLY, a parish in the hundred of SERR-LAKE, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, 5½ miles (N. W.) from Hailsham, containing 870 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Duke of Dorset. The church has a handsome tower and spire, partly of early English architecture; the rest of the building is of later composition.

CHIDDINGSTONE, a parish in the hundred of SOMERDEN, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 7½ miles (W. by S.) from Tonbridge, containing 1096 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the exempt deanery of Shoreham, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £28. 9. 4½. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has considerable portions in the later style of English architecture. This parish lies in the Weald; in the Textus Roffensis, it is called Ciding-stene; in other records it is termed Chiding-stone, from a large stone, supposed from its name to have been the spot where judicial affairs were transacted. It is bounded on the south by a branch of the Medway, and is intersected by the river Eden, about a mile south of which, on an eminence, is the village, which is usually called High-street.

CHIDEOCK, a parish in the hundred of WHIT-CHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 2½ miles (W.) from Bridport, containing 715 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. This parish is bounded on the south by the English channel.

CHIDHAM, a parish in the hundred of BOSHAM, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Chichester, containing 203 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £10. 19. 2., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of E. M. Mundy, Esq. The church is mostly in the early style of English architecture, with later insertions and additions. This parish constitutes a peninsula formed by Bosham creek on the east, Thorney channel on the west, and Chichester harbour on the south.

CHIDLOW, a township in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles (S. E.) from Malpas, containing 15 inhabitants.

CHIEVELEY, a parish in the hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 5½ miles (N. by E.) from Newbury, containing, with the chapelries of Leckhampstead, Oare, and Winterbourn, and the tythings of Courage and Snelsmore, 1842 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £26. 11. 3., and in the patronage of W. Capel, Esq., and W. T. Wasey, Esq., alternately. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In 1759, Thomas Henshaw granted an annuity of £10, together with a school-house at North Heath, for teaching ten boys and ten girls; and in 1805, Catherine Mather bequeathed £800, producing £40. 5. per annum, for educating six children of each sex, now applied for the instruction of thirty-four boys and girls.

CHIGNAL (ST. JAMES), a parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Chelmsford, containing 217 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Mashbury united, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £10. 14. 7., and in the patronage of John Strutt, Esq. Besides the present church of St. James, there was formerly one dedicated to St. Mary, long since taken down.

CHIGNAL-SMEALY, a parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, 4½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Chelmsford, containing 74 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of F. M. Austen, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

CHIGWELL, a parish in the hundred of ONGAR, county of ESSEX, 6 miles (S.) from Epping, and 12 (N. E.) from London, containing 1696 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of St. Pancras' in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, London. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure, exhibiting in the south entrance and other parts some remains of early Norman architecture, with a wooden belfry and spire; on the north side of the chancel are the effigies in brass of Dr. Harsnet, Archbishop of York, many years vicar of this parish, and successively Bishop of Chichester and Norwich, and Archbishop of York, who was buried here, in 1631; on the south side is a monument in alabaster to the memory of Thomas Coleshill, Esq., an officer in the courts of Edward VI., Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, inspector of the customs of the port of London, who died in 1595; there are also several other ancient monuments. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists at Chigwell-Row. This place in ancient records is called Chigwella, supposed to imply the king's well, from which its present name is derived. In the forest adjoining the parish was formerly a royal mansion, called Potteles, or Langfords, the only memorial of which is preserved in the name of the site, now called King's Place Farm. The village consists principally of one long street on the public road, containing many substantial houses: at the distance of a mile to the south-east of the church is a range of good houses, called Chigwell-Row, forming one of the most populous and respectable parts of the parish. In 1629, Archbishop Harsnet, having previously built two school-houses, and a dwelling-house for a Latin master, purchased a house for another master, with a garden for each, and founded two free schools, one for the Greek and Latin languages, the other for writing and arithmetic, which he endowed with the impropriate rectory of Tottington, in Norfolk; and invested the advowson of the vicarage of that parish in trustees for presentation to such as had been educated in the grammar school of Chigwell, or, in default of such, to natives of this parish: the management of these schools he vested in governors, consisting of the Vicar of Chigwell, the Rector of Loughton, and ten of the most respectable inhabitants of the parish, by whom, with preference to such as have been educated in the school, or natives of the parish, the master is appointed; the election must take place within ten days after a vacancy occurs, otherwise the nomination lapses to the Bishop of London. William Penn, founder of the colony of Pennsylvania, was educated in this school. A charity school for twelve girls, established in 1700, is supported partly by subscription, and partly by legacies of £100 each, bequeathed by William Scott, Esq., in 1725, and Mrs. Barbara Fisher, in 1808. Almshouses were endowed by an unknown benefactor for three aged widows, who receive each an allowance of £1. 5. 8. per annum. There are several charitable benefactions for distribution among the poor; and, in 1857, Mr. John Sympson left lands, producing £15 per annum, for keeping in repair the foot-path from Abridge to Woodbridge, which passes through the parish. At Chigwell-Row is a spring, the water of which possesses a cathartic property.

CHILBOLTON, a parish in the hundred of BUDLESGATE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S. E. by S.) from Andover, containing 356 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated in the king's books at £26. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is a charity school for twenty-four children. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. The Andover canal passes through the south-western part of the parish.

CHILCOMB, a parish in the hundred of FAWLEY, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Winchester, containing 158 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated in the king's books at £8. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

CHILCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of UGGS-COMBE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 4½ miles (E. by S.) from Bridport, containing 22 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £4. 11. 8., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. E. Foyle. This parish is bounded on the south by the river Bride, or Bredy. On the summit of a steep hill to the northward are vestiges of an ancient intrenchment, enclosing three barrows; from its partaking both of the Roman and Saxon modes of fortification, it is supposed to have been originally constructed by the former, and extended by the latter. The Knights Hospitallers had possessions here, with a quadrangular mansion, now a farm-house.

CHILCOMPTON, a parish in the hundred of CHEWTON, county of SOMERSET, 6½ miles (N. N. E.) from Shepton-Mallet, containing 474 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Wells, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Miss Tooker. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The name of this parish is derived from its situation in a cold, though picturesque, vale: a clear stream flows through the village, forming at intervals small cascades; several genteel villas add to the general neatness of the place. Coal is obtained here; and imbedded among the red rock in the vale are found calcareous spar, iron-ore, branches of coral, and a few cornua ammonis. On Blacker's hill are vestiges of a quadrangular intrenchment, enclosing about fifteen acres; and near it are several tumuli: between these and Broadway are three subterranean cavities, supposed to have been iron pits, but called by the inhabitants "The Fairy Slat."

CHILCOTE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of BURTON UPON TRENT which is in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ashby de la Zouch, containing 192 inhabitants. The chapelry is annexed to the rectory of Clifton-Campville, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. Chilcote is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CHILDERDITCH, a parish in the hundred of CHAF-FORD, county of ESSEX, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Brentwood, containing 289 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of T. B. Bramston, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints and St. Faith.

CHILDERLEY, a parish in the hundred of CHES-TERTON, county of CAMBRIDGE, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Cambridge, containing 50 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £6. 9. 2., and in the patronage of N. Calvert, Esq. The church, which was dedicated to St. Mary, is in ruins. After the capture of Charles I. by Cornet Joyce, in 1647, he was conveyed hither by order of Cromwell, who visited him, in company with Fairfax, both of them disavowing all participation in the seizure of his person, and, at the king's request, caused him to be removed to Newmarket.

CHILDREY, a parish in the hundred of WANTAGE, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Wantage, containing 478 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £33. 14. 7., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has remnants of Norman architecture, and contains several ancient monuments. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is an endowed school. Almshouses for three poor men were founded by William Fettiplace, Esq., who was a generous benefactor to Queen's College, Oxford. The Wilts and Berks canal passes through this parish, above which runs Ickleton-way, part of the Ikniel-street. Charles I., escorted by his own troop, took up his quarters at the village, on the night of April 10th, 1664.

CHILDWALL, a parish in the hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the chapelries of Garston, Hale, Wavertree, and Much Woolton, and the townships of Allerton, Childwall, Halewood, Speke, and Little Woolton, and containing 6648 inhabitants, of which number, 127 are in the township of Childwall, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Liverpool. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £5. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has some early English piers and decorated windows; but the greater portion is of modern date. In 1699, Thomas Crompton bequeathed £20 for teaching poor children. This parish is bounded on the south by the river Mersey, and at high tides is subject to inundations. Near the church was formerly a cell of monks, subordinate to the priory of St. Holme; but there are no vestiges of it. Jeremiah Markland, a learned critic and classical scholar, was born here, in 1693.

CHILFROOM, a parish in the hundred of TOLLER-FORD, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 9 miles (N. W. by W.) from Dorchester, containing 106 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of J. I. Lockhart, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. A charity school was founded, in 1774, by George Brown, who endowed it with a rent-charge of £21, for teaching poor children of the parish.

CHILHAM, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of FELBOROUGH, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Canterbury, containing 1035 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Moldash annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of J. S. Wildman, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious cruciform structure, exhibiting portions in various styles of architecture, of which the early English predominates, and some painted glass: it contains several sepulchral memorials, the principal of which are, the sumptuous mausoleum of the Colebrooks, erected in 1755, on the site of an ancient chantry chapel, and that of Sir Dudley Digges, of earlier date, with his splendid monument in the centre. Here are eight almshouses, which have been converted into a poor-house. The market has fallen into disuse; a cattle fair is held on the 8th of November: the river Stour flows through the parish. Chilham is supposed to have been a post of the ancient Britons, and afterwards a military station of the Romans, there being evident proofs of the latter in the discovery of coins, foundations of houses, and other remains. The castle is of great antiquity, and was a strong fortress and palace of the kings of Kent, till destroyed by the Danes in the middle of the ninth century; but at the Conquest it was rebuilt by one Fulbert, on whom it had been bestowed. The present stately edifice was erected by Sir Dudley Digges, in 1616, and the Norman keep converted into offices; on the north-west side there are traces of a deep fosse, enclosing an area of eight acres. It is asserted that Cæsar, on his second invasion, defeated the Britons here, who retreated and intrenched themselves in an adjoining wood, where vestiges of their rude and extensive works are still visible; and on a hill at the south-east side of the river, and eastward from the castle, is a tumulus, termed Julaber's Grave, supposed to be the place of sepulture of Quintus Laberius Durus, a tribune, who was slain in the conflict.

CHILHAMPTON, a chapelry in the parish of SOUTH NEWTON, hundred of BRANCH and DOLK, county of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Wilton. The population is returned with the parish.

CHILLENDEEN, a parish in the hundred of EASTRY, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Wingham, containing 147 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £5, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A fair for pedlary, &c. is held on Whit-Monday.

CHILLESFORD, a parish in the hundred of PLOMESGATE, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.)

from Orford, containing 140 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 3. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. Christopher Smear. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The navigable river Butley runs on the west and south sides of this parish.

CHILLINGHAM, a parish in the eastern division of GLENDAL ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Chillingham, Hebburn, and Newton, and containing 356 inhabitants, of which number, 146 are in the township of Chillingham, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Wooler. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Courts leet and baron are occasionally held here. A school with a small endowment is chiefly supported by the Earl of Tankerville, who provides a school-house and £10 per annum for teaching ten poor children. This parish is intersected by the river Till, and by the Roman way from Newcastle to Berwick upon Tweed: coal and limestone are found in it, and there are kilns for burning the latter. On an eminence eastward from Chillingham park is a double intrenchment, called Ros Castle, supposed to have been a British fort; and there are tumuli, formed of irregular heaps of stones, out of which urns containing human ashes have been dug: at Newton is an ancient cross, termed the Hurl Stone, twelve feet high. Chillingham castle is a very ancient structure: in the park is a breed of wild cattle, the only one in the island; these animals are white, with a reddish tinge on the ear. At Hebburn are the remains of an ancient keep, a strong vaulted building, similar to many others in the northern counties.

CHILLINGTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, county of SOMERSET, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Crewkerne, containing 270 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Earl Poulett. The church is dedicated to St. James.

CHILLINGTON, a liberty in the parish of BREWOOD, eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD. The population is returned with the parish.

CHILMARK, a parish in the hundred of DUNWORTH, county of WILTS, 4 miles (E.) from Hindon, containing, with the tything of Ridge, 524 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £19. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Pembroke. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is cruciform, having a tower with a handsome spire rising from the intersection; some parts of the building are in the early style of English architecture, others of later date. The ancient Iknield way proceeds through this parish, which is also intersected by the river Nadder and several streams tributary to it, and by the Wilts and Berks canal. Its celebrated quarries of freestone, whence the materials were drawn for the erection of Salisbury cathedral, have almost fallen into disuse, the stone having been superseded by Bath-stone, which is wrought at less expense. A great fair for live stock is held on the 30th of July. This is the birthplace of John de Chilmarke, a celebrated mathematician and philosophical writer in the thirteenth century.

CHILSON, a tything in that part of the parish of CHARLBURY which is in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 5½ miles (S. by W.) from Chipping-Norton, containing, with the chapelry of Shortampton, and the tything of Pudlicott, 252 inhabitants.

CHILSWELL, a liberty in the parish of CUMNER, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Abingdon, containing 16 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel.

CHILTERN (ALL SAINTS), a parish in the hundred of HEYTESBURY, county of WILTS, 4 miles (E.N.E.) from Heytesbury, containing 381 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, to which is united the vicarage of Chiltern St. Mary, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop and the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury alternately. Chiltern lies adjacent to the Chiltern downs, a chain of chalk hills which, from the nature of the soil, was called by the Saxons Cilt, or Chilt. They were anciently covered with impenetrable woods, infested by robbers, until Leofstan, abbot of St. Albans, thinned them, and the Danes burnt them down in 1009. By accepting the nominal stewardship of this district under the crown, a member of parliament is enabled to vacate his seat. Westward from this place is a small Roman camp, named Knooke Castle; and near it an irregular ditch running in various directions, as if intended to form some ancient boundary-line.

CHILTERN (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of HEYTESBURY, county of WILTS, 3½ miles (E. by N.) from Heytesbury, containing 169 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to that of Chiltern All Saints, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £6.

CHILTHORNE-DOMER, a parish in the hundred of STONE, county of SOMERSET, 2 miles (S.) from Ilchester, containing 234 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £5. 7. 1., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Bayly. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In 1755, Christopher Brown gave a rent-charge of £2. 16., for teaching six children of the parish.

CHILTINGTON (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of WESTMESTON, hundred of STREET, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, 6 miles (N. W. by N.) from Lewes, containing 243 inhabitants. Here is a charity school for the instruction of eight children, supported by a rent-charge of £4. 6. 8., bequeathed by John Marten, in 1797.

CHILTINGTON (WEST), a parish partly in the eastern division of the hundred of EASWYTH, rape of BRAMBER, but chiefly in the western division of the same hundred, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, 8½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Steyning, containing 638 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £12. 16. 10½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny. The church is a neat structure in the early style of English architecture, with a spire. A charity school was founded, in 1634, by William Smyth, with an endowment, since vested in land producing £47 per annum, for which fifty children are taught. In the higher parts of the parish some curious circular nodules of blue limestone are found, imbedded in the steep banks of clay overhanging the road.

CHILTON, a parish in the hundred of COMPTON, county of BERKS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from East Ilsley, containing 229 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £13. 8. 4., and in the patronage of Mrs. Hensage. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CHILTON, a parish in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Thame, containing, with the hamlet of Easington, 379 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £8 per annum and £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir J. Aubrey, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains some fine monuments belonging to the Croke family. In 1639, Sir George Croke, Knt. founded eight almshouses at Studley, in the county of Oxford, with an endowment producing annually £41. 12., for four men and four women belonging to the parishes of Chilton, Hadleigh, and Waterstoke, alternately. Sir George Croke, the celebrated lawyer, famous for his determined opposition to the tax of ship-money, in the reign of Charles I., was born, and lies buried, here.

CHILTON, a township in the parish of MERRINGTON, south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 9 miles (S. by E.) from Durham, containing 182 inhabitants.

CHILTON, a parish in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from Sudbury, containing 97 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 5½., and in the patronage of Mrs. Windham.

CHILTON, a hamlet in the parish of CLARE, hundred of RISBRIDGE, county of SUFFOLK, 1 mile (W. by N.) from Clare. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, now demolished. A small priory of Augustine canons, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded here; but the income not exceeding £10 per annum, and the buildings becoming dilapidated, it was given, in 1468, to the Dean and Chapter of the college of Stoke: the remains have been converted into a dwelling-house.

CHILTON upon POLDON, a chapelry in the parish of MOORLINCH, hundred of WHITLEY, county of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bridg-water, containing 352 inhabitants.

CHILTON-CANTILO, a parish forming a detached portion of the hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, locally in that of Horethorne, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Ilchester, containing 140 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. 5½., and in the patronage of Richard Messiter, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James.

CHILTON-FOLIATT, a parish partly in the hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, but chiefly in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Hungerford, containing, with the tything of Leverton, 777 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £14. 8. 9., and in the patronage of E. W. L. Popham, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In 1770, Roger and Elizabeth Ipanswick founded a charity school, with an endowment now producing £20 per ann., to which Walter Bigg, in 1772, bequeathed £100, for teaching poor boys and girls. This parish is crossed by a small stream, called the Chilt, whence it derives its name.

CHILTON-TRINITY, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by W.) from Bridg-water, containing 49 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to the vicarage of Bridg-water, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a neat structure covered with lead, with a tower rebuilt in 1728. This is a place of great antiquity, having formerly given name to a hundred, called Chilton-Trinitatis. There is an endowment in land, given by Edward Colston, for a charity school. The navigable river Parret runs on the eastern side of the parish; and the neighbourhood contains a great quantity of coal lying beneath a stony stratum, here called work, on which, when split, impressions of fern and other plants are visible; much of the coal is tinged with sulphur, and in one mine a considerable quantity of lead-ore was found adhering to it.

CHILVERS-COTON, a parish in the Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (S. W.) from Nuneaton, containing 2169 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £7. 4., endowed with £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Chancellor of the diocese. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of ribands is carried on extensively here, and there are some coal-works in the parish: the Coventry canal passes through it. In the reign of Henry II. Ralph de Sudley founded an Augustine priory at Erdbury, in this parish, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £122. 8. 6.

CHILWELL, a hamlet in the parish of ATTENBOROUGH, southern division of the wapentake of BROXTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Nottingham, containing 823 inhabitants. Here are two endowed almshouses.

CHILWORTH, a hamlet in that part of the parish of GREAT MILTON which is in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Tetsworth, containing 63 inhabitants.

CHILWORTH, a parish in the hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Romsey, containing 147 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of John Fleming, Esq. The church is a small, but neat, edifice, rebuilt a few years since by the late patron, P. Serle, Esq. The soil is peculiarly favourable to the growth of oak, which is here produced in great luxuriance.

CHILWORTH, or ST. MARTHA, a parish in the first division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, county of SURREY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Guildford, containing 197 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the gift of the Proprietor of the Chilworth estate.

CHIMNELL, a township in that part of the parish of WHITCHURCH which is in the Whitchurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Whitchurch, with which the population is returned.

CHIMNEY, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Witney, containing 46 inhabitants. The river Isis flows past the village.

CHINEHAM, a tything in that part of the parish of MONK'S SHERBORNE which is in the hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Basingstoke, containing 41 inhabitants.

CHINGFORD, a parish in the hundred of WALTHAM, county of ESSEX, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from London, containing 837 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £14. 5. 5., and in the patronage of J. Heathcote, Esq. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small building of flint and stone, with a low tower; it is in the later style of English architecture, and much overgrown with ivy. This parish lies on the border of Epping Forest, in which there is a house termed Queen Elizabeth's Lodge, where the courts under the forest laws are held. A day and a Sunday school are supported by subscription.

CHINLEY, a chapelry in the parish of GLOSSOP, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Chapel en le Frith, containing, with Brownside and Bugsworth, 1038 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a trifling endowment for teaching poor children, besides which five are educated by means of Trickett's charity at Bowden, and others partake of Jenkinson's, jointly with Brownside.

CHINNOCK (EAST), a parish in the hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Yeovil, containing 581 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. About a mile west from the church there is a spring of brackish water, whence salt may be extracted. A school is endowed with a small annuity paid by the trustees of property bequeathed for divers charitable purposes.

CHINNOCK (MIDDLE), a parish in the hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Crewkerne, containing 173 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Earl of Ilchester. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, has a Norman arch over the southern entrance. Hemp and flax are produced in this parish, and the poor are employed in spinning and weaving them into sail-cloth, &c.

CHINNOCK (WEST), a parish in the hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Crewkerne, containing 477 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Chisleborough, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells. The church has lately received an addition of one hundred and fifty-two sittings, of which eighty-four are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £50 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CHINNOR, a parish in the hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Watlington, containing, with the liberty of Henton, 1097 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £26. 0. 5., and in the patronage of Sir James Musgrave, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Roman Ikniel-street enters the county at this place.

CHIPCHASE, a chapelry in the parish of CHOLLERTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9 miles (N. N. W.) from Hexham, containing, with the township of Gunnerton, 409 inhabitants. The chapel was rebuilt in 1732, by John Reed, Esq., on the lawn of Chipchase Castle, a large and beautiful structure standing upon a lofty eminence, at the foot of which flows the North Tyne: of the ancient building only a tower remains; its roof rests on corbels, and has openings for missiles, or scalding water, to be thrown upon an enemy; some tattered fragments of paintings on the walls are exceedingly curious.

CHIPPENHAM, a parish in the hundred of STAPLOE, county of CAMBRIDGE, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Newmarket, containing 607 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £11. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Trustees of J. Tharp, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, was rebuilt by means of a grant of indulgences, shortly after the destruction of the ancient edifice by fire, in the fifteenth century. A charity school was founded in 1714, by the Earl of Orford, with an endowment of £30 per annum, for teaching all the poor children of the parish. William de Mandeville, Earl of Essex, gave this manor to the society of Knights Hospitallers, whereupon a subordinate establishment was fixed here. Charles I., during the civil war, enjoyed the diversion of bowling at Chippenham Park, the seat of Sir William Russel; and George I. was entertained here by Admiral Russel, October 4th, 1717. About the middle of the seventeenth century the mansion and estate were possessed by Sir Francis Russel, Bart., whose daughter married the fourth son of the Protector Cromwell. Sir Edward Russel, created Earl of Orford, expended a considerable sum in improving the park and embellishing the mansion, which latter was taken down and the materials sold.

Seal and Arms.

CHIPPENHAM, a parish in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, comprising the borough and market town of Chippenham, and the tythings of Allington, and Tytherton-Stanley with Nethermore, and containing 3506 inhabitants, of which number, 3201 are in the borough, 33 miles (N.W. by N.) from Salisbury, and 93 (W.) from London. This place, which derives its name from the Saxon Cyppanham, a market town, was of considerable importance during the Octarchy, and is supposed to have been the residence of the West Saxon kings. Ethelwolf, on his return from an excursion against the Welch, in 853, remained for some time at this place, where he celebrated the marriage of his daughter Ethelswitha with Burhred, King of Mercia. In the reign of Alfred, the Danes, who, after their defeat, had engaged by treaty to quit the kingdom, retreated to this town, of which they obtained possession by treachery; and that monarch, after the dispersion of his army, was compelled to take refuge in the cottage of a neat-herd: on their subsequent defeat by Alfred, the Danes again took refuge here, where the treaty between that monarch and the Danish prince Guthrum was negotiated. The town is pleasantly situated on the side of a hill, on the south bank of the river Avon, which here expands into a noble sheet of water, over which, terminating the western extremity of the principal street, is a handsome stone bridge of twenty-two arches, widened about thirty years since, and ornamented with balustrades, for the repair of which, and of a stone causeway of nearly three miles in length, a considerable estate is vested in the corporation. It consists of one spacious street, half a mile in length and well paved, containing many respectable houses, and of several smaller streets; it is lighted, and tolerably well supplied with water from the river, by which it is bounded on three sides. The woollen manufacture, consisting chiefly of the finer broad cloths and kerseymeres, formerly flourished to a considerable extent; but it has altogether declined: there are a few grist-mills and tanneries; and the town is greatly benefited by the trade arising from its situation as a great thoroughfare on the road to Bath and Bristol. The Wilts and Berks canal passes close to it. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on May 17th, June 22nd, October 29th, and December 11th, for horses, cattle, and sheep. The government, by charter of Queen Mary, granted in the first year of her reign, and, after its surrender to Charles II., renewed in the reign of James II., is vested in a bailiff and twelve capital burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk and subordinate officers: the bailiff is elected by the burgesses, but he does not exercise magisterial authority. The petty sessions for the division are held here; and a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held on the Tuesday in every sixth week by commissioners, under an act passed in the 35th of George III., the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundreds of Chippenham, Calne, and North Damerham, and the liberty of Corsham. The town-hall market-house, and shambles are very inconveniently situated:

it has long been in contemplation to remove them, but this desirable object has not yet been carried into effect. Chippenham is a borough by prescription, and first sent members to parliament in the reign of Edward I.; it made two returns in the reign of Edward II., and four in that of Edward III., from which period it discontinued till the 2nd of Richard II.; after the 12th of that reign it again ceased to make any return till the first of Henry VI., since which time it has regularly sent two members: the right of election is vested in the resident burgage-holders, of whom the number is one hundred and twenty-eight, the addition of one more having been for many years a subject of litigation; one-half of them are in the interest of Joseph Nield, Esq.: the bailiff is the returning officer.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £13. 19. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a spacious ancient building, containing portions in different styles of English architecture, of which the tower and spire are in the early style; it contains several interesting monuments. There is a chapel of ease at Tytherton-Lucas, in this parish. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. William Woodroffe, in 1664, gave land producing £5 per annum, for teaching ten poor children, to which Mrs. Mary Bridges added £15, for two additional boys. The Rev. Robert Cock, in 1719, gave £50 towards the establishment of a charity school for girls; and a Lancasterian school, recently established, is supported by subscription. Thomas Ray, Esq., in 1615, bequeathed nine houses in New Sarum, directing the rents to be distributed among poor clothiers in Chippenham, Marlborough, Trowbridge, and Westbury. Mr. Gabriel Goldney, in 1620, gave a rent-charge of £6, to furnish great coats for six aged men. Sir Francis Popham gave lands, producing £12 per annum, to be divided among six poor burgesses; and, in 1769, Sir Edward Baynton and Sir Thomas Fludyer, who in that year were returned as members for the borough, invested £1000 in the three per cent. Bank Annuities, for the support of such freemen, or their widows, living in burgage-houses, as the trustees should consider deserving objects. There are various other bequests, both for the benefit of the poor and for the repair of the causeway. At the distance of about two miles is the site of Stanley abbey, founded by the Empress Matilda and Henry II., in 1154, who removed hither a society of Cistercian monks, established at Lockswell three years previously; its revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £222. 19. 4.: there are no visible remains, but fragments are occasionally found upon the site. Monkton, the name of an estate on the north bank of the river, seems to indicate the remote existence of some religious establishment, of which no vestige or historical account remains. There are two chalybeate springs in the parish, which were formerly in great repute; one of them is now occasionally used, but the other is entirely closed up.

CHIPPING, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the townships of Chipping, and Thornley with Wheatley, and containing 1735 inhabitants, of which number, 1229 are in the township of Chipping, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Clitheroe. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £36. 13. 4., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester, as improprator of the rectory, which is rated at £24. 16. 5 $\frac{1}{4}$. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. This parish contains limestone, a considerable quantity of which is burned in the neighbourhood. Fairs for cattle are held on Easter-Tuesday and August 24th. A free school was founded, in 1684, by the trustees of John Brabin, Esq., with an endowment in land producing £60 per annum; there is another endowment, of £4 per annum, by C. Parkinson, in 1702, in support of an usher: sixteen boys are clothed, educated, and supplied with books. Three almshouses were also founded by the same trust, for six poor women, who receive twelve shillings each monthly. Three apprentices are bound annually from a bequest by the Rev. Mr. Carlisle.

CHIPPINGHURST, a hamlet in the parish of CUDDESDEN, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Bensington, containing 28 inhabitants.

CHIPSTABLE, a parish in the hundred of WILLINGTON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Wiveliscombe, containing 337 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £11. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. S. S. Richards. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CHIPSTEAD, a parish in the second division of the hundred of REIGATE, county of SURREY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Gatton, containing 440 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £17. 13. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Col. Hylton Jolliffe. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, was thoroughly repaired in 1829: on the north side is a fine Norman arch. Here is a charity school, endowed with a house and land given by Mary Stephens, in 1746, producing £70 per annum, for teaching and apprenticing six children, who are bound with premiums of from £10 to £20 each. The Croydon railway passes through this parish.

CHIRBURY, a parish in the hundred of CHIRBURY, county of SALOP, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Montgomery, containing 1442 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £9. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Shrewsbury. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is in the early style of English architecture, with a fine square tower at the west end, surmounted by open-worked battlements and eight pinnacles: it consists of the nave of the conventual church of an abbey of Augustine friars, founded in the reign of Henry III., by Robert de Boulers, and removed to this place, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £87. 7. 4. A considerable endowment in land was given, in 1675, by Edward Lewis, for the maintenance of a schoolmaster. The castle, a stately structure, which formerly stood on the bank of the Severn, was erected by Ethelfreda, Countess of Mercia, to repel the incursions of the Welch. Edward, the celebrated Lord Herbert, was created baron of Chirbury, but the title became extinct at his death.

CHIRDON, a township in the parish of GAYSTEAD, north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Bellingham, containing 83 inhabitants.

CHIRTON, a township in the parish of TYNEMOUTH, eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 1 mile (W. S. W.) from North Shields, containing 4351 inhabitants. The village is situated on the western side of the town of North Shields, and has increased upwards of three-fourths in size and population since 1811, owing chiefly to the extension of the coal-works, from which railways have been formed to the Tyne: at the north end of it is a burying-ground belonging to the Jews.

CHISELHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of DORCHESTER, county of OXFORD, 7 miles (S. E.) from Oxford, containing 118 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, consolidated with that of Stadhampton, claimed to be in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Dorchester, endowed with £16 per annum private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Thame runs through this parish.

CHISELHURST, a parish in the hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 11 miles (S. E.) from London, containing, with a portion of the hamlet of Mottingham, which extends into this parish, 1586 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £16. 3. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is built of flint, with a shingled spire. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school is endowed with £15 per annum and a house for the master, for teaching six boys; but fifty are educated on this foundation on the National system. There are two schools for girls, one affording clothing and instruction to six, and the other to twelve, supported by various bequests and donations producing £24 per annum, besides subscriptions. Children of this parish are also admitted into the National school established at Foot's Cray. In 1680, Thomas Philpott made a bequest for building six almshouses at Eltham, two of them to be inhabited by poor persons of this parish. Sir Nicholas Bacon was a native of Chiselhurst: here also was born, in 1500, Sir Francis Walsingham, secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth; and at this place, in 1623, died Camden, the celebrated antiquary, from whom Camden Place, in this parish (whence Lord Chancellor Pratt took the title of baron, and which now confers the title of marquis on his descendants), derives its name. Viscount Sydney enjoys the title of Baron Sydney of Chiselhurst, which was conferred in 1783.

CHISENBURY, a tything in the parish of NETHER AVON, hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, county of WILTS, 9 miles (W. by N.) from Ludgershall, containing 41 inhabitants. This tything forms part of the endowment of the prebend of Chute and Chisenbury in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury, and is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the prebendary.

CHISHALL (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of UTTLESFORD, county of ESSEX, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Saffron-Walden, containing 353 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. Wilkes, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin.

CHISHALL (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of UTTLESFORD, county of ESSEX, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Saffron-Walden, containing 71 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Haydon annexed, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £14. 10., and in the patronage of Sir P. Soame, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

CHISLEBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, county of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Crewkerne, containing 434 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of West Chinnock annexed, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £14. 5. 7½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Ilchester. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. A fair for horses, cattle, and toys, is held on the last Tuesday in October. The river Parret runs through this parish.

CHISLEDON, a parish in the hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Swindon, containing 1077 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 8. 9., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of T. Cally, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross. There is an endowment of £10. 10. per annum for teaching poor children.

CHISLETT, a parish in the hundred of BLEANGATE, lathe of St. Augustine, county of KENT, 7 miles (N. E.) from Canterbury, containing 1135 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £29. 19. 9½., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the early style of English architecture. In 1811, the archbishop demised certain lands, which let for £40 per annum, for the education of children of the parish: the income is applied to teaching twenty-seven boys and girls, and in support of a Sunday school for sixty children.

CHISWICK, a parish in the Kensington division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from London, containing 4236 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. 4. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas: in the churchyard are some ancient tombs, and a monument to the memory of Hogarth, the painter. Here are charity schools, founded in the year 1719, by Lady Capel, and endowed with £39 per annum, for teaching and clothing twenty boys and ten girls. Chiswick is pleasantly situated on the margin of the Thames, to the left of the great western road from London, and contains many elegant seats belonging to the nobility and gentry, the principal of which, Devonshire House, is adorned on each side with fine rows of cedars: in this mansion died the Right Hon. Charles James Fox, in 1806, and the Right Hon. George Canning, in 1827. Here are the extensive gardens belonging to the Horticultural Society of London, incorporated by charter in 1808, for the improvement of horticulture in all its branches, the concerns of which are under the superintendence of a council, president, treasurer, and secretary: the general meetings of the Fellows take place on the first and third Tuesdays in every month, at the house belonging to the Society, in Regent-street, London: a selection from the papers read to the Society is occasionally published. The Society has formed a collection of drawings of the most approved fruits and ornamental plants, together with models of fruit in wax; and the members have free access to a library of horticultural works; the terms are six guineas on admission, and four guineas per annum.

CHISWORTH, a joint township with Ludworth, in the parish of GLOSSOP, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 9 miles (N. N. W.) from Chapel en le Frith. The population is returned with Ludworth.

CHITHURST, a chapelry in the parish of IPING, hundred of DUMPFORD, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Midhurst, containing 146 inhabitants. The chapel is in the early style of English architecture.

CHITTLEHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of SOUTH MOLTON, county of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from South Molton, containing 1748 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £34. 18. 11½., and in the patronage of Lord Rolle. The church, dedicated to St. Urith, is a handsome structure, with a fine tower in the later style of English architecture, containing a pulpit richly carved with figures of saints and vine leaves, besides some interesting monuments. Culm is obtained in the parish; and limestone is found enclosed in a bed of thick slate, or flag-stone. At Brightley are some remains of an ancient mansion and a chapel.

CHITTOE, a tything in the parish of BISHOP'S CANNINGS, hundred of POTTERNE and CANNINGS, county of WILTS, 5 miles (N. W.) from Devizes, containing 233 inhabitants.

CHIVELSTONE, a parish in the hundred of COLBRIDGE, county of DEVON, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Kingsbridge, containing 637 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Stokingham, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Sylvester. At Ford there is a meeting-house for dissenters.

CHIVESFIELD, county of HERTFORD. — See GRAVELEY.

CHIVINGTON (EAST), a township in that part of the parish of WARKWORTH which is in the eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Morpeth, containing 207 inhabitants.

CHIVINGTON (WEST), a township in that part of the parish of WARKWORTH which is in the eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (N. by E.) from Morpeth, containing 108 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, which has long been in ruins. From the foundations of houses, still to be seen, extending one mile and a half in a direct line from this place to East Chivington, it seems to have been formerly a place of much greater importance.

CHOBHAM, a parish in the first division of the hundred of GODLEY, county of SURREY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Bagshot, containing 1719 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £10. 2. 1., and in the patronage of Samuel Thornton, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Bagshot heath forms a large portion of this parish, but little more than a third of it is in cultivation, the soil being for the most part sandy, with beds of gravel underneath. At Chobham park are the remains of a large mansion, in which Archbishop Heath died. There is a school for about one hundred and fifty children, supported by subscription.

CHOCKNELL, a hamlet in the parish of LEIGH, lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Worcester. The population is returned with the parish. This was formerly a distinct parish: the living, which was a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £16. 1. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., has been consolidated with the rectory of Leigh; it is in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester. The church has been demolished.

CHOLDERTON, a chapelry in the parish of AMPORT, hundred of ANDOVER, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (W.) from Andover. The population is returned with the parish.

CHOLDERTON, a parish in the hundred of AMESBURY, county of WILTS, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Amesbury, containing 149 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 0. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Oriel College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. By deed in 1753, Anthony Cratcherode gave land for teaching children, and for the poor of this parish.

CHOLLERTON, a parish in the north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the chapelry of Chipchase with Gunnerton, and the townships of Barrasford, Chollerton, and Colwell with Swinburn, and the greater part of the township of Broomhope with Buteland, and containing 1241 inhabitants, of which number, 403 are in the township of Chollerton, 6 miles (N.) from Hexham. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £6. 14. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Colonel and Mrs. Beaumont. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. A cross, still called St. Oswald's cross, was set up here by Oswald, King of Northumberland, to commemorate his victory at Haledon, in this parish, over Ceadwall, King of Cumberland, after which he became a Christian. About a mile from the village of Chollerton was the line of the Picts' wall, erected by the Romans and South Britons, in 430, to protect themselves from the incursions of the Picts, the remains of which still exist, extending above eighty miles through this county and that of Cumberland, from the North sea to the Solway Frith: it was eight feet broad and twelve high, with towers situated about a mile from each other; and at short distances were erected several small fortified places, called Chesters by the Saxons, many vestiges of which are still conspicuous. Within this parish also are the remains of two ancient and extensive castles, called Chipchase and Swinburn, which have partly been converted into elegant modern structures.

CHOLMONDELEY, a township in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Nantwich, containing 297 inhabitants. Cholmondeley House was garrisoned, in 1643, by four hundred royalists, who, in April, were attacked and defeated by the parliamentary troops from Nantwich, having lost fifty men and six hundred horses. It afterwards fell into the hands of the parliamentarians, and was re-captured by the royalists, who were driven from it again on the 30th of June, 1644. The present splendid mansion of Cholmondeley castle, about half a mile from the former, the seat of the Marquis of Cholmondeley, was begun in 1801, and completed in 1804. A domestic chapel, to which the tenants enjoy the privilege of resorting, has long been attached to it.

CHOLMONDSTONE, a township in the parish of ACTON, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Nantwich, containing 208 inhabitants. Thomas Fillcock left a small bequest for teaching poor children.

CHOLSEY, a parish in the hundred of READING, though locally in the hundred of Moreton, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Wallingford, containing 975 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Moulsoford united, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £18. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains some remains of Norman architecture. The Baptists have a place of worship here. A monastery was founded, in 986, by Ethelred, as an atonement for the murder of his brother, Edward the Martyr, which was destroyed by the Danes in 1006, together with the village wherein it was situated. The abbot of Reading had a seat here, which was granted, in 1555, to Sir Francis Englefield, and conveyed afterwards by the crown to William Knollys, Viscount Wallingford, subsequently created Earl of Banbury.

CHOPPINGTON, a township in the parish of BEDLINGTON, eastern division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, though locally on the east side of the county of Northumberland, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Morpeth. The population is returned with the parish. There is a bridge of four arches over the Wansbeck at Sheepwash, in this township.

CHOPWELL, a township in the parish of RYTON, western division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Gateshead, containing 237 inhabitants. This township contains some coal; and at Black-hall, on the river Derwent, is a manufactory for German steel, which is stated to have been first carried on here by some emigrants from Germany. Lady Liddell supports a school for boys and another for girls.

CHORLEY, a township in the parish of WILMSLOW, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Macclesfield, containing 478 inhabitants.

CHORLEY, a township in the parish of WRENBURY, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Nantwich, containing 183 inhabitants.

CHORLEY, a market town and parish in the hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, 32 miles (S. by E.) from Lancaster, and 208 (N. W. by N.) from London, on the road to Scotland, containing 7315 inhabitants. The name of this place is derived from its situation on the river Chor, about a mile from its confluence with the Yarrow, and either from the Saxon word Ley, a field, or from the family of Ley, who were its ancient proprietors. The town is pleasantly situated on the summit of a considerable elevation, and, though in Leland's time described as "a wonderful poore or rather no market," has, from the excellent quarries in the neighbourhood, and from the enterprising spirit of its inhabitants, been rapidly rising into consideration and importance, and increasing in population and extent: since the census of 1821, more than three hundred houses have been erected. The town is well lighted with gas by a company established in 1819, who enlarged and appropriated to that purpose some works previously erected for lighting a private manufactory: it is amply supplied with water, which, under the direction of a company formed in 1823, is conveyed by pipes from a large reservoir, into which it is raised by a steam-engine of twelve-horse power, from a spring that affords an abundant supply: from the elevated situation of the reservoir, the water descends with a velocity sufficient to raise it to the roofs of the highest buildings. The environs, in which are many elegant mansions, abound with pleasing and diversified scenery: the hills are rich in coal, slate, ashler, and mill-stone. Mines of lead-ore and alum-shale exist in the neighbourhood: the lead mine is worked at Anglezark, and contains an abundance of carbonate of barytes. The principal branch of manufacture is that of cotton, which is carried on to a considerable extent; the chief articles are muslins and calicoes: there are large printing and bleaching establishments on the banks of the streams in the vicinity; many of the factories are worked by water, and several by steam-engines of considerable power. The Lancaster canal, and the Leeds and Liverpool canal, which unite to the south-west of Whittle le Woods, pass within half a mile of the town. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are held on March 26th, May 5th, and August 20th, principally for cattle; and September 4th, 5th, and 6th, for woollen cloth, hardware, and pedlary. The county magistrates hold a petty session for the division, once in five weeks, alternately with Cuerdon, Leyland, Penwortham, and Rufford; and the lord of the manor holds a court leet once a year. The town-hall, a neat stone building, in the area under which the market is held, was erected in 1802, at the sole expense of the late John Hollingshead, Esq.; the upper part contains a large room in which the petty sessions are held, and a smaller for the transaction of parochial business: adjoining it is a small prison for the temporary confinement of offenders prior to their committal to the county gaol.

Chorley was originally a chapelry in the parish of Croston, from which it was separated in 1793, when that extensive parish was divided into three distinct parishes. The living is a rectory not in charge, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, and in the patronage of the Rev. John Whalley Master, B.D. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is an ancient structure, retaining several features of Norman character, of which the south entrance is a fine specimen: it formerly contained a relic, said to be the head of its tutelary saint, which, according to a manuscript in the British Museum, was brought from Normandy by Sir Rowland Stanley, Knt., and presented to the parish by his brother. St. George's church, completed in 1825, at an expense of £11,845.12.5., defrayed by the parliamentary commissioners, is a handsome and spacious structure in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower, and contains two thousand and twelve sittings, of which one thousand five hundred and ninety are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Chorley. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The grammar school was originally established by the churchwardens of the parish, who, in 1634, built a schoolroom, partly in the churchyard, and partly in the yard of an adjoining tythe-barn; it has a small endowment, not exceeding £10 per annum, arising from several subsequent benefactions, and a new schoolroom was erected in 1824: the course of instruction is rather commercial than classical, and every scholar pays a quarterage to the master, none being gratuitously instructed. A charity school, for which a new building was erected at an expense of £600, raised by subscription in 1824, is conducted on the National plan: there are also similar schools in which about one thousand children are educated. An almshouse was erected and endowed, in 1692, by Hugh Cooper, Esq., for six aged persons, who have each an apartment, a garden, and an allowance of £2 per annum in money.

CHORLTON, a township in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Malpas, containing 124 inhabitants. A quantity of Roman coins, of the reigns of the emperors Valerian and Posthumus, was dug up, in March 1818, by some workmen, in a field in this township.

CHORLTON, a township in the parish of WYBUNBURY, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Nantwich, containing 91 inhabitants.

CHORLTON, a township in that part of the parish of BACKFORD which is in the higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Chester, containing 78 inhabitants.

CHORLTON, a chapelry in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Manchester, containing, with Hardy, 624 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of the Collegiate Church of Manchester. In 1741, Margaret Usherwood bequeathed £160, for clothing and teaching six poor children.

CHORLTON, a chapelry in the parish of ECCLESHALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ecclellah, containing 237 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Eccleshall in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of certain Trustees. The chapel, dedicated to St. Lawrence, had sixty free sittings recently erected in it, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels granted £50.

CHORLTON-HILL, a township in the parish of ECCLESHALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 94 inhabitants.

CHORLTON-ROW, a chapelry in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, containing 8209 inhabitants. It is situated adjacent to the town of Manchester, and consists of several good streets, being well lighted with gas, paved, and amply supplied with water, and is inhabited by many of the merchants and manufacturers of that town, in the trade of which it greatly participates, there being several large spinning mills in the chapelry. The chapel, dedicated to St. Luke, was built by the late Rev. Edward Smith, and opened in 1804; it is a small neat structure of brick, with a turret. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. An infant school was established in 1825, in which there are about two hundred children; and there are Sunday schools attached to the different places of worship. This chapelry is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests for the recovery of debts under £5, held at Manchester. The building lately erected for a town-hall, dispensary, and constables' dwelling-house, is described in the account of Manchester.

CHOULESBURY, a parish in the hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Chesham, containing 132 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £8 per annum private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Trustees of Mr. Neale. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

CHOWBENT, a hamlet in the parish of LEIGH, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Leigh, containing 4145 inhabitants. A chapel, which formerly belonged to a congregation of dissenters, was consecrated by Dr. Wilson, the pious and benevolent bishop of Sodor and Man: the living is a donative, in the gift of Lord Lilford. There is a place of worship for Unitarians. This is a large village, in which the manufacture of nails is carried on to some extent; several carding-engines, spinning-frames, &c., were formerly made here. There are two fairs for toys, pedlary, &c., on June 29th and August 24th; but a market, formerly held by custom, has fallen into disuse.

CHOWLEY, a township in the parish of CODDINGTON, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Chester, containing 78 inhabitants.

CHRISHALL, a parish in the hundred of UTTLESFORD, county of ESSEX, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Saffron-Walden, containing 411 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

CHRIST-CHURCH, county of MIDDLESEX.—See SPITALFIELDS.

CHRISTCHURCH, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of CALDICOTT, county of MONMOUTH, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Newport, containing, with the hamlet of Caertou-ultra-Pontem, 854 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £13. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is a large and elegant edifice, occupying an elevated situation. The petty sessions for the lower division of the hundred are held here, and also at Magor. The river Usk partly bounds this parish, in which there is an abundance of limestone.

CHRISTCHURCH, a borough, sea port, market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Christchurch, New Forest (West) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $21\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Southampton, and 100 (S. W. by W.) from London, containing, with the chapels of Bransgore, Hinton, and the tythings of Street, Bure with Hinton, Hurn with Parly, Iford with Tuckton (in Westover liberty), and Winkton with Burton, 4644 inhabitants. This place is of great antiquity, and, from some relics discovered in the church, is supposed to have been of Roman origin; by the Saxons it was called Twynham-Bourne and Tweon-ea, from its situation between two rivers. The earliest historical notice of it occurs in the Saxon Chronicles, which records its occupation by Ethelwold, during his revolt against his kinsman, Edward the Elder. In Domesday-book it is mentioned, under the name Thuinam, as a burgh and royal manor, containing thirty-one messuages. Its present name is derived from its church and priory, founded prior to the Conquest for a dean and twenty-four secular canons, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity, which was rebuilt in the reign of William Rufus, and dedicated to our Saviour Christ, by Ralph Flambard, Bishop of Durham, and formerly dean of the priory; it was largely endowed by Richard de Rivers, Earl of Devon, to whom Henry I. gave the manor. Earl Baldwin, son and successor to Earl Richard, placed canons regular of the order of St. Augustine in this priory, which flourished till the dissolution, at which time its revenue was £544. 6. Some portions of the walls that enclosed the conventual buildings are still remaining: the ancient lodge is now occupied as a dwelling-house, and the site of the refectory may be traced by the remnants of its walls. The town was fortified by Richard de Rivers, who either erected or rebuilt the castle, of which there are some remains to the north of the priory; these consist chiefly of the ruins of the keep, on the summit of an artificial mount, the walls of which are more than ten feet in thickness, and part of the range that comprised the state apartments: the Norman style of architecture prevails and the arches of some remaining windows are divided by Norman pillars.

Christchurch is situated on the borders of the New Forest, and between the rivers Avon and Stour, which uniting their streams at a short distance below, expand into a broad sheet of water and fall into Christchurch bay, in connexion with which they form a harbour. The current of the Avon, to the east of the town, is intercepted and divided into two parts by an island, from each side of which a bridge to the opposite bank of the river forms the continuation of the road to Lymington: on the site of several houses, destroyed by a fire within the last few years, a new street of respectable houses has been erected: the town is not lighted, nor regularly paved, but is amply supplied with water. The harbour is accessible only at high tides to small vessels drawing not more than from five to six feet of water, the entrance being obstructed by a bar, or lodge of sand, extending from Hengistbury Head, on the Hampshire side, where Hengist, King of the Saxons, landed, to St. Catherine's Cliff, in the Isle of Wight, and occasionally shifting its position, according to the prevalence of successive rains, or sea-storms, attended with southerly winds. In this harbour, as in the neighbouring port of Pool, there is high water twice at every tide: this peculiarity arises from the situation of the coast with respect to the Isle of Wight, and from the projection of the point of land on which Hurst Castle is situated, which, by obstructing the free passage of the water at the influx of the tide, occasions its rise in the bay and harbour to take place earlier than at Portsmouth and Chichester, by three hours and a half at the full and change of the moon; and, by confining the water which has spread over the channel and Southampton water, its reflux is sufficiently violent to cause a second rise in Christchurch bay of nearly three feet. The river Avon was made navigable to Salisbury in 1680, but the accumulation of sand has rendered the navigation useless. The salmon fishery, which formerly afforded employment to a considerable number of the labouring class, has very much declined: there are two breweries; and many females are employed in the knitting of stockings, and in the manufacture of watch-spring, or fusee, chains, the latter of which has been lately established. The market is on Monday: fairs are held on Trinity-Thursday, and October 17th, for cattle and horses. The government is vested in a mayor, recorder, two bailiffs, aldermen, and common council-men, in all twenty-four; but the officers of the corporation do not exercise magisterial authority, the town being wholly within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. The borough was summoned in the 35th of Edward I. and the 2nd of Edward II., but made no subsequent return till the 13th of Elizabeth, since which time it has regularly sent two members to parliament: the right of election is claimed by the resident householders paying scot and lot, but is at present exercised exclusively by the members of the corporation, who are in the interest of Sir George H. Rose: the mayor is the returning officer. Courts leet and baron are held here.

The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Holdenhurst annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and anciently the collegiate church of the priory, is a magnificent cruciform structure, partly in the Norman style, and partly in the early and later styles of English architecture, with a finely proportioned and embattled tower at the west end, which was erected by the Montacutes, earls of Salisbury, in the fifteenth century. The piers and arches of the nave, which is of Norman character, are bold and simple; the clerestory is of later date; the northern entrance is a fine specimen of the early, and the chancel of the later, English style. The altar is decorated with a rude, but interesting, representation of the genealogy of Christ, carved in the style of the age in which the church was founded: to the north of it is a beautiful sepulchral chapel, built in the reign of Henry VII., by the celebrated countess of Salisbury, who, in the 70th year of her age, was beheaded by Henry VIII.; and at the east is a spacious chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, erected in the fourteenth century by the ancestor of Lord Delaware, over which is a large room, called St. Michael's loft, which, since 1662, has been appropriated to the use of the grammar school; there are some other chapels of fine execution, chiefly in the later English style. The west front, principally in the early style, in which a large and handsome window has been recently inserted, is ornamented with a figure of Christ in a canopied niche: the length of this church is three hundred and eleven feet, its breadth at the western extremity sixty feet, and along the transepts one hundred and four feet. There is a place of worship for Independents in the town; and at Burton, a mile and a half to the north, is a Roman Catholic chapel. The free grammar school is of uncertain foundation: in 1707, it had an annuity of £25 for ninety-nine years, payable from the Exchequer; since the expiration of which, in 1805, the amount of various benefactions, vested in the South Sea funds, produces an income of £15 per annum, for which ten boys are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic, by a master, who occupies the room over the chapel at the east end of the church. A National and a Lancasterian school, recently established, are supported by subscription; and there are several charitable bequests for distribution among the poor. An intrenchment, six hundred and thirty yards in length, extends across the isthmus which connects Hengistbury Head, with the main land; and near its northern extremity is a large barrow, in which human bones and an urn have been found. On a ridge of hills, about a mile and a half to the north of Christchurch, and a mile to the west of the Avon, called St. Catherine's hill, are traces of an exploratory camp, fifty-five yards square, round which are six small tumuli; and near the base of the hill are ten large barrows, one of which has been discovered to contain human bones. To the north of the camp is an elliptical earthwork, of which the greater diameter is thirty-five, and the less twenty-five, yards: the remains of other intrenchments may be traced in the vicinity.

CHRIST-CHURCH, a parish partly in the eastern division of the hundred of BRIXTON, but chiefly within the borough of SOUTHWARK, county of SURREY, containing 13,339 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester.

The Trustees of Mr. Marshall's charities were patrons in 1809. This parish, situated on the south side of Blackfriars' bridge, was anciently termed the liberty of Paris Garden, and formed a part of the parish of St. Saviour until 1706, when it was made a distinct parish by act of parliament. It constituted a portion of the borough of Southwark under a charter of Edward VI., though the inhabitants cannot vote for its parliamentary members, in consequence of having allowed the privilege to fall into disuse. The parish is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests for the town and borough of Southwark, established by an act passed in the 22nd of George II., for the recovery of debts under 40s. In 1713, a school for boys was established in Blackfriars' road; and in 1720, a school for girls was added to it, both by subscription: the school-room belonging to the former was enlarged, and that belonging to the latter rebuilt, in 1819, when the Lancasterian system was introduced: they have a permanent endowment of about £180 per annum, and the annual amount of subscriptions, &c., is upwards of £300 more: a few children of each sex are clothed. Almshouses for forty-four poor persons are endowed with nearly £300 per annum, arising from property given by Edward Edwardes, in 1717. Hopton's almshouses, founded by Charles Hopton, in 1730, are endowed with about £500 per annum, affording an asylum to twenty-six poor men. There are various charities for general purposes, all of minor amount except Marshall's charity, founded by John Marshall in 1627, and producing nearly £900 per annum; Hammerton's, producing £230 per annum; and Boyse's, producing £160 per annum.

CHRISTIAN-MALFORD, a parish partly in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, comprising the chapelry of Avon, but chiefly in the northern division of the hundred of DAMERHAM (of which it is a detached portion), county of WILTS, 5½ miles (N.E. by N.) from Chippenham, and containing 896 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £27, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Independents. The origin and name of this large parish are involved in obscurity, though it was evidently of greater importance in former times than it is at present; but tradition says that the Saxons having been defeated by the Danes in this neighbourhood, the place being before called Melford, from the badness of the passage across the river, it assumed the prefix of Christian for having proved disastrous to the former. The village is built near an old ford on the Avon, which here turns a fulling-mill. There is a National school for children of both sexes.

CHRISTLETON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Christleton, Cotton-Abbots, Cotton-Edmund's, Littleton, and Rowton, and containing 954 inhabitants, of which number, 701 are in the township of Christleton, 2¼ miles (E. by S.) from Chester. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £39. 5., and in the patronage of Sir Thomas Mostyn, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. James, existed prior to the Conquest: the body has been wholly rebuilt of brick, but the stone tower bears the date 1530. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This place formed, at the time of the Norman survey, a part of the barony of Malpas, at which period it is said to have been very populous; it continued of some importance, and was fortified for the parliament, having been made the headquarters of Sir William Brereton; but on the siege of Chester being raised, in February 1645, it was, in a sally of the citizens, very nearly destroyed by fire. The Chester and Ellesmere canal passes close to the village. In 1779, John Sellers, of Littleton, left a small bequest for teaching poor children; and a school-house was built in 1800, principally by a bequest from John Hignett, Esq.

CHRISTON, a parish in the hundred of WINTERSTOKE, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N.W. by W.) from Axbridge, containing 55 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 1. 8., and in the patronage of Montague Gore, Esq. The church is principally in the early style of English architecture.

CHRISTOW, a parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, 5½ miles (N.N.W.) from Chudleigh, containing 531 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8. 6. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Viscount Exmouth. The church, dedicated to St. James, has a Norman font, and some fine screen-work across the nave and aisles. In this neighbourhood are many excellent cherry orchards. Pope House is said to have been a cell to the priory of Cowick, near Exeter.

CHUDLEIGH, a market town and parish in the hundred of EXMINSTER, county of DEVON, 9 miles (S.S.W.) from Exeter, and 182 (W.S.W.) from London, containing 2053 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Chidleighe, was formerly the residence of the bishops of Exeter, who had a sumptuous palace, of which there are some small remains. In the year 1309, Bishop Stapleton procured for it the grant of a weekly market and an annual fair. During the parliamentary war, the army under General Fairfax was quartered in this town: in 1807, nearly half of it was destroyed by fire, the loss of property having been estimated at £60,000 value. The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence near the eastern bank of the river Teign, and consists principally of one long street; the houses are in general modern and neatly built, and are well supplied with water: the environs are pleasant, and abound with woodland scenery. The trade, which consisted principally in the manufacture of woollen cloth, has lately declined: extensive quarries of good marble and excellent limestone, which abound in the vicinity, afford employment to many of the inhabitants; and the neighbourhood is famed for cider of superior quality. The market is on Saturday: the fairs, chiefly for cattle and sheep, are on Easter-Tuesday, the third Tuesday and Wednesday in June, and October 2nd, unless it falls on Saturday, Sunday, or Monday, in which case it is postponed till the Tuesday following. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £21, and in the patronage of the parishioners possessing freehold property to the amount of £5 per annum. The church, which is small and not entitled to architectural notice, is dedicated to St. Martin. There is a place of worship for Independents. The free grammar school was founded, in 1668, by Mr. John Pynsent, of Combe, in the county of Surrey, who built the schoolroom, with suitable accommodations for the master, and endowed it with a rent-charge of £30 per annum, founding also three exhibitions for its benefit at Cambridge, of £5 each, tenable for four years. There is also an endowment of £5 per annum for teaching poor children; and a National school, recently established, is supported by subscription. Half a mile from the town is Chudleigh Rock, a stupendous mass of limestone, in which is a cavern of considerable extent; and near it are very perfect remains of an elliptical encampment, supposed from its form to be of Danish origin, but, from its proximity to a Roman road, to have been previously occupied by that people. The quarries yield argillaceous slate; antimony and cobalt may be found in the neighbourhood, and many organic remains have been discovered. Chudleigh confers the title of baron on the family of Clifford.

CHULMLEIGH, a market town and parish in the hundred of WITHERIDGE, county of DEVON, 21½ miles (N.W.) from Exeter, and 194 (W.byS.) from London, containing 1506 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Chimleighe, is not connected with many events of historical importance: in the reign of Henry III., John de Courtenay, Earl of Devonshire, obtained for it the grant of a weekly market. During the parliamentary war, a skirmish took place here between the royalists and the parliamentarians, in 1645. The town, a considerable portion of which was destroyed by fire in 1803, is situated on an eminence rising gently from the eastern bank of the river Taw: the houses, with the exception of a few which are modern and well built, are low and covered with thatch; but there is an ample supply of water. Though formerly a place of considerable trade for wool-combing, it does not now possess any particular branch of manufacture. The market is on Friday: fairs are held on the third Friday in March, the Wednesday in Easter week, and the last Wednesday in July. A portreeve, whose office is merely nominal, and other officers, are appointed annually at the court leet and baron of the lord of the manor. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstable, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £20. 18. 1½., and in the patronage and incumbency of the Rev. George Hole: in the church are five prebends, endowed with glebe and a portion of the tithes of the parish, viz., Brookland, rated at £4. 8. 4.; Denes, at £4. 6. 8.; Higher Heyne, at £5. 13. 4.; Lower Heyne, at £5; and Penels, at £5; they are distinct from the rectory, but are now held with it, the advowson both to the rectory and the prebends having been in the family of the present rector since 1773, when they were purchased from the Duke of Beaufort, then lord of the manor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was damaged by lightning in 1797; it is an ancient and spacious structure in the decorated style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower; the interior is fine, and contains an ancient screen of oak richly carved. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A small charity school was endowed by Mrs. Pyncombe with £10 per annum, for the instruction of twelve boys and twelve girls.

CHUNAT, a township in the parish of GLOSSOP, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 7½ miles (N. by W.) from Chapel en le Frith, containing 145 inhabitants.

CHURCHAM, a parish partly in the lower division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, but chiefly in the hundred of WESTBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, 4½ miles (W. by N.) from Gloucester, containing, with the hamlets of Highnam, Over, and Linton, 733 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Hereford, and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £20. 5., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a small edifice, with some remains of Norman architecture. There is a chapel of ease at Bulley, in this parish.

CHURCHDOWN, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, county of GLOUCESTER, 3½ miles (E. by N.) from Gloucester, containing, with the hamlet of Hucklecot, 954 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. The village is singularly situated on the top of an oval eminence, nearly four miles in circuit at the base, and rising from the vale to the height of about two thousand five hundred feet. The Gloucester and Cheltenham railway passes through the parish. There are two charity schools, for boys and girls, supported by an endowment of about £25 per annum, devised in 1734, by H. Window, Esq.; and four almshouses, for four poor widows, are endowed with about £4 per annum each. John Harmer, Professor of Greek in the University of Oxford, author of a Life of Cicero, a Greek Etymological Dictionary, and other learned works, was born here; he died in 1670. His father, who died in 1613, master of Winchester school, and one of the translators of the Bible, appears to have been minister of this parish.

CHURCH-END, a township in that part of the parish of SHENLEY which is in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, containing 225 inhabitants.

CHURCHENFORD, a hamlet in the parish of CHURCH-STANTON, hundred of HEMYOCK, county of DEVON, 9¼ miles (N.N.E.) from Honiton. The population is returned with the parish. The village is noted for its excellent cider: there are cattle fairs on the 25th of January and the 6th of March.

CHURCHFIELD, a hamlet (formerly a chapelry) in the parish of OUNDLE, hundred of POLEBROOKE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (W.) from Oundle, with which the population is returned. The chapel has been demolished.

CHURCHILL, a parish in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (S.W. by W.) from Chipping-Norton, containing 665 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 16. 0½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a school for educating and clothing girls.

CHURCHILL, a parish in the hundred of WINTERSTOKE, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Axbridge, containing 824 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Banwell at Wells, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a handsome structure, with an embattled tower, and contains a fine altar-piece representing the Lord's Supper, and several interesting monuments. This is a very ancient place, occurring in old deeds under the names of Curichill, Cheuchill, and Cherchill: immediately after the Conquest it was held by Roger de Leon, who came over with the Conqueror, and who appears to have assumed the name of Courcill, or Curcelle, from this property; he is said have been the remote ancestor of John Churchill, the great Duke of Marlborough. On a very high point of the Mendip range of hills, above the village, is an old encampment, called Dolberry Castle, forming a parallelogram of five hundred and forty yards by two hundred and twenty, and enclosed by a ditch, varying from sixteen to thirty feet in depth, on all sides but the south-east, where the steepness of the hill rendered it unnecessary; within it many Roman and Saxon coins and some fragments of weapons have been found. In 1820, James Symons, Esq. left three acres of land, directing the income to be applied to the education of eight poor children; there are several benefactions for the relief of the poor.

CHURCHILL, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of HALFESHIRE, county of WORCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Kidderminster, containing 141 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Lord Lyttelton. The church is dedicated to St. James. Here is a chalybeate spring, which was formerly much frequented.

CHURCHILL, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Worcester, containing 102 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Lord Lyttelton. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

CHURCHOVER, a parish in the Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Rugby, containing 322 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of Abraham Grimes, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a small edifice with a spire and a side aisle. The river Swift runs through the parish.

CHURCH-STANTON, a parish in the hundred of HEMYOCK, county of DEVON, 11 miles (N. by E.) from Honiton, containing 862 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £26. 5. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Clarke. The church is dedicated to St. Paul: one hundred and fourteen free sittings have recently been added, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels granted £80. There is a small endowed school.

CHURCHSTOW, a parish in the hundred of STANBOROUGH, county of DEVON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Kingsbridge, containing 316 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Kingsbridge, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £16. 16. 11., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The great tithes, which formerly belonged to the abbot of Buckfastleigh, are now vested in the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The river Avon bounds the parish on the north-west.

CHURCH-TOWN, a chapelry in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Blackburn, containing 752 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £10 per annum and £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £700 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Earl Howe. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CHURSTON-FERRERS, a parish in the hundred of HAYTOR, county of DEVON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W.) from Brixham, containing 726 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Brixham, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church contains an ancient wooden screen. This parish lies on the coast of the English channel, having the navigable river Dart running along its western side, and Torbay bounding it on the north. There is an almshouse for seven poor people.

CHURTON, a township in that part of the parish of ALDFORD which is in the higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Chester, containing 210 inhabitants.

CHURTON, a township in the parish of FARNDON, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 7 miles (S. by E.) from Chester, containing 117 inhabitants. The river Dee bounds this township on the west.

CHURTON, or CHIRKTON, a parish in the hundred of SWANBOROUGH, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from East Lavington, containing, with the tything of Conock, 401 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown.

CHURTON-HEATH, or BRUERA, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ALDFORD which is in the lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Chester, containing 8 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of St. Oswald, city of Chester, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, is a very ancient structure, with a Norman arch between the nave and the chancel, and a rich Norman door at the south end; various carved stones are conspicuous in the walls.

CHURWELL, a township in that part of the parish of BATLEY which is in the wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (S.W. by S.) from Leeds, containing 814 inhabitants, who are chiefly employed in the manufacture of woollen cloth. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CHUTE, a parish in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, 3½ miles (N.E.) from Ludgershall, containing 489 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Chute and Chisenbury in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. Jeremy Corderoy, a divine of some celebrity in the seventeenth century, was born here: there is a small endowment for the instruction of children.

CHUTE-FOREST, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, 4½ miles (N.E. by N.) from Ludgershall, containing 144 inhabitants.

CIPPENHAM, a liberty in the parish and hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2½ miles (N.W. by N.) from Eton. The population is returned with the parish. This is said to have been a place of residence for the Saxon kings; but it is more certain that here was a palace for the monarchs of the Norman line.

CIRCOURT, a joint chapelry with Goosey, in that part of the parish of STANFORD in the VALE which is in the hundred of Ock, county of BERKS. The population is returned with Goosey.

Arms.

CIRENCESTER, an unincorporated borough, market town, and parish, in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, county of GLOUCESTER, 17 miles (S.E.) from Gloucester, and 88 (W. by N.) from London, containing 4987 inhabitants. Prior to the arrival of the Romans, this was a British city, called Caer Cori, the town on the river Corin, now Churn, which the Romans converted into a military station, denominated Corinium: this station, from its situation near the intersection of the Fosse-way with the Ermin and Ikniel streets, was one of considerable extent and importance; vestiges of the vallum and rampart are yet visible on the south-eastern side of the town, where Roman inscriptions, tessellated pavements, coins, urns, vases, the remains of an hypocaust, and various fragments of masonry, have been found. The Saxons added the name Ceaster, of which, and its Roman name, the present is a corruption. It was the metropolis of the Dobuni, an ancient British tribe, from whom, in 577, it was taken by Ceawlin, King of Wessex; in 656 it was annexed to the kingdom of Mercia; and, in 879, the Danes under Guthrum, after their memorable defeat by Alfred, in the battle of Ethan-dune, retired hither, where they remained for a year, during the progress of the negotiations which led to their conversion to Christianity, and their settlement in the island. Canute the Great held a general council here in 1020, when, according to the Saxon Chronicle, "Alderman Ethelward was outlawed, and Edwy, King of the Churls." In the war between Stephen and Matilda, Cirencester castle, of which the earliest notice then occurs, being garrisoned by Robert, Earl of Gloucester, on the part of Matilda, was taken and burnt by the king's troops, in 1142; having been rebuilt, it was afterwards garrisoned by the disaffected barons against Henry III., but was taken by the king, who issued his warrant for its immediate demolition. The wall and gates that defended the town continued entire for some time afterwards. In 1322, Edward II. spent the festival of Christmas here, and soon afterwards convened an assembly of his nobles, to devise means for crushing the conspiracy formed by Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, and other barons, against his favourite, Hugh le Despencer; and the whole of the royal army was subsequently assembled here. Early in the reign of Henry IV., the Dukes of Albemarle, Surrey, and Exeter, and the Earls of Gloucester and Salisbury, with other persons of distinction, entered into a conspiracy to assassinate the king, and restore the deposed monarch, Richard II. Henry being informed of this, led an army against them, when some of the principal conspirators, with the forces under them, retired to Cirencester, where they encamped: here they were attacked by surprise by the townsmen; and the Duke of Surrey and the Earl of Salisbury were taken and immediately beheaded, on which the troops dispersed. Henry subsequently granted the town a charter for the encouragement of trade, which, after a contested dispute in Chancery, was cancelled in the 37th of Elizabeth. The explosion of hostilities against Charles I. is stated to have occurred in this town, by a personal attack upon Lord Chandos, who had been appointed to execute the commission of array on behalf of the king; and it was soon afterwards garrisoned for the parliament. Having been assaulted by Prince Rupert, it was captured, after a sharp conflict of two hours, on the 2nd of February, 1642; but was recovered for the parliament by the Earl of Essex, on the 16th of September in the following year: it again fell into the hands of the royalists, but was ultimately surrendered to the parliament. On the landing of the Prince of Orange, in 1688, the inhabitants, influenced by the Duke of Beaufort, declared for James II.; and Lord Lovelace, on his march through the town, with a party to join the prince, was attacked by Captain Lorange, of the county militia, made prisoner, and sent to Gloucester gaol; in this encounter flowed the first blood that was shed in the revolution.

The town is pleasantly situated, and consists of four principal, and several smaller, streets. It was formerly of much greater extent, the walls having enclosed an area of two miles in circuit. The houses, which are chiefly of stone, are well built, and many of the more respectable are detached: the town is lighted, and the foot-paths paved with small stones; it is well supplied with water. There is a society, called the Cirencester and Gloucestershire Agricultural Association: races are held annually near the town. But little trade is carried on, the cloth manufacture, formerly extensive, having declined: some knives of a peculiar and superior quality are made for the use of curriers; and there are a small carpet-manufactory and two breweries. The Thames and Severn canal passes in the vicinity, and a branch of it comes up to the town. The market is on Monday for corn and provisions, and on Friday for provisions only; the latter was formerly considerable for wool, but, since the decline of the woollen manufacture, is much neglected. Fairs are held on Easter-Thursdays, July 18th, and November 8th; and statute fairs on the Monday before, and the Monday after, October the 10th. The borough is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty sessions here for the seven hundreds of Cirencester, which comprise nearly a fourth part of the county. A court of requests, for the recovery of debts under 40s., established by act of parliament in 1792, is also held for the same division. A court leet is held annually, at which the steward for the manor appoints two high, and fourteen petty, constables, two of the latter being for each of the seven wards into which the borough is divided. By charter of incorporation granted by Henry IV., Cirencester was constituted a separate hundred, which was co-extensive with the borough, but this charter having been set aside in the reign of Elizabeth, it has merged into the adjoining hundred. The borough sent representatives to a great council in the 11th of Edward III., but did not acquire the permanent privilege of returning two burgesses until the year 1571, by grant from Elizabeth: the right of election is vested in the resident householders not receiving alms, except "inhabitants of the abbey, and Emery and Spiringate-lane," about five hundred in number, and in the interest of Earl Bathurst: the steward and bailiff of the manor are the returning officers.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a magnificent structure in the decorated style of English architecture, erected in the fifteenth century, with a lofty embattled tower crowned with pinnacles; its interior and exterior are richly adorned in the most elaborate style, and it contains several chapels of exquisite beauty, and many sepulchral monuments. A fund, producing £267. 9. 4. per annum, was bequeathed for keeping it in repair. Two other churches, one dedicated to St. Cecilia, and the other to St. Lawrence, have long since been desecrated. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded by Bishop Ruthall; the original endowment was augmented by Queen Mary, with £20 per annum, payable out of the Exchequer; the master is appointed by the Lord Chancellor. The Blue-coat school, established by subscription in 1714, was afterwards endowed by Thomas Powell, Esq. with £15 per annum, part of an annuity issuing from the Exchequer for ninety-nine years, and a moiety of the revenue of Maskelyne's estate, to which the Lord Chancellor, in 1737, added £20 per annum, out of property left for charitable uses by Mrs. Rebecca Powell, and, in 1744, with the interest of £562. 7. 6., as a provisional supply after the expiration of the annuity: the income is about £60 per annum. The Yellow-coat school was founded, in 1737, by Mrs. Rebecca Powell, who endowed it for the instruction of twenty boys of Cirencester, in reading, writing, arithmetic, and frame-work knitting, and for clothing and teaching twenty girls: it is under the superintendence of trustees, and the annual income is about £320: the entire amount appropriated for schools in this parish is about £870 per annum. St. John's hospital, for three men and three women, was founded by Henry I., and endowed with land and reserved rents amounting to between £30 and £40 per annum. St. Lawrence's hospital, for a master and two poor women, was founded in the time of Edward III., by Edith, proprietress of the manor of Wiggold; it has a small endowment, and is under the control of Earl Bathurst. St. Thomas' hospital was erected by Sir William Nottingham, attorney-general to Henry IV., and endowed with £6. 18. 8. per annum, which is divided between four persons. In 1620, Mrs. Elizabeth Bridges founded an almshouse, with a small endowment, which has been subsequently augmented; and there are various minor bequests for the benefit of the poor, and for apprenticing children.

Henry I., in 1117, built an abbey for Black canons, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, which he and his successors richly endowed, insomuch that, in the 26th of Henry VIII., its revenue was estimated at £1051. 7. 1.: it was a mitred abbey: the remains consist of two gateways and a large barn. In a field called the Querns, to the west of the town, near the Roman wall, are the remains of an amphitheatre. Grismond's Tower, a circular hill about a quarter of a mile westward, was discovered, on examination, to be a Roman tumulus, containing several large urns full of ashes and burnt bones. Richard of Cirencester, author of a History and Itinerary of Britain in the time of the Romans; Thomas Ruthall, Bishop of Durham, and counsellor to Henry VII.; and Caleb Hillier Parry, M. D., eminent in his profession, and father of the celebrated navigator, were natives of this place.

CLACK, a hamlet in the parish of LINEHAM, hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, county of WILTS, 5½ miles (S.W.) from Wootton-Bassett. The population is returned with the parish. Fairs are held on April 5th and October 10th, for horned cattle, pigs, sheep, horses, and cheese.

CLACKHEATON, a chapelry in the parish of BIRSTALL, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 5½ miles (S.E.) from Bradford, containing, with the hamlets of Scholes and Oakenshaw, 2436 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £540 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant. Miss Curre was patroness in 1805. The chapel is called White chapel: another is now being erected, under the late act for building additional churches, the patronage of which will be in the Vicar of Birstall. The village is situated in a fine fertile valley, stretching from north to south, the acclivities on both sides being well wooded: it has recently undergone great improvement, and several elegant villas have been erected in the vicinity. There are meeting-houses for Independents and Moravians. Worsteds, coarse woollen goods, and machinery for carding and spinning, are manufactured here. Coal abounds in the neighbourhood, and is wrought to some extent. Here stood a small Roman town, the name of which is unknown, and every vestige of it has been obliterated by the plough.

CLACTON (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of TENDRING, county of ESSEX, 14½ miles (S.E. by E.) from Colchester, containing 1075 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Little Holland, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of F. Nassau, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The bishops of London had formerly a palace here. This parish is bounded on the south by the North sea, and contains three Martello towers and a battery for the defence of the coast. A fair for toys is held on the 29th of June.

CLACTON (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of TENDRING, county of ESSEX, 12½ miles (E. S. E.) from Colchester, containing 494 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of F. Nassau, Esq. A fair for toys is held on the 25th of July.

CLAIFE, a township in the parish of HAWKESHEAD, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S. E.) from Hawkeshead, containing 452 inhabitants. This place is bounded on the east by Eastwaite water, and on the west by the beautiful lake of Windermere, which at this point is only a quarter of a mile in breadth, and across which there is a constant ferry for horses and foot passengers. Here is a charity school, founded in 1766, by a bequest of £309 from William Braithwaite, now producing £16. 16. per annum.

CLAINES, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, 2½ miles (N.) from Worcester, containing, with the tything of Whistons, 3853 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Worcester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir H. Wakeman, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. A chapel is now being erected, by a grant of £3345. 10. 8. from the commissioners under the act passed in the 58th of George III., for building additional churches and chapels, to contain seven hundred and twelve sittings, of which three hundred and fifty-eight will be free. Here is a school with an endowment of £7. 7. per annum. The Birmingham canal passes on the south of this parish; and the Droitwich canal, on the north, passes along the western boundary, where it forms a junction with the Severn. The ancient hospital of St. Oswald was founded here prior to 1268. On the site of the mansion of White Ladies was the Benedictine nunnery of Whitestone, or Whistons, founded by Walter de Cantelupe, Bishop of Worcester, in 1255: to this house Charles II. retired after the decisive battle of Worcester. In this parish is the island of Bevere, formed by the rivulet Beverhern, remarkable as having twice afforded refuge to the inhabitants of Worcester; first, in 1041, from the fury of King Hardicanute, on account of their refusing to pay the Danegelt, and next, in 1637, from a dreadful pestilence then raging in the city.

CLANABOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, county of DEVON, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Bow, containing 56 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £5. 17. 3½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Petrock.

CLANDON (EAST), a parish in the second division of the hundred of WOKING, county of SURREY, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Guildford, containing 230 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 10½., and in the patronage of Lord King.

CLANDON (WEST), a parish in the second division of the hundred of WOKING, county of SURREY, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Guildford, containing 361 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £13. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Onslow.

CLANFIELD, a parish in the hundred of BAMP-
TON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Lechlade, containing 490 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 6. 5½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen.

CLANFIELD, a parish in the hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Alton (South) division of the county of SOUTH-AMPTON, 5½ miles (S. W.) from Petersfield, containing 196 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Chalton, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £11. The church is dedicated to St. James.

CLAPCOT, a liberty in that part of the parish of ALLHALLOWS, WALLINGFORD, which is in the hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, containing 38 inhabitants.

CLAPHAM, a parish forming, with the parishes of Milton-Ernest and Oakley, a detached portion of the hundred of STODDEN, county of BEDFORD, 2½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Bedford, containing 204 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a very ancient structure, with a Norman, or Saxon, tower remarkable for the simplicity and rudeness of its architecture. Clapham was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Oakley; the inhabitants still bury there. Here are charitable donations, producing £20 per annum, for the purpose of apprenticing boys.

CLAPHAM, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BRIXTON, county of SURREY, 4 miles (S.) from London, containing 7151 inhabitants. This village has, for many years, been considered as one of the most respectable in the environs of the metropolis. The road from London, particularly that part of it which is called Clapham Rise, has on each side large and handsome houses, with gardens and lawns in front, forming a continuous line leading to the common, which occupies a space of two hundred acres, surrounded by noble mansions and elegant villas; and, from the improvements that have been made by the formation of carriage drives, and the plantation of exotic and native trees and shrubs, assumes the appearance of a park. On the east side a handsome crescent has been recently formed, opposite to which is a range of houses, called the Grove: the area is tastefully laid out in shrubberies, and planted with evergreens, and the approach from the common is formed by a handsome iron palisade, on each side of which is a stately mansion. In that part of the parish situated towards Brixton, which was formerly called Bleakhall Farm, considerable alterations and improvements are taking place: new roads have been made; a new church and several villas have been erected, and the spot is now designated Clapham New Park. The parish, previously watched and lighted under an act of parliament obtained in 1785, is now within the limits of the new police establishment; the road from London is lighted with gas, main pipes having been laid down by the Phoenix gas company, from which a plentiful supply is distributed to every part of the village and its vicinity. The inhabitants are supplied with water from the South Lambeth water-works, and from an excellent spring on the side of the common leading to Wandsworth, opened in 1825, near another which had supplied the village for more than a century: this spring, the water of which is peculiarly soft, supplies upwards of six hundred hogsheads per day, and nearly twenty families derive employment and support by conveying it to the houses of the inhabitants at a moderate expense. The subscription library, to which a commodious reading-room has been added, contains a well-assorted and extensive collection of volumes, in various branches of literature; it has been established for nearly half a century, and is liberally supported. There is no trade except what is necessary for the accommodation of the numerous opulent families residing in the neighbourhood. Clapham is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session at the office of their clerk, every Saturday; and within that of the court of requests for the borough of Southwark, for the recovery of debts under £5, which, by an act passed in the 32nd of George III., was extended to this parish, in common with other places in the eastern division of the hundred of Brixton, not previously included. The acting coroner for the district is appointed at the court of the duchy of Lancaster, within the jurisdiction of which a part of the parish is comprehended: the parochial affairs are under the direction of a select vestry.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £8. 0. 10., and in the patronage of William Atkins, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and which anciently belonged to the priory at Merton, was, with the exception of the north aisle, which was left standing for the performance of the burial service, taken down under an act of parliament in 1774, and a new church erected in the following year, at an expense of £11,000, on the north side of the common: it is a neat structure of brick ornamented with stone, with a dome turret, and having a handsome portico of stone, extending the whole width of the western front, which was added to it in 1812. The interior is characterized by a chaste simplicity of style: the east window is ornamented with a modern and well executed painting on glass, and there are some monumental tablets; but no person is buried either in the church or churchyard, the cemetery of the old church being exclusively reserved for interments. The remaining aisle of the old church, which was situated in that part of the village leading to Wandsworth, and near the old manor-house, of which an octagonal tower is still remaining, was taken down in 1815, and a neat proprietary chapel, in some respects dependent on the mother church, was erected, under an act of parliament, at an expense of £5000, and dedicated to St. Paul. The burial-ground, which is spacious, contains many ancient tombs and monuments; and such of the latter as were in the old church have been put up against the exterior walls of the chapel. A proprietary episcopal chapel, dedicated to St. James, has recently been erected at Clapham New Park, under an act of parliament; it is a small handsome structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. There are two places of worship for Independents, and one for Baptists. The parochial school is supported by subscription: the premises were originally built at the expense of the inhabitants, on ground given for that purpose by Richard Atkins, Esq., lord of the manor; the school-house was taken down and rebuilt in 1781, and in 1809 it was considerably enlarged: upwards of two hundred children now receive instruction.

CLAPHAM, a parish in the hundred of BRIGHTFORD, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Arundel, containing 245 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of R. W. Walker, Esq.

CLAPHAM, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Austwick, Clapham with Newby, and Lawkland, and containing 1889 inhabitants, of which number, 982 are in the township of Clapham with Newby, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Settle. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £5. 17. 1., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester. In 1711, George Ellis bequeathed property now let for £89 per annum, out of which he directed £6. 13. 4. to be paid to a schoolmaster, for teaching twenty children of Clapham and Newby; the residue, after deducting trifling sums for books, and annual expenses to the trustees, is paid to the minister for preaching two sermons every Sunday: there is a school-room at Newby, and another, built by subscription in 1824, at Clapham, for the purposes of this charity, which has been augmented to upwards of £15 per annum by the subsequent bequests of Henry and Grace Winterburn. A fair for sheep is held on the 21st of September.

CLAPTON, a parish in the hundred of ARMINGFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Caxton. The population is returned with the parish of Croydon. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of Croydon, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £4. 9. 7.

CLAPTON, a chapelry in the parish of BOURTON on the WATER, lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, 4½ miles (N. E.), from North Leach, containing 118 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. James.

CLAPTON, a hamlet in the parish of ST. JOHN, HACKNEY, Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 3 miles (N. by E.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. It is divided into Upper and Lower Clapton and extends from Hackney church to Stamford Hill: the houses, in general well built and respectable, are supplied with water by means of pipes leading from a reservoir at Lower Clapton, belonging to the East London Water Works Company, into which it is conveyed from the river Lea by a steam-engine. A proprietary chapel was built at Upper Clapton in 1777, which has lately been enlarged. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The London Orphan Asylum, founded in 1813, for the maintenance and education of destitute orphans, is a handsome building of light-coloured brick, consisting of a centre and two projecting wings, with a lawn in front and gardens behind, situated on a gentle elevation at Lower Clapton, at the distance of one hundred yards from the road: the number of children in this institution at the general annual meeting held on the 25th of January, 1830, including boys and girls, was three hundred and thirty-four.

CLAPTON, a parish in the hundred of NAVISFORD, county of NORTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Thrapston, containing 94 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £17. 3. 9., and in the patronage of W. P. Williams, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CLAPTON, a tything in the parish of MIDSUMMER-NORTON, hundred of CHEWTON, county of SOMERSET, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Shepton-Mallet, containing 106 inhabitants.

CLAPTON, a parish in the hundred of PORTBURY, county of SOMERSET, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Bristol, containing 157 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10. 9. 2., and in the patronage of Mrs. Colston and others. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

CLARE, a market town and parish in the hundred of RISBRIDGE, county of SUFFOLK, 18 miles (S. S. W.) from Bury St. Edmund's, and $55\frac{1}{2}$ (N. E. by N.) from London, containing 1487 inhabitants. This place, which is of great antiquity, derived considerable importance during the Saxon Octarchy from being on the frontier of the kingdom of East Anglia; and after the Conquest it was distinguished for having given the title of earl to the family of De Clare, and that of duke to Lionel, third son of Edward III., who was created Duke of Clarence. To the south of the town are the ruins of a castle, formerly the baronial residence of the earls of Clare, and equal to any of those structures in feudal grandeur and magnificence: the site of the fortifications, which may be distinctly traced, comprehended an area of thirty acres, divided into an outer and an inner ward, of which the latter only was enclosed by walls; the whole was surrounded with a deep fosse: on the summit of a high mount, evidently of artificial construction, are the remains of the ancient keep, a circular building of flints, strongly cemented with mortar, and strengthened with buttresses, which, from its situation near the frontier, is supposed to have been erected either prior to or during the Octarchy. The town is situated on the river Stour, which separates this county from Essex, on the south: the houses are in general of mean appearance, and the streets, though spacious, are neither paved nor lighted; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water, and the approaches to the town are gradually improving. The market is on Monday: the fairs are on Easter-Tuesday and July 26th, chiefly for toys and pedlary. The county magistrates hold petty sessions for the division here: the courts baron of Erbury, and Stoke with Chilton, and a court for the duchy of Lancaster, are also held.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 18. 9., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a large, handsome, and ancient structure, chiefly in the decorated style of English architecture, with a square tower, strengthened with buttresses, and of an earlier date than the body: the interior, which has been improved by the heightening of the nave, and the addition of side aisles, is richly ornamented, and contains an octagonal and elegantly designed font in the later English style, and a brass eagle, on a pedestal, with wings displayed, forming the reading-desk: in the chancel are said to have been interred the remains of Lionel, Duke of Clarence, who died in 1368, at Piedmont, and is supposed to have been born here, but there is no monument to his memory. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents. Mr. William Cadge, in 1669, bequeathed a farm, now let for £60 per annum, appropriating £10 per annum to a master, for teaching ten poor boys, and £15 per annum to the clothing of eight or ten poor widows. A Sunday school, for children of both sexes, is supported by subscription; and there are several charitable bequests for distribution among the poor, who have also the privilege of depasturing forty milch cows on a piece of land granted by Queen Mary for that purpose. To the south-west of the town are the remains of Clare priory, founded by Eluric, or Alfric, Earl of Clare, for Secular canons, which Gilbert de Clare, in 1090, gave to the Benedictine abbey of Bec in Normandy, to which it was a cell till 1124, when his son Richard removed the monks to the village of Stoke. Joan d'Acre, daughter of Edward I., and wife of Gilbert de Clare, who was a great benefactress to this establishment, is traditionally said to have been interred in the chapel, which has been converted into a barn: the priory, now a private residence, though it has undergone considerable repairs and alterations, still retains much of its original character. A monastery for Augustine monks is said to have been founded here in 1248, but by whom is not known. To the north-west of the town are evident marks of a Roman camp.

CLAREBOROUGH, a parish in the North-clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from East Retford, containing 1929 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 15. 4., and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a small edifice, built by Sewell, Archbishop of York, in 1258. The Chesterfield canal passes through the parish. At Bolam are the remains of an ancient chapel, and some caves hewn in the rock, in which many of the inhabitants reside.

CLARENDON-PARK, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of ALDERBURY, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Salisbury, containing 183 inhabitants. Here were anciently two palaces, termed the King's and the Queen's. At a very remote period this was a royal chase and residence: here Edward the Martyr spent the day preceding his assassination in hunting; Henry II. frequently kept his court here, and in 1164 held the council which enacted the celebrated edicts, called "The Constitutions of Clarendon," defining the limits of ecclesiastical authority in England: Richard, John, and Henry III., often resided at this place; and in 1357, when the plague was raging in London, and in many of the principal towns in the kingdom, Edward III., with his royal prisoners, the kings of France and Scotland, passed the summer at his palace of Clarendon, of which no part is now standing, save a lofty wall. The park was enclosed by act of parliament in the sixteenth of Charles II., and granted to General Monk, who had been created Duke of Albemarle; and in the same reign Clarendon gave the title of earl to Edward Hyde, a native of Dinton, in this county, Lord High Chancellor of England, ancestor of the queens Mary II. and Anne, and author of the History of the Rebellion. The Roman way from Winchester to Old Sarum passes through this liberty.

CLARETON, a township in the parish of ALLERTON-MAULEVERER, upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.) from Knaresborough, containing 14 inhabitants. Claro hill, which gives name to the wapentake, is in this township; it is supposed to have been the place on which the Wittenagemote, or public meetings of the district, were anciently held.

CLAREWOOD, a township in the parish of CORBRIDGE, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Hexham, containing 62 inhabitants.

CLATFORD, a chapelry in the parish of PRESUTE, hundred of SELKLEY, county of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.S.W.) from Marlborough. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. An Alien priory to the abbey of St. Victor in Caletto, in Normandy, was founded here by Sir Roger Mortimer, in the time of William the Conqueror, and granted by Henry VI. to Eton College. In the valley termed Clatford Bottom is a large cromlech.

CLATFORD (GOODWORTH), a parish in the hundred of WHERWELL, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (S.) from Andover, containing 382 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of Colonel Iremonger. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CLATFORD (UPPER), a parish in the hundred of ANDOVER, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1 mile (S.) from Andover, containing 370 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £22, and in the patronage of R. Willis, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A school is supported by charitable donations producing £9 per annum. The Andover canal crosses this parish.

CLATTERCOTT, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (N.) from Banbury, containing 8 inhabitants. Here was, in the reign of John, a small religious house of the Sempringham order, dedicated to St. Leonard, and once an hospital for lepers, which, at the dissolution, consisted of a prior and four canons, whose revenue was estimated at £34. 19. 11. per annum.

CLATWORTHY, a parish in the hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N. W.) from Wiveliscombe, containing 280 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £13. 10. 5., and in the patronage of J. Bernard, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CLAUGHTON, a joint township with Grange, in the parish of BIDSTONE, lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Great Neston, containing, with Grange, 119 inhabitants.

CLAUGHTON, a township in the parish of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Garstang, containing 943 inhabitants. The linen manufacture has been established here of late years.

CLAUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Lancaster, containing 123 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £9. 13. 10., and in the patronage of Thomas Fenwick, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Chad. The river Lune passes through this parish. Here are several quarries of flag-stone. Near Claughton Hall, an ancient building in a dilapidated state, are the remains of a Roman Catholic chapel.

CLAVERDON, a parish in the Henley division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Henley in Arden, containing, with the hamlets of Langley and Pindley, 683 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Norton-Lindsey annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £5. 12. 1., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Worcester. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. John Matthews, about the year 1526, gave £12. 12. per annum for the instruction of children.

CLAVERING, a parish in the hundred of CLAVERING, county of ESSEX, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Stansted-Mountfitchet, containing 1081 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Langley annexed, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £22. 13. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary and St. Clement. The river Stort has its source in this parish, which is crossed also by the river Darent. Here are remains of the keep and moat of the ancient castle of the Claverings, a family which became extinct in the reign of Edward III.

CLAVERLEY, a parish in the Hales-Owen division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, county of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Bridgenorth, containing 1305 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the court of the royal peculiar of Bridgenorth, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Thomas Whitmore, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A free school was founded, in 1659, by Richard Dovey, who endowed it with an estate for the education of fourteen boys; and, in 1702, John Sanders devised £5 a year for clothing them. Richard Bennett, in 1794, left £100 in aid of this charity, the total annual income being £36. 5. There are three small tenements appropriated for poor families.

CLAVERTON, a parish in the hundred of HAMPTON and CLAVERTON, though locally in the hundred of Bath-Forum, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Bath, containing 137 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of John Vivian, Esq. This is a pretty retired village, separated from Bath by a hill round which the Avon winds its course; it is situated in a romantic valley, environed by bold and beautifully wooded hills, through which passes the Kennet and Avon canal. Here is a small endowment, bequeathed by Ann Tucker, with which, and some trifling subscriptions, sixteen poor children are educated. In the reign of Henry III. a grant was obtained, whereby Claverton and the village of Hampton were exempted from the jurisdiction of the hundred, and constituted a liberty, which is now within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held in the city of Bath, for the recovery of debts under £10. Graves, the author of the Spiritual Quixote, was rector of this parish.

CLAWRPLWYF, a hamlet in the parish of MYNYDDYSLWYN, lower division of the hundred of WENTLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, containing 1250 inhabitants.

CLAWTON, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Holsworthy, containing 534 inhabitants. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £1600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Melhuish, jun. There is good stone for building in this neighbourhood.

CLAXBY, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (S.) from Alford, containing 97 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Well, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 3. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a small thatched building without a cemetery. A fine spring has its source from a chalk hill in the centre of the parish, and flows eastward. Here are vestiges of a Roman camp, and several tumuli covered with trees.

CLAXBY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N.) from Market-Rasen, containing 184 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, to which the rectory of Normanby on the Wolds was united in 1740, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 10., and in the patronage of R. Atkinson, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CLAXBY-PLUCKACRE, a parish in the hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Horncastle, containing 36 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Henry Dymoke, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

CLAXTON, a township in the parish of GREATHAM, north-eastern division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Stockton upon Tees, containing 38 inhabitants. This place gives name to an ancient family, from which Thomas Claxton, a celebrated antiquary, was descended.

CLAXTON, a parish in the hundred of LONDON, county of NORFOLK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Norwich, containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir Charles Rich, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

CLAXTON, a township in that part of the parish of BOSSALL which is in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from York, containing 135 inhabitants. The petty sessions for the division are held here.

CLAXTON, or LONG CLAWSON, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 678 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 10. 2., and in the patronage of Lord F. Osborne. The church is dedicated to St. Remigius. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here are two free schools, toward the endowment of which Anthony Wadd gave certain lands, in 1758, now producing a considerable income: for the same purpose, in 1772, Mrs. Briggs bequeathed £100, and the Duke of Rutland gave £21 towards the erection of a schoolroom.

CLAYBROOKE, a parish comprising the chapelry of Little Wigston, the townships of Great Claybrooke and Little Claybrooke, the liberty of Bittesby, and the hamlet of Ullesthorpe, in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER; and the hamlet of Wibtoft, in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, and containing 1312 inhabitants, of which number, 458 are in the township of Great Claybrooke, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Lutterworth. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £30. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture. There is a small endowment for a boys' school, which, with another for girls, is principally supported by the Dicey family. At a place termed High Cross, two miles westward, is the intersection of two great Roman roads, which traverse the kingdom obliquely. This was the Roman station Benona, or Vennones.

CLAYBROOKE (LITTLE), a township in that part of the parish of CLAYBROOKE which is in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Lutterworth, containing 54 inhabitants.

CLAYDON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of CROFREY which is in the hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Banbury, containing 252 inhabitants. The village is the most northern in the county; a small spring which rises in it has the peculiarity of emitting the largest quantity of water in the driest weather. The inhabitants enjoy the privilege of sending fifteen children to the free school at Farnborough, in Warwickshire. Here are found the pyrites aureus, or golden fire-stone; also the asteria, or star-stone, called by Gesner "sigillum stella," from its use in sealing: in splitting some of these, the figure of a rose is plainly discernible in the centre.

CLAYDON, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Ipswich, containing 328 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united to that of Akenham, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. The church is dedicated to St. Peter: the churchyard is tastefully laid out as a garden. The Stow-Market and Ipswich navigation crosses this parish.

CLAYDON (EAST), a parish in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Winslow, containing, with Bottle-Claydon, 339 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 17., and in the patronage of Mrs. Verney. The church, which was dedicated to St. Mary, was demolished during the parliamentary war, by Cornelius Holland, one of the judges who sat upon the trial of Charles I. In 1673, Maurice Griffith left a trifling endowment for the education of two boys, and for apprenticing one of them every six years.

CLAYDON (MIDDLE), a parish in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Winslow, containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of Mrs. Verney. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains a monument to the memory of Sir Edward Verney, standard-bearer to Charles I., who was killed at the battle of Edge-Hill, in 1642. Almshouses for six poor widows were built, in 1696, by Sir Ralph Verney, but they have no endowment.

CLAYDON (STEEPLE), a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Winslow, containing 804 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 3. 9., and in the patronage of Mrs. Verney. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Thomas Chaloner, Esq., in 1656, built a school-house, and endowed it with £12 per annum, but the endowment having been lost, the proprietor of the estate pays to the schoolmistress two shillings per week. At the period of the Conquest, this was the most populous place in the hundred: in an adjoining wood, an earthen vessel, filled with coins of Carausius and Alectus, has been discovered.

CLAYHANGER, a parish in the hundred of BAMP-
TON, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Bamp-
VOL. I.

ton, containing 342 inhabitants. The living is a rectory in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £15. 7. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of R. Harrison, Esq. The church contains a rood-loft and an ancient wooden screen; it formerly belonged to the Knights Templars, who had a preceptory here. A charity school was founded, in 1747, by Hannah Nutcombe Bluett, with an endowment of £3 per annum, which, by the subsequent gifts of John Norman and Buckland Nutcombe Bluett, in 1785, has been increased to £7. 10., that sum being paid to a schoolmistress for teaching as many children as choose to apply.

CLAYHEDON, a parish in the hundred of HEMYOCK, county of DEVON, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Welling-ton, containing 822 inhabitants. The living is a rec-tory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £38. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Clarke. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. A charity school was endowed with £110, by Mary Waldron, in 1749, producing £7. 10. per annum, for teaching children of this parish and the parish of Hemyock.

CLAY-LANE, a township in the parish of NORTH WINGFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Chesterfield, containing 465 inhabit-ants.

CLAYPOLE, a parish in the wapentake of LOVE-DEN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S. E.) from Newark, containing 605 inhabitants. The living is a rectory in medietyes, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln; the north mediety is rated in the king's books at £16. 8. 4., and the south at £15. 15.; they are in the patronage of J. Plumtre, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient structure, with a tower surmounted by a spire. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Charles Gret-ton, in 1727, endowed a school for the instruction of ten boys, with a rent-charge of £9 per annum, subject to a deduction of £2. 10.

CLAYTHORPE, a chapelry in the parish of BEL-LEAU, Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Alford, containing 57 inhabitants.

CLAYTHORPE, a hamlet in that part of the parish of BURTON in KENDAL which is in LONSDALE ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 1 mile (N. E. by N.) from Burton in Kendal, with which the population is re-turned. About a mile from the village is Farlton Knot, a huge limestone mountain, resembling in form the rock of Gibraltar: on the edge of another mountain is a nat-ural curiosity, called Claythorpe Clints, consisting of a limestone rock, forming an inclined plain to the horizon, deeply rent in many places by the supposed ebbing of a great body of water, or the retiring of the ocean, by which it is conjectured that this, with some other plains in the neighbourhood, was once covered.

CLAYTON, a liberty in the parish of STOKES upon TRENT, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Newcastle under Line, containing 152 inhabitants.

CLAYTON, a parish in the hundred of BUTTING-HILL, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Hurst-Pierrepoint, containing 453 inhabit-ants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Keymer annexed, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £21. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

CLAYTON, a township in the parish of SOUTH STAINLEY, lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Ripley. The population is returned with the parish.

CLAYTON, a township in the parish of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bradford, containing 3609 inhabitants, who are chiefly employed in the manufacture of cotton and worsted goods. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists here and at Clayton Heights.

CLAYTON, a joint parish with Frickley, in the northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 9 miles (E. by N.) from Barnesley. The population is returned with Frickley. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Frickley, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CLAYTON le DALE, a township in the parish of BLACKBURN, lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Blackburn, containing 598 inhabitants. In 1744, Edward Bootle gave a school-house and land, the annual rental of which is £9. 10., for the free education of five boys in Latin and English.

CLAYTON le MOORS, a township in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Blackburn, containing 1963 inhabitants.

CLAYTON (WEST), a township in the parish of HIGH HOYLAND, wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from Barnesley, containing 854 inhabitants, of whom several are occupied in the manufacture of stuffs, fancy goods, &c.

CLAYTON le WOODS, a township in the parish and hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Chorley, containing 801 inhabitants.

CLAYTON-GRIFFITH, a township in the parish of TRENTHAM, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 34 inhabitants.

CLAYWORTH, a parish in the North-clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from East Retford, containing, with the township of Wiseton, 557 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £26. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Rev. William Sampson, in 1700, bequeathed land now producing £58 per annum, to endow a school for the instruction of six boys: there is an orchard, the gift of Christopher Johnson, in 1707, in the possession of the master, who enjoys a salary of £48 per annum, with a house for his residence, the last having been devised by Francis Otter, in 1813, for instructing one boy; thirteen boys are educated upon this foundation. The Chester-field canal passes through this parish.

CLEADON, a township in the parish of WHITBURN, eastern division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Sunderland. The population is returned with the parish. Limestone is obtained in this township; and near Marston rock is found a species of indurated marl, in thin laminæ, very pliant, and hence termed flexible limestone.

CLEARWELL, a chapelry in the parish of NEWLAND, hundred of ST. BRIAVELLS, county of GLOUCESTER, 7 miles (W. by N.) from Blakeney, containing 583 inhabitants. The chapel has lately received four hundred and fifty additional sittings, three hundred and eighty of them free, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels granted £400. There is a curious stone cross at this place.

CLEASBY, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Darlington, containing 147 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £35 per annum private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. The church is a mean, low, and narrow structure, rebuilt, together with the parsonage-house, by Dr. John Robinson, a native of this parish, Bishop of London, and one of the plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Utrecht. He also founded a school for six poor boys, in 1723, and endowed it with sixteen acres of land, of which the Dean and Chapter of Ripon are visitors. The river Tees flows past the village.

CLEATHAM, a township in that part of the parish of MANTON which is in the wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (S. W.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 117 inhabitants.

CLEATLAM, a township partly in the parish of STAINDROP, but chiefly in that part of the parish of GAINFORD which is in the south-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Barnard-Castle, containing 126 inhabitants.

CLEATOR, a parish in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Egremont, containing 818 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of T. R. G. Braddyll, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. The manor-house is stated to have been burnt, about 1315, by a party of Scots under the command of James Douglas. The parish contains coal, limestone, and iron-ore, a great quantity of lime being burnt and sent into Scotland: here are also two forges for the manufacture of spades and other edged tools, besides an extensive establishment for spinning hemp and tow, making sewing-thread, &c. The mine of iron-ore at Crowgarth is of a superior description; it is twelve fathoms below the surface, and the vein of solid ore is from twenty-four to twenty-five feet in thickness: it was not much worked until 1784, but, about 1790 and a few years afterwards, twenty thousand tons of ore were annually shipped from Whitehaven to Hull and the Carron works, though the produce of late has greatly declined. The village is large, containing a few good houses, besides a number of cottages occupied by the workmen employed in the different manufactories: the inhabitants claim a right of common on the adjacent mountain of Dent. A Roman causeway formerly passed through the parish, from Egremont to Papcastle, near Cockermouth, but few traces of it are at present apparent.

CLEE, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Great Grimsby, containing, with the township of Cleethorpe, 560 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has some fine Norman piers and arches, and contains an ancient circular font. In this parish are many of those fountains called Blow Wells, which are deep circular pits, supplying a continual flow of water. The custom of strewing the floor of the church, on Trinity-Sunday, with grass mown for that purpose, is perpetuated by a small legacy in land, left by a widow lady.

CLEE (ST. MARGARET'S), a parish in the hundred of MUNSLOW, county of SALOP, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Ludlow, containing 229 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £2. 8. 4., endowed with £600 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £2100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of John C. Pelham, Esq.

CLEER (ST.), a parish in the hundred of WEST, county of CORNWALL, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Liskeard, containing 985 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £19. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is a handsome and spacious structure. The parish contains a great quantity of granite, locally termed moor-stone, and porphyry; and a copper mine has recently been opened. The river Fowey runs through it, and several rivulets empty themselves near Looe: there are also a few chalybeate springs, and an ancient Druidical monument, called the Hurlers, consisting of rude upright stones arranged in three circles, their centres in a right line, and the middle circle the largest.

CLEETHORPE, a township in the parish of CLEE, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Great Grimsby, containing 154 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a fishing hamlet, situated at the mouth of the Humber, which in summer is much resorted to for sea-bathing.

CLEEVE (BISHOP'S), a parish forming the hundred of CLEEVE, or BISHOP'S CLEEVE, in the county of GLOUCESTER, comprising the chapelry of Stoke-Orchard, the township of Bishop's Cleeve, and the hamlets of Gotherington, Southam with Brockampton, and Woodmancott, and containing 1548 inhabitants, of which number, 458 are in the township of Bishop's Cleeve, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Cheltenham. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the rector, in concurrence with the consistory court of the Bishop of Gloucester, wills and administrations being deposited in the bishop's registry: it is rated in the king's books at £84. 6. 8., and is in the patronage of the Rev. W. L. Townsend. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curious and spacious structure, principally of Norman architecture, with a noble arch of exquisite workmanship in that style over the western entrance: the spire fell down in 1696, and caused considerable dilapidation, and, in 1700, it was replaced by the tower that now rises from the centre of the building, which underwent a thorough repair at the same time. The village occupies an eminence on the high road from Cheltenham to Evesham: its name, Clive, or Cleeve, is probably derived from the Saxon term Cliv, a steep ascent; and its adjunct given to distinguish it from Prior's Cleeve, it having been the property of the bishops of Worcester, whose ancient residence is now the rectory-house. On the ridge of Cleeve-Cloud hill, upon which races are annually held, is a large double intrenchment, called the Camps, in form of a crescent, three hundred and fifty yards in length, but accessible only in front.

CLEEVE (CHAPEL), a hamlet in the parish of OLD CLEEVE, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Dunster. The chapel, which gave to this place its distinguishing appellation, was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, but has long since fallen to ruin; it stood on a rock, and was the resort of numerous pilgrims.

CLEEVE (OLD), a parish in the hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Dunster, containing 1251 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Leighland annexed, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. John Newton. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parish adjoins the Bristol channel, and is remarkable for its craggy rocks, which abound with alabaster. On the beach a great quantity of kelp is gathered and burnt, previously to being sold in the market at Bristol; lodging-houses have been recently erected for the accommodation of persons resorting hither for the benefit of sea-bathing. A Cistercian abbey, in honour of the Virgin Mary, was founded here, in 1186, by William de Romara, the revenue of which, in 1534, was valued at £155. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$: there are still some remains, part having been converted into a private mansion, called Cleeve Abbey.

CLEEVE (PRIOR'S), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, locally in the upper division of that of Blackenhurst, county of WORCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Evesham, containing 343 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The village is situated on an eminence, but the grounds immediately round it are flat, and the meadows on the banks of the Avon, which receives the Arrow, and enters Worcestershire from this parish, are sometimes subject to floods. The parish contains blue limestone; and there are quarries of valuable paving stone, and a species of marble which bears a polish like the Derbyshire marble; in working one of which, in 1812, two earthen jars of Roman coins, one containing gold and the other silver, principally of the reigns of Gratian, Valentinian, and Theodosius, and in good preservation, were found at the depth of three feet from the surface.

CLEHONGER, a parish in the hundred of WEBTREE, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Hereford, containing 339 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Allensmore, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 4. 2., and endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CLEMENT'S (ST.), a parish in the western division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, containing 2306 inhabitants. Part of the town of Truro is situated in this parish. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Cornwall. The river Fal runs through the parish, in which are some mineral springs. Charles I., after his defeat at this place, in 1646, took refuge at Polwhele, anciently a castle, and the family seat of the ancestors of the historian of the county of Cornwall.

CLEMENT'S (ST.), a parish in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, containing 770 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the Cherwell, over which is a handsome bridge leading into the city of Oxford. The living is a rectory not in charge, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, endowed with £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown. Owing to the inadequate accommodation which the old church afforded, a new church, in the Norman style, has been erected by subscription, on ground given by Sir Joseph Locke; it is situated near the margin of the Cherwell, and, as seen from Magdalene bridge, forms an interesting feature in the vale. Between it and the bridge, but nearer the latter, baths on an extensive scale have been constructed, consisting principally of a spacious swimming-bath, with dressing-rooms, a reading-room, and other conveniences. Stone's hospital, for the residence and support of poor persons, was founded pursuant to the will of the Rev. William Stone, Principal of New Inn Hall, dated May 12th, 1685, for eight poor women, each of whom has about £12 per annum; and Boulter's almshouses, agreeably to the will of Cutler Boulter, dated March 21st, 1736, for eight single men, one from each of the parishes of Wimple in Cambridgeshire, Wherwell in Hampshire, Haseley in Oxfordshire, Barlings in Lincolnshire, Deptford with Brockley in Kent, and Harewood in Yorkshire, who have each eight shillings weekly: they are both under the superintendence of special visitors. Various lands and tenements, producing about £400 per annum, have been left for the benefit of the poor, and for repairing the church. Henry I., in 1126, founded an hospital for infirm lepers, which, having suffered considerable impoverishment, was granted by Edward III. to Oriel College, on condition that the society should maintain a chaplain and eight almsmen in perpetuity. Respecting this charity there have been various suits at law between the society and the mayor and corporation of Oxford, and notwithstanding several legal decisions, the funds afford a very inadequate means of support to the hospitallers, who are eight in number, besides a chaplain, and who generally reside in the city, labouring at some kind of employment. About the time of the siege of Oxford, the house was demolished, and rebuilt by the society in 1649: it was afterwards used as a laboratory for making magnesia, by a private individual, and the remains are now appropriated to stabling and cow-houses. Anciently the funds of the establishment were augmented by the contributions of the fellows of New College, at their annual procession to the chapel of St. Bartholomew, on Holy Thursday: the students of Oriel and Magdalene Colleges, and the citizens of Oxford, were also accustomed to assemble here on May-day, bringing with them the earliest productions of the season, as oblations to the saint, and further celebrating the festive day with music and dancing. This custom is supposed to have originated in the pious intention of Burgwest, bishop of the diocese, who granted forty days' indulgence to all who came to the chapel on the festival of the saint, and contributed to the relief of the leprous almsmen. Here too were preserved relics of various saints, the supposed efficacy of which, in performing miraculous cures, attracted numerous pilgrims.

CLENCHWHARTON, a parish in the Marshland division of the hundred of FREEBRIDGE, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Lynn-Regis, containing 456 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £14. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Miss Docker. At the time of the Norman survey this place was called Ecleuuartuana, signifying a watery situation by a river, and was divided into north and south.

CLENNELL, a township in the parish of ALLENTON, western division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.N.W.) from Rothbury, containing 27 inhabitants.

CLENT, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, though locally in the lower division of the hundred of Halfshire, county of Worcester, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Stourbridge, containing 885 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Rowley-Regis annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £8. 16. 5½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The infant king of Mercia, St. Kenelm, is supposed to have been murdered here in 819, by order of his sister Quendrida, but the body, having been subsequently discovered, was buried in Winchcombe abbey, which had been founded by his father. Here is a free school for the children of poor parishioners, founded by John Amphlett, Esq., in 1704; the master, who instructs thirty children, has a house to reside in, with a garden attached, and the interest of £200. A Sunday school was also commenced, in 1788, by Thomas Waldron, Esq., who supported it during his lifetime, and at his death, in 1800, bequeathed £500 for that purpose; eighty children receive instruction.

CLEOBURY-MORTIMER, a market town and parish in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, 32 miles (S. S. E.) from Shrewsbury, and 137 (N. W.) from London, on the road to Ludlow, containing 1602 inhabitants. The name of this place is derived from its situation in a district abounding with clay, and from the Saxon word byrig, a town; the adjunct, by which it is distinguished from North Cleobury, in the same county, is taken from its ancient possessor, Ralph de Mortimer, who held it at the time of the general survey. Hugh de Mortimer, his son, built a castle here, but having revolted in favour of the heir of Stephen, he fortified it against Henry II., who, with a powerful army, besieged and entirely demolished it. During the war between Henry III. and the barons, Cleobury suffered greatly from the incursions of the Welch, who at that time made frequent irruptions into this part of the country. The town is situated on an eminence rising gradually from the western bank of the river Rea, over which is a neat stone bridge: it consists principally of one long street, in which are many good houses, and the mutilated remains of an old cross; but it is neither paved nor lighted: the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with excellent water from a spring rising in the Brown Clee hills, and falling into a capacious basin in the lower part of the town. The trade is rapidly declining; formerly there were very extensive iron-works, but there are now only two forges: a few of the inhabitants are employed in the manufactory of paper, for which there are two mills. On the Clee hills, about three miles west of the town, are extensive collieries producing excellent coal; and on the higher part of them is a remarkably fine, though not extensive, vein of cannel coal, of which many beautiful specimens have been worked into snuff-boxes and ornaments of various kinds. The market, granted to Sir Francis Lacon, in 1614, is held on Wednesday: the fairs are on April 21st, Trinity-Monday, and October 27th. A constable is annually appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor, held in April.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of William Lacon Childe, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure, with a plain square tower, surmounted by an octagonal spire of wood, considerably curved from the perpendicular. There are two places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists; and a Roman Catholic chapel is attached to Mawley Hall, the mansion of Sir Edward Blount, Bart., within a mile of the town. The free school was founded pursuant to the will of Sir Lacon William Childe, Knt., dated in 1714, whereby he bequeathed the residue of his personal estate, after the death of his wife, for its endowment: by a decree of the court of Exchequer, in 1735, a plot of ground was purchased, in 1739, on which the buildings were erected; the surplus of the endowment was vested in land, which, with property in the funds (of which £1000 in the three per cents. was given, in 1810, by Mr. John Winwood, of Bristol, formerly a scholar on the foundation), produces about £450 per annum: the management is vested in ten trustees. The master, who is appointed by W. L. Childe, Esq., as representative of the founder, has £60 per annum, and an usher £40: the boys are taught reading, writing, and arithmetic: a mistress is also appointed by the trustees, with a salary of £20 per annum, for teaching girls. The income is about £450 per annum: the present number of scholars is two hundred: thirty boys and forty girls are annually clothed, and a fee is occasionally given for apprenticing the boys on their leaving the school. Adjoining the town are a large schoolroom and dwelling-house, with a garden and a piece of waste ground attached, unoccupied and falling to decay: the premises were built by subscription, about 1727, for a free grammar school, but the institution has long since been dissolved, owing to the want of a permanent fund for its support. To the east of the free school are the remains of a Danish encampment; and within the distance of a mile and a half were the three castles of Cleobury, Toot, and Wall-town, of all which there is not a single vestige. Robert Langford, author of the Visions of Pierce Plowman, a satirical poem on the clergy of the fourteenth century, was a native of this town.

CLEOBURY (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, 8 miles (S. W. by W.) from Bridgenorth, containing 173 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5.12.3½, and in the patronage of Mrs. Brazier. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CLERKENWELL, an extensive parish, in the Finsbury division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, adjoining the city of London, containing 39,105 inhabitants. Its name originated from an ancient well, round which the parish clerks of London were in the habit of assembling, at certain periods, for the performance of sacred dramas; noticed in the reign of Henry II. by Fitz-Stephen, under the appellation of Fons Clericorum. The parish is not mentioned in Domesday-book, being probably at the time of the survey an undistinguished portion of the great forest of Middlesex, or included in the parish of Islington, which, under the name Isendone, is noticed in that record. The site appears to have been well adapted to the celebration of those sacred festivals for which it was selected, from being in the centre of gently rising grounds, which formed an extensive and natural amphitheatre, for the accommodation of the numerous spectators who attended on such occasions. The most celebrated of these festivals took place in 1391, in the reign of Richard II., and continued for three days, during which several sacred dramas were performed by the clerks, in presence of the king and queen, attended by the whole court. About the year 1100, Lord Jordan Briset and his wife founded a priory here for nuns of the Benedictine order, dedicated to St. Mary, the site being now occupied by the parish church of St. James: the revenue, at the dissolution, was £282.16.5. The same Jordan founded also an hospital for Knights Hospitallers of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, which was liberally endowed with lands, and invested with many privileges by several successive monarchs; the lord prior had precedence of all lay barons in parliament, and power over all preceptories and smaller establishments of that order in the kingdom; the revenue, at the dissolution, was £2385.12.8.: this institution was partly restored in the reign of Philip and Mary, but was suppressed in that of Elizabeth: the remains are, the gate, in the later style of English architecture, now a private residence, and the vaults of the old church, in the Norman character, upon the site of which St. John's church was subsequently restored. The establishment of these monasteries naturally drew around them a number of dependent dwellings, but the parish made little progress in the number of its inhabitants prior to the time of Elizabeth, in whose reign, with the exception of some "banqueting houses and summer houses," it contained only a few straggling cottages, and some good houses in the immediate neighbourhood of the religious houses; its increase was afterwards more rapid, and in 1619 several noblemen and gentlemen were numbered among its inhabitants. Since then, the formation of numerous streets, and the more recent laying out of Spa-fields and the New River Company's estate, in a variety of new streets and squares, have rendered this one of the most populous parishes in the vicinity of the metropolis.

Among the more recent improvements may be noticed Claremont-square, in the centre of which is the reservoir of the New River water-works, surrounded by a high embankment, planted with shrubs; Myddelton and Wilmington squares, and numerous spacious streets and ranges of modern and respectable buildings. St. John's street and Goswell roads, the former leading from Smithfield, and the latter from Aldersgate, and the New Road, leading to Paddington, are the principal thoroughfares. The parish is lighted with gas, and the pathways are well flagged; it is within the limits of the new police establishment: the inhabitants are supplied with water by the New River Company, whose works are situated in this parish, where the river terminates. This stupendous undertaking was projected in the reign of Elizabeth, and, in the following reign, James I. granted an act of parliament, enabling the mayor and commonalty of London to carry it into effect; but the commissioners, dreading the difficulty and expense, made no advances for some years. In 1609, Mr. Hugh Myddelton, citizen and goldsmith of London, made proposals to the common council of the city to undertake the work at his own risk, and to complete it in four years, for which purpose the commissioners transferred to him the powers with which they had been invested by the act. After having persevered in the enterprise till the water was brought to Enfield, the city refusing to grant him any pecuniary assistance, Mr. Myddelton applied to the king, who agreed to pay him one-half of the expense, on condition of having a moiety of the concern transferred to him, and at various times, from Easter 1612, to Michaelmas 1614, advanced sums of money, amounting in the whole to £6347. 4. 11½., with which assistance the work was completed on the 29th of September, 1613, on the afternoon of which day, the lord mayor and corporation went in state to the "great cistern," called the New River Head, in this parish, when, after an oration delivered by a person especially selected, the flood-gates were thrown open, and the water rushed from the river into the cistern, amidst the joyous acclamations of an assembled multitude. The river, from its source at Amwell in Hertfordshire to Spa-fields, is thirty-eight miles, three quarters, and sixteen poles in length: there are nearly three hundred bridges erected over it, and its course is continued through the varying levels of the districts through which it passes, by means of forty sluices. The property of the company was divided into seventy-two shares, of which one-half was vested in Mr. Myddelton and twenty-eight other persons incorporated by charter of James I., in 1619, proprietors of the thirty-six shares constituting what is called the adventurers' moiety; the other moiety, vested in the crown, was re-granted by Charles I. to Sir Hugh Myddelton, who had been created a baronet on the 22nd of October, 1622: an adventurer's share in this company has been sold for £14,000. The Regent's canal passes on the north side of the parish, and enters a tunnel near White Conduit House; after proceeding in a direct line for nearly one thousand yards, in the course of which it passes under the New River, it terminates about twenty yards eastward from that part of it which flows between Colebrook-row and the City-road, in the parish of Islington.

Of the numerous wells with which this parish abounded, several were in great repute for their medicinal properties, and houses of public entertainment were erected near their site: of these, which were generally tea-gardens, and rendered more attractive by musical performances, the chief were Bagnigge Wells, White Conduit House, and New Tunbridge Wells, or Islington Spa, all still remaining: of those which have for many years been discontinued were, the Pantheon in Spa-fields, now a chapel belonging to a congregation in the late Countess of Huntingdon's connexion; the Cold Bath, in Cold Bath fields, of which the bath alone is still frequented; the Mulberry and Vineyard gardens; the celebrated Bear garden at Hockley in the Hole; and Sadler's Wells, near the New River Head, which has for many years been converted into a theatre for dramatic representations. Fons Clericorum, or the Clerks' well, is still in existence, being situated in Ray-street, where the spot is marked by a pump, with an inscription. The manufacture of clocks and watches, of which the several parts form distinct and separate departments of the trade, has for more than a century been carried on here to a considerable extent: when the duty on clocks and watches was imposed, in 1791, not less than seven thousand of the inhabitants were deprived of employment, and obliged to have recourse to parochial aid. There is a large manufactory for tin goods, which during the late war supplied the chief of the government contracts, also some extensive distilleries and soap-manufactories. The sessions for the county, and the meetings of the county magistrates, for the assessment of the county rates, and for other affairs, are held at the sessions-house, Clerkenwell Green, which was erected at an expense of £13,000, and has lately been repaired and beautified: it is a spacious and handsome edifice fronted with stone, having in the centre four pillars of the Ionic order, rising from a rustic basement and supporting a pediment: in the tympanum and on each side are emblematical figures in basso relievo. The entrance, by a flight of steps, opens into a hall thirty-four feet square, lighted by a dome which surmounts the building; from this hall, contiguous to which are the offices of the county treasurer and clerk of the peace, a double flight of steps leads into the court-room, which is of a semicircular form, commodiously arranged for the business of the sessions, and furnished with galleries for the accommodation of auditors: there are, on this story, rooms for the grand jury, for the commissioners of the land and assessed taxes, for the meetings of the magistrates, and for other purposes. The new prison, for the confinement of prisoners awaiting their trial at the sessions, was erected on the site of the old bridewell, in 1780, at an expense of £2500: it was partly rebuilt and greatly enlarged in 1818, and again enlarged in 1830, and comprises a house for the governor, a chapel, twenty wards, ten day-rooms, and twelve airing-yards, for the classification of prisoners, and two infirmaries, one for males and the other for females. The house of correction for the county, in Cold Bath Fields, was erected in 1794, at an expense of £70,000: it is a spacious brick building, enclosed with high walls, including an area divided into eighteen airing-yards, in one of which is a tread-mill upon an improved principle: this prison has also been considerably enlarged recently. Clerkenwell manor, formerly denominated the manor of St. John of Jerusalem, includes several out-portions of the parishes of St. Sepulchre, St. Luke (Old-street), and Hornsey, with those parts of the parish of Clerkenwell called the liberties of Cold Bath Fields, St. John of Jerusalem, Clerkenwell Close, Wood's Close, and Pentonville: constables and head-boroughs for these liberties are chosen by the inhabitants of each, and presented at the manorial court for the approbation of the proprietor. The custom of Borough English, whereby the youngest son inherits, prevails in this manor.

The church of St. James was formerly the only church within the parish, which is now divided into three districts, namely St. James', St. John's, and St. Mark's, all in the archdeaconry and diocese of London. The living of St. James' is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the inhabitants generally, paying church and poor rates: the church is a modern structure of brick, with a handsome stone steeple, erected on the site of the ancient church of the priory of St. Mary, which had been previously modernised, but which, prior to its being taken down, for the erection of the present edifice, retained many vestiges of its Norman character, and contained the ashes of the last prioress of the nunnery; the last prior of St. John's; Weever, the antiquary; Bishop Burnet, and many other distinguished characters. The living of St. John's is a rectory not in charge, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown: the church, with large curtailments and alterations, is that anciently belonging to the priory of the Knights Hospitallers, of which the choir only remained, being restored by the commissioners appointed under the act for building fifty new churches, passed in the tenth of Queen Anne's reign, by virtue of which a district was annexed to it, and the benefice constituted a rectory, in 1723. Notwithstanding it enjoys the privilege of religious rites, the incumbent of St. James' is entitled to the surplice fees: there are separate churchwardens for St. John's church, but the inhabitants of both districts contribute to the repairs of the two churches, and the same overseers of the poor act for the whole. St. Mark's, a district church, in Myddelton-square, containing one thousand six hundred and twenty-two sittings, of which eight hundred and forty-seven are free, was erected in 1826, by a grant from the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £16,000: it is a neat edifice in the later style of English architecture, with a handsome western front and a square tower with pierced parapet and pinnacles: the expense of furnishing it, which amounted to £2000, was defrayed by the parishioners. The living is a district incumbency, in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Sheppard, the present incumbent of St. James', after whose decease the right of presentation becomes vested in the Bishop of London. A chapel of ease to St. Mark's is now in progress of erection, under the auspices of the Commissioners. The chapel at Pentonville, a neat modern edifice of brick, ornamented with stone, and having a small cupola, was erected in 1791, for a chapel of ease to St. James'. Spa-Fields chapel, formerly the Pantheon, as before noticed, was appropriated for a place of worship by the late Countess of Huntingdon, who for many years resided at the chapel house adjoining; and at her decease it was vested in trustees, with other chapels in various parts of the kingdom, agreeably to her will: there are likewise places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan and other Methodists, besides a Scotch church and a Welch chapel. The parish has the right of sending six scholars to the free grammar school, founded by Lady Alice Owen, for natives of this parish and of that of Islington, and of having three boys in Christ's hospital, the latter under the will of Giles Russell, Esq., who, in 1664, devised property to that establishment, for nine boys of the town of Sherborne, in the county of Dorset, and of the parishes of St. Anne, Blackfriars, and St. James, Clerkenwell. The parochial school, founded about the year 1700, has recently been removed from the school-house in Aylesbury-street, to a more convenient premises in Amwell-street, erected in 1839, forming a spacious and handsome range of building in the Elizabethan style of architecture, and capable of accommodating upwards of one thousand children: there are at present three hundred and forty-five boys and two hundred and twenty-six girls, of whom ninety boys and sixty girls are clothed. A charity school at Pentonville was instituted in 1788: the number of children amounts to one hundred and sixty, of whom sixty are clothed. The London Female Penitentiary at Pentonville, established in 1807, is a large range of building, comprising an infirmary, and apartments for one hundred females, who are chiefly employed in needlework and domestic occupations, to qualify them for service: since the establishment of this institution, one thousand four hundred and sixty-nine females have been received into it, of whom the greater number has been placed out in respectable situations, or restored to their friends. The Finsbury Dispensary was established in 1780, since which time it has extended relief to more than one hundred and fifty thousand of the labouring and necessitous poor; the number of patients annually relieved is, on an average, four thousand. A portion of the Roman Watling-street, and the river of Wells (the Fleta of the Romans), form part of the boundaries of the parish. Among the distinguished natives and residents of Clerkenwell the following may be enumerated:—Sir Thomas Chaloner, Bishop Burnet, Sir John Oldcastle, Baron Cobham, and Cave, who established the Gentleman's Magazine, and whose printing-office was in St. John's gate.

CLEATHER (ST.), a parish in the hundred of LES-NEWTH, county of CORNWALL, 7 miles (E.) from Camelford, containing 175 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £6. 11. 10½., and in the patronage of J. Carpenter and T. J. Phillips, Esqrs.

CLEVEDON, a parish in the hundred of PORTBURY, county of SOMERSET, 14 miles (W. by S.) from Bristol, containing 581 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £15. 14. 4., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bristol. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, stands at the western extremity of the parish, and occupies a high and prominent situation on the shore of the Bristol channel: it is a cruciform structure, with a central tower. On the top of some of the hills are the remains of lead mines; and lapis calaminaris has also been found here. The old manor-house, a spacious building principally in the Elizabethan style, occupies a pleasant situation on the southern slope of the mountainous range that bounds the greater portion of the hundred. The Yeo flows through the village, and thence into the Bristol channel, a little southward from the church: several houses have been recently erected near the shore, for the reception of bathers; and a pier is also about to be constructed. As a watering-place, Clevedon is inferior to its rival neighbour, Weston, on account of the fine sandy beach of the latter, but greatly superior in the beauty of its scenery: myrtles and other delicate shrubs flourish in the gardens at all seasons. In 1650, Thomas Gwilliam, or Phillips, gave six acres of land, producing £11 per annum, for apprenticing poor children; and in 1727, Sir A. Elton bequeathed £5 per annum, for the instruction of children.

CLEVEDON (MILTON), a parish in the hundred of BRUTON, county of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (N.W. by N.) from Bruton, containing 189 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with 200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Ilchester. The church is dedicated to St. James. This parish lies under the western declivity of the Burton hills, and contains limestone, with various fossils imbedded in it. There are vestiges of an ancient fortification on Small-down, which, from the circumstance of several gigantic skeletons having been found near the spot, is supposed to have been the scene of a battle.

CLEVELAND-PORT, a hamlet in the parish of ORMESBY, western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 9 miles (N. by E.) from Stokesley. The population is returned with the parish. It is situated near the mouth of the Tees, affording a convenient point for shipping the greater part of the produce of Cleveland Vale and the surrounding neighbourhood for the London and other markets, and was formerly called Cargo Fleet.

CLEVELEY, a hamlet in the parish of CHURCH-ENSTONE, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 1½ mile (E.S.E.) from Neat Enstone, containing 214 inhabitants.

CLEVELY, a township partly in the parish of COCKERHAM, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands but chiefly in the parish of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4½ miles (N. by E.) from Garstang, containing 148 inhabitants.

CLEVERTON, a township in the parish of LEA, hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, 3½ miles (E. S. E.) from Malmesbury. The population is returned with the parish.

CLEWER, a parish in the hundred of RIPPLES-MERE, county of BERKS, 1 mile (W.) from New Windsor, containing 2115 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £14. 1. 0½., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Roman Catholics. The parish, situated on the south bank of the Thames, comprises part of the town of Windsor. On a patent roll of the 13th of Edward II. is a grant to John the Hermit, of the chapel of St. Leonard, of Loffield, in Windsor Forest, to enclose some land, parcel of the forest, which probably gave name to St. Leonard's Hill, an elegant mansion built by the Duchess of Gloucester, when Countess Waldegrave, on the site of a cottage. In 1809, Sir James Poultney, Bart. left by will £666. 13. 4. in the three per cent. consols., for the benefit of the master of a school; and, in 1815, Earl Harcourt conveyed two cottages, a schoolroom, and £500 Navy five per cents., for the instruction of poor boys and girls; about eighty of the former and seventy of the latter are taught on the National system: There are, besides, some trifling bequests for the poor, and for apprenticing children. A court leet is held annually; and a fair for toys and pedlary takes place on the 29th of May. A mineral spring has recently been discovered, but the quality of the water has not yet been accurately ascertained.

CLEY, a small sea-port, market town, and parish, in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, 26 miles (N.N.W.) from Norwich, and 124 (N.N.E.) from London, containing 742 inhabitants. In 1406, Prince James of Scotland, on his voyage to France, to receive his education, was driven by stress of weather upon this coast; and being detained here, he was sent to London by order of Henry IV., who committed him and his attendant, the Earl of Orkney, to the Tower, where they remained for seventeen years in confinement; they were released in the 3rd of Henry VI., and the prince ascended the Scottish throne. The town is situated on the banks of a small river which falls into the harbour, at the north-eastern extremity of the county, and consists principally of one street, in the centre of which is the custom-house, a neat and commodious edifice, containing apartments for a resident collector, comptroller, &c.: it is plentifully supplied with water from springs. The trade of the port (of which the jurisdiction extends for thirty miles along the coast, from Morston on the west, to Barton Coal Gap on the east), consists principally in corn, coal, timber and deals, hemp, iron, tar, tallow, oil-cakes, &c., of which the importation is considerable; a small trade is also carried on in malt: the exports are comparatively trifling; consisting principally of salt, for the manufacture of which there are considerable works in the neighbourhood. The haven is good, but the channel leading from it to the town abounds with shoals, to the exclusion of ships of large burden. Under an act of enclosure obtained in 1822, a considerable quantity of land has been rescued from the sea by an embankment. The market is on Saturday; and a fair for horses is held annually on the last Friday in July.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £22. 13. 4., and in the patronage of John Winn Thomlinson, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a fine spacious structure in the early style of English architecture, and contains an ancient stone font, adorned with sculptured representations of the seven Sacraments of the church of Rome. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CLEYGATE, a manor in that part of the parish of THAMES-DITTON which is in the second division of the hundred of KINGSTON, county of SURREY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Esher, containing 559 inhabitants.

CLIBURN, a parish in WEST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Appleby, containing 205 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £9. 1. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. This parish is bounded on two sides by the Eden and the Lyvennet, and the Lethe rivulet flows through it. A small school has been established for the education of the children of parishioners, endowed with an allotment of land by the commissioners under an act of parliament, which produces an income of £21 per annum; the average number of scholars is twenty. A market was held at Gilshauglin, in this parish, in 1598, when the plague raged at Appleby.

CLIDDESSEN, a parish in the hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by W.) from Basingstoke, containing 264 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united to that of Farleigh-Wallop, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £10. 16. 3. There is a school for the instruction of poor children, endowed by Mrs. Ann Dorrington with £10 per annum, to which the Earl of Portsmouth gave an additional sum of £10 per annum, with a house for a schoolmistress.

CLIEVELOAD, a chapelry in the parish of POWICK, lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Worcester, containing 36 inhabitants. The chapel has been demolished. The river Severn flows past the village.

CLIFF, a joint township with Lund, in the parish of HEMINGBROUGH, wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, East riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Selby, containing, with Lund, 501 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In 1708, Mary Ward bequeathed £220 for the building and endowment of a school, towards the further support of which Mr. Whittall gave £100; the income is £40. 16. 6., for which thirty scholars are educated.

CLIFFE, a parish in the hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Rochester, containing 673 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated in the king's books at £50, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is considered to be the finest in the county, being a large handsome cruciform structure in the early style of English architecture, with an embattled central tower, and containing several curious monuments and remains of antiquity, together with six stalls that belonged to a dean and five prebendaries, it having been formerly collegiate. The parish is bounded on the north by the Thames: the village, which is supposed to take name from the cliff or rock on which it stands, at present consists of West-street and Church-street, but was formerly of much greater extent, a great part of it having been destroyed by fire in 1520. It was anciently the scene of several provincial councils: a fair is held on the 28th of September. The school-house, which has been recently put into a state of complete repair, was founded in 1679, by John Browne, who bequeathed two tenements and other appurtenances, for educating twelve poor children, directing his executors and the churchwardens to appoint a poor man and woman teachers, and to choose the scholars. One of the cottages is occupied by the school-mistress, who receives £10 per annum for teaching eight poor children.

CLIFFE, a township in that part of the parish of MANFIELD which is in the western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Darlington, containing 53 inhabitants. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at Cliffe Hall.

CLIFFE (KING'S), a parish in the hundred of WILLYBROOK, county of NORTHAMPTON, 31 miles (N. E. by N.) from Northampton, and 88 (N. N. W.) from London, containing 1080 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £13. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Earl of Westmorland. The church is dedicated to All Saints. This was formerly a market town; the market, which was held on Tuesday, has fallen into disuse, but there is still a fair on the 29th of October. The Rev. William Law, a nonjuring divine and polemical writer, was born at this place, in 1686, where, after residing in it during the last twenty years of his life, he died in 1761. A school for twenty boys and fourteen girls, and three almshouses, were endowed, principally with a bequest of lands and houses, by Elizabeth Hutchinson, in 1745, which yield an annual income of £260.

CLIFFE (NORTH), a township in the parish of SANCTON, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (S.) from Market-Weighton, containing 89 inhabitants.

CLIFFE (SOUTH), a township in the parish of NORTH CAVE, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Market-Weighton, containing 131 inhabitants.

CLIFFE (ST. THOMAS), county of SUSSEX.—See LEWES.

CLIFFE (WEST), a parish in the hundred of BEWSBOROUGH, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E.) from Dover, containing 52 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CLIFFE-PYPARD, a parish in the hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Wootton-Bassett, containing 815 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Rev. E. Goddard. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, and in which are some remains of painted glass, was founded by one Cobham, a knight templar, whose effigy lies near the wall of the north aisle. This place takes its name from a cliff, and its adjunct from a court anciently kept, called Pypard; it is situated at the foot of a chain of hills (a very steep one separating the north part of the parish from the south) that runs along the north side of the vale of White Horse: there is a hill composed of a kind of free-stone, as white as chalk, but considerably harder, and much used for paving and building. A free school is supported by an annuity of about £30.

CLIFFORD, a parish in the hundred of HUNTINGTON, county of HEREFORD; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W. by S.) from Kington, containing, with a part of the township of Vowmine, 816 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Trumper. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There are some portions of Clifford castle remaining, in a ruinous condition: it stood on a bold eminence, projecting over the river Wye, and was the baronial residence of the lords de Clifford for two centuries, being, as it is supposed, the birthplace of Fair Rosamond. Here was anciently a convent of Cluniac monks, founded by one of the lords de Clifford, as a cell to the priory of Lewes, in Sussex; at the dissolution, its revenue was estimated at £75. 7. 5.

CLIFFORD, a township in the parish of BRAMHAM, upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.E. by S.) from Wetherby, containing 1017 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CLIFFORD-CHAMBERS, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, though locally in that of the hundred of Kiftsgate, county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Stratford upon Avon, containing 305 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £18. 15. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of L. Dighton, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a small structure, with a south door of Norman architecture.

CLIFTON, a parish in the hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by N.) from Shefford, containing 483 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £20. 2. 11., and in the patronage of the Rev. D. J. Olivier. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains some ancient monumental brasses, and a fine altar-tomb in memory of Sir Michael Fisher, who died lord of the manor in 1549. The river Ivel, lately made navigable, runs through the parish. There is a day and Sunday school, founded and endowed in 1827, by the late rector, the Rev. D. S. Olivier, for eighteen children.

CLIFTON, or ROCK-SAVAGE, a township in the parish of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.N.E.) from Frodsham, containing 26 inhabitants. This place has been called Rock-Savage since the erection of a splendid mansion by Sir John Savage, in 1565. The township comprises only the manorial mansion and its demesne land, now in the possession of the Marquis of Cholmondeley, who enjoys also the title of Earl of Rock-Savage.

CLIFTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ASHBOURN which is in the hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHEURCH, though locally in the hundred of Wirksworth county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W.) from Ashbourn, containing, with the hamlet of Compton, 768 inhabitants.

CLIFTON, a parish and favourable watering-place, in the hundred of BARTON-REGIS, county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W.) from Bristol, 14 miles (N. W.) from Bath, and 121 (W. by S.) from London, containing 8811 inhabitants. This place, by some antiquaries supposed to have been a British town prior to the Roman invasion, and to have been called Cuer-oder, or city of the chasm, derives its present name from its romantic situation on the acclivities and summit of a precipitous cliff, apparently separated by some convulsion of nature, from a chain of rocks in the Bristol channel. The river Avon, which is navigable for ships of the greatest burden, flows with a rapid current through this natural chasm, forming the south-western boundary of the parish, and separating the counties of Gloucester and Somerset. On the summit of the cliff, which rises to the height of three hundred feet above the bed of the river, was anciently a small chapel, dedicated to St. Vincent, from which the rock on the north-east bank takes its name. The town is indebted for its present grandeur and importance to the efficacy of its hot wells, originally noticed, in 1480, by William of Worcester, but not brought into general use till 1632, when the water was first applied externally in cases of scrofula and cancer, and internally, in 1672, in cases of inflammation, dysentery, and hæmorrhage. These waters issue from an aperture in the cliff, about ten feet above low water-mark, and about twenty-six below high water-mark, and are pumped into reservoirs for use, besides being conveyed by pipes into many of the houses; the aperture is secured from the water of the river, which in spring tides rises to the height of thirty-six feet. Their mean temperature is 68° of Fahrenheit, and they contain a portion of sulphuric acid, but are soft and pleasant to the taste, and free from any foetid smell; they are generally drunk in the morning before breakfast, and in the afternoon. At the time of the earthquake at Lisbon, the water became so red and turbid as to be unfit for use.

That part of the town called the Hot Wells, and formerly the more populous, is situated at the base of the cliff, and has a mild and genial atmosphere, peculiarly suited to delicate constitutions; from which circumstance it has been not unaptly denominated the Montpelier of England. A new pump-room, a handsome edifice of the Tuscan order, containing also apartments for the residence of invalids, has been erected near the site of the old house, which was built by subscription about the year 1770. Immediately above this is an observatory, in which are a camera obscura, embracing a comprehensive view of the surrounding scenery; and powerful telescopes, constructed by an untaught genius, to whom the lord of the manor granted the materials and an advantageous lease of an ancient mill occupying the site: near this a suspension bridge, long in contemplation, was commenced in the summer of 1831, which will form an interesting addition to the beautiful scenery of this picturesque spot. Gloucester House, formerly the only hotel of any consideration in the place, and now the Gleu-rester and Steam-packet hotel, whence the packets to Ireland regularly sail, is still much frequented, from its proximity to the waters and the excellence of its accommodations: Dowry-square and parade, Hope-square, Albe-marle-row, St. Vincent's parade, and Granby-hill, all contain respectable lodging-houses, fitted up with due regard to the comfort and convenience of visitors. Ascending the cliff, on which is situated that part of the town properly called Clifton, are baths and a pump-room for drinking the water, which issues from a spring of similar quality to that at the Hot Wells, or more probably from the same spring, recently opened at a greater elevation, for the accommodation of invalids residing in this part of the town: to the pump-room are attached a reading-room and lodging-rooms; and a little below Mardyke, on the road to the Hot Wells, is a spa, where saline mineral water is obtained, which is said to be efficacious in visceral and other disorders. The acclivities are occupied by ranges of stately edifices, under the respective names of crescent, circus, paragon, and terrace, among which York-crescent is distinguished for its superior extent and magnificence: the summit, on which formerly there were only a few scattered dwellings, is now crowned with superb mansions and elegant villas, commanding extensive prospects of romantic beauty. Here is an elegant mansion built by Sir William Draper, Knt., the celebrated opponent of Junius, in the front court of which are, an obelisk, erected to the memory of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and a cenotaph to the memory of those of the seventy-ninth regiment who fell at Aroitt, Manilla, Pondicherry, and the Philippine Islands. The Clifton Hotel is a splendid edifice, occupying the whole eastern extremity of the mall: the front, which is of freestone, exhibits a pleasing combination of tasteful elegance; the centre comprises a suite of three spacious rooms, handsomely fitted up, and appropriated to the public subscription concerts and assemblies, one of them during the morning being open as a reading-room: the north side is occupied as private lodging-houses, and the rooms over the centre and the south side are appropriated to the uses of the hotel. Concerts and assemblies frequently take place during the season: the terraces afford delightful promenades; and the nursery ground, comprising several acres, beautifully laid out and interspersed with parterres of flowers, adorned with grottos, and embellished with numerous fossils and natural curiosities, is also a favourite place of resort: the town is brilliantly lighted with oil-gas, and plentifully supplied with water. Many of the labouring class are employed in blasting the rocks, the fragments of which being broken are shipped to the counties of Devon and Cornwall, and used for mending the roads. St. Vincent's rock is composed of hard variegated marble, susceptible of a high polish; it is burnt into a fine white lime, much esteemed by plasterers, and a considerable quantity is packed in barrels and exported to the East and West Indies. In the fissures of the rocks are found beautiful spars, and those quartz chrystals called Bristol diamonds, which are equal in transparency, and inferior only in hardness, to those of India; they are remarkable for their naturally formed and highly polished hexagonal surfaces, and are found imbedded in nodulæ of stone of the same colour as the soil; in these rocks have been also discovered veins of lead and iron ore. That part of the parish which is situated between Rownham Ferry and Lime-kiln Dock, on the south side of the Hot Well road, is within the jurisdiction of the city of Bristol; the remainder is within that of the magistrates for the Bristol division of the county of Gloucester: the town is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests for the city and county of the city of Bristol, established under an act passed in the 56th of George III., for the recovery of debts from 40s. to any amount under that for which an arrest on mesne process may issue. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Gloucester, and diocese of Bristol, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. C. Simeon. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a spacious structure in the later style of English architecture, erected in 1822. There is a private episcopal chapel; and it is in contemplation to build another church at the Hot Wells, for the especial accommodation of the poor. There are a chapel for those in the late Countess of Huntingdon's connexion, a floating chapel for seamen, called Clifton Ark, and a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A National and an infant school, and a dispensary, for which a neat building was erected at the sole expense of Mr. Whippie, are supported by subscription. On the summit of St. Vincent's rock are the remains of an encampment, three or four acres in extent, defended by three ramparts and two ditches; the inner rampart, which is in no part more than five feet in height, is supposed to have been surmounted by a wall: its extent, from one side of the rock to the other, is two hundred and ninety-three yards; and on the side next the river there is a deep trench, said to have been cut during the civil war in the reign of Charles I. Its origin is by some antiquaries ascribed to the Britons, and by others to the Romans, who placed there the first of that chain of forts erected to defend the passage of the Severn: in the immediate neighbourhood, and in various parts of the parish, numerous Roman and Saxon coins have been discovered. Anne Yearsley, who, in the humble station of a milk-woman, displayed much poetical talent, and produced several literary works, was a native of this place; she died in 1806 at Melksham, in the county of Wilts.

CLIFTON, a joint township with Salwick, in the parish of KIRKHAM, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Kirkham, containing, with Salwick, 608 inhabitants. In 1682, John Dickson left a small bequest for teaching poor children.

CLIFTON, a township in the parish of ECCLES, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Manchester, containing 1168 inhabitants. New collieries have been opened at this place, whereby its population has greatly increased.

CLIFTON, a joint township with Coldwell, in the northern division of the parish of STANNINGTON, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 2½ miles (S.) from Morpeth. The population is returned with the parish.

CLIFTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, county of NOTTINGHAM, 4½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Nottingham, containing, with Glapton, 470 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £21. 6. 10½., and in the patronage of Sir Robert Clifton, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a fine structure, though much dilapidated; it has a massive tower, and contains several monuments to the Clifton family. Here was anciently a small college for a warden and two priests, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and founded in the time of Edward IV., by Sir Gervase Clifton, which, at the dissolution, was valued at £20 per annum. There is a small bequest for the instruction of children and the support of an hospital. Clifton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CLIFTON, a township in the parish of DEDDINGTON, hundred of WOORTON, county of OXFORD, 1½ mile (E.) from Deddington, containing 271 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CLIFTON, a parish in WEST ward, county of WEST-MORLAND, 2½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Penrith, containing 283 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £8. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a small and indifferently built structure. The parish is bounded on the north and west by the river Lowther, in the vale of which the village is situated, deriving its name from the rock or cliff on which it stands. At Clifton moor, which was enclosed in 1812, a slight skirmish took place in 1745, between the Duke of Cumberland and a party of the Pretender's army, on its retreat to Scotland. There is a medicinal spring, the water of which is efficacious in the cure of scorbutic complaints. Mary Scott, in 1764, made a small bequest towards the support of a schoolmaster.

CLIFTON, a township partly in the parish of St. MICHAEL le BELFREY, within the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, and partly in the parish of St. OLAVE, MARY-GATE, wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, 1½ mile (N. W.) from York, containing 469 inhabitants.

CLIFTON, a joint township with Norwood, in the parish of FEWSTON, lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (N. by E.) from Otley, containing, with Norwood, 420 inhabitants. Clifton is within the jurisdiction of the court of the honour of Knaresborough. A school is endowed with a small annuity for the instruction of eight poor children.

CLIFTON, a joint township with Newhall, in that part of the parish of OTLEY which is in the upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from Otley. The population is returned with Newhall.

CLIFTON, a joint chapelry with Hartshead, in that part of the parish of DEWSBURY which is in the wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Huddersfield, containing, with Hartshead, 2007 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £460 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant.

CLIFTON upon DUNSMOOR, a parish in the Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 2½ miles (E. N. E.) from Rugby, containing, with the hamlet of Newton with Biggin, 612 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £8. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Earl of Bradford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Oxford canal passes through this parish. Thomas Carte, author of an elaborate History of England, was born here, in 1686; he died in 1754.

CLIFTON (GREAT), a chapelry in the parish of WORKINGTON, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 2½ miles (E.) from Workington, containing 251 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Workington. The chapel is situated in the township of Little Clifton: an additional piece of ground was consecrated for a cemetery in 1821, the former burial-ground having been disused from the year 1736. Here are the remains of an ancient cross, where, according to tradition, a market was formerly held. The Rev. Jeremiah Seed, a theological writer, was a native of this place; he died in 1747.

CLIFTON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of WORKINGTON, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 3½ miles (E.) from Workington, containing 203 inhabitants.

CLIFTON (NORTH), a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (E. by N.) from Tuxford, comprising the township of South Clifton, and the hamlets of Harby and Spalford, and containing 864 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £7. 6., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Clifton in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. George. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Trent, over which there is a ferry, which is free to the inhabitants. The small village of Harby contained a palace belonging to Queen Eleanor, consort of Edward I., who expired here on the 29th of November, 1290; and here her august husband erected the first cross to her memory. A schoolmaster receives £10. 10. per annum, a schoolroom and residence having been built for him by subscription in 1799, arising from land bequeathed by Simon Nicholson, in 1669, for instructing fifteen poor children of North and South Clifton.

CLIFTON (SOUTH), a township in the parish of NORTH CLIFTON, northern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Tuxford, containing 292 inhabitants.

CLIFTON upon TEME, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTON, county of WORCESTER, 10½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Worcester, containing 520 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £6. 19. 2., and in the patronage of Sir T. E. Winnington, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Killom, contains some ancient monuments. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is beautifully situated on a steep cliff, overlooking the serpentine course of the river

Teme, by means of which the meadows and hop plantations in the neighbourhood are irrigated. Edward III. made it a free borough, granting also a weekly market, now disused. Near it are the remains of Ham castle, formerly the residence of the family of Jefferies, which was nearly destroyed in 1646, by the parliamentary troops; it is now occupied as a farmhouse. There was anciently a chapel at Overton, in this parish, but, in 1532, Charles, Bishop of Hereford, with the consent of the vicar of Clifton and the inhabitants, united it to the parish of Slandford, reserving to the vicar an annual pension of 13s. 4d., in lieu of tithes and offerings due from the inhabitants of the chapelry.

CLIFTON upon URE, a township in the parish of THORNTON-WATLASS, eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (S. W.) from Bedale, containing 50 inhabitants.

CLIFTON-CAMPVILLE, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 5½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Tamworth, comprising the chapelry of Harleston and the township of Haunton, and containing 838 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £30, and in the patronage of the Rev. John Watkins. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

CLIFTON-HAMPDEN, a parish in the hundred of DORCHESTER, county of OXFORD, 3¼ miles (E. S. E.) from Abingdon, containing 277 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Dorchester, endowed with £666 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £2100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Miss Noyes. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

CLIFTON-MABANK, a parish in the hundred of YETMINSTER, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, 5½ miles (W. S. W.) from Sherborne, containing 66 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, formerly within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, but united in 1824 to the vicarage of Bradford-Abbas, and now within the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £4. 16. 0½. The church, which was dedicated to All Saints, has been in ruins for a century. The river Ivel runs through this parish.

CLIFTON-REYNES, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2¼ miles (E.) from Olney, containing 230 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 10½., and in the patronage of Trustees for William Harry Alexander Small, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The principal manor here was given by William the Conqueror to Robert de Toden, one of the companions of his expedition, and it afterwards passed into the family of Reynes, from which the parish takes its adjunct.

CLIMPING, a parish in the hundred of AVISFORD, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Arundel, containing 258 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. 0½., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is cruciform, and principally in the early style of English architecture, with a Norman tower at the end of the south transept. The parish is bounded on the east by the river Arun, over which there is a ferry, and on the south by the English channel. There is a small fund for the instruction of children.

CLINCH, a joint township with Fawdon and Hartside, in the parish of INGRAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 12¼ miles (W.) from Alawick. The population is returned with Fawdon.

CLINT, a township in that part of the parish of RIPLEY which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 1¼ mile (W. by S.) from Ripley, containing 412 inhabitants. Here are the remains of an ancient mansion, called Clint Hall. The Roman road from Ilkley over the forest of Knaresborough branched off in two directions at this place, one leading to Catterick, the other to Aldborough.

CLIPPESBY, a parish in the western division of the hundred of FLEGG, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. E.) from Acle, containing 50 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of D. Colby, Esq. and another. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CLIPSHAM, a parish in the soke of OAKHAM, locally in the hundred of Alstoe, county of RUTLAND, 9¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Oakham, containing 221 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10. 0. 5., and in the patronage of Mrs. Snow. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CLIPSTON, a parish in the hundred of ROTHWELL, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Market-Harborough, containing 813 inhabitants. The living is a rectory in three portions, two of which are valued in the king's books at £11. 12. 8½., and the third at £6; it is in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to All Saints. In 1667, Sir George Boswell bequeathed land and tenements to endow a school and an hospital; and Francis Horton also bequeathed £200 to increase the endowment: they are for the benefit of the inhabitants of Clipston, Merston, Nussell, East Farndon, Oxendon, Kilmarsh, and Haselbeck. The river Isc rises in this parish.

CLIPSTON, a township in that part of the parish of PLUMTREE which is in the southern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 6¼ miles (S. E.) from Nottingham, containing 72 inhabitants. Richard I., after returning from the captivity brought on by his crusade to the Holy Land, had an interview with the king of Scotland at this place, in 1194, where they spent several days.

CLIPSTONE, a township in the parish of EDWINSTON, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 3¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Ollerton, containing 142 inhabitants. On an eminence above the village are some remains of a very ancient palace that belonged to the Anglo-Saxon kings; it is of Norman architecture, and is said to have been erected by one of the kings of Northumberland; after the Conquest it was frequently the residence of King John, both before and after his accession to the throne, and the charter which he granted to Nottingham, in the first year of his reign, is dated at this place; as were also the orders issued by Edward II., on September 25th, 1307, to the seneschal of Gascony, and constable of Bourdeaux, to provide a thousand pipes of good wine to be sent to London before the following Christmas, for his approaching coronation. To this palace also all the kings of England down to Henry V. appear to have repaired for the diversion of hunting in the royal forest of Sherwood, as we find that Henry de Fauconberge, in the reign of Henry III., held the neighbouring manor of Cuckney in serjeantry by the shoeing of the king's palfrey on coming to Mansfield. A parliament was held here by Edward I. in 1290, and an old oak at the edge of the park is still called the Parliament oak. Clipston is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CLIST (BROAD), a parish in the hundred of CLISTRON, county of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Exeter, containing 1885 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £26, and in the patronage of Sir T. D. Acland, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a handsome edifice in the later style of English architecture, containing three stone stalls with buttresses and pinnacles, having rich canopies, and embellished with varied foliage, with an effigy in plate armour within them. The river Clist runs through the parish, in which there is a paper-mill. This place was burnt down by the Danes in 1001. The old mansion of Columbjohn, in this parish, was garrisoned for Charles I. by his loyal adherent, Sir John Acland: it has a chapel, in which divine service is still regularly performed. On the manor of Clist-Gerald is a barn, once the chapel of St. Leonard; there were also chapels dedicated to St. David and St. Catherine. A charity school, founded in 1691, is supported partly by an endowment of about £15 per annum, and partly by subscription: a good school-house for boys and girls, who are instructed on the National plan, has been erected by Sir T. D. Acland, and another for girls only by Lady Acland. An almshouse for twelve poor persons was built by Mr. Burrough, who endowed it, in 1605, with £23. 11. per annum, and placed it under the direction of the 'Eight Men' of the parish. Adjoining it is a dwelling called the New House, and, at a little distance, one called the Parish House, both inhabited by paupers.

CLIST (ST. GEORGE), a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from Topsham, containing 345 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £17. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. R. Ellicombe. In the windows of the church are some remains of ancient stained glass. A school for boys and girls was founded, in 1703, by Sir Edward and Dame Seward; the income is about £42 per annum, and it has an exhibition of £4 per annum at either of the Universities: £3 per annum is received by this parish from the Holbrook estate in the parish of Clist-Honiton, the gift of Thomas Weare for instructing four poor children.

CLIST (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish in the hundred of CLISTRON, county of DEVON, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Cullompton, containing 149 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £9. 4. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Exeter. The church contains an elegant wooden screen.

CLIST (ST. MARY), a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Topsham, containing 145 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £5. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Strong. This parish is memorable for having been the scene of one of the principal contests between the adherents of the old religion and the Reformers, in 1549, when the former were defeated, and pursued with great slaughter through the village to the heath adjoining. This parish is entitled to an annuity of £3 per annum from an estate called Holbrook, in the parish of Clist-Honiton, bequeathed by Thomas Weare for the education of six poor children.

CLIST-HONITON, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Exeter, containing 383 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £300 parliamentary grant. The Clyst, though an insignificant stream, imparts its name to this and the other parishes through which it passes. Thomas Weare by his will bearing date 28th April, 1691, charged his estate, called Holbrook, with the annual payment of £4. 10. for educating six children. This sum is regularly paid by the owner of the property, and with subscriptions, affords instruction to all the poor children of the parish who apply.

CLIST-HYDON, a parish in the hundred of CLISTRON, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Cullompton, containing 297 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £20. 0. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Huyshe. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. A charity school is endowed with about £20 per annum, principally from a bequest by the Rev. Robert Hall, D.D., in 1667, part of which is also applied in apprenticing poor children, with a fee of £5.

CLIST-SACKVILLE, a chapelry in the parishes of CLIST ST. MARY, FARRINGDON, and SOWTON, eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Topsham. The population is returned with the parishes of Farringdon and Sowton. The chapel, which was dedicated to St. Gabriel, has been demolished. This place was mortgaged by Sir Ralph Sackville to Walter Brownscomb, Bishop of Exeter, to enable him to proceed with Edward I. on a crusade to the Holy Land, promising to refund the money at a fixed period, and to defray all charges on the estate during his absence; on which the bishop erected a palace, still standing, and fenced the ground at great charge, so that the expense exceeded the value of the land, in consequence of which it remained with him and his successors, until Bishop Vesey alienated it to the Earl of Bedford.

Arms.

CLITHEROE, an unincorporated borough, market town, and parochial chapel-ry, in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, on the eastern bank of the Ribble, 30 miles (N.) from Manchester, 49 (N.E.) from Liverpool, 26 (S.E.) from Lancaster, and 216 (N.N.W.) from London, containing 3213 inhabitants. Its ancient name, Cliderhow, is of a mixed derivation, from the British Cled-dur, which signifies the hill, or rock, by the waters, and the final syllable how, a Saxon word for hill, being descriptive of its situation, which is on an isolated eminence, terminating in one direction in a lofty rock of limestone, on which stands the decayed keep of a castle, erected either in the reign of William the Conqueror, or in that of his son: some ascribe the foundation to Robert de Lacy the first, but, on the authority of a manuscript in the Bodleian Library, it is assigned to Robert de Lacy the second, in 1179, which account is confirmed by Dugdale, who states that the castle, and the chapel of St. Michael annexed thereto, were built by the latter. The castle originally consisted of a keep, with a tower and arched gateway, and was surrounded by a strong lofty wall built on the margin of the rock: it was used as a species of fortress for dispensing justice and receiving tribute by the Lacies, who were lords paramount of the honour. This honour, which extends over the parishes of Whalley, Blackburn, Chipping, and Ribchester, the forest of Bowland, and the manors of Tottington and Rochdale, and includes twenty-eight manors, formed part of the possessions of the house of Lancaster, from the time of the marriage of Thomas Plantagenet, Earl of Lancaster, with Alice, sister and heiress of Henry de Lacy, until that of the Restoration, when Charles II. bestowed it upon General Monk and his heirs: it is now divided between his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch and Lord Montague; all manors and estates, of whatsoever tenure, within its limits, being held of the castle: it has also a court for the recovery of small debts, extending over the hundred of Blackburn. During the wars of the roses, Henry VI., on his deposition, sought a temporary refuge here among the hereditary dependents of the house of Lancaster, but was betrayed to his rival by the Talbots of Bashall and Colebry, and sent bound to London. In the civil war this fortress was among the last surrendered to the parliament, by whose directions, in 1649, it was dismantled, the keep, a square tower rapidly mouldering away, being all that remains: the site, and a certain portion of ground occupied by the demesne and forests of the baronial edifice, are extra-parochial, and commonly designated the Castle parish. A modern castellated edifice has been erected within the precincts of the castle. Clitheroe was the scene of an engagement, in 1138, between a small party of the English army and the Scotch, in which the former was totally defeated by superior numbers; some traces of this sanguinary conflict have been discovered near Edisforth bridge and along the banks of the Ribble. An hospital for lepers, called the Hospital of Edisforth, was founded here by some of the earliest burgesses, and dedicated to St. Nicholas, which shared the fate of the smaller monasteries at the dissolution.

The town, from its elevated position, is clean and pleasantly situated; the houses, which are generally of an inferior order, are built of stone; the streets are well paved, but not lighted, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from several springs. The neighbourhood abounds with an almost inexhaustible bed of limestone; and at Pimlico, a short distance northward from the town, ten kilns are kept burning forty weeks in the year, and produce in the aggregate four thousand windles, or twenty-eight thousand strikes weekly. Horse-races of an inferior description were re-established in 1821, and are held annually on the 21st and 22nd of June, on Salt-hill moor. There are extensive cotton-manufactories and print-works in the town and its vicinity, which have flourished to such a degree that the population has nearly doubled during the last ten years. A communication by water has been opened with the principal navigable rivers and canals, thus affording a facility of conveyance to all parts of the kingdom. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are held annually on the 24th and 25th of March, 1st and 2nd of August, on the fourth Friday and Saturday after the 29th of September, and on the 6th and 7th of December; there is also a fair for cattle and sheep every alternate Tuesday.

Corporate Seal.

Clitheroe is a borough by prescription: its first charter, dated in the time of Henry de Lacy, who died in 1147, was confirmed by Edward I., who granted the burgesses the same privileges as those enjoyed by the citizens of Chester, and subsequently by Edward III., Henry VIII., and James II. The civil power is vested in two bailiffs, chosen annually by the burgesses at large, from their own body, at a court held for that purpose on the first Friday after the 9th of October: their joint authority is equal to that of one magistrate; they are coroners and lords of the manor, for which they hold a court leet twice a year: in addition to this, there are a court baron and a court of enquiry, held under one or both of the bailiffs: these courts are held in the moot-hall, a neat modern edifice, ornamented in front with the borough arms cut in stone, and surmounted by a spire sixty-two feet high. There is also a court of pleas, having jurisdiction to an unlimited amount in actions of debt arising within the borough: it is holden every three weeks before the two bailiffs, and has existed from time immemorial. In addition to the bailiffs are the recorder, who is elected by the burgesses, and officiates as assessor to the bailiffs in the trial of causes in the borough court; the town-clerk, who is also steward of the court leet; and the town-serjeant, who is the executive officer and keeper of the gaol: the two last officers are appointed by the bailiffs. The borough did not return members to parliament until the first year of the reign of Elizabeth, since which period it has regularly sent two: in consequence of a petition to the House of Commons, that assembly determined, in 1694, "that the right of election was in the burgesses and freemen; the burgesses were such as had, in any land or houses in the borough, an estate of freehold inheritance, and they were of two sorts; out-burgesses, who lived out of the borough, and in-burgesses, who lived in the borough, and had such an estate in houses or land there, and both these had a right of electing: the freemen were such as lived in the houses within the borough as tenants, and they had the right of electing when the landlords did not vote for these houses, but when they did, the tenants had no right of electing:" there are about one hundred voters: the bailiffs are the returning officers. The parliamentary influence is principally possessed by Earl Brownlow and Earl Howe, who concur in the nomination of one member each.

The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £10 per annum and £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Earl Howe. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is of great antiquity, being designated the church of St. Mary Magdalene, in a deed of the 13th of Edward IV.: between the nave and the choir is a fine Norman arch; and a brass plate against the southern wall of the nave bears a curious enigmatical diagram, and an inscription in Latin to the memory of Dr. John Webster, the celebrated judicial astrologer, and formerly curate of Clitheroe, who was interred here, June 21st, 1682. There are places of worship for Independents, Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school was founded, in 1554, by Philip and Mary, and endowed with the rectorial tithes of the parish of Almondbury, and with certain messuages, burgages, and lands in the district of Craven, in Yorkshire: its concerns are under the superintendence of six governors, who appoint the master and usher, subject to the approval of the Bishop of Chester, as visitor. The head-master receives a salary of £200, and has a handsome residence, recently erected, which he occupies rent-free: the second master is allowed £100 per annum, and both receive gratuities at Shrovetide. The surplus revenue of the institution is appropriable to the repairs of the school, and to the support of poor scholars at the university, but the latter purpose is seldom carried into effect. The Rev. James King, afterwards chaplain to the House of Commons, and father of Captain James King, who accompanied Captain Cook in his voyage of discovery round the globe, also of the Right Rev. Walker King, late Bishop of Rochester, was, during the early part of his ministry, incumbent of Clitheroe.

CLIVE, a township in that part of the parish of MIDDLEWICH which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Middlewich, containing 29 inhabitants.

CLIVE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ST. MARY which is within the liberties of the town of SHREWSBURY, county of SALOP, 3½ miles (S.) from Wem, containing 306 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, within the jurisdiction of the court of the royal peculiar of St. Mary, in Shrewsbury, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Head-master of the free grammar school of Shrewsbury. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints. William Wycherley, the poet and comic writer, was born here, in 1640.

CLIVIGER, a chapelry in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Burnley, containing 1314 inhabitants. There is a small bequest for the instruction of children.

CLIXBY, a chapelry in the parish of CAISTOR, southern division of the hundred of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2½ miles (N. by W.) from Caistor, containing 67 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Caistor, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Caistor in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln.

CLOATLY, a tything in the parish of HANKERTON, hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, 3½ miles (N. E.) from Malmesbury, containing 87 inhabitants.

CLODOCK, a parish in the hundred of EWYSLACY, county of HEREFORD, 16 miles (S. W. by W.) from Hereford, comprising the chapelries of Crasswall, Llanveynoe, and Longtown, and the township of Newton, and containing 1796 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage not in charge, in the archdeaconry of Brecon, and diocese of St. David's, and in the patronage of Walter Wilkins, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Cleodocus. Fairs are held on April 29th, June 22nd, and September 21st. Here is a school with an endowment of £4 per annum. The rivers Olchon and Munnow have their source in this parish, and the river Eskley runs through it. At Longtown are the remains of an ancient castle, formerly of great strength, and a Roman camp in a very perfect state.

CLOFFOCK, an extra-parochial liberty adjoining the parish of Workington, in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, containing 15 inhabitants. This is a large common, lying on the north side of the town of Workington, and is completely surrounded by the river Derwent and a small stream. Races are held annually upon it; and at the west end are a quay and a patent slip. A portion of the ground is called Chapel Flat, whence it is thought to have been the site or property of a religious house.

CLOFORD, a parish in the hundred of FROME, county of SOMERSET, 4½ miles (S. W.) from Frome, containing 312 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. 6., and in the patronage of S. T. Horner, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The ancient liberty of Hill-house includes this parish and the parish of Elm.

CLOPHILL, a parish in the hundred of FLITR, county of BEDFORD, 1½ mile (N. by E.) from Silsoe, containing 838 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Countess De Grey. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, stands upon an eminence at some distance from the village. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Ivel passes through the parish. At Cainhoe are vestiges of the ancient moated castle of the Barons d'Albini; the hill on which it stood is high and steep, and overgrown with coppice wood. Here was a religious house, probably a cell to St. Alban's abbey.

CLOPTON, a parish in the hundred of CARLFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (N. W.) from Woodbridge, containing 413 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £16.13.4., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. G. Spurgeon. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CLOSWORTH, a parish in the hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, county of SOMERSET, 4½ miles (S. by E.) from Yeovil, containing 187 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6.8.11½., and in the patronage of E. B. Portman, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CLOTHALL, a parish in the hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, 2¼ miles (S. E.) from Baldock, containing 358 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £16.0.7½., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is built of flint and stone, and has a square tower surmounted by a spire; it contains several ancient effigies and inscriptions in brass. Here was a free chapel, or college, of ancient foundation, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, for a master, brethren, and sisters, which was valued at £4.2.8., and continued till the dissolution. Thomas Stanley, son of Sir Thomas Stanley, Knt., and author of The History of the Philosophers, was born here, in 1625; he died in 1678, and was buried in the parish church.

CLOTHERHOLME, a township in that part of the parish of RIPON which is within the liberty of RIPON, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (N. W. by W.) from Ripon, containing 16 inhabitants.

CLOTTON-HOOFIELD, a township in that part of the parish of TARVIN which is in the second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Tarporley, containing 398 inhabitants.

CLOUGHTON, a chapelry in the parish of SCALBY, PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, 4¼ miles (N. W. by N.) from Scarborough, containing 366 inhabitants. Here is a large quarry of excellent free-stone.

CLOVELLY, a parish in the hundred of HARTLAND, county of DEVON, 12 miles (W. by S.) from Bideford, containing 941 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £19.11.5½., and in the patronage of Sir J. H. Williams, Bart. The church, dedicated to All Saints, and made collegiate for a warden and six chaplains by one of the family of Carew, in the 11th of Richard II., stands at the distance of half a mile from the village, and at a considerable height above it. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. At this place was a Roman trajectus from Caermarthen, and till within the last few years the remains of a fort, erected by the Romans for the defence of the pass, were plainly to be distinguished. The village is romantically situated on the declivities of a shelving and precipitous rock, rising abruptly from the Bristol channel to the height of several hundred feet above the harbour, and crowned with luxuriant verdure; beneath this the houses are irregularly scattered in narrow ranges, descending in direct and spiral lines from the summit to the base. The prospect from the heights is extensive, and embraces numerous interesting objects, among which the views of the isle of Lundy in the channel, of Barnstaple bay, of the opposite coast as far as the Severn, and of the vessels in the small harbour beneath, are eminently fine: the appearance of the village from the harbour is strikingly picturesque, presenting a singular combination of romantic cottages, rugged precipices, and masses of rock of remarkable configuration, fringed with woods and occasionally interspersed with spots of ground in a high state of cultivation. The harbour, which, together with that of Hartland, is an appendage to the port of Bideford, though small, is remarkable for its security, and is formed partly by the projecting rocks of the coast, and partly by a substantial pier erected by a member of the family of Carew, by one of whom the manor was purchased in the reign of Richard II. A considerable trade is still carried on in the herring fishery, for which Clovelly was formerly the most noted place on the coast: the herrings are esteemed the finest taken in the channel, and the fishery furnishes employment to the principal part of the labouring class. The neighbourhood abounds with geological attractions, but possesses no organic remains; the rocks, of which the strata incline in every direction, consist of alternate beds of dun-stone and shillat. There is a small charity school, partly supported by the rental of the seats in the gallery of the church, and partly by subscription. On the summit of the heights above the village is a large encampment, called Dichen, or the Clovelly ditches, consisting of three trenches, or dykes, enclosing a quadrilateral area three hundred and sixty feet in length, and three hundred in breadth.

CLOWHOUSE, a joint township with Houghton, in that part of the parish of HEDDON on the WALL which is in the eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7¼ miles (W. by N.) from Newcastle. The population is returned with Houghton.

CLOWN, a parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Chesterfield, containing 616 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £7.0.10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, has Norman portions, amidst various later styles of architecture. Charles Basseldine, in 1730, founded a charity school, with an endowment of thirteen acres of land, now producing £26 per annum, with a house for the master and a school-room; twenty children are educated upon this foundation, and four others for £2 per annum, the gift of John Slater, in 1727. In 1770 an information and bill were filed in the court of Chancery, to recover some part of the school property left by Mr. Basseldine, when a decree was given in favour of the charity, and the rectors of Clown, Staveley, and Barlbrough, for the time being, were appointed the trustees of the estate: but other trustees were subsequently chosen upon the report of the Master. Limestone is obtained here. There is a chalybeate spring, called Shuttlewood Spa, in this parish; and several rivulets, tributary to the stream running down to Welbeck, flow through it: there is also a piece of water called Harlesthorne Dam, covering about four acres.

CLUN, a parish in the hundred of PURSLOW, county of SALOP, comprising the borough and market town of Clun, and the townships of Edeclift, Hobendrid, and Newcastle, and containing 1781 inhabitants, of which number, 792 are in the town of Clun, 26 miles (S. W.) from Shrewsbury, and 157 (N. W. by W.) from London.

This place takes its name from the river Colun, or Clun, which, rising in the forest of that name, six miles to the west, divides the town into two parts, and pursues an easterly course towards Ludlow. In the reign of Stephen, or, according to Camden, in that of Henry III., a castle was erected here by Fitz-Alan, afterwards Earl of Arundel, on a lofty eminence overlooking the river, the proprietor of which anciently possessed the power of life and death over his tenants; it was demolished by Owen Glyndwr in his rebellion against Henry IV. The remains still present an interesting and picturesque object in the surrounding landscape; they consist of the lofty and massive walls of the keep and the banquet-hall; and considerable masses of the ruins in various parts of the area indistinctly mark out both the ancient form and extent of this once stately pile. In the reign of Henry VIII. this parish was by statute annexed to, and made part of, the newly formed county of Montgomery, from which it was afterwards severed, and included in that of Salop. The town is pleasantly and romantically situated on a gentle eminence surrounded by hills of bolder elevation, and consists principally of one long irregular street on the north bank of the river, over which is an ancient stone bridge of five sharply-pointed arches, leading to that part of the town in which the church stands: the houses are in general built of rag-stone, and roofed with thatch, though occasionally interspersed with some of more modern structure; and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The market is on Wednesday: the fairs are on Whit-Tuesday and September 23rd, for cattle, sheep, and pigs; and November 22nd, which is a statute and a large cattle fair. Clun, formerly a lordship in the marches, was first incorporated by the Lords Marchers, whose charter was confirmed to Thomas, Earl of Arundel, in the reign of Edward II., at which time its prescriptive right was admitted; the charter not having been enrolled in Chancery, and all the records of the Lords Marchers having been destroyed, its being an incorporated borough was proved by parole evidence: it was formerly the head of a hundred of the same name, which has been incorporated with that of Purslow. The government is vested in two bailiffs and thirty burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, two serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The bailiffs are chosen annually by the burgesses, from among their own body, on the first Sunday after the 19th of September, and sworn into office at the ensuing court leet, held in October; they are justices of the peace, and hold a court of record for the recovery of debts to any amount. The hundred court, for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held every third Wednesday, and courts leet in May and October: at that held in October constables for the town and the several townships in the parish are appointed. The town-hall, a neat modern stone building supported on arches, consists of one large upper room, in which the several courts are held; under it is an area for the use of the market, in which is a small prison for the temporary confinement of malefactors.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £13. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Earl of Powis. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a very ancient structure in the earliest period of the Norman style of architecture, and has evidently been of much greater extent than it is at present, having had several chapels attached to it: it has a low tower of very large dimensions and of great strength, with a pyramidal roof, from the centre of which rises another of similar form, but smaller; the arch under the tower, which forms the western entrance, bears a strong resemblance to the Saxon arch, and it is not improbable that this part of the building existed before the Conquest: the northern entrance is under a highly ornamented Norman arch, on the east side of which is an arched recess, richly cinquefoiled, and probably intended for the tomb of its founder: the interior contains a fine old font and many interesting monuments; the roof is supported on massive circular columns and obtusely pointed arches, with flat mouldings; and in the north aisle the original oak ceiling, carved in quatrefoil, is still preserved. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A charity school for twenty poor girls was built by the Rev. Mr. Swainson, the present vicar, who pays a mistress for teaching them reading, sewing, and knitting, and also the master of a similar school for boys, for teaching them to write. The charity school for boys, held in the town-hall, is supported partly by the vicar, and partly by subscription; in both these schools articles of clothing are given in reward for good conduct.

Clun Hospital, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was founded in 1614, and endowed, by Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, with tithes in the several parishes of Church-Stoke in Montgomeryshire, Knighton in Radnorshire, and Weston in the county of Salop, producing a revenue of £1000 per annum; the establishment consists of fourteen poor brethren, and a warden, who reads morning and evening prayers daily; the brethren have each a house and garden, and receive £2 per month; in addition to this, the warden receives a gratuity at the discretion of the Earl of Powis, as lord of the honour, by whom he is appointed; they occasionally wear a silver badge, on which is the crest of the founder: the management is vested in the vicar of Clun, the bailiff or Bishop's Castle, and the rector of Hopesay; the Bishop of Hereford is visitor. The buildings comprise a quadrangle of forty yards in length, and the same in breadth, in one angle of which is a very neat chapel, and behind the buildings is a large extent of additional garden-ground, apportioned to the several houses. Within a quarter of a mile to the north-west of the town is a single intrenchment, said to have been raised by Owen Glyndwr, as a shelter for his troops during their attack on the castle; and within half a mile to the south is Walls Castle, the station from which it was battered. About two miles and a half to the north-east is the camp of Ostorius, the station occupied by that general in his last battle with Caractacus; and about five miles to the south-east, near the confluence of the rivers Clun and Teind, and within a mile of Walcott, the seat of the Earl of Powis, are the Caer, or Bury Ditches, the station of the British hero, and the scene of his last effort against the Roman power: the camp, which is of an elliptic form, comprehends an area of from three to four acres, on the summit of a very lofty eminence, commanding an extensive view of the surrounding country; the steep acclivities are defended by a triple intrenchment of amazing strength, which, though overgrown with turf, is still in a state of entire preservation; the ramparts, varying from fifty to sixty feet in height, are constructed of stones and earth firmly compacted, and the intermediate spaces are from twenty to thirty yards in breadth: this fortification, evidently a work of prodigious labour, is one of the most interesting in the country, and, under the care of the Earl of Powis, is preserved with a due regard to its historical importance. In making a turnpike road from Clun to Bishop's Castle, in 1780, several cannon balls were found.

CLUNBURY, a parish in the hundred of PURSLOW, county of SALOP, comprising the townships of Clunbury with Obley, and Clunton with Rempton, and containing 800 inhabitants, of which number, 359 are in the township of Clunbury with Obley, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Bishop's Castle. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, endowed with £800 private benefaction, and £1800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Powis. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. Here is a small endowed school.

CLUNGUNFORD, a parish in the hundred of PURSLOW, county of SALOP, 9 miles (S. E. by S.) from Bishop's Castle, containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Dinmore, 486 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of John Roche, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. The trustees of Francis Walker, in 1682, founded and endowed a charity school, the income of which, increased by sundry other bequests in 1725 and 1776, amounts to £46 per annum, for teaching the children of Clungunford, and the adjoining township of Broome, in the parish of Hopesay; about eighty are educated upon this foundation. The river Clun and the Roman Watling-street intersect this parish from north to south. In the neighbourhood are two tumuli, and limestone in abundance.

CLUNTON, a joint township with Rempton, in the parish of CLUNBURY, hundred of PURSLOW, county of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Bishop's Castle, containing, with Rempton, 441 inhabitants.

CLUTTON, a township in the parish of FARNDON, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 10 miles (S. S. E.) from Chester, containing 96 inhabitants.

CLUTTON, a parish in the hundred of CHEW, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Pensford, containing 1206 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Earl of Upper Ossory. The church is dedicated to St. Augustine. There are places of worship for Methodists and Independents. In 1728, the trustees of a legacy of £200, bequeathed by Mr. Perry, and of another of £98 by Mr. Adams, vested the money in land, and founded a free school, the income of which is £20 per annum, for teaching and apprenticing ten children of the parish. A school is carried on in a large room built upon the church lands, from a charge upon which, and the interest arising from some charities at Chewstoke and Clutton, all the poor boys of the parish are taught upon the National system. There are extensive coal-mines worked in the parish. In the vicinity are vestiges of an ancient fortification, called Highbury, where British weapons have been found; which, from the discovery of some foundations, seems to have been surrounded with walls.

CLYTHA, a chapelry in that part of the parish of LLANARTH which is in the lower division of the hundred of RAGLAND, county of MONMOUTH, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Usk, containing 376 inhabitants. On the summit of an eminence at the extremity of the Clytha hills is a small encampment, which retains marks of having been strongly fortified.

COAL-ASTON, a township in the parish of DRONFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. by E.) from Dronfield, containing 304 inhabitants. Here is a school with a trifling endowment.

COALEY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Dursley, containing 1117 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £8. 2. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

COANWOOD (EAST), a township in the parish of HALTWHISTLE, western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S.) from Haltwhistle, containing 165 inhabitants.

COASTAMoor, a township in the parish of HEIGHINGTON, south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Darlington, containing 12 inhabitants. This township consists of only two farms.

COATES, a parish in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Cirencester, containing 309 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £9. 6. 8., and in the patronage of William Tombs, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Matthew. The Thames and Severn canal is crossed by a bridge on the line of the old Ackmanway, as it passes through this parish. In the neighbourhood is Trewsbury castle, also vestiges of a Roman encampment.

COATES, a township in the parish of PRESTWOULD, eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from Loughborough, containing 74 inhabitants.

COATES, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Lincoln, containing 45 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £3. 16. 8., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant; it is held by sequestration. The church is dedicated to St. Edith.

COATES, a parish in the hundred of BURY, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, 4 miles (S. E. by S.) from Petworth, containing 41 inhabitants. The living is consolidated with the rectory of Burton, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester. The church is in the early style of English architecture. The Rother, or Arundel, navigation traces the northern boundary of this parish.

COATES, a township in the parish of BARNOLDWICK, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 8 miles (W. S. W.) from Skipton, containing 97 inhabitants.

COATES (GREAT), a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (W.) from Great Grimsby, containing 237 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Sir R. Sutton, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

COATES (LITTLE), a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3½ miles (W. by S.) from Great Grimsby, containing 47 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 18. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

COATES (NORTH), a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (N. N. E.) from Louth, containing 154 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

COATHAM (EAST), a hamlet in the parish of KIRKLEATHAM, eastern division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (N. by W.) from Guilsborough. The population is returned with the parish. East Coatham is a small fishing village near the mouth of the Tees, much resorted to for sea-bathing: the sands in the neighbourhood are well adapted for the promenade or the carriage; and the prospect is often rendered pleasing from the number of trading vessels sailing in the offing. There are several machines for sea-bathing, and accommodation can also be afforded for taking warm baths. The village consists of about seventy houses. A school for forty boys is supported by an income of £47, arising principally from the revenues of Kirkleatham school; and £12. 12. is also paid from the same fund to a schoolmistress, for teaching younger children.

COTHAM-MUNDEVILLE, a township in that part of the parish of HAUGHTON le SKERNE which is in the south-western division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 4½ miles (N.) from Darlington, containing 184 inhabitants.

COATHILL, a joint township with Cumwhinton, in that part of the parish of WETHERAL which is in CUMBERLAND ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 5½ miles

(S. E.) from Carlisle. The population is returned with Cumwhinton. Here is a quarry of gypsum.

COATON, a hamlet in that part of the parish of RAVENSTHORPE which is in the hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, 9½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Northampton, containing 120 inhabitants.

COATON-CLAY, a parish in the hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, 6½ miles (E. by N.) from Rugby, containing 90 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Smith. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

COAT-YARDS, or COAL-YARDS, a township in the parish of NETHER WITTON, western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Rothbury, containing 14 inhabitants.

COBHAM, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 5 miles (W.) from Rochester, containing 646 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage not in charge, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, endowed with £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Darley. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, has parapets and an embattled tower, which, with the north porch, and a fine basin, or water drain, under a richly canopied niche, are in the later style of English architecture; but the chancel and some other portions of the fabric are of early date: it contains some very ancient monuments and brasses to the noble families of Cobham and Brooke. In 1362, John, Lord Cobham, made it collegiate, erecting the college contiguous to the churchyard, and amply endowing it for five chaplains, which number he afterwards increased to eleven: at the suppression it was valued at £128. 1. 2., and was confirmed by the crown to George, Lord Cobham, whose executors, in 1598, built upon its site the present college, and endowed it with the former possessions, for the maintenance of twenty poor persons. It is a neat quadrangular building of stone, comprising part of the ancient structure, and containing a spacious hall, and an apartment with a garden for each inmate: in the 39th of Elizabeth the incorporated wardens of Rochester bridge were declared to be perpetual presidents of "the New College," in whose successors the government is solely vested. The village stands upon an eminence, and is supplied with water from works constructed for the purpose by the family of Cobham: it had formerly a weekly market on Monday, and a fair on St. Mary Magdalene's day, granted to John, Lord Cobham, in the 41st of Edward III.; the fair is held annually on the 2nd of August, but the market has been long disused. The course of the Roman Watling-street is visible in the parish; and on a hill in Cobham Park is a splendid mausoleum, in the Doric style, erected by the Earl of Darley, at an expense of £15,000.

COBHAM, a parish in the second division of the hundred of ELMBRIDGE, county of SURREY, 10 miles (N. E.) from Guildford, and 20 (S. W.) from London, containing 1340 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £9. 17. 11., endowed with £290 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of H. P. Weston, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is partly in the early, and partly in the decorated, style of English architecture, and has lately received an addition of two hundred and ten sittings, of which one hundred and ten are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 towards defraying the expense. In pursuance of the will of Henry Smith, a charity school was founded in 1642, with an endowment in land, which was augmented, in 1680, by a bequest from Henry Smith, together producing £15 per annum, for teaching and apprenticing children; in 1722, two trifling donations were left to this charity, by Gainsford Thomas and Mary Hope, increasing the annual income to £17. 5. The river Mole flows through this parish: it abounds with pike, trout, perch, &c., and its banks are adorned with many elegant villas. Fairs for horses and sheep are held on March 17th and December 11th. In the vicinity are some copper and iron works. A little westward is a barrow, near which a considerable number of Roman coins of the Lower Empire was ploughed up, in 1772.

COBRIDGE, a hamlet partly in the parish of BURSLEM, and partly in that of STOKE UPON TRENT, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 2½ miles (N. N. E.) from Newcastle under Line. The population is returned partly with the township of Shelton, and partly with the parish of Stoke upon Trent. The village contains several manufactories for china and earthenware, and there is an abundant supply of coal in the neighbourhood. Here are a chapel and a school belonging to Roman Catholics, and a meeting-house for the New Connexion of Methodists. School-rooms were erected by subscription in 1766, for children of both sexes, which are let at trifling rents to a master and a mistress, but there are no free pupils. The ancient vill of Rushton, which has been superseded by Cobridge, is described in Domesday-book under the name Risetone. It was given by Henry de Audley to Hulton abbey, to which it became the grange, and after the dissolution was a demesne; for which reason, and as having belonged to Cistercian monks, it is exempt from the payment of tithes, and has never been assessed to the church rate; for all other purposes (the repairing of highways excepted) it is considered a member of Burslem.

COCKEN, a township in the parish of HOUGHTON LE SPRING, northern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Durham, containing 59 inhabitants. Cocken was separated from the constabulary of West Rainton, and made a distinct constabulary, in 1726. It is situated on the river Wear: coal is obtained in the neighbourhood. The manor-house, which is surrounded by beautiful scenery, became, at the commencement of the present century, the residence of a convent of nuns of the order of St. Theresa, who were driven by the revolutionists from their former settlement at Lier in Flanders, by which they were deprived of all their property in that country.

COCKERHAM, a parish in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the chapelry of Ellel, and the township of Cockerham, and containing 2624 inhabitants, of which number, 773 are in the township of Cockerham, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Garstang. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £10. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Lords of Cockerham manor. There is a school-house at the north-east corner of the churchyard, erected by subscription in 1681, with an endowment in land, producing £15 per annum: about eighteen children are taught upon this foundation. A fair for pedlary is held on Easter-Monday. Courts leet and baron are attached to the manor.

COCKERINGTON (ST. LEONARD), a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (E. N. E.) from Louth, containing 186 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 1. 5½., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

COCKERINGTON (ST. MARY), a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (N. E.) from Louth, containing 206 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Alvingham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

COCKERMOUTH, an unincorporated borough, market town, and parochial chapelry, in the parish of BRIGHAM, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 25 miles (S. W.) from Carlisle, and 305 (N. W. by N.) from London, containing 3790 inhabitants. The name is derived from the situation of the town at the mouth of the river Cocker, which here unites with the Derwent. The barony, now called the Honour of Cockermouth, was assigned, soon after the Conquest, by William de Meschines to Waldeof, Lord of Allerdale, son of Gospatrick, Earl of Northumberland, from whom it descended to Fitz-Duncan, nephew to Malcolm, King of Scotland; and his co-heiresses, one of whom married into the family of Albemarle, and the other into that of Lucy, shared it in moieties. On the death of William de Fortibus, Earl of Albemarle, and his countess Isabel, without issue, their moiety of the castle and honour lapsed to the crown, and was bestowed upon Piers Gavestone, in whose possession it continued for some time; but, in 1323, it was granted by Edward II. to Anthony, Lord Lucy, proprietor of the other moiety by inheritance. After his death, which took place in 1369, Maud, his sister and heiress, settled the castle and honour on her second husband, Percy, Earl of Northumberland. They next passed to Charles Seymour, Duke of Somerset, by marriage with the only daughter of Joceline, the last earl of Northumberland, and ultimately, in like manner, came into the possession of the earls of Egremont, the present earl being lord paramount of the honour.

The castle, formerly the baronial seat of the lords of Allerdale, stands on the edge of a precipitous eminence, on the northern side of the town, opposite the confluence of the two rivers; it is supposed to have been erected by Waldeof, soon after the Conquest (although the remains are not, apparently, of earlier date than the fourteenth century), and to have been constructed with the materials of an older castle, called Papcastle, the former residence of Waldeof, a Roman fortress, about a mile and a half distant, on the other side of the Derwent; it was originally an extensive and very strong building, and was garrisoned for the royal cause, but reduced and dismantled in 1648, after a month's siege, by the parliamentarians, who are stated to have destroyed part of the town also. The only perfect and habitable parts are the gate-house, with two rooms adjoining, and the court-house at the eastern angle of the area: underneath the ruins of the great tower is a spacious vault, thirty feet square, the roof of which is formed of groined and intersecting arches, and supported by an octagonal central pillar, with pilasters at the corners and sides; this vault, from being called Mary Kirk, is supposed to have been the chapel, dedicated to St. Mary. On each side of the entrance gateway is a dungeon, capable of containing fifty prisoners, who probably entered through a small aperture visible in the corner of the arch. Mary, Queen of Scots, after her escape from the castle of Dunbar, rested some time at Cockermouth, on her way from Workington to Carlisle, and was also hospitably entertained at Hutton Hall, then belonging to the Fletchers. In 1647, the plague swept off nearly two hundred of the inhabitants.

The town is situated in a narrow valley, amid scenery richly diversified with hill and dale, wood and water: the Derwent flows on the northern side of it, and is crossed by a handsome stone bridge of two arches, connecting the town with the hamlet of Goat, two hundred and seventy feet in length, and completed in 1822, at an expense to the county of £3000: on the margin of this river is an agreeable promenade, about one mile in length, terminated at one extremity by lofty well-wooded cliffs, and at the other by the ruins of the castle, and the elevated bowling green. The river Cocker divides the town into two parts, and is crossed by a bridge of one arch, rebuilt on a wider and improved plan in 1828, at an expense of £2600. The streets, with the exception of the High-street, a fine broad street, are but indifferently paved, and not lighted: there is an ample supply of water from the rivers Derwent and Cocker, from some streams which flow through the town, and from pumps connected with most of the dwellings: the houses are in general built of stone, roofed with blue slate, and of respectable appearance. Considerable improvement has lately been effected, particularly in the erection and widening of the bridges, and in the market-place, above the bridge over the Cocker. There is a small subscription library; also a parochial library over the grammar school, containing upwards of five hundred volumes, founded by Dr. Bray and his associates, to which Dr. Keene, Bishop of Chester, was a great benefactor.

Cockermouth is a town of considerable trading importance, enjoying, within a very limited distance, the advantage of three sea-ports. A great trade is carried on in cotton, linen, and woollen articles, for which there are some extensive manufactories; also in the tanning and dressing of leather, and the manufacture of hats, stockings, paper, &c.: in the vicinity are considerable coal mines. The moor, containing about twelve hundred acres, was enclosed and divided under an act obtained in 1813. The market is held on Monday, at which a considerable quantity of grain is pitched in the market-place; and there is an inferior market on Saturday, for provisions, &c. Fairs for cattle are held on every alternate Wednesday from the beginning of

May till the end of September; and there is a great fair for horses and horned cattle on the 10th of October: there are also two great annual fairs, or statutes, for hiring servants, on the Mondays at Whitsuntide and Martinmas. This town has no separate jurisdiction: the chief officer is a bailiff, who is chosen annually at Michaelmas, at the court leet for the manor, from among the burghers, by a jury of burghers, which is a special jury appointed for regulating the internal affairs of the town; he acts as clerk of the market, but exercises no magisterial functions, and has no local authority, the county magistrates having jurisdiction in the borough, and holding a petty session every Monday, to transact the business of the borough and regulate the police. The steward of the manor holds a court every three weeks, for the recovery of debts under 40s., and a court leet at Michaelmas and Easter: he also, aided by commissioners appointed for the government of the several manors comprised within the honour, holds a court of dimissions at Christmas, in the castle. The Epiphany quarter session for the county is held here in January. The moot-hall, formerly an old dilapidated structure inconveniently situated in the market-place, has been recently rebuilt in a more commodious manner, and on a more eligible site. There is a small house of correction in St. Helen's street. In the 23rd of Edward I. this borough returned members to parliament, but from that date till the 16th of Charles I. the elective franchise was suspended; it was then restored by a resolution of the House of Commons, determining, "That the borough of Cockermouth be restored to the ancient privilege of sending burgesses to parliament;" and has from that period regularly returned two members, who are elected by the burgage tenants, about three hundred in number, chiefly in the interest of the Earl of Lonsdale: the bailiff is the returning officer. The election of knights for the shire takes place here.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The old church, or chapel, erected in the reign of Edward III., was taken down, with the exception of the tower, and the present edifice of freestone built by means of a brief in 1711, and dedicated to All Saints: it was enlarged and beautified in 1825, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for building new churches contributed £175; it contains one thousand free sittings. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded in 1676, by Lord Wharton, Sir Richard Graham, and others; it was further endowed with £10 annually, charged upon the great tithes, and paid by the Earl of Lonsdale, who also contributes £10 annually as a gratuity, the whole income being not more than £24 per annum; the children pay a quarterage. A charity school, founded in 1784, is supported by voluntary contributions, and contains at present sixty-three scholars. There is a free school, supported in a similar manner, for thirty girls, who are admitted from the age of eight to fourteen, and taught reading, writing, and needlework. In 1785, a Sunday school was founded by subscription, for the instruction of one hundred children. In 1760, the Rev. Thomas Leathes gave a house in Kirk-gate, and the interest of £100, to which his daughter added £50, for the maintenance of six poor widows, or unmarried women, above sixty years of age. The interest of about £800, the amount of several benefactions, is distributed by the churchwardens among the poor inhabitants weekly, in bread and money. A dispensary, established in 1785, is liberally supported; and there are four friendly societies, comprising in the whole about five hundred members. In addition to these, there are different benevolent societies, established at various periods. A savings bank was opened in May 1818, which, in November 1827, contained deposits to the amount of £17,167. 15. 5. The hills on each side of the Derwent are interesting to the naturalist, consisting of calcareous stone, almost entirely composed of shells of the genus ammonia. On the north side of the town is a tumulus, called Toot-hill; and one mile westward are the rampart and ditch of a fort, or encampment, triangular in form, and nearly seven hundred and fifty feet in circumference. The Honour of Cockermouth confers the title of baron on the family of Wyndham, Earls of Egremont.

COCKERSAND-ABBEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Lancaster. This was originally a hermitage, then an hospital dedicated to St. Mary, for a prior and several infirm brethren: it was endowed by William of Lancaster, in the time of Henry III., and was subordinate to the abbey of Leicester; but about the year 1196 it was changed into an abbey of Premonstratensian canons: by favour of the crown it survived, for a short time, the general dissolution, when it consisted of twenty-one religious and fifty-seven servants, and was valued at £282. 7. 7. per annum: the principal relic is an octagonal chapter-house.

COCKERTON, a township in the parish of DARLINGTON, south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 1½ mile (N. W. by N.) from Darlington, containing 469 inhabitants. Cockerton is a considerable village, the inhabitants of which are chiefly employed in the manufacture of linen. A schoolroom was erected by subscription in 1825, with an endowment of £5 per annum, by the trustees of the late Lord Crewe: divine service is performed in it every Wednesday evening, by the curate of the parish. A meeting-house for Wesleyan Methodists was built in 1823.

COCKEY, a chapelry in the parish of MIDDLETON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3¼ miles (W. by S.) from Bury. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Middleton. In the village of Cockey-Moor there is a place of worship for Unitarians.

COCKFIELD, a parish in the south-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 8½ miles (N. E.) from Barnard-Castle, containing 533 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Staindrop annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £9. 18., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Cleveland. A colliery was wrought so early as 1375, since which period coal has been constantly obtained here. On Cockfield Fell are traces of ancient intrenchments.

COCKFIELD, a parish in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, 4¼ miles (N. by W.) from Lavenham, containing 897 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £30, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, has a large and handsome tower.

COCKING, a parish in the hundred of EASEBOURNE, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 2½ miles (S.) from Midhurst, containing 340 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. The church is in the early style of English architecture, with some later additions. In 1730, Stephen Challen bequeathed certain messuages in trust, for the education of twenty children of this parish and the parish of Oving; but the rental is now only £4 a year, a moiety of which is paid to a schoolmistress for teaching four children of this parish to read.

COCKINGTON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of HAYTOR, county of DEVON, 2½ miles (W.) from Torbay, containing 280 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Tor-Moham annexed, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. Roger Mallock. The church contains an octagonal font and a wooden screen. Queen Elizabeth leased the rectory of Tor-Moham, and the church of Cockington, to Sir George Cary, who, in 1609, erected almshouses here for seven poor persons, with an endowment of £30 per annum, paid out of the rental of Cockington and Chilston manors: the old buildings were taken down in 1810, and new ones erected on a more convenient site. Cockington is said to have received the privilege of a market and a fair about the year 1297.

COCKLAW, a township in the parish of St. JOHN LEE, southern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4½ miles (N. by E.) from Hexham, containing 199 inhabitants. It extends from the North Tyne along the eastern side of the Erring-bourn. Here are remains of an ancient castle of the Erringtons, called Cocklaw Tower.

COCKLE-PARK, a township in the parish of HEBBURN, western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 miles (N.) from Morpeth, containing 57 inhabitants. Cockle Park tower stands on an eminence, and was formerly a strong hold of the family of Bertram, and their tenants, who fled to it, with their cattle, &c., in time of danger: the south part was destroyed by lightning several centuries ago.

COCKLEY-CLEY, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Swaffham, containing 238 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of St. Peter consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 17. 1., and in the patronage of R. Dashwood, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There was formerly a church, dedicated to St. Peter, which has been demolished; and a chapel, which was dedicated to St. Mary, has been converted into the parsonage-house.

COCKSHUT, a chapelry in the parish of ELLESMERE, hundred of PIMHILL, county of SALOP, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Ellesmere, with which the population is returned. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Ellesmere, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £1000 royal bounty. The chapel is dedicated to St. Helen.

COCKTHORPE, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Clay, containing 32 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed, with the vicarage of Little Langham, and the perpetual curacy of Glandford, to the rectory of Blakeney, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. The church is dedicated to All Saints. At this inconsiderable place, now comprising only three or four houses, Admirals Sir Cloudesley Shovel, Sir John Narborough, and Sir Christopher Mynnes, were born.

COCKTHORPE, a chapelry in the parish of DUCKLINGTON, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Witney. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

CODDENHAM, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Needham-Market, containing 847 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Crowfield annexed, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Longe. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was granted in the reign of Henry II. for the founding of a Cistercian nunnery, but whether the design was carried into effect or not is unknown. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In 1758, Lady Catherine Gardenau erected a commodious school-house, with an endowment in land now producing a rental of £120 per annum, for teaching fifteen boys and fifteen girls of the parish: at present, twenty-five of each sex are partly clothed, and taught upon the National system. A fair is held on the 2nd of October.

CODDINGTON, a parish in the higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Aldersey, Chowley, and Coddington, and containing 346 inhabitants, of which number, 130 are in the township of Coddington, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from Malpas. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £5. 4. 2., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure, with a wooden belfry, supposed to have been founded in the eleventh century; it was granted with the living to Chester abbey, by Fitz-Hugh, and was one of the few possessions remaining to the abbey that were confirmed to the Dean and Chapter by Queen Elizabeth. Coddington is thought to have been a habitation of the Britons, which seems probable from the artificial embankments and tumuli discernible in the vicinity.

CODDINGTON, a parish in the hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, 7 miles (N.) from Ledbury, containing 184 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CODDINGTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Newark, containing 374 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of East Stoke, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small structure, principally in the early English and decorated styles of architecture.

CODFORD (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of HEYTESBURY, county of WILTS, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Heytesbury, containing 258 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford.

CODFORD (ST. PETER), a parish in the hundred of HEYTESBURY, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Heytesbury, containing, with the township of Ashton-Gifford, 347 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £17. 15., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford.

CODICOTE, a parish in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBANS, though locally in the hundred of Broadwater, county of HERTFORD, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from Welwyn, containing 795 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of St. Albans, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £7. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. At the general dissolution, the advowson was granted to the Bishop of Ely, one of whose successors gave an augmentation of £30 per annum out of the great tithes. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a small building, with a chapel attached, and has an embattled tower surmounted by a spire. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A market on Friday, and a fair on St. James' day, were granted by Henry III.; they are both disused, but a small market, for the sale of straw-plat, is held on Thursday, and a pleasure fair on Whit-Monday. Thirty girls are clothed and educated at the joint expense of the Hon. Mrs. Leesom and Mrs. Staple, and there is a charitable fund, out of which one boy is apprenticed every seven years. On Codicote heath are the remains of a Roman fortification.

CODNOR, a joint township with Loscow, in the parish of HEANOR, hundred of MORLESTON and LIT-CHURCH, county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Alfreton, containing, with Loscow, 1329 inhabitants.

CODNOR-CASTLE, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of MORLESTON and LIT-CHURCH, county of DERBY, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Alfreton, containing, with the Park liberty, 693 inhabitants. Here was an ancient castle belonging to the noble family of Grey, styled lords Grey of Codnor, the last of whom, Henry, a philosopher and alchymist in the reign of Edward IV., obtained a license to practise the transmutation of metals. The Cromford canal passes on the east side of this district, where there are extensive iron-works, and a railway on the south communicates with the collieries in the neighbourhood.

CODRINGTON, a tything in the parish of WAPLEY, lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Chipping-Sodbury. The population is returned with the parish.

CODSALL, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (N.W.) from Wolverhampton, containing 658 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the royal peculiar court of Tettenhall, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir J. Wrottesley, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. A school was founded in 1716, by Dorothy Derby, with an endowment increased, by a subsequent bequest from Margaret Somerford, in 1730, to £3. 3. per annum, for teaching children of this parish.

COEDKERNEW, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of WENTLLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, 4½ miles (S.S.W.) from Newport, containing 128 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to that of St. Bride's Wentlloog, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, endowed with £800 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

COFFINSWELL, a parish in the hundred of HAYTOR, county of DEVON, 3 miles (S.E. by E.) from Newton-Bushell, containing 255 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of St. Mary Church, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

COGDEAN, a hamlet in the parish of STURMINTER-MARSHALL, hundred of COGDEAN, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 2 miles (S.W. by S.) from Wimborne-Minster. The population is returned with the parish. This place gave name to the hundred.

COGENHOE, a parish in the hundred of WYMERSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5½ miles (E.) from Northampton, containing 255 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of the Rev. E. Watkins. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is small, and partly in the early style of English architecture, but a considerable portion of it is of later date. The village is situated upon an eminence, at the foot of which runs the river Nen, separating this parish from that of Ecton. Limestone is obtained here.

COGGES, a parish in the hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 1¼ mile (S.E. by E.) from Witney, containing 452 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage not in charge, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, endowed with £15 per annum private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In 1695, William Blake, Esq. bequeathed land producing about £50 per annum, out of which £6 is paid for teaching twenty-four children at High Cogges, £6 for a like purpose at Newland in Cogges, and £20 for clothes, books, and other charitable uses. Some of the family of Arsic, who were lords of the barony, founded here an Alien priory of Black monks, suborinate to the abbey of Fescamp in Normandy; after the dissolution of foreign cells its possessions were granted by Henry VI. toward the endowment of Eton College.

COGGESHALL (GREAT), a market town and parish in the Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 16 miles (N.E.) from Chelmsford, and 45 (N.E.) from London, containing 2896 inhabitants. This place is supposed by some antiquaries to have been the Roman station Ad Ansam, and by others the Canonium of Antoninus, with the distance of which latter from Cesaromagus its situation precisely corresponds. Numerous vestiges of Roman antiquity have been discovered here, among which were a silver coin of Domitian, a glass lamp, an urn containing ashes and bones, and some Roman pottery of red earth, which were found in an arched vault constructed of Roman brick; and at Westfield, about three quarters of a mile from the town, was discovered, by the plough, a large brazen pot, enclosing a smaller one of earth, within which was an urn wrapped in stuff like velvet, containing bones and fragments of bones enveloped in silk. The present town appears to have risen from the establishment of an abbey, in 1242, by King Stephen and his queen Matilda, for monks of the Cistercian order, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, to the abbot and monks of which King John granted several privileges, among which, probably, was the power of life and death, as inferred from the ancient name of one of the streets, which is still by some called Gallows-street. Henry III. gave them a grant of free warren, a weekly market, and an annual fair for eight days. The revenue of the abbey, at the dissolution, was £298. 8. : the remains, which exhibit specimens of early English architecture, are now occupied as a farm-house; the exterior has some lancet-shaped windows in good preservation, and in the interior are some good windows and vaulted roofs plainly groined. Near the abbey is an ancient bridge of three arches, built by King Stephen, over a canal cut for conveying water from the river to the monastery, which has been recently repaired. The town is situated near the river Blackwater, and consists of several narrow streets, indifferently paved, lighted by subscription, and amply supplied with water from springs in the neighbourhood, the principal of which is called Peter's well. The manufacture of baize and serge, which was formerly extensive, is still continued on a more confined scale; but the principal branch of trade at present is silk-weaving, which has been established within the last ten years. The market is on Thursday: a fair is held on Whit-Tuesday, for cattle and pedlary.

Coggeshall anciently comprised the parishes of Great and Little Coggeshall, now consolidated: in the latter, which is now only a hamlet to the former, were two churches, built by the monks; one for their own use, which has been entirely demolished, and the other for a parochial church, of which the remains have been converted into a barn. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £11. 3. 4., and in the patronage of Peter Du Cane, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a spacious handsome structure in the later style of English architecture, with a large square tower; the aisles are embattled, and strengthened with empannelled buttresses. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. A school, under the direction of the Master and Fellows of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, who appoint the master, was founded in 1636, by Sir Robert Hitcham, Knt., who bequeathed to them, in trust, lands at Framlingham and Saxted, in the county of Suffolk, producing £300 per annum, for educating from thirty to forty boys, with whom a premium of £10 each is given for apprenticing them: about £50 per annum is paid to Levington, and £9 to Nacton; the remainder is distributed among the poor. A Lancasterian school for boys was established here in 1811, and another for girls in 1826. There are six unendowed almshouses; and among the charitable bequests for the benefit of the poor is one of £70 per annum, called wood money, given by Thomas Pycocke, Esq., in 1580.

COGGESHALL (LITTLE), a hamlet in the parish of GREAT COGGESHALL, hundred of WITHAM, county of ESSEX, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S.) from Great Coggeshall, containing 362 inhabitants. This was anciently a distinct parish, within the limits of which stood the abbey described in the account of Great Coggeshall, together with a church erected by the abbot for himself and the monks, who agreed to build a chapel also for their servants and tenants.

COGSALL, a township in that part of the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH which is in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Northwich, containing 110 inhabitants. This place consists of only two farms. Tradition says that on a steep sandy eminence, called Butter hill, the market people from the hundred of Wirrall deposited their butter and other produce when the plague excluded them from the market-place at Chester.

COKER (EAST), a parish in the hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.S.W.) from Yeovil, containing, with the hamlet of North Coker, 1103 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £12. 6. 3., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a neat cruciform edifice, with a tower rising from the intersection: near it are almshouses endowed with an estate at Whitchurch in Dorsetshire, for the maintenance of twelve poor widows. In a field in this parish the foundations of a Roman building were discovered in 1753; one of the rooms had a beautiful tessellated pavement, representing persons lying on a couch, beneath which were found a hypocaust, several coffins, burnt bones, &c. Dampier, the celebrated circumnavigator, was born here, in 1652.

COKER (NORTH), a hamlet (formerly a chapelry) in the parish of EAST COKER, hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, county of SOMERSET, 2 miles (S.S.W.) from Yeovil. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel has been demolished, and a workhouse occupies its site.

COKER (WEST), a parish in the hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W. by W.) from Yeovil, containing 928 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £12. 19. 7., and in the patronage of Joseph Jekyll, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. Almshouses for five poor persons were founded about 1719, pursuant to the will of William Ruddock, who endowed them with a rent-charge on his estates of 10s. per week.

COLAN, a parish in the hundred of PYDER, county of CORNWALL, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from St. Columb-Major, containing 259 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Colan. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a charity school. In this parish is a celebrated spring, called Our Lady of Nantz' well.

COLBOURNE, a township in that part of the parish of CATTERICK which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Richmond, containing 133 inhabitants.

COLBY, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Aylsham, containing 267 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 15. 10., and in the patronage of Lord Suffield. The church is dedicated to St. Giles.

COLBY, a township in the parish of St. LAWRENCE, APPLEBY, EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by N.) from Appleby, containing 141 inhabitants. The village is situated on an eminence, at the base of which flows the river Eden.

COLCHESTER, a borough and market town having separate jurisdiction, locally in the Colchester division of the hundred of Lexden, county of ESSEX, 22 miles (N. E. by E.) from Chelmsford, and 51 (N. E. by E.) from London, containing 12,005 inhabitants, and, including the parishes of Bere-Church, Greenstead, Lexden, and Mile-End, which are within the liberties, 14,016. The name of this place, which by some antiquaries is supposed to have been the Camalodunum of the Romans, is derived from its situation on the river Colne, and its history may be traced to a period of very remote antiquity. It was by the Britons called Caer Colun, and appears to have been a town of considerable importance prior to the invasion of the Romans, who, according to Tacitus and other historians, having, under the conduct of Claudius, subdued the Trinobantes and taken possession of this town, garrisoned it with the second, ninth, and fourteenth legions, styled by him the conquerors of Britain, and named the place Colonia. Claudius having reduced the adjacent country to a Roman province, appointed Plautius his proprætor, and returned in triumph to Rome. After his departure, Boadicea, queen of the Iceni, taking advantage of the absence of part of the Roman legions, attacked Camalodunum, which, after a feeble resistance, she entirely demolished. According to Pliny, and the evidence of Roman coins and other ancient inscriptions, it appears to have been soon rebuilt with increased splendour, and to have been adorned with public edifices, a temple to Claudius, a triumphal arch, and a statue to the Goddess of Victory. Constantine the Great is traditionally said to have been born in this city, which continued to flourish as a primary station of the Romans till their final departure from Britain. The Saxons, by whom it was afterwards occupied, gave it the name of Colne-ceaster, and it retained its consequence as a place of strength for a considerable time, but began to decline in proportion as London rose into importance. On the irruption of the Danes it became the residence of that people, who, by treaty with Alfred, were established in the city and country adjacent; but commencing their barbarous system of plunder and devastation, Edward the Elder took the town by assault, and, putting them all to the sword, re-peopled it with West Saxons: according to the Saxon Chronicles he repaired the walls in 922, at which time he is stated to have erected the castle, now falling to decay, but the remains of that edifice are evidently of Norman character. Colchester was a considerable town at the time of the Norman survey, but suffered greatly in the wars of the succeeding reigns. During the turbulent reign of John, Saher de Quincy, Earl of Winchester, having assembled an army of foreigners, laid siege to the city in 1215, but, on the approach of the barons, who were advancing from London to its relief, he drew off his forces and retired to Bury St. Edmund's; he afterwards got possession of the town, and, having plundered it, left a garrison in the castle, which, having been invested by the king, was compelled to surrender: it was subsequently besieged and taken by the troops of Prince Louis, whom the barons had invited into England to their assistance, and who, thinking the opportunity favourable for conquest, kept possession of it for himself, and hoisted the banner of France upon its walls; but the barons having submitted to their new sovereign, Henry III., retook the castle from the prince, and expelled him from the kingdom. In the reign of Edward III., the town contributed five ships and one hundred and seventy mariners towards the naval armament for the blockade of Calais. The inhabitants, during the attempt to raise Lady Jane Grey to the throne, steadfastly adhered to the interests of Mary, whose cause they supported with so much zeal, that very soon after her accession, that queen visited the town, for the express purpose of testifying her gratitude: her majesty was received with every public demonstration of joy, and, on her departure, was presented with a silver cup, and £20 in gold. During her reign many of the Protestant inhabitants were put to death on account of their religious tenets. In 1648, the town was besieged by the parliamentary forces under Fairfax: after a close blockade for eleven weeks, during which period it was gallantly defended by the Earl of Norwich, Lord Capel, Sir Charles Lucas, and Sir George Lisle, the garrison, reduced to the extremity of want and suffering, surrendered to Fairfax, when Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Lisle were shot under the castle walls.

The town is built on the summit and northern acclivity of an eminence rising gently from the river Colne, over which are three bridges, and occupies a quadrilateral area enclosed by the ancient walls, within which the houses to the south and south-east are irregularly disposed: the streets are spacious, and the High-street contains many excellent houses: the town is well paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with water by an engine worked by steam. The theatre, a neat and commodious edifice erected in 1812, is opened annually by the Norwich company of comedians. A literary and philosophical society was established in 1820, the members of which in rotation deliver a lecture at their monthly meetings; attached to it is a museum of shells, fossils, and natural curiosities. A botanical society was instituted in 1823: there is a medical society, established in 1774; and there are a private subscription library, and a musical society of amateurs. The barracks, with a park of artillery, were capable of accommodating ten thousand troops, but since the conclusion of the war they have been taken down. The woollen manufacture appears to have been carried on so early as the reign of Edward III., but the weaving of baizes was probably introduced by the Flemings in the reign of Elizabeth, and at that time employed a considerable number of the inhabitants: the baize was subject to certain regulations prescribed by the Baize-hall; but the trade has been transferred to other towns, and is here succeeded by a large silk-manufactory. The oyster fishery on the river Colne, granted to the free burgesses by Richard I., confirmed by subsequent charters, and for the preservation of which courts of admiralty were usually held on the borough walls, affords employment to a great number of men, and some hundreds of smacks are engaged in conveying to London the oysters dredged from the river, for which there is a very great demand, especially for those of Pyfleet, which are found in a small creek, and are remarkable for their goodness and flavour: the river is navigable for vessels of two hundred tons' burden to the Hythe, where there are a spacious quay and a custom-house. The market days are Saturday and Wednesday, the former being the principal, on which corn and cattle are sold: a market for meat, fish, and vegetables, is held daily on the north side of the High-street, where a convenient and spacious market-place has been constructed. The corn-exchange, a handsome building supported on columns, was erected a few years since, of which the lower part is appropriated to the corn market, and the upper part occupied as offices by the Essex and Suffolk Insurance Society. The fairs are on July 5th and the following day, and July 23rd and the two following days, for cattle; and October 20th for cattle, and the three following days for general merchandise.

The borough was first incorporated in 1089, by charter of Richard I., who conferred on the inhabitants many valuable privileges, which were confirmed by succeeding sovereigns, and extended by Henry V. By its charter, which, having been forfeited on several occasions, was renewed by George III. in 1818, the government is vested in a mayor, high steward, recorder, chamberlain, twelve aldermen, eighteen assistants, and eighteen common council-men, aided by a town-clerk, two coroners, a water-bailiff, four serjeants at mace, and other officers. The mayor, recorder, the late mayor, and four of the aldermen, are justices of the peace for the borough, the freedom of which is inherited by birth, and acquired by servitude within the borough, and by presentation. The corporation hold quarterly courts of session for the borough and liberties, together extending over sixteen parishes, and two courts of pleas for the recovery of debts to any amount, the jurisdiction of which, by Edward IV., was extended to the adjoining parishes of Bere-Church, Greenstead, Lexden, and Mile-End: these courts are held at stated periods; one, called the Law Hundred, for actions against free burgesses, is held on Monday; and the other, called the Foreign Court, for actions against foreigners, or non-freemen, is held on Thursday: the petty sessions for the division are also held in this town, every Saturday. The moot-hall is an ancient edifice, originally erected by Eudo, dapifer, or steward, to Henry I., and containing the hall and the exchequer-chamber, in part of which the records are deposited; over these is the council-chamber, a spacious room in which the public business of the corporation is transacted; underneath is the town gaol. The borough first exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has, with occasional intermissions, returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the free burgesses generally not receiving alms, whose number is about one thousand four hundred, but may be augmented at the will of the corporation in common council assembled: the mayor is the returning officer.

Colchester is, but upon very disputed authority, supposed to have been the seat of a diocese in the early period of Christianity in Britain; Henry VIII. made it the seat of a suffragan bishop, and two bishops were successively consecrated. The town comprises the parishes of All Saints, St. James, St. Martin, St. Mary at the Walls, St. Nicholas, St. Peter, St. Runwald, and the Holy Trinity, within the walls, and the parishes of St. Botolph, St. Giles, St. Leonard, or the Hythe, and St. Mary Magdalene, without the walls, all in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London. The living of All Saints' is a rectory not in charge, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford: the church was erected in the year 1309, near the east gate of the monastery of Grey friars, which had been founded by Robert Fitz-Walter in that year. The living of St. James' is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £11. 10., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown: the church is a spacious structure built prior to the reign of Edward II.; it has a fine altar-piece representing the Adoration of the Shepherds. The living of St. Martin's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant. The Bishop of London, for that turn, was patron in 1825: the church was much damaged during the siege of the town in 1648; the steeple, which was built with Roman bricks, is now in a ruinous state. The living of St. Mary's at the Walls is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London: the church was rebuilt in 1713, with the exception of the ancient steeple, which, becoming ruinous, was repaired in 1729. The living of St. Nicholas' is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford: the church is ancient; the tower some years since fell down upon the nave and the chancel, the latter of which is still in a ruinous state. The chapel of St. Helen, in this parish, rebuilt by Eudo in 1076, was lately used as a place of worship by the Society of Friends, and is now used for a Sunday school. The living of St. Peter's is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John Thornton, Esq.: the church, an ancient structure, was erected before the Conquest, and in Domesday-book is noticed as the only church in Colchester; it was extensively repaired and modernised in 1758, when the tower at the west end was erected, and was some time since greatly beautified at an expense of £3000; the altar-piece is embellished with a fine painting by Halls, the subject of which is the raising of Jairus' daughter. The living of St. Runwald's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. 4., endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of C. Round, Esq.: the church, which is small, was erected about the close of the thirteenth century. The living of the parish of the Holy Trinity is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford: the church was erected in the year 1349. The living of St. Botolph's is a perpetual curacy, united to the rectory of All Saints: the church has been in ruins since the siege in 1648, exhibiting indications of its original magnificence, and of the antiquity of its style, which appears to have been the early Norman, and of the same date as the neighbouring priory; it was built with bricks of extraordinary hardness, supposed to have been taken from the Roman station: in the interior are several plain massive piers and circular arches, and part of the arches of the triforium is remaining: the west front has a central doorway, on the south side of which is a deeply receding Norman arch; over these are two series of intersecting arches. The living of St. Giles' is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £30, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Devises of the Rev. J. W. Morgan: the church, a very ancient structure, and formerly greatly dilapidated, has lately undergone a thorough repair. The living of St. Leonard's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford: the church is a spacious structure in good preservation. The living of St. Mary Magdalene's is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of the Crown: the church, which is small, is pleasantly situated on Magdalene Green. On the site of the chapel of St. Anne, which stood in the parish of St. James, and was formerly a hermitage, a barn has been erected, part of the chapel having been incorporated with the building. There are two places of worship for Baptists, two for Independents, and one each for the Society of Friends, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians.

The free grammar school was founded and endowed by the corporation, to whom Queen Elizabeth, in the twenty-sixth year of her reign, granted certain ecclesiastical revenues for that purpose: the present income is £117 per annum; the number of scholars on the foundation is generally from thirty to forty. A scholarship for boys educated at this school was founded in St. John's College, Cambridge, by the Rev. Robert Lewes, in 1620: two scholarships, founded in the same college by the Rev. Ambrose Gilbert, in 1642, revert to this school on failure of applicants of the surnames of Gilbert, or Torbington; and four founded in Pembroke College, Cambridge, by Mr. Ralph Scrivener, in 1601, on failure of boys from the grammar school at Ipswich. Dr. Harsnet, Archbishop of York, received the rudiments of his education in this institution. Two charity schools, for the education of fifty-five boys and thirty girls, who are also clothed, were established in 1708; towards the purchase of the school-house Mr. Samuel Rush, in 1711, gave £100, and £50 was given for the same purpose by his widow. Mr. William Naggs, in 1747, gave a freehold messuage and twenty-five acres of land, in the county of Essex, to certain trustees, for the better maintenance of these schools, to which seven other benefactions have been added. The National school constitutes an extension of the original plan of the charity school: the number of children educated is about four hundred, of whom one hundred and forty-eight are clothed. A Lancasterian school for children of both sexes is supported by subscription; there are schools also supported by the several dissenting congregations. A school for the children of members of the Society of Friends was established in 1816, and endowed with a sum of money and an extensive library by John Kendall, to which has been added a legacy by the late Francis Freshfield, Esq.: the election of the master is vested in eight trustees, subject to the sanction of the society at their quarterly meeting; in consideration of the dividend arising from the legacies, he instructs gratuitously six day-scholars, sons of members of the society, or, in failure of such, sons of necessitous parents of sober conduct, in addition to the boarding and education of the pupils for whom he is regularly paid. Mr. Arthur Winsley, in 1726, founded and endowed almshouses for twelve poor men, to which six others have since been added; each of the almsmen receives seven shillings and sixpence per week, and a chaldron of coal annually. Mr. John Wenock, in 1679, erected and endowed almshouses for six aged widows, which number, by a bequest from Mrs. Bardfield, has since been increased to fourteen. Ralph Finch also, in 1552, founded and endowed almshouses for four poor persons. Those erected by Lady Mary D'Arcy, and others situated in Eld-lane, having no endowment, are occupied by persons requiring parochial relief: there are also several charitable bequests for distribution among the poor. The Essex and Colchester general hospital, completed in 1820, and supported by subscription, is a neat building of white brick, situated on the south side of the London road, comprising a front receding curvilinearly from the rear at both angles, so as to present the appearance of wings.

Of the monastic establishments anciently existing here, the hospital, originally founded at the command of Henry I., for a master and leprous brethren, and dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, by Eudo, who had been a principal officer of the household to William the Conqueror and his two sons, of which, at the dissolution, the revenue was £11, was refounded in 1610 by James I., for three poor brethren and a master, who is always the clergyman of the parish. Of the other ancient establishments, the principal was St. John's abbey, founded in the reign of Henry I. by the same Eudo, for monks of the Benedictine order, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £523. 17.; of this only the gateway is remaining, a handsome structure in the later style of English architecture, and, consequently, either rebuilt since the foundation of the abbey, or a subsequent addition to it. To the south of the town was a monastery of Augustine canons, founded in the reign of Henry I., and dedicated to St. Julian and St. Botolph, by Ernulphus, who afterwards became prior: at the dissolution its revenue was £113. 12. 8.: the only remains are its stately church, now in ruins, which was previously the parish church of St. Botolph. Without the walls was an hospital, or priory, of Crutched friars, an order introduced into England about the year 1244, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £7. 7. 8. The priory of Franciscan, or Grey, friars was founded, in 1309, by Robert Fitz-Walter, the only probable remains of which are the parish church of All Saints. Of the walls by which the city was surrounded, and in consideration of repairing which, Richard II. is recorded to have exempted the burgesses from sending members to three of his parliaments, only some detached portions are remaining: they were strengthened by bastions, and defended on the west by an ancient fort of Roman construction, the remaining arches of which are built with Roman bricks; and the north and west sides, where the town was most exposed, were protected by deep intrenchments: the entrance to the town was by four principal gates and three posterns, which have been mostly demolished. The ruins of the castle occupy an elevated site to the north-east of the town; the form is quadrilateral, and the walls of the keep, twelve feet in thickness, are almost entire: the building is of flint, stone, and Roman brick intermixed, and is supposed to have been originally erected by the Romans, though subsequently repaired by Edward the Elder; the solidity of the structure has frustrated repeated attempts to demolish it for the sake of the materials. The town and environs abound with ancient relics, among which are, a quantity of Roman bricks in several of the churches and other buildings, tessellated pavements, sepulchral urns, statues, lamps, rings, coins, medals, and almost every species of Roman antiquities. William Gilbert, physician to Elizabeth and James I., and author of a work on the qualities of the loadstone, entitled "De Magnete;" and Dr. Samuel Harsnett, Archbishop of York, were natives of this place. The late Right Hon. Charles Abbot, Speaker of the House of Commons, who was born in the neighbourhood, was elevated to the peerage, June 3rd, 1817, by the title of Baron Colchester, which is now enjoyed by his son.

COLD COATS, a township in the parish of PONTZLAND, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Newcastle, containing 45 inhabitants.

COLD-DUNG HILLS, an extra-parochial district, adjoining the parish of St. CLEMENT, borough of IPSWICH, county of SUFFOLK. The population is returned partly with the parish of St. Clement, and partly with that of St. Margaret.

COLD-MARTIN, a township in the parish of CHATTON, eastern division of GLENDAL ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 1 mile (E. by S.) from Wooler. The population is returned with the parish.

COLD MEECE, a township in the parish of ECCLESHALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 61 inhabitants.

COLDRED, a parish in the hundred of BREWSBOURGH, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, 5 miles (N.W. by N.) from Dover, containing 125 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Sibbertswold, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 2. 6. The church, dedicated to St. Pancras, is surrounded by a trench, enclosing about two acres, with an artificial mount on the northern side, which tradition ascribes to Ceoldred, King of Mercia, from whom the parish is named, who fought a battle near this spot, in 694, with Ina, King of the West Saxons; it is, however, probably of Roman origin, various relics of that people having been discovered on the site.

COLDSBORNE, a parish in the hundred of RAPSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Cirencester, containing 245 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of F. Eyre and J. Elwes, Esqrs. The church is dedicated to St. James.

COLDWALTHAM, county of SUSSEX.—See WALTHAM (COLD).

COLDWELL, a township in the parish of KIRK-WHELPINGTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 14 miles (W.) from Morpeth, containing 7 inhabitants. It consists of a large sheep farm and one house.

COLE, a tything in the parish of PITCOMB, hundred of BRUTON, county of SOMERSET, 2 miles (S. W.) from Bruton. The population is returned with the parish.

COLE, a joint tything with West Park, in the parish and hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. S. E.) from Malmesbury, containing, with West Park, 37 inhabitants.

COLEBROKE, a parish in the hundred of CREDITON, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Crediton, containing 875 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £20. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There are ruins of chapels at Copplestone, Hooke, Horwell, Land's End, and Wolmstone, in this parish; and near the latter is a well, dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

COLEBY, a parish in the higher division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Lincoln, containing 322 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 12. 1., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Oriel College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has a tower, the lower part of which, with the south door and nave, exhibits fine specimens of Norman architecture; the rest of the building is in the early English style, with later additions, particularly the upper portion of the tower and spire.

COLEDALE, a joint township with Portingscale, in that part of the parish of CROSTHWAITE which is in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (W.) from Keswick, containing 294 inhabitants.

COLEFORD, a market town and chapelry in the parish of NEWLAND, hundred of St. BRIAVELLS, county of GLOUCESTER, 19 miles (W. S. W.) from Gloucester, and 124 (W. by N.) from London, containing 1804 inhabitants. This place, which is pleasantly situated on the verge of the county, next Monmouthshire, obtained the grant of a market from James I. During the parliamentary war, a skirmish took place previously to the siege of Gloucester, between a party of the royalists commanded by Lord Herbert and the parliamentary forces under Col. Barrow, in which the market-house was destroyed, and Sir Richard Lawdy, major-general of South Wales, and several officers, were killed: at a subsequent period, during the same war, the ancient chapel was demolished. The town consists principally of one spacious street, in which is the market-place; the houses are in general neat and well built; the environs are pleasant, and in some points beautifully picturesque; and in the vicinity are several elegant mansions and handsome villas. The inhabitants are principally employed in agriculture, and many of the labouring class are occupied in the extensive iron-works in the neighbourhood; a great quantity of apples is cultivated for cider. The market is on Friday: fairs are held on June 20th for wool, and November 24th for cattle and cheese. The market-house was rebuilt in 1679, towards defraying the expense of which Charles II. contributed £50. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Hereford, and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. The chapel, rebuilt in the reign of Queen Anne, who contributed £300 towards its erection, is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Vestiges of King Offa's dyke may be distinctly traced in some parts of the town.

COLEFORD, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of KILMERSDON, county of SOMERSET, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Frome. The population is returned with the parish. A chapel of ease is in progress of erection here.

COLEMORE, a parish in the hundred of BARTON-STACEY, Andover division, though locally in the hundred of Selborne, Alton (North) division, of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Alton, containing 123 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £22. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Rev. James Cookson. There is a chapel of ease at Prior's Dean. The greater part of this parish lay formerly in the forest of Wolmer, where a considerable quantity of charcoal was made; and from the mere, or boundary, to the westward, it had its former name, Colemere, by which it is noticed in Domesday-book and other ancient records. John Graves, the astronomer and mathematician, was born here, in 1602.

COLE-ORTON, a parish in the western division of the hundred of GOSCORE, county of LEICESTER, 2 miles (E.) from Ashby de la Zouch, containing 883 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 0½., and in the patronage of Sir G. H. Beaumont, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a tower and spire, with some of its portions in the decorated style of architecture. Extensive collieries have been wrought here for a great length of time. Thomas, Viscount Beaumont, in 1701, bequeathed a rent-charge of £90 for the erection of a school-house, and an hospital for six poor widows, who have each a separate house and garden.

COLERIDGE, a parish in the hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, county of DEVON, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Chulmleigh, containing 632 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains an ancient wooden screen. A charity school is chiefly supported by the Hon. Newton Fellowes.

COLERNE, a parish in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Chippenham, containing 888 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £9. 16.: there is also a sinecure rectory, rated at £16. 11. 10½., and annexed to the Wardenship of New College, Oxford, the Warden being patron of the vicarage. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a meeting-house for Independents. Colerne, or, as it was formerly called, Coldhorn, derives its name from its bleak situation upon the summit of one of the highest hills in the vicinity of Bath: the tower of the church and a large brewery are conspicuous objects for miles round the country, which is singularly intersected by deep combs in all directions. About sixty years ago the village was destroyed by fire, and rebuilt with stone, without much regard to uniformity. The neighbourhood was the scene of many sanguinary conflicts between the Saxons and the Danes: the Wansdyke touches the parish in two places, constituting the boundary of the county. On Colerne down is an ancient double intrenchment, called Northwood Camp; and in the park is another ancient fortification. There is a spring holding a quantity of lime in solution, the water of which incrusts, and gives the appearance of a petrification to any thing upon which it falls.

COLESHILL, a chapelry partly in the parish of AMERSHAM, hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, and partly in the parish of BEACONSFIELD, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1½ mile

(S. by W.) from Amersham, containing 492 inhabitants. Since the demolition of the chapel the inhabitants have attended divine service at the parish church of Amersham; they still pay their own poor and highway rates. Here are manufactories for lace and common red earthenware. Edmund Waller, the lyric poet, was born here; he represented the borough of Amersham in three parliaments, and died in 1687.

COLESHILL, a parish partly in the hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, but chiefly in the hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, 3¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Great Faringdon, containing, with the tything of Lynt, 324 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £17. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the Earl of Radnor. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has, at the west end, an embattled tower with pinnacles, and contains some handsome monuments; the eastern window of the chancel exhibits some fine stained glass, representing the Nativity, presented by the Earl of Radnor, in 1787. Lord Simon Digby, in 1694, gave £500 for teaching and apprenticing poor children of the parish, and for other charitable purposes: in the same year, Offalia Rawlins made a donation of £100, with similar directions for its use; and, in 1706, the Rev. John Pinsent gave an estate, producing about £15 per annum, for apprenticing the children of such of the inhabitants of Coleshill and Great Coxwell as had never received parochial relief, with £5 to each. This parish derives its name from the elevated situation of the village above the river Cole, which forms the western boundary, and gives the title of baron to the Earl of Radnor.

COLESHILL, a market town and parish in the Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 18 miles (N. by W.) from Warwick, and 103½ (N. W.) from London, containing 1760 inhabitants. This place derives its name from being situated on the acclivity and summit of an eminence rising gradually from the south bank of the river Cole, over which is a neat brick bridge of six arches leading into the town: it consists principally of one long street, from the centre of which a shorter street of considerable width diverges towards the church, and affords a convenient area for the market-place, in which is a portico of brick. The houses are in general well built, and several of them are handsome and of modern date; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs, and from the rivers Thame and Blyth, which run through the parish. The market is on Wednesday: the fairs are on the first Monday in January for cattle and sheep, on Shrove-Monday for horses, which is the principal fair, May 6th, the first Monday in July, and the first Monday after September 25th, all for cattle. The county magistrates occasionally hold here a petty session for the division; two constables, two headboroughs, two clerks of the market, and two pinners, are chosen at the court of the lord of the manor, held in October: the bishop holds his annual visitation in August, and a court of probate quarterly. Part of the workhouse is appropriated to the confinement of malefactors previously to their committal.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £10. 18. 6½., and in the patronage of Earl Digby. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is an ancient and spacious structure, in the decorated style of English architecture, with a lofty tower surmounted by an octagonal spire, crocketed at the angles, part of which was taken down and rebuilt in the same style in 1812: it contains an ancient Norman font, with an effigy of St. Peter, and a representation of the Crucifixion, rudely sculptured on it. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded in the reign of James I., by Lord Digby, who, in conjunction with some of the parishioners, endowed it with seventy acres of land and several houses in the parish; the management is vested in thirteen trustees, of whom Earl Digby nominates three: it comprises two schoolrooms, one exclusively for classical literature, the other for English, writing, and arithmetic: the head-master's salary is £80 per annum, with a house and seven or eight acres of land; the second master has a salary of £70 per annum; both are nominated by the trustees, and their appointment is confirmed by Earl Digby. A charity school was endowed, in 1694, by Simon, Lord Digby, with £500, which has been vested in the purchase of a house and land, for clothing and instructing poor girls, and apprenticing poor children; and under the same trust is a small endowment for the distribution of bibles and prayer-books. There are two almshouses for widows; and a house, which has lately been rebuilt, is endowed with land for the accommodation of poor travellers for one night, with a small hospital attached to it for those that are sick. About a mile to the east of the town is Maxstoke castle, in a high state of preservation, and inhabited by a descendant of the founder: the buildings occupy an irregular quadrilateral area, enclosed by an embattled wall, and defended at the angles by octagonal towers: the entrance on the east side is under a finely groined arch in the gateway tower, which is square and strengthened with angular turrets, and was formerly defended by a portcullis. About a mile and a half to the south-east of the castle are the remains of Maxstoke priory, consisting of part of the walls and the entrance gateway; the conventual buildings have been converted into farm-offices: the castle and the remains of the priory are in the decorated style of English architecture, and appear to be of the same date with the church, to which it is said there was a subterraneous passage leading from the priory. Coleshill gives the title of viscount to Earl Digby.

COLEY, a chapelry in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Halifax, with which the population is returned. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Halifax.

COLKERK, a parish in the hundred of LAUNDITCH, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (S.) from Fakenham, containing 358 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Stibbard annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of Lord J. Townsend. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

COLLIERLY, a township in that part of the parish of LANCHESTER which is in the western division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 12½ miles (N. W.) from Durham, containing, with the villages of Dipton and Pontop, 556 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel. At Collierly Dykes there is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This township contains several coal-works, from which it derives its name.

COLLINGBOURN-DUCIS, a parish in the hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, county of WILTS, 2½ miles (N. W.) from Ludgershall, containing 476 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of the Lord Warden of Savernake Forest, rated in the king's books at £16. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Ailesbury. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. This was formerly part of the duchy of Lancaster, from which it acquired the adjunct to its name; but Henry VIII. alienated it to the Earl of Hertford, afterwards Duke of Somerset, and Protector of England, upon whose attainder it reverted to the crown, and was granted by Queen Elizabeth to Edward, Earl of Hertford, whose descendants inherited all the former possessions of the Duke of Somerset.

COLLINGBOURN-KINGSTONE, a parish in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Ludgershall, containing 817 inhabitants, of which number, 251 are in Collingbourn-Southon, 233 in Collingbourn-Kingston, and 333 in Collingbourn-Vallance. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £15. 7. 3½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. John Norris, eminent as a divine and philosopher, was born at the vicarage-house, in 1567.

COLLINGHAM, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Wetherby, containing 286 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £3. 11. 5½., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Wheeler. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald. A charity school was founded, in 1738, by Lady Elizabeth Hastings, with an endowment, producing £24 per annum, for teaching twenty children, and providing them with books.

COLLINGHAM (NORTH), a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, 5½ miles (N. N. E.) from Newark, containing 805 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £8. 14. 2., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a very ancient structure, in the Norman style of architecture. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A school is supported by charitable donations amounting to £41 per annum.

COLLINGHAM (SOUTH), a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, 5½ miles (N. N. E.) from Newark, containing 686 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £14. 1. 10½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a school with a very trifling endowment. This parish is bounded on the west by the navigable river Trent. There is a lofty tumulus, called Potter's hill, where many Roman relics have been found. South of this, on the Fosse-road, on the Lincolnshire boundary, is the site of the Crococolana of Antoninus, now occupied by the village of Brough, where coins, termed Brugh pennies, have been ploughed up, and ancient foundations often discovered: human bones, with remains of coffins, have also been turned up in a place called the Chapel Close, which was the burying-ground attached to a chapel that formerly stood there, and belonged to the rectory of Hawton.

COLLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 4½ miles (N.) from Bromyard, containing 145 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £2. 18. 10., and in the patronage of Mrs. Pytts. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Limestone is obtained here.

COLLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WYMERLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (S.) from Northampton, containing 194 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £16. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. Benjamin Hill. The church is dedicated to St. Columbus. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

COLLITON-ROW, a tything in the parish of the HOLY TRINITY, DORCHESTER, hundred of GEORGE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET. The population is returned with the parish. It forms a small street on the south of Gildepath hill, and, though within the walls of the town, is properly without the borough, and lost its right of voting at elections for members of parliament in 1720, before which period it had constantly exercised it.

COLLUMPTON, county of DEVON.—See CULLOMPTON.

COLLY-WESTON, a parish in the hundred of WILLYBROOK, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Stamford, containing 353 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £12. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. Extensive quarries of slate are wrought in the neighbourhood.

COLMWORTH, a parish in the hundred of BARFORD, county of BEDFORD, 5½ miles (W. by S.) from St. Neots, containing 450 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of William Guppy, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a handsome structure with a lofty spire; it is in the early style of English architecture, and contains several ancient monuments.

COLN (ST. ALDWIN'S), a parish in the hundred of BRIGHTWELLS-BARROW, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N.) from Fairford, containing 393 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £8. 19. 4½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. Ingram, Esq. and another. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

COLN (ST. DENIS), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DEERHURST, though locally in the hundred of Bradley, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from North Leach, containing 179 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £9. 19. 4½., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford. This parish is bounded on the south-west by the river Coln, and on the north-west by the old Roman Fosse-way.

COLN-ROGERS, a parish in the hundred of BRADLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from North Leach, containing 139 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £7. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. This parish is bounded on the north by the river Coln, which is crossed by Fosse-bridge, on the Roman way of the same name.

COLNBROOK, a chapelry (formerly a market town) partly in the parish of STANWELL, hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, but chiefly in the parishes of HORTON, IVER, and LANGLEY-MARSH, in the hundred of STOKE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 46 miles (S. E. by S.) from Buckingham, and 17 (W. by S.) from London, on the road to Bath. The population is returned with the several parishes. This place, which is of great antiquity, is supposed to have been the station Ad Pontes of Antoninus: it derives its name from the river Colne, by which it is separated from Middlesex, and is intersected by different branches of that river, over each of which is a small bridge. The town consists principally of one long street; the houses are in general neatly built and of respectable appearance. The trade principally arises from its situation as a great thoroughfare, which has made it a considerable posting town. The market has been long discontinued, and the market-house and the chapel, which were inconveniently situated in the narrower part of the town, have been removed by the commissioners of the turnpike roads, who have rebuilt the chapel, a neat modern edifice, dedicated to St. Mary, on the opposite side of the road, in the parish of Horton. Fairs are held on April 5th and May 3rd, for cattle and horses. The government, by charter of Henry VIII., which was renewed in the reign of Charles I., is vested in a bailiff and burgesses. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late George Townsend, Esq., for Fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and there are several charitable bequests for distribution among the poor.

COLNE, a parish in the hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 2½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Somersham, containing 480 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Somersham, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is in the early style of English architecture, with a western tower; it contains some remains of figures and armorial bearings in stained glass, and is situated about half a mile from the village.

COLNE, a market town and chapelry in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 35 miles (S. E.) from Lancaster, and 217 (N. N. W.) from London, containing 7274 inhabitants. This place is supposed by the geographer of Ravenna to have been a Roman station, the site of which is by Whitaker, the historian of Manchester, referred to Castor Cliff, a lofty eminence about a mile south of the town, where are still the vestiges of a quadrilateral camp, one hundred and twenty yards in length, and one hundred and ten in breadth, surrounded by a double vallum and fosse. This camp is by Whitaker, the historian of the "Ancient parish of Whalley," considered only as the castra aestiva of the primary station, which, perhaps on better authority, he places in the low grounds beneath the town, and near the bank of the Colne-water, but of which every vestige has been obliterated by cultivation. Numerous Roman coins have been found at various times, and among them several of Gordianus and other emperors, enclosed in a large silver cup turned up by the plough in 1696. The town, which is of great antiquity, appears to have arisen with Lancaster, Manchester, and other towns in the county, soon after its conquest by Agricola, in the year seventy-nine, and derives its name either from Cotunio, the supposed name of the Roman station, or from the Saxon Culme, coal, with which the neighbourhood abounds: it is situated on an elevated point of land between the river Calder and the Leeds and Liverpool canal; the streets are paved, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water conveyed by pipes from Flass spring, about two miles distant, under the management of a company formed for that purpose. A subscription library has been established under good regulations, and is well conducted. The woollen manufacture was carried on here previously to the arrival of the Flemings in England in the time of Edward III., as appears from the rent-roll of the last Henry de Lacy, lord of the manor, in 1311, in which a fulling-mill is returned as being valued at 6s. 8d. per annum: the manufacture of shalloons, calimancoes, and tammies, was also extensively carried on, for the sale of which a Piece Hall was erected in 1775, by a company of proprietors, on a plot of ground on the south side of the town, presented by Banastre Watson, Esq., of Marsden Hall; it is a substantial stone building, containing two spacious rooms, and was for many years the principal mart in the district for woollen and worsted goods, but is now appropriated to the sale of general merchandise at the annual fairs only. The cotton manufacture is at present the principal branch of business; the chief articles are calico and dimity for the Manchester market, both of them being made to a considerable extent: the machinery for spinning the cotton is chiefly put in motion by water, but partly by steam. The Leeds and Liverpool canal passes through a tunnel a mile in length, at a small distance from the town, affording a facility of conveyance for the coal, freestone, slate, and lime, with which the neighbouring hills abound, and for the produce of the manufactories. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday; and on the last Wednesday in every month is a large cattle market: the fairs are on March 7th, May 13th for cattle, and 15th for pedlary, October 11th, and December 21st. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates: a constable is annually chosen by such of the inhabitants as are assessed to the county rate; and a court baron is held by the lord of the manor.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Whalley. The chapel, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a very ancient structure, erected probably soon after the Conquest: in the reign of Henry I. it was given to the priory of Pontefract by Hugh de Val; it was substantially repaired, or partly rebuilt, in the reign of Henry VIII., when the only remains preserved of the original building were the finely carved screen at the entrance and on the sides of the choir, and three massive circular columns in the north aisle, one of which, being undermined by some recent interments, suddenly gave way in 1815, and endangered the whole building, which has since been rendered firm and secure. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Methodists of the New Connexion. The grammar school is of very uncertain foundation: it is endowed with about £15 per annum, for which six boys are taught free, four of them by means of a bequest of £40 from Thomas Blakey, Esq., in 1687. The old school-room was taken down, and on its site a new one erected by subscription, in 1812. Dr. Tillotson, Archbishop of Canterbury, received the rudiments of his education at this school. A school was founded in 1746, at Laneshaw Bridge, by John Emmot, Esq., in which twenty children of the tenants on the Emmot estate are gratuitously instructed. There are also Sunday schools for one thousand four hundred and fifty children, in connexion with the established church and the several dissenting congregations.

COLNE (EARL'S), a parish in the Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 3½ miles (E. S. E.) from Halstead, containing 1229 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 10., and in the patronage of W. Reeve, and Arthur Clarence, Esqrs. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, contains several monuments of the de Veres, Earls of Oxford, which were removed from the church of a Benedictine priory, founded here in the eleventh century by Aubrey de Vere, who himself became one of the monks: it was dedicated to St. Mary and St. John the Evangelist, and was made a cell to the abbey of Abingdon in Berkshire; at the dissolution it had a prior and ten monks, with a revenue of £175. 14. 8. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Here is an ancient free school, endowed by the Earls of Oxford, the annual income of which is £12. 17. A fair for cattle and toys is held on the 25th of March. The river Colne, which is here crossed by a bridge on the line of the Roman road from Colchester, runs through this parish.

COLNE (ENGAIN), a parish in the Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 2¼ miles (E.) from Halstead, containing 547 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13. 17. 6., and in the patronage of the Governors of Christ's Hospital. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. This parish is bounded on the south by the river Colne, near which passes the Roman road from Colchester. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children.

COLNE (WAKES), a parish in the Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 5½ miles (E. by S.) from Halstead, containing 417 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £12. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Earl of Verulam. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Roman road from Colchester passes through this parish, to the southward of which flows the river Colne.

COLNE (WHITE), a parish in the Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 4½ miles (E.) from Halstead, containing 298 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of W. E. Hume, Esq. This parish has the river Colne on the south, where also passes the Roman road from Colchester.

COLNEY, a parish in the hundred of HUMBLEYARD, county of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (W. by S.) from Norwich, containing 78 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of J. Postle, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, has a round tower.

COLSTERWORTH, a parish partly in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, comprising the township of Twyford, but chiefly in the soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 32½ miles (S. by W.) from Lincoln, containing 776 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 10., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of South Grantham in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a small structure of early English architecture, with a good tower in the later style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is situated in a beautiful valley, through which winds the river Witham. Sir Isaac Newton was born here, on Christmas-day, 1642, about three months after the death of his father, who was lord of the manor; he received the rudiments of his education at the free grammar school at Grantham, and was admitted at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1660.

COLSTON-BASSET, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 10 miles (S. E. by E.) from Nottingham, containing 310 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £8. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient cruciform structure, standing on a hill at a short distance from the village.

COLTISHALL, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 8½ miles (N. N. E.) from Norwich, containing 685 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was rebuilt in 1824. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. John Chapman, in 1718, bequeathed land for the endowment of a school, the annual income of which, amounting to £14, is paid for teaching English to ten boys, the sons of poor parishioners: a schoolroom has since been built by subscription. A fair for pedlary is held on Whit-Monday.

COLTON, a parish in the hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, 5½ miles (N.) from Wymondham, containing 267 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 9. 9½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Rev. Henry Rix, in 1726, bequeathed certain land in trust for the endowment of a school and other charitable purposes, the annual income of which, with a subsequent gift by an unknown benefactor for teaching six children, amounts to £12. 7.

COLTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Rugeley, containing 569 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Rev. C. S. Landor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is very ancient, and has a square tower. Here is a school, with a house for the master, founded by contribution in 1763, for teaching twenty children, and since endowed with £500 by the late John Spencer, Esq.: there is also a school for younger children, endowed by the late Mr. Webb with land and a house called the Bell Inn, producing £5 per annum. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the south-west part of this parish.

COLTON, a township in the parish of BOLTON-PERCY, in the ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, 6½ miles (S. W.) from York, containing 148 inhabitants. A school is endowed with an annuity of £6.

COLUMB (ST.) MAJOR, a market town and parish in the hundred of PYDER, county of CORNWALL, 32 miles (S. W. by W.) from Launceston, and 245 (W. by S.) from London, containing 2493 inhabitants. This place takes its name from an ancient church erected by the founder of Bodmin priory, and dedicated to St. Columba, and its adjunct, to distinguish it from a smaller town of that name in the same hundred. The town is situated on the summit of an eminence which is supposed to have been occupied as a Danish fortification, and is surrounded by extensive tracts of fine meadow land: the houses are in general well built, the streets are roughly paved, but not lighted, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The market, granted to Sir John Arundel in 1333, by Edward III., is on Thursday, for corn and provisions; there is also a market for butchers' meat only, on Saturday: the market-house is an ancient building in the principal street. The fairs are on the Thursday after Mid-Lent Sunday, for cattle and sheep, and on the Thursday after November 13th, for sheep only. It is in contemplation to construct a canal from Mawgan Porth to this place, the expense of which is estimated at £7000. The county magistrates hold a petty session for the hundred once a month. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £53. 6. 8., and in the patronage of — Walker, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Columba, is an ancient and venerable structure, with a lofty square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles; within are several interesting monuments. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. In 1628, James Jenkins, Esq. gave by will £200, which has been invested in the purchase of land, producing £25. 5. per annum, for distribution among the poor. About two miles to the south-east of the town is a large elliptical encampment, called Castle an Dinas, defended by a double vallum, and having only one entrance; the longer diameter of the inner area is one thousand seven hundred feet, and the shorter one thousand five hundred; within it are two tumuli, one of which is surrounded by a small ditch: it is supposed to have been erected by the Danes, and to have been the residence of one of their chiefs.

COLUMB (ST.) MINOR, a parish in the hundred of PYDER, county of CORNWALL, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from St. Columb Major, containing 1297 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of James Buller, Esq. and others. The church is dedicated to St. Columb. John Francis Buller gave £5 per annum for teaching four children of this parish and two of Crantock; and in 1782, John Martyn gave £5 per annum for the like purpose. This parish is bounded on the west by Towan and Watergate bays and the small harbour of Porth on the Bristol channel. A fair is held annually on the 9th of June: there are considerable remains of a religious house, formerly a cell to the priory of Bodmin.

COLUMB-DAVID, a tything in the parish and hundred of HEMYOCK, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Wellington. The population is returned with the parish.

COLVESTON, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSHOE, county of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Brandon, containing 42 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of Didlington, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich. The church, which was dedicated to St. Mary, and dependent on the church of St. Bartholomew at Ickburgh, has been, with the village, long since demolished.

COLWALL, a parish in the hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Ledbury, containing 782 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £20. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. The church, dedicated to St. James, is an ancient structure with a square tower. Colwall is thought to have derived its name from a corruption of Collis Vallum, a fortified hill, which is descriptive of the situation of the place. The Herefordshire Beacon, an ancient encampment on one of the highest of the Malvern hills, is supposed to have been formed by the Britons to repel the Romans; near it a coronet of gold, set with diamonds, was discovered by a cottager in 1650, who, ignorant of its value, sold it for £31, though it afterwards fetched £1500. Here is a free grammar school, founded in 1612, by Humphrey Walwine, Esq., and under the patronage of the Grocers' Company: there are two schoolrooms, one for the free boys, the other for private pupils. The water of Colwall is equal in purity to the most celebrated of the Malvern springs.

COLWELL, a joint township with Swinburn, in the parish of CHOLLERTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Hexham, containing, with Swinburn, 403 inhabitants. Colwell is situated at the intersection of Watling-street and the Cambo road, and is the property of Ralph Riddell, Esq., who has erected a school-room and a house for the master, who teaches eighteen free children.

COLWICH, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, comprising the chapelry of Fradswell, and the township of Colwich, and containing 1865 inhabitants, of which number, 1646 are in the township of Colwich, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Rugeley. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Colwich and Bishop's Itchington in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 0. 5., endowed with £235 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is of some antiquity, and contains a monument to the memory of the celebrated navigator, George, Lord Anson, who was interred in the family cemetery at this place, June 14th, 1762. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal forms a junction with the Grand Trunk canal near Great Heywood, in this parish. A fair for cattle, called Wolseley Meeting, is held at Wolseley annually on the Wednesday before Mid-Lent Sunday.

COLWICK, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Nottingham, containing 120 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of J. Musters, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. A school was founded by the Rev. William Thompson, late rector, with an endowment of £20 per annum. The navigable river Trent flows through this parish.

COLYFORD, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of COLYTON, county of DEVON, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Colyton, with which the population is returned. Colyton was made a borough before the reign of Edward I.: it is governed by a mayor, who is chosen annually at the court of the lord of the manor. The tolls of a large cattle fair, held on the first Wednesday after March 11th, belong to the mayor, and the great tithes within the limits of the borough to the vicar of Colyton. Sir T. Gates, who discovered the Bermuda Isles, was born here.

COLYTON, a market town and parish in the hundred of COLYTON, county of DEVON, 22 miles (E.) from Exeter, and 151 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 1945 inhabitants. This place derives its name from the river Cole, on which it is situated, near its confluence with the river Axe. In the reign of Edward III. it obtained the grant of a weekly market and an annual fair. During the parliamentary war, the royal forces in possession of the town were attacked and defeated by a detachment of the parliamentary army stationed at Lyme. The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale, surrounded by fine pasture land and orchards, and abounding with excellent timber: the houses, many of which are very ancient, are in general irregularly built of flint, with thatched roofs; the inhabitants are supplied with water from two conduits connected with springs a little south of the town. The principal branch of manufacture is that of blue, brown, and common white paper; there are also two tanneries. The market days are Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, which last is the principal market: the fairs are on May 1st and November 30th, for cattle. The petty sessions for the division are held here; and two constables and a tythingman are annually appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a vicarage, with which the perpetual curacies of Monkton and Shute are annexed, rated in the king's books at £40. 10. 10., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a spacious and handsome cruciform structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a low square embattled tower rising from the centre, and surmounted by a handsome octagonal lantern turret with pierced parapets: the south transept is separated from the nave by an elaborately carved stone screen; and in the chancel is a beautiful altar-tomb, with the effigy of the daughter of one of the Courtenays, earls of Devonshire, richly enshrined in tabernacle work. There are places of worship for Independents and Unitarians. A school, in which twenty boys are taught reading, writing, and arithmetic, is supported by part of a fund given to the parish by Henry VIII. for divers charitable purposes, amounting to about £220 per annum, out of which the schoolmaster is paid a salary of £30; and a Sunday school for one hundred and forty children is supported partly by an endowment of £200 in the five per cents., given in 1816, by its founder, the Rev. James How, and partly by subscription.

COLYTON-RAWLEIGH, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Sidmouth, containing 770 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £16. 4. 9½., and in the patronage of the Dean of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist: near it are the remains of an ancient vicarage-house, which had a chapel attached to it: there was also a chapel in the parish, dedicated to St. Theobald.

COMBE, a tything in the parish of WOTTON under EDGE, upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 1 mile (N.E. by E.) from Wotton under Edge, with which the population is returned.

COMBE, a tything in the parish and hundred of CREWKERNE, county of SOMERSET. The population is returned with the parish.

COMBE, a parish in the hundred of PASTROW, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Great Bedwin, containing 188 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin.

COMBE, a tything in the parish of ENDFORD, hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, county of WILTS, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Ludgershall. The population is returned with the parish.

COMBE (ABBAS), county of SOMERSET.—See ABBAS-COMBE.

COMBE (ENGLISH), a parish in the hundred of WELLOW, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.W.) from Bath, containing 311 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 3. 11½., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. D. Hughes. The church is a very handsome structure. Here was formerly a castle belonging to the family of Gurnay, but little more than the fosse which encompassed it is distinguishable. The ancient road Wansdyke crosses this parish, passing by an eminence called Roundbarrow, or Barrow Hill, which has been erroneously considered of artificial construction; at its base a coin of Antoninus Pius was found in 1786.

COMBE (LONG), a parish in the hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Woodstock, containing 564 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Rector and Fellows of Lincoln College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

COMBE (MONCTON), a parish in the hundred of BATH-FORUM, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.E. by S.) from Bath, containing 855 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of South Stoke, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Here is a large paper-manufactory. On Combe down are extensive quarries, at which stone was obtained for erecting many of the best houses in Bath; in the cavities of it clusters of hexagonal brown chrystals are found, and in the fissures of the rocks are some fine and curiously frosted stalactites.

COMBE (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of KINGSBURY, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.W.) from Chard, containing 1046 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Wells, rated in the king's books at £15. 4. 4½., and in the patronage of the Dean of Wells. Fairs are held on the 18th of June, and on the Wednesday before December 11th.

COMBE-FIELDS, or COMBE-ABBEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Coventry, containing 173 inhabitants. Richard de Camvilla, in 1150, founded here a Cistercian abbey, which was dedicated to St. Mary, and richly endowed: at the dissolution it contained about fourteen monks, and was valued at £343. 0. 5. per annum: the site, which was granted by Edward VI. to the Earl of Warwick, is occupied by the manor-house; there are still some vestiges of the cloisters.

COMBE-FLOREY, a parish in the hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, county of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N.E. by E.) from Wiveliscombe, containing 306 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £11. 13. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

COMBE-HAY, a parish in the hundred of WELLOW, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Bath, containing 237 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 12. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of H. Hanbury Tracey, Esq. The Roman Fosse-way passes near this place: the ditch on each side, which gives name to it, is here very perfect. The Radford canal has its course through the parish, and joins the Kennet and Avon canal.

COMBE-HILL, a joint township with Healy, in the parish of NETHERWITTON, western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Rothbury. The population is returned with Healy.

COMBE-MARTIN, a market town and parish in the hundred of BRAUNTON, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Ilfracombe, and 176 (W. by S.) from London, containing 1032 inhabitants. This place derives its name from its situation in a deep valley, and its adjunct from its proprietor at the time of the Conquest. In the reign of Edward I. some mines of lead, containing a considerable portion of silver, were discovered, which in the reign of Edward III. produced such a quantity of that metal as to assist him materially in defraying the expense of carrying on the war with France. These mines, after remaining in a neglected state for many years, were re-opened in the reign of Elizabeth, and worked with considerable advantage under the direction of Sir Beavis Bulmer; a cup made of silver found here was presented to William Bourchier, Earl of Bath, and another, weighing one hundred and thirty-seven ounces, to Sir Richard Martyn, Lord Mayor of London. They were unsuccessfully explored in 1790: in 1813 a more profitable attempt was made; but after four years, during which time two hundred and eighty tons of silver were extracted, the works were discontinued. The town is situated in a deep romantic glen, extending in a north-west direction, and opening into a small cove on the Bristol channel, which formed a convenient port for shipping the mineral produce, and still affords the inhabitants the means of conveying coal and lime to other towns, from which they receive corn and bark in return. The houses, many of which are in ruins and overgrown with ivy, extend for nearly a mile in an irregular line along the side of the vale: the surrounding scenery is strikingly magnificent, and in many points of view highly picturesque. The market has been discontinued; but the charter, granted to Nicholas Fitz-Martin by Henry III., in 1264, is still retained by the exposure of some trifling article for sale on the market days; the market-house is rapidly falling to decay: a fair is held on Whit-Monday. The county magistrates hold a petty session for the division, on the first Monday in every month, at a small inn. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £39. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Rev. William Toms. The church, which is a handsome structure, is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school for teaching forty children reading, writing, and arithmetic, was endowed, in 1733, by George Ley, Esq., with a house and land producing £25 per annum: the premises have been lately rebuilt. Thomas Harding, a learned Roman Catholic divine and controversialist, was born here, in 1512.

COMBERBACH, a township in that part of the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH which is in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Northwich, containing 226 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

COMBERTON, a parish in the hundred of WETHERLEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.S.W.) from Cambridge, containing 383 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £6. 18. $11\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Jesus' College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

COMBERTON (GREAT), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Pershore, containing 206 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Miss Myddleton. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The river Avon flows through this parish.

COMBERTON (LITTLE), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by S.) from Pershore, containing 172 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £9. 0. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Col. Davies. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

COMBINTINHEAD, a parish forming, with Stokeintinhead, Shaldon Green, and Hacombe, a detached portion of the hundred of WONFORD, locally in that of Haytor, county of DEVON, 3 miles (E.) from Newton-Bushell, containing 403 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £32. 2. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir B. Wrey, Bart. The church contains an ancient wooden screen. The church-house, now occupied by the poor, is of ancient foundation. Here is a school, founded by Margaret Burgoyne, in 1783, with an endowment of £100 stock, for teaching ten children. The navigable river Teign bounds this parish on the north.

COMB-PYNE, a parish in the hundred of AXMINSTER, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.S.E.) from Colyton, containing 132 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8. 11. 8., and in the patronage of Charles Edwards, Esq. This place was anciently called Comb-Coffin, from the Coffin family; its present adjunct is derived from the Pynes, its later possessors. Here is a school, endowed with £7 per annum, also nine dwellings occupied by poor persons.

COMB-RAWLEIGH, a parish in the hundred of AXMINSTER, county of DEVON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.N.W.) from Honiton, containing 285 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £20. 0. 10., and in the patronage of J. R. Drewe, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, contains a monument to the memory of John Sheldon, Esq., F.R.S., and anatomical professor, who died in 1808. This parish was formerly denominated Comb-Baunton and Comb-Matthew.

COMBROOK, a chapelry in the parish of KINGTON, Kington division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Kington, containing 289 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In 1641, Sir Grevill Verney gave an annuity of £8 towards supporting the free school founded by his mother, with an endowment of £25 per annum for instructing all the poor children of Combbrook and Compton-Verney; and in 1763, Lady Tryphena Verney, agreeably to a bequest of £300 by her husband, George Verney, Esq., conveyed to trustees an estate at South Littleton, in the county of Worcester, for the maintenance of two scholars at Trinity College, Cambridge, to be chosen from this school, or, in default, out of the grammar school at Warwick.

COMBS, a parish in the hundred of Stow, county of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Stow-Market, containing 736 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £25. 17. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the early style of English architecture. The river Orwell flows along the north-eastern boundary of the parish, and is navigable from Ipswich to Stow-Market. Here is a considerable tannery.

COMMON-DALE, a township in the parish of GUILSBROUGH, eastern division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Guilsbrough, containing 86 inhabitants. Common-dale is corrupted from Colman-dale, so called from Colman, Bishop of Lindisfarne, who had a hermitage here.

COMP (GREAT), a hamlet in the parish and hundred of WROTHAM, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Wrotham, with which the population is returned. Here was formerly a chapel, now demolished.

COMPSTALL, a village in the parish of STOCKPORT, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 5 miles from Stockport, containing about 1600 inhabitants, of which, 1200 are employed in spinning, powerloom-weaving, bleaching, and printing, and the remainder at the extensive coal-works in the neighbourhood. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Twenty-five years ago, Compstall consisted of only a few straggling cottages, but, since the establishment of the cotton manufacture, it has been gradually rising to its present thriving condition.

COMPTON, a parish in the hundred of COMPTON, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from East Ilsley, containing 482 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 14. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir W. J. James, Bart.

COMPTON, a hamlet in that part of the parish of ASHBOURN which is in the hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, though locally in the hundred of Appletree, county of DERBY, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S. E.) from Ashbourn. The population is returned with the chapelry of Clifton. A chapel, called Sion chapel, with a house for the minister, and six almshouses attached to it, and under the direction of the trustees of the Countess of Huntingdon's college, were built here by John Cooper, who, by deed in 1801, endowed them with £4500 three per cent. reduced annuities, yielding now a dividend of about £130 per annum, of which sum, £68 is paid to the minister, and £10. 10. to each of the six inmates of the hospital, who, together with the minister, are appointed by the trustees: the premises were substantially repaired in 1824.

COMPTON, a tything in the parish of NEWENT, hundred of BOTLOE, county of GLOUCESTER, containing 403 inhabitants.

COMPTON, a tything in that part of the parish of HENBURY which is in the upper division of the hundred of HENBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, containing 151 inhabitants.

COMPTON, a parish in the hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Winchester, containing 267 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated in the king's books at £23. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is small, and has portions in various styles of architecture, the Norman predominating. Compton is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. The Itchen line of navigation passes through this parish.

COMPTON, a parish in the first division of the hundred of GODALMING, county of SURREY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Guildford, containing 423 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £15. 4. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of J. M. Molyneux, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, has a low tower and spire, and a curious chancel with a groined roof and a chapel over it; these portions are in the early style of English architecture, but there are others of decorated character.

COMPTON, a parish in the hundred of WESTBOURN and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 9 miles (S. W. by W.) from Midhurst, containing 233 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Up-Marden annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a mixture of the early English and decorated styles of architecture. Edward Flower, in 1521, founded a free grammar school, with an endowment of £100, to be laid out in land. Thomas Pelham gave £80, with a rent-charge of £20, and, in 1528, William Spicer conveyed other lands in furtherance of this charity, the total income of which, amounting to £28 per annum, is paid to the master of a boarding-school, to whom no application has ever been made to teach children gratuitously. The Rev. Dr. Cox, in 1741, bequeathed £100 for teaching poor children of Compton and Up-Marden. A donation of £30 by the Rev. Robert Middleton, and one of £20 by Timothy Burrell, Esq., in 1716, for the education of poor children, have been, with a further sum of £100 given by the latter, appropriated for a workhouse, in which a school is kept.

COMPTON (EAST), a tything in the parish of PILTON, hundred of WHITESTONE, county of SOMER-SET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Shepton-Mallet. The population is returned with the parish.

COMPTON (FENNY), a parish in the Burton-Dassett division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Kington, containing 572 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £15. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Sir Henry Bate Dudley, a comic writer of some note, was born here, in 1745; he died in 1824.

COMPTON (LITTLE), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DEERHURST, county of GLOUCESTER, though locally in the hundred of Chadlington, county of Oxford, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Chipping-Norton, containing 314 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Denis. Here is an old mansion, formerly the residence of Bishop Juxon, chaplain to Charles I.

COMPTON (LONG), a parish in the Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Chipping-Norton, containing 860 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £12. 15. $7\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A weekly market and an annual fair, now disused, were granted in the 15th of Henry III. About a mile southward, and near the Oxfordshire boundary, is that remarkable monument of antiquity, called Rolle-rich, or Rowright, stones, of which there is an absurd vulgar tradition that they were once men, and that the highest of them would have been king of England, if he could have seen this village before they were turned into stone.

COMPTON (NETHER), a parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Sherborne, containing 458 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Over Compton, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

COMPTON (OVER), a parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Sherborne, containing 149 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Nether Compton annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of R. Gooden, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

COMPTON (WEST), a tything in the parish of PILTON, hundred of WHITESTONE, county of SOMERSET, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Shepton-Mallet. The population is returned with the parish.

COMPTON-ABBAS, or WEST COMPTON, a parish in the hundred of CERNE, TOTCOMBE, and MODBURY, Cerne subdivision of the county of DORSET, 9 miles (W. N. W.) from Dorchester, containing 80 inhabitants.

The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 0. 5., and in the patronage of D. R. Mitchell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Compton-Abbas derives its adjunct from having once formed part of the possessions of Milton abbey, and is termed West Compton from its relative position to East Compton.

COMPTON-ABBAS, a parish in that part of the hundred of SIXPENNY-HANDLEY which is in the Shaston (West) division of the county of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Shaftesbury, containing 368 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £9. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of D. R. Mitchell, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small ancient edifice. The village is situated in a combe, or vale, whence its name; it derives its adjunct from having formed part of the endowment of Shaston abbey.

COMPTON-ABDALE, a parish in the hundred of BRADLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from North Leach, containing 184 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and 600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a small ancient building. Here is a school with a trifling endowment. The river Coln runs through this parish, which is well wooded.

COMPTON-BASSETT, a parish in the hundred of CALNE, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Calne, containing 480 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Combe and Harnham in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. $10\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. Robert Rawlings, in 1786, bequeathed land producing £11 per annum, for teaching ten children, prior to which, in 1706, Elizabeth Giddes gave £8 for educating one.

COMPTON-BEAUCHAMP, a parish in the hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Great Farringdon, containing 103 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. 9., and in the patronage of J. A. Wright, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. Here is an extensive double-trenched encampment, thought to be Roman, from the coins discovered upon the spot, near which, and to the south of the church, passes the Ikniel-road. The Wilts and Berks canal has its course along the northern parts of this parish.

COMPTON-BISHOP, a parish in the hundred of WINTERSTOKE, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Axbridge, containing 513 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Compton-Bishop in the Cathedral Church of Wells, rated in the king's books at £11, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and 400 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew: in the churchyard is an ancient cross, with six rows of steps. The village lies in a hollow, under the southern declivity of the Mendip range of hills, presenting a very picturesque appearance. A little to the south-west is a spacious natural cave, entered by a perpendicular shaft: proceeding by a difficult winding passage, a still more extensive cavern opens to the sight: from the roof, which expands into a kind of arch, hung formerly some beautiful specimens of stalactites; and various incrustations, assuming the most fantastic shapes, lay scattered about, but all have been defaced or removed by visitors. William Cray, in 1728, bequeathed land, now producing £17 per annum, for teaching poor children in two schoolrooms. At the village of Cross, in this parish, are some good post-ing-houses: and by a recent regulation it has been made the station of a general post-office, whence bags of letters are sent to the neighbouring parishes.

COMPTON-CHAMBERLAIN, a parish forming a detached portion of the southern division of the hundred of DAMERHAM, locally in the hundred of Cawden and Cadworth, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Wilton, containing 267 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £13, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. H. Penruddock, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a charity school. Col. Penruddock, who was executed at Exeter, in 1655, for an attempt to restore Charles II. to the throne, resided in this parish.

COMPTON-DANDO, a parish in the hundred of KEYNSHAM, county of SOMERSET, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Pensford, containing 344 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £5. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Chew runs through this parish, which is also crossed by the ancient Belgic boundary line, called Wansdyke.

COMPTON-DUNDON, a parish in the hundred of WHITLEY, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Somerton, containing, with the hamlet of Littleton, 544 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Compton-Dandon in the Cathedral Church of Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 6. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The ruins of a mansion that formerly belonged to the family of Beauchamp adjoin the churchyard. An adjacent hill is called Dundon Beacon, from a beacon having anciently been erected on it.

COMPTON-DURVILLE, a tything in the parish of SOUTH PETHERTON, southern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.N.W.) from South Petherton, with which the population is returned.

COMPTON-GIFFORD, a tything in that part of the parish of CHARLES the MARTYR, PLYMOUTH, which is in the hundred of ROBOROUGH, county of DEVON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.N.E.) from Plymouth, containing 175 inhabitants.

COMPTON-GREENFIELD, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of HENBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Bristol, containing 42 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of John Ward, Esq. The navigable river Severn flows on the western side of this parish.

COMPTON-MARTIN, a parish in the hundred of CHEWTON, county of SOMERSET, 8 miles (N.) from Wells, containing 534 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Nempnett-Thrubwell annexed, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a fine specimen of the Norman style of architecture, and the interior is particularly neat. John King, in 1773, bequeathed an annuity of £1 for a charity school, which was established in 1776, and is endowed with about £13 per annum. The village lies at the edge of an extensive valley under the north ridge of Mendip, and derives its adjunct from its ancient proprietors.

COMPTON-PAUNCEFOOT, a parish in the hundred of CATSASH, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (W.S.W.) from Wincanton, containing 228 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 10., and in the patronage of John H. Hunt, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

COMPTON-VALLENCE, a parish in the liberty of FRAMPTON, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.N.W.) from Dorchester, containing 86 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £12. 5. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of R. Williams, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a small building with a plain tower. The village, which is situated on the banks of a small stream, was formerly more considerable than it is at present.

COMPTON-VERNEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the Kington division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 2 miles (N.W.) from Kington, containing 37 inhabitants. Here is a free school, which is entitled to two exhibitions in Trinity College, Cambridge, jointly with that at Combrook.

COMPTON-WYNIATES, a parish in the Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Shipston upon Stour, containing 28 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the vicarage of Tysoe united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Northampton. The manor-house, erected in the reign of Henry VIII., was garrisoned by some troops belonging to the parliament, in 1646.

CONDERTON, a hamlet in the parish of OVERBURY, middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, containing 89 inhabitants.

CONDICOTE, a parish partly in the upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, and partly in the upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Stow on the Wold, containing 165 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £7. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Thomas Davies, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. Here is a school with a trifling endowment.

CONDOVER, a parish in the hundred of CONDOVER, county of SALOP, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Shrewsbury, containing 1378 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £4. 14., and in the patronage of E. W. S. Owen, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. A school is supported by divers donations, amounting in the whole to £25 per annum. Here is a small lake, termed Bomere, in and near which have been found several rare botanical plants. There is a mine of coal in the parish.

CONEYSTHORPE, a township in that part of the parish of BARTON in the STREET which is in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (W.) from New Malton, containing 160 inhabitants.

CONEYTHORPE, a township in the parish of GOLDSBOROUGH, upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of York, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Knaresborough, containing 112 inhabitants.

CONGERSTON, a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Market-Bosworth, containing 149 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 3. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Earl Howe. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Charles Jennins, in 1773, left £333. 6. 8. in trust for teaching poor children of the parish, the annual produce of which is £16. 13. There is also a school on the National system, supported by Earl and Countess Howe, in which one hundred and fifty children are clothed and educated. The Ashby de la Zouch canal passes through this parish. Congerston is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CONGHALL, or COUGHALL, a township in that part of the parish of BACKFORD which is in the lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Chester, containing 23 inhabitants. The Ellesmere canal passes near this place.

CONGHAM, a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of FREEBRIDGE, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Castle-Rising, containing 279 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with which that of Congham St. Mary was consolidated in 1684, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated together in the king's books at £12. 10., and in the patronage of Mrs. Nelson. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew; that of St. Mary has been demolished. The rector also receives the tithes of Congham All Saints, subject to an annual payment to the impropiator. Here are almshouses for twelve women, with an endowment of £100 per annum. The learned antiquary and historian, Sir Henry Spelman, was born at this place, in 1562, and died in 1641: he first prosecuted his studies at Trinity College, Cambridge, whence he was called to the bar, and was sheriff for the county in the year 1605. His chief works were, the Glossary, History of Sacrilege, a treatise De non temerandis Ecclesiis, Icenia, &c., which were collected and published, with a biographical sketch prefixed, by Bishop Gibson.

CONGLETON, an incorporated market town and chapelry, in the parish of ASTBURY, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Northwich, county palatine of CHESTER, 31 miles (E. by S.) from Chester, and 161 (N. W. by W.) from London, containing 6405 inhabitants. Some writers have considered this the site of Condade, an aboriginal settlement of the Cornavii; but Whitaker, in his history of Manchester, has convincingly refuted this opinion, and fixed that station at Kinderton. In Domesday-book it is called Cogletone, but its origin has not been satisfactorily ascertained: it is not distinguished by any events of historical importance. In the beginning of the fourteenth century a free charter was granted to it by Henry de Lacey, Earl of Lincoln, who, in 1282, obtained for it the grant of a weekly market. In the reign of Henry VI., an inundation having done considerable damage to the town, the inhabitants obtained permission to divert the course of the river, and subsequently a grant of the king's mills, which stood on its banks. The town is situated in a valley embosomed in richly wooded hills, on the south bank of the river Daven, or Dane, over which a handsome bridge was built in 1782, and, notwithstanding some recent improvements, consists of narrow and irregularly formed streets: the houses in the eastern part are old, and chiefly of timber and brickwork; those in the western part are in general modern and of handsome appearance: the inhabitants are supplied with water from springs, and from the rivulet Howtey, which intersects the town. The environs abound with scenery beautifully diversified by the windings of the river, on the banks of which are numerous stately mansions and elegant villas. Assemblies are held periodically in the market-house, and races take place annually in August. The manufacture of gloves, and leather laces called Congleton points, for which the town was celebrated, has given place to the throwing of silk and the spinning of cotton, for the former of which not less than fifty mills have been erected since 1752, when that branch of manufacture was introduced by Mr. Pattison, of London, who built the first mill, an edifice comprising five stories of rooms, each two hundred and forty feet in length, and of proportionate width; this establishment, which is considered in point of extent the second in the kingdom, is still conducted by the descendants of the founder: ribands and handkerchiefs also are woven to a limited extent. A canal from Marple, to join the Grand Trunk canal at Lawton, is now being constructed, which, passing within a quarter of a mile of the town, will materially facilitate its trade. The market is on Saturday: the fairs, chiefly for cattle, are on the Thursday before Shrovetide, May 12th, July 12th, and November 22nd. The market-house, a neat and commodious edifice, containing a handsome assembly-room, was built in 1822, at the sole expense of Sir Edmund Antrobus, Bart. The government, by charter of incorporation granted by James I., in 1625, is vested in a mayor, high steward, eight aldermen, and sixteen capital burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk and subordinate officers: the mayor, who is elected annually by a majority of the corporation, on the Monday before Michaelmas-day, and two of the aldermen, who at the same time are chosen for that purpose, are justices of the peace within the borough; the high steward and town-clerk hold their respective offices for life. The freedom of the borough is inherited by the eldest sons of freemen, and acquired by servitude, purchase, and gift. The corporation hold quarterly courts of session, for trying prisoners charged with misdemeanors and felonies not capital; and courts of record for the recovery of debts to any amount, in which, though they do not exercise it, they have the privilege of proceeding according to the statute of Acton-Burnell, otherwise the law of statute-merchant: a court leet is also held in August, at which the high steward, or his deputy, presides. The guildhall is a neat brick building, with a piazza in front, supported on four pillars of stone; it was rebuilt in 1805, and, in addition to the court-rooms and apartments for transacting the public business of the corporation, comprises a room for debtors, and cells for the confinement of criminals.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, was rebuilt of brick in 1740, and a square tower of stone was added to it in 1786; it stands on elevated ground, and commands a fine and extensive prospect. There was formerly another chapel at the end of the bridge, on the opposite side of the river Dane, which, having long since become desecrated, was appropriated to the reception of the poor; it was pulled down in 1810, when a spacious one was erected at Coughton-moss. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The grammar school, free for the sons of burgesses exclusively, and under the management of the corporation, who appoint the master, is of uncertain foundation, but existed prior to 1590, and was endowed with a house and garden and one acre of land, to which £16 per annum is added by the corporation, as a salary to the master, who receives a quarterly payment of fifteen shillings each for instructing the sons of non-freemen in English and the mathematics, and has the privilege of taking boarders. A spacious schoolroom, detached from the house, was erected in 1814 by the corporation, on condition that the present master, during his lifetime, should give up his claim to the £16 per annum. Adjoining the chapel a handsome brick building, capable of accommodating eight hundred children, was erected in 1828, for the use of the Sunday school, which is supported by subscription. At Buglawton, a township in this parish, is a mineral spring, the water of which is said to be efficacious in scrofula and other diseases: by the breaking in of the banks, and the consequent admixture of other water, its power has been considerably weakened, but it is in contemplation to repair the well, and to erect baths for the accommodation of invalids. John Bradshaw, Chief Justice of Chester, and president of the tribunal which passed sentence of death on Charles I., was articted to an attorney in this town, of which he became mayor in 1637, and was subsequently appointed high steward. John Whitehurst, a celebrated mechanic, and author of a treatise on the Theory of the Earth, was born here, in 1713.

CONGRESBURY, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of WINTERSTOKE, county of SOMERSET, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Axbridge, containing 1202 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Wick St. Lawrence annexed, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £42. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Bristol. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a handsome structure with a tower and lofty spire. This is a very large parish, bounded on the west by extensive marshes stretching to the Bristol channel: the legendary account of it states that the name is derived from St. Congar, son of an eastern monarch, who in 711 fled from his father's court, to avoid a marriage to which he was disinclined, and ultimately settled here, where he built an oratory, received a grant of land from Ina, King of the West Saxons, and founded an establishment for twelve canons; he then proceeded on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, where he died, and was brought hither for interment. Jocelyn, Bishop of Bath, obtained from Henry III. a grant of a weekly market and an annual fair; the market is disused, but the fair is held on the 14th of September: a large and lofty cross stands in the centre of the village.

CONHOPE, a township in that part of the parish of AYMESTREY which is in the hundred of STRETFORD, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Pembridge, containing 96 inhabitants.

CONINGSBY, a parish in the soke of HORNCastle, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 1 mile (E. N. E.) from Tattershall, containing 1651 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £39. 10. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir Gilbert Heathcote, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There are places of worship for General Baptists and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The rivers Bane and Witham, and the Horncastle canal, pass through this parish: the Witham is navigable from Lincoln to Boston. An annual feast is held on the Sunday nearest St. Michael's day.

CONINGTON, a parish in the hundred of PAPWORTH, county of CAMBRIDGE, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from St. Ives, containing 202 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £9. 15. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is an endowed school. Traces of the moat surrounding the site of an ancient fortress, called Bruce Castle, may be discerned.

CONINGTON, a parish in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Stilton, containing 215 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £19. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Dr. Procter. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a large handsome structure, having an embattled tower with octagonal pinnacles, and the windows adorned with stained glass; it contains many monuments to the Cottons, and an inscribed tablet to the memory of Prince Henry of Scotland, Lord of Conington, &c.: the font is characteristic of the Norman and early English styles. The Rev. James Oram, in 1769, left £500 for teaching poor children. At the village, within a square intrenchment, are vestiges of an ancient castle, which, with the lordship, was given by Canute to Turkill, a Danish lord, who, taking advantage of his residence among the East Angles, invited over Sueno to plunder the country. After Turkill's departure it fell to Waldeof, Earl of Huntingdon, who married Judith, niece to the Conqueror, from whom it descended to the royal line of Scotland, and thence to the Cottons, ancestors of Sir Robert Cotton, celebrated for his valuable collection of books and MSS., known by the name of the Cottonian Library. Sir Robert Cotton, Bart., on making an excavation for a pond, found the skeleton of a sea-fish, twenty feet long, lying in perfect silt, about six feet below the surface of the ground, and as much above the present level of the fens.

CONISBROUGH, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Rotherham, containing 1142 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £8. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is of Norman character, combined with the early, the decorated, and later style, of English architecture: it had a chantry, founded in the 14th of Edward II.: there are several monuments, together with a curious stone, adorned with many hieroglyphics. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A schoolroom was erected upon waste land by subscription in 1812; the income, amounting to £7. 10. per annum, arises from the rent of the old school premises, and an endowment of £2 a year. This is a place of high antiquity, having been connected with all the different dynasties by which Britain has been governed. The Britons called it Caer Conan; the Saxons Cyning, or Conan Burgh, both signifying a royal town. A Roman road is discoverable not far hence. Conisbrough is stated to have been the seat of a civil jurisdiction, which comprised twenty-eight towns. The castle, standing upon an eminence above the river Don, is of uncertain foundation; some consider it to have been built by Queen Cartismandua, others by the Romans, and others again by the Saxons. It is first mentioned as a fortress belonging to Hengist, the Saxon leader, who was defeated here, in 487, by Aurelius Ambrosius, and again in 489, at which period, according to Geoffrey of Monmouth, he was made prisoner, and subsequently beheaded at the northern gate of the citadel; a tumulus near the place is stated to cover his relics. This account, however, has not been universally credited: there can be little doubt that a fortress existed here previously to the Conquest; but the structure, the ruins of which now constitute so interesting an object, was probably erected by Earl Warrenne, to whom the Conqueror gave the manor. In this castle Richard, Earl of Cambridge, second son of the Duke of York, and grandson of Edward III., was born; he was beheaded for conspiring against Henry V. The round tower, or keep, is almost perfect; the rest forms a picturesque ruin. Several human skeletons have been discovered.

CONISCLIFFE, a parish in the south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, comprising the townships of High Coniscliffe and Low Coniscliffe, and containing 391 inhabitants, of which number, 245 are in the township of High Coniscliffe, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Darlington. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The church, dedicated to St. Edwin, has a tower and spire, and is in the early and later styles of English architecture: it stands at the village of High Coniscliffe, on the north bank of the Tees, occupying an eminence nearly surrounded by quarries of limestone, deeply wrought but now disused, though a large quantity is still obtained and burnt in other parts of the parish. The village of Low Coniscliffe is situated about a mile east from the church, and on the same side of the river. Coniscliffe was a considerable Roman station, the outworks of which, with the foundations of an aqueduct, and the military road called Broadway, from Binchester to the remains of an ancient stone bridge a little below the present one, are still discernible. Horsley places the Maga of the Notitia here, the station being occupied by a field called the Tofts. Numerous Roman coins have been found; and there are two tumuli in the neighbourhood.

CONISCLIFFE (LOW), a township in the parish of CONISCLIFFE, south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 3 miles (W.) from Darlington, containing 146 inhabitants.

CONISHOLM, a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINCOLN, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Louth, containing 127 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 13. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Viscount and Viscountess Goderich. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CONISTON, a township in that part of the parish of SWINE which is in the middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 137 inhabitants.

CONISTON, a chapelry in the parish of BURNSALL, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Settle, containing, with the hamlet of Kilnsay, 137 inhabitants.

CONISTON (COLD), a township in the parish of GARGRAVE, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Skipton, containing 345 inhabitants. On a lofty mount near the village is an oval encampment, supposed to be Danish. Tradition relates that at a place called Sweet-Gap, on the north-western side of Coniston moor, the inhabitants endeavoured to arrest the progress of a party of Scottish invaders, and nearly the whole of them were killed.

CONISTON (MONK), a joint township with Skelwith, in the parish of HAWKESHEAD, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Hawkeshead, containing, with Skelwith, 426 inhabitants. The village, consisting of groups of houses and neat cottages covered with slate, the produce of the adjacent mountains, is beautifully situated at the head of Coniston lake; this lake extends from north to south about six miles, is half a mile across its widest part, and in depth, at some places, not less than forty fathoms, abounding with char.

CONISTONE (CHURCH), a chapelry in the parish of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (W.) from Hawkeshead, containing 566 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of W. Bradyll, Esq.

CONOCK, a tything in the parish of CHURTON, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from East Lavington, containing 144 inhabitants.

CONONLEY, a joint township with Farnhill, in the parish of KILDWICK, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWXCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (S.) from Skipton. The population is returned with Farnhill.

CONSIDER, a joint township with Knitsley, in that part of the parish of LANCHESTER which is in the western division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $14\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Durham, containing 141 inhabitants.

CONSTANTINE, a parish in the hundred of KERRIER, county of CORNWALL, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Falmouth, containing 1671 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £19. 3. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Constantine. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The navigable river Hel runs on the southern side of this parish, and the village is situated upon an eminence nearly surrounded by tin works. The petty sessions for the division are held here. On the right of the road from Penryn to Helston is a vast rock of granite, computed to weigh seven hundred and fifty tons, called the Tolmen, from the Cornish words, Toll, a hole, and Maen, a stone: it is in the shape of an egg, with several excavations on the top, and is curiously poised on two others: at a short distance there is another mass of a circular form, resembling a cap. At Boscawen, in this parish, is a subterraneous passage, termed Piskey Hall, thirty feet long, five feet wide, and six feet high, formed of rude stones. The sites of decayed chapels are still discernible at Benallock and Budockwean. Near the church, where formerly stood a cross, a bag full of silver coins of kings Arthur and Canute was discovered about the close of the seventeenth century.

COOKBURY, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Holsworthy, containing 282 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Milton-Damerell, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter.

COOKHAM, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of COOKHAM, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Maidenhead, containing 2734 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £14. 14. 2., and in the patronage of — Rogers, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. There is a place of worship for Independents. This parish includes the northern portion of the town of Maidenhead: the market has been discontinued, but fairs are held on May 16th and October 11th: it is bounded on the east and north by the river Thames. There is a manufactory for coarse paper. Courts leet and baron are held annually. There are eight almshouses, the inmates of which receive some trifling gratuities, and a small endowed school. Several descendants of Gen. Washington, and Mr. Hooke, the historian of the Roman empire, are interred in the church.

COOKLEY, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Halesworth, containing 274 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Huntingfield, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a small endowed school.

COOLING, a parish in the hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Rochester, containing 124 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of T. Best, Esq. and H. Fox. The church is dedicated to St. James. This parish, originally called Colniges, or Colnages, from its bleak situation, comprehends the two villages of Cooling-street and Church-Cooling, and contains the remains of a castle formerly of great strength, but long since dismantled.

COOL-PILATE, a township in the parish of ACTON, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 4 miles (S.) from Nantwich, containing 48 inhabitants.

COOMBE, a township in that part of the parish of PRESTEIGNE which is in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Presteigne, containing 67 inhabitants.

COOMBE-BISSETT, a parish in the hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Salisbury, containing 331 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of West Harnham annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Coombe and Harnham in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. This place received its distinguishing name from the family that formerly possessed it; the other arose from its situation in one of the narrow bourns, or combes, with which Salisbury plain is so frequently intersected.

COOMBE-KEYNES, a parish in the hundred of WINFRITH, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Wareham, containing 128 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Wool annexed, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £13. 18. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of John Bond, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Holy Rood, is partly in the early style of English architecture, and partly of later date. The court leet is held by the tenure that the tythingman shall proceed to do suit at Winfrith court, repeating a few doggerel lines, and paying a fine of threepence. There is a small endowed school.

COOMBS, a parish in the hundred of STEYNING, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, 2 miles (S.E. by S.) from Steyning, containing 70 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £10. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont. The church is in the early style of English architecture. The navigable river Adur runs on the eastern side of this parish.

COOMBS-EDGE, a township in the parish of CHAPEL en le FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 2½ miles (N.W. by W.) from Buxton, containing 433 inhabitants.

COPDOCK, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (W.S.W.) from Ipswich, containing 278 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Washbrook annexed, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 12. 8½., and in the patronage of Lord Walsingham. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Clopdock hall was once the residence of Lord Chief Justice de Grey, and of Dr. Foster, a zealot of the church of Rome.

COPFORD, a parish in the Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 4 miles (W.S.W.) from Colchester, containing 592 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £15. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is principally of Norman architecture.

COPGROVE, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (S.W. by W.) from Boroughbridge, containing 87 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £5. 9. 7., and in the patronage of T. Duncombe, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. St. Mongah's well, in this village, was formerly celebrated for its medicinal properties. There is a trifling bequest, by means of which three poor children are educated.

COPE, a parish in the hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Bedford, containing 524 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 17., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains some ancient brasses. The navigable river Ouse passes along the northern boundary of this parish.

COPELSTONE, a hamlet in the parish of COLEBROKE, hundred of CREDITON, county of DEVON, 4½ miles (W.N.W.) from Crediton. The village formerly contained a chapel, and, according to some authorities, a mint and a prison, long since destroyed: there are still some remains of an ancient cross.

COPMANTHORPE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ST. MARY BISHOPSHILL JUNIOR which is in the ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, 4½ miles (S.W. by S.) from York, containing 281 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, also a small endowment for the instruction of children.

COPP, a chapelry in the parish of ST. MICHAEL upon WYRE, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER. The population is returned with the parish.

COPPENHALL, a parish in the hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Church-Coppenhall and Monks-Coppenhall, and containing 512 inhabitants, of which number, 366 are in the township of Church-Coppenhall, 5 miles (N.E.) from Nantwich, and 146 in the adjoining township of Monks-Coppenhall. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £6. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is built of wood and plaister, in the style which prevailed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

COPPENHALL, a chapelry in that part of the parish of PENKRIDGE which is in the eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (N.N.W.) from Penkridge, containing 108 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the court of the royal peculiar of Penkridge, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of E. J. Littleton, Esq. The chapel, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is built of timber and brick-work, apparently of the reign of Elizabeth.

COPPINGFORD, a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 6½ miles (S.) from Stilton, containing 70 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Upton, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18. 13. 1½., and in the patronage of Lord Montague. The church, which was dedicated to All Saints, is in ruins.

COPPIN-SIKE, an extra-parochial liberty with Ferry-Corner, in the wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, containing 17 inhabitants.

COPPULL, a chapelry in the parish of STANDISH, hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (S.S.W.) from Chorley, containing 1017 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Standish.

COPSTON (MAGNA), a chapelry in the parish of MONKS-KIRBY, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 6½ miles (E.S.E.) from Nuneaton, containing 98 inhabitants. The chapel is in ruins.

COPSTON (PARVA), a hamlet in the parish of WOLVEY, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 6½ miles (S.E. by E.) from Nuneaton. There was formerly a village at this place, but it is now depopulated.

CORBRIDGE, a parish (formerly a borough and market town) in the eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the chapelry of Halton, and the townships of Aydon, Aydon-

Castle, Clarewood, Corbridge, Dilston, Halton-Shields, Thornborough, Great Whittington, and Little Whittington, and containing 2037 inhabitants, of which number, 1254 are in the township of Corbridge, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Hexham. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £11. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is supposed to have been built out of the ruins of a neighbouring Roman station; it is a neat edifice, having undergone frequent repairs. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The village, formerly a borough and market town of considerable extent, stands north of the river Tyne, over which there is a bridge of seven arches; but, though well built, and in repute for its healthy situation, it has lost its former importance; the privilege of returning members having been found too expensive, and the market falling into disuse. Near the centre of the market-place is a cross, erected in 1814, by the Duke of Newcastle, who, in 1815, constructed a fountain near it, which, together with another fountain erected by the inhabitants, is supplied with water from a reservoir in the vicinity. A fair, held on the eve, day, and morrow of St. John the Baptist, has fallen into disuse; but fairs are held at Stagshaw Bank, in this parish, for the sale of live stock, annually on Whitsun-eve and July 4th, and a tryst fair on the 24th of November, the last established in 1820: at the fair in July a great quantity of linen and woollen cloth, brought from Scotland, is exposed for sale. At this place David, King of Scots, encamped in 1138. Corbridge was burnt by the Scots in 1296 and 1311. Two battles are said to have been fought here, one between the royalists and the Scottish troops, during the parliamentary war; the scene of the other is termed the Bloody Acre. To the west are vestiges of a Roman station, on the line of the ancient Watling-street, supposed by Camden to be the Curia Ottadinarum of Ptolemy, and by Horsley the Corstopitum of Antoninus, now called Corchester, where coins and numerous other antiquities have been found; and, in 1735, a large piece of Roman plate, twenty inches long and fifteen broad, and weighing one hundred and forty-eight ounces, was discovered in an enclosure south of the place, near the Tyne, which was claimed by the Duke of Somerset, as lord of the manor. In the churchyard, two altars, with Greek inscriptions, were dug up, one of them in honour of the Tyrian Hercules, which is esteemed the greatest curiosity of the kind in Britain. King John, expecting, from the past importance of the place, to discover buried treasure, ordered a diligent search to be made, but without effect: about a century and a half since, some bones and teeth, of an extraordinary size, were accidentally exposed by the flooding of the stream Cor, and were supposed to be the remains of oxen sacrificed at the above-mentioned altar of Hercules. In addition to the present parochial church, there were three others, viz., St. Mary's, St. Helen's, and Trinity church, of which there are not any remains, though the site of each is well known. South of the church stands a venerable tower, once used as the town gaol; and a little to the east is an eminence called Gallow Hill, where criminals were executed. The parish contains lead-ore, coal, and lime-stone: several tanners' and skinners' pits, built of brick, were discovered in a field in the neighbourhood, in 1760. A court leet and court baron is held on Easter-Tuesday, under the authority of the Duke of Northumberland, as lord of the manor. A school, supported by subscription, was established in 1824.

CORBY, a market town and parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 33 miles (S. by E.) from Lincoln, and 103 (N. by W.) from London, containing 581 inhabitants. This place, though situated on a Roman road leading to Ancaster, traces of which are still perceptible, is not distinguished by any event of historical importance, nor by any features of architectural interest. The market, which has nearly fallen into disuse, is on Wednesday: the fairs are on the 6th of August and the Monday before October 10th, for cattle and horses. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Irnham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 12. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$. The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. The grammar school was founded, in 1669, by Charles Reed, Esq., who endowed it with a rent-charge of £48. 15., for an unlimited number of boys of this parish.

CORBY, a parish in the hundred of CORBY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Rockingham, containing 707 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £13. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Earl of Cardigan. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

CORBY (GREAT), a township in that part of the parish of WETHERAL which is in ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Carlisle, containing 303 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on the east bank of the Eden; and contiguous to it, on the summit of a precipitous cliff, stands Corby castle, anciently the seat of the Salkelds, who inherited it from Hubert de Vallibus, Baron of Gilsland, from whom it passed by purchase to its present possessors, the Howards, a branch of the Norfolk family. The mansion was much modernised and improved in 1813, and the scenes and walks surrounding it abound in natural beauties. A court leet, a court baron, and a customary court, are held. A school, with a house and garden attached, was endowed, in 1720, with twenty-five acres of land, yielding about £20 per annum; the master receives a small quarterage from the scholars.

CORBY (LITTLE), a township in that part of the parish of WARWICK which is in ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Carlisle, containing 170 inhabitants. The village is situated at the junction of the Eden and Irthing rivers.

CORELY, a parish in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Cleobury-Mortimer, containing 566 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Corbet. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CORFE, a parish in the hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Taunton, containing 232 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, and in the patronage of F. G. Cooper, Esq. and Mrs. Cooper.

Seal and Arms.

CORFE-CASTLE, a borough and parish (formerly a market town) possessing separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Corfe-Castle, Blandford (South) division of the county of Dorset, 23 miles (E. S. E.) from Dorchester, and 120 (S. W.) from London, containing, with the tythings of North division and South division, 1465 inhabitants. This place, which in the Saxon Chronicle is termed Corve and Corves-geate, appears to have derived its importance from a formidable castle erected by Edgar, prior to the year 980, at the gate of which Edward the Martyr, when calling to visit his step-mother Elfrida, was, by her order, treacherously murdered. In the reign of Stephen the castle was taken by Baldwin de Rivers, Earl of Devonshire, who held it against the king: it was frequently the residence of King John, who kept the regalia at it, and by whose orders twenty-two prisoners, some of whom were among the principal nobility of Poitiers, were starved to death in its dungeons. Richard II., after his deposition in 1327, was removed from Kenilworth to this fortress, where he was detained for a short time prior to his tragical death at Berkeley castle. During the parliamentary war, Lord Chief Justice Bankes, who then resided in the castle, being with the king at York, Sir Walter Earl and Sir Thomas Trenchard assaulted the place, thinking to obtain easy possession of it for the parliament, but it was heroically defended by Lady Bankes and her daughters, with the assistance only of their domestics; until, on the approach of the king to Blandford, Captain Lawrence was sent to her assistance, when, having raised a small guard of her tenantry, she sustained a siege for six weeks, and, with the loss of two men only, preserved the castle for the king. In 1645, Corfe Castle was again besieged by the parliamentary forces under Fairfax, when, by the treachery of Lieut.-Colonel Pitman, an officer of the garrison, who deserted from the king's service, it was taken and demolished. The remains of this stupendous edifice are extensive and interesting, and plainly indicate its former prodigious strength; they occupy the summit of a lofty and steep eminence to the north of the town, with which they are connected by a bridge of four narrow circular arches, crossing a deep ravine, and leading to the principal entrance between two massive circular towers: the walls, which enclose a spacious area divided into four wards, were defended by numerous circular towers at convenient distances, of which several have declined from the perpendicular line, by the attempts made to undermine them at the siege, and of which, together with the walls, vast fragments have fallen into the vale: at the western angle are the remains of the keep, a massive octagonal tower, and in the inner ward those of the king's and queen's towers, between which is part of the chapel, with two pointed windows; the east end of the king's tower, which is separated from the main building, is overgrown with ivy, and forms a picturesque feature in these extensive ruins, which, from their elevated situation, are conspicuously grand and majestic.

The town is situated on an eminence, nearly in the centre of the Isle of Purbeck, and consists principally of two streets diverging from the market-place, in the centre of which is an ancient stone cross. The houses are in general built of stone obtained from the neighbouring quarries, and approached by a flight of steps; the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The bridge connecting the castle with the town is called St. Edward's bridge, and is said to be the spot where Edward, fainting from the loss of blood, fell from his horse and expired. At the entrance from the London road is an ancient stone bridge over the small river Corfe, by which the town is bounded on the east. The inhabitants are principally employed in the quarries and clay-pits, for which the isle is celebrated: from the principal of these, called Norden, about a mile from the town, a railway has been constructed, to facilitate the communication with Poole harbour, where the clay is shipped for the Staffordshire and other potteries: a few of the female inhabitants are employed in the knitting of stockings. The market, which was held on Thursday, has been for some time discontinued: the fairs are on May 12th and October 29th. The lord of the manor of Corfe was anciently hereditary lord-lieutenant of the Isle of Purbeck, and had the power of appointing all officers, and determining all actions or suits by his bailiff or deputy; he was also admiral of the isle, and exercised the authority of Lord High Admiral, in which capacity he was entitled to all wrecks, except in cases where there was a special grant to the contrary, and had power to array the militia: these privileges ceased on the passing of the militia act, in 1757, Mr. Bankes, then lord of the manor, having omitted to enforce his claims. Though a borough by prescription, the town was not incorporated till the 18th of Queen Elizabeth, who invested it with the same privileges as were enjoyed by the cinque-ports. Under the existing charter of Charles II. the corporation consists of a mayor, who is annually elected at the court leet of the lord of the manor, held at Michaelmas, and eight barons, who have previously served the office of mayor: the mayor and the late mayor are justices of the peace. The elective franchise was granted in the 14th of Elizabeth, since which time the borough has returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the freeholders, and in holders of leases determinable on life or lives, paying scot and lot, who are chiefly in the interest of Henry Bankes, Esq.: the mayor is the returning officer.

The living is a rectory, within the jurisdiction of the royal peculiar court of Corfe-Castle, rated in the king's books at £40. 14. 7., and in the patronage of Henry Bankes, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Edward the Martyr, is a spacious and ancient structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early style of English architecture, with a lofty square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles and ornamented with niches, in which are some sculptured decorations of singular design: it contains a few old monuments and several altar-tombs of Purbeck marble. This parish is the centre of a district of considerable extent, in which the earliest of the Sunday schools were established, under the auspices of William Morton Pitt, Esq., of Kingston House; there are thirteen of these schools, supported by subscription, in which more than four hundred children are instructed. A National school has been recently established, which is also supported by subscription. The almshouses in East-street, for six aged persons, have an endowment in land. In making a turnpike road near the town, in 1768, two stone coffins, formed of flat stones placed edgewise, and containing a skeleton, were found; and in 1753, an urn containing burnt bones was discovered, with the mouth downwards, near St. Edward's bridge. About two miles to the east of the town is an eminence called Nine Barrow Down, on which are sixteen barrows of various dimensions, chiefly circular, nine of which are in a straight line, and from this circumstance the hill has derived its name; eight or ten of them are surrounded by a narrow trench: the eminence commands a beautiful view of the port and bay of Sandwich, the British channel, and the Isle of Wight.

CORFE-MULLEN, a chapelry in the parish of STURMINSTER-MARSHALL, hundred of COGDEAN, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Wimborne-Minster, containing 544 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The navigable river Stour runs on the north of this chapelry. There is an annuity of £27 for the support of a parish school, to which Richard Lockyer, in 1706, bequeathed £17 for teaching poor children.

CORHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of MEON-STOKE, Portsdown division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Bishop's Waltham, containing 168 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of H. P. Wyndham, Esq. The church is a curious edifice, apparently of early Norman construction. In 1669, William Collins gave a school-house and £450, producing an income of £22, for which about eight poor boys are instructed.

CORLEY, a parish in the Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 4½ miles (N. N. W.) from Coventry, containing 316 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of F. Gregory, Esq.

CORNARD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, 1½ mile (S. E.) from Sudbury, containing 656 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of J. G. Sparrow, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The navigable river Stour passes on the west of this parish.

CORNARD (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, 2½ miles (S. E.) from Sudbury, containing 297 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 2. 8½, and in the patronage of Mrs. Green. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The navigable river Stour flows on the south-west of the parish.

CORNBROUGH, a township in the parish of SHERIFF-HUTTON, wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, 11 miles (N. by E.) from York, containing 63 inhabitants.

VOL. I.

CORNELLY, a parish in the western division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, ¾ of a mile (W. by S.) from Tregoney, containing 168 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Probus, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £200 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. Cornelius. The river from Tregoney is navigable on the south of this parish.

CORNEY, a parish in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (S. E. by S.) from Ravenglass, containing 289 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £9. 17. 1., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. A little northward from the village are ruins of considerable magnitude, the history of which has never been developed. Druidical remains are also abundant in the neighbourhood. Mr. Troughton, an ingenious and eminent philosophical instrument-maker, who invented and constructed the mural circle for the Royal Observatory at Greenwich, was born here. A manor court is held at Middleton-Place, a small hamlet in this parish.

CORNFORTH, a township in the parish of BISHOP'S MIDDLEHAM, north-eastern division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 6½ miles (S. S. E.) from Durham, containing 330 inhabitants. The hill at the bottom of which the village lies contains a vast quantity of limestone; and the houses are disposed in the form of a square, with a green of several acres in the centre. Dr. Hutchinson, a learned writer, was born here.

CORNHILL, a chapelry in the parish of NORHAM, otherwise Norhamshire, county palatine of DURHAM, 1½ mile (E. by S.) from Coldstream, containing 863 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Norham. The chapel, dedicated to St. Helen, was rebuilt in 1751, when a stone coffin, containing fragments of a human skeleton, and two urns of coarse earthenware, were found: in an adjoining wood is a well called St. Helen's Well, the water of which is serviceable in scorbutic and gravel complaints, but is not much used; a neat cold bath has been erected near it. A fair is held annually on the 6th of December. The castle was demolished by the Scots in 1385, and again in 1549, when a considerable booty fell into their possession: the remains consist of a tower surrounded by a ditch. Here are some medicinal springs. To the south-east is an encampment of unusual construction, the outworks having been mistaken for tumuli, the history of which has baffled the enquiries of different writers; and a quarter of a mile west is another large camp, the most remarkable north of the wall for variety and extent.

CORNSAY, a township in the parish of LANCHES-TER, north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 6½ miles (N. E.) from Wolsingham, containing 249 inhabitants. In 1811, William Russell, Esq., of Brancepeth castle, gave an endowment for a schoolmaster and a schoolmistress, who are gratuitously to instruct twenty poor boys and girls, and also built and endowed almshouses for six poor men and six poor widows, each receiving £6 per annum, with other gratuities.

CORNWALL, a maritime county, bounded on the north by the Bristol channel, on the west by the Atlantic ocean, on the south by the English channel, and on the east by Devonshire; extending from 49° 57' 30" to about 51° (N.Lat.), and from about 4° to 5° 40' (W.Lon.): it contains eight hundred and forty-nine thousand two hundred and eighty acres, or one thousand three hundred and twenty-seven square miles. The population, exclusively of the Scilly islands, amounted in 1821 to 257,447. The name is thus derived:—the part of Britain including this county and a portion of Devonshire, from its shape, was called by its ancient British inhabitants Kernou, or, as it is written by the Welch, Kerniw, signifying the horn, which word was latinized to Carnubia, or Cornubia: when the Saxons gave the name of Weales to the Britons, they distinguished those who had retired into Kernou, or Cornubia, by that of Cornweales; and their country was thus called Cornuwall, or Cornwall, that is, Cornish Wales. At the time of the arrival of the Romans, the northern part was inhabited by the Cimbri, the eastern by the Danmonii, and the remaining portion by the Carnabii. The Danmonii had subdued the two other tribes, and taken possession of their territories; but the Romans having effected the conquest of the whole island, and divided it into districts, Cornwall was included in that of Britannia Prima. Of the less authenticated portion of Cornish history are the traditions relative to the birth of King Arthur, at Tintagell castle, and his death at a battle fought near Camelford with his rebellious nephew Mordred. At a later period occurred various acts of hostility between the Saxons and the Cornish Britons, which obliged the latter to call in the Danes to their assistance. The Danish fleet arrived on the coast of Cornwall in 806; notwithstanding which, King Egbert, in 813, overran the territory from east to west. In 823, a great battle was fought at Camelford, between the Cornish Britons and the Saxons of Devonshire. Twelve years afterwards, another severe battle was fought at Hengston Hill, in the parish of Stoke-Chinsland, in which the Britons and their allies, the Danes, were defeated by Egbert. They were at length finally brought under the Saxon yoke by Athelstan, prior to which time they had occupied a great part of Devonshire, and inhabited Exeter in common with the Saxons. Athelstan having defeated Howell, King of Cornwall, near Exeter, drove the Britons out of that city, and obliged them to retire to the west of the river Tamar. Nine years after, the Cornish men having shewn symptoms of revolt, Athelstan entered their territory, and traversed without opposition to the Land's End, where he embarked his army, and, having reduced the Scilly islands, is considered to have thus completed the conquest of Cornwall. In 997, the Danes ravaged the territory, which, in 1068, was again plundered by Godwin and Edmund, sons of Harold, on their return to Ireland.

Owing probably to its remote situation, this county participated only in a very trifling degree in the military transactions of the three following centuries. In the reign of Stephen, the Cornish people declared openly for the Empress Matilda, and, although the war did not extend into their own county, they fought for her under the Earl of Cornwall, her brother. During the foreign captivity of Richard I. some slight skirmishing took place, in consequence of the seizure of St. Michael's Mount, by Henry de la Pomeroy, in behalf of Prince John. In 1471, when Queen Margaret had landed at Weymouth, the whole force of Cornwall and Devonshire joined her at Exeter, and accompanied her to the field of Tewkesbury. In September of the same year, John de Were, Earl of Oxford, having by stratagem got possession of St. Michael's Mount, established himself in that fortress, with a garrison of nearly four hundred men, and held it till the 3rd of February, 1472, when he surrendered it on condition that his life should be spared. The year 1497 is memorable for the rebellion of the commons of Cornwall, under Lord Audley, occasioned by the levy of a tax for the Scottish war; as also for the subsequent landing of Perkin Warbeck, who raised in this county a force of three thousand men, with which he marched to besiege Exeter. In 1548 occurred here the rebellion (one of those occasioned by the recent change in religion) of which Hugh Arundel, governor of St. Michael's, was one of the principal leaders. In July 1595, a small party of Spaniards, having landed near Mousehole, burned that town, Newlyn, and Penzance.

During the parliamentary war, the partisans of the king, being very numerous in Cornwall, had, about the close of the year 1642, secured entire possession of it, and volunteer regiments were raised, which made occasional incursions into Devonshire. The parliamentary forces having entered the county from Dorsetshire and Somersetshire, were defeated on the 9th of January, 1643, on Broadoak, or Bradock down, and soon after driven out of the county. Not long after this a treaty was concluded between the contending parties, for adjusting the strife in the counties of Cornwall and Devon, and for removing the war into other parts, but it was annulled by the parliament. The subsequent hostilities, owing to the strength of the royal party, were various and important: on the 16th of May, 1643, the battle of Stratton was fought; in which the royalists obtained a brilliant victory over their opponents, and drove them entirely out of the county, proceeding immediately afterwards to join their party in Somersetshire, under Prince Maurice and the Marquis of Hertford: they particularly distinguished themselves at the battle of Lansdown, and at the siege of Bristol, for which services the king addressed a letter of thanks to the county, dated Sudeley Castle, Sep. 10th, 1643, commanding it to be printed and published, and a copy to be read in every church and chapel therein, which copies are still preserved in many of the churches. In the middle of July 1644, the queen, having retreated to Pendennis castle, embarked there for France. On the 20th of the same month, the Earl of Essex entered the county at Newbridge on the Tamar, and was pursued by the king, who entered it at Polston bridge, on the 1st of August; on the 1st of September, the army under Essex capitulated at Fowey, the earl himself having the same morning made his escape thence by water. The parliamentary army, under Sir Thomas Fairfax, again entered Cornwall, in the beginning of March 1646, and the whole county was subjected to the parliament by the 23rd of April, excepting only Pendennis castle, which held out until the middle of August. In May 1648, a small force which had been raised here, in the hope of restoring Charles I., was defeated by Sir Hardress Waller. Sir John Berkeley and Col. Slingsby having been sent into Cornwall, in the autumn of 1649, to encourage their friends to take up arms for Charles II., were seized at Col. Trevanion's house, and sent prisoners to Truro. In 1650, the Scilly islands were held against the parliament by a considerable body of English and Irish forces. In May 1651, Admiral Sir George Ayscough, acting for the parliament, took all these islands, excepting St. Mary's, which was not surrendered until June. In 1667, the Dutch made an attempt to land near Cawland, in this county, but were driven back by the infantry on shore; they also made an attempt on Fowey harbour, but were repulsed.

Cornwall is within the diocese of Exeter, and province of Canterbury, and forms, together with three parishes in Devonshire, an archdeaconry, comprising the deaneries of East, Kerrier, Penwith, Powder, Pyder, Trigg-Major, Trigg-Minor, and West, and containing two hundred and three parishes, of which eighty-five are rectories, ninety-six vicarages, and twenty-two perpetual curacies; there are also three donatives, and several chapels: the spiritual court is held at Bodmin every second Friday, except during the Easter and Christmas holidays; and the archdeacon's visitations are held annually, about a month after Easter, at Launceston, Liskeard, Bodmin, Truro, Helston, and Penzance. The office of rural dean, which in many parts of the kingdom has become nearly nominal, is in Cornwall an efficient office: the rural deans are appointed annually, make regular visitations to every church within their deanery, and report the state of each at the archdeacon's visitations. For civil purposes the county is divided into the nine hundreds of East, Kerrier, Lesnewth, Penwith, Powder, Pyder, Stratton, Trigg, and West, in which are sixteen borough and market towns, viz., Bodmin, Bos-siney, Callington, Camelford, East Looe, Fowey, Helston, Launceston, Liskeard, Lostwithiel, Penryn, St. Ives, St. Mawes, Saltash, Tregoney, and Truro; four boroughs which have no market, viz., Newport, St. Germans, St. Michaels, and West Looe; and fifteen market towns which are not boroughs, viz., Boscastle, Camborne, Falmouth, Grampound, Marazion, Mevagissey, Padstow, Penzance, Polperro, Redruth, St. Agnes, St. Austell, St. Columb, St. Day, and Stratton. Of the above towns, ten are sea-ports, viz., Falmouth, Fowey, Looe, Marazion, Mevagissey, Padstow, Penryn, Penzance, Polperro, and St. Ives; besides which there are the smaller ports of Bude, Charlestown, Hayle, Helford, Porth, Port-Isaac, Portreath, or Basset's Cove, and Trevaunance. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire, and two representatives for each of the twenty boroughs. It is included in the western circuit: the spring assizes are held at Launceston; the summer assizes, and the Michaelmas quarter sessions, at Bodmin; the Easter quarter sessions at Truro; and the Epiphany and Midsummer quarter sessions at Lostwithiel. The county gaol and house of correction is at Bodmin, and there is also a county gaol at Launceston. There are ninety-nine acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1839, amounted to £118,628, and the expenditure to £115,641, of which, £98,520 was applied to the relief of the poor.

Cornwall is a royal duchy, settled by act of parliament upon the eldest son of the king. The immediate government of the county is vested in the duke, who has his chancellor, attorney-general, solicitor-general, and other officers, and his court of exchequer, with the appointment of sheriffs, &c. The important concerns of the mining trade are under a separate jurisdiction, the miners being, by ancient privilege confirmed to them by Edward III., exempt from all other civil jurisdiction than that of the stannary courts, except in cases affecting land, life, or limb. At the head of this jurisdiction is the lord-warden of the stannaries, under whom is the vice-warden; the final appeal being to the duke and his council. The vice-warden's court, held generally once a month, is a court of equity for all matters relating to the tin mines and trade, from which no writ of error lies to the courts at Westminster, but there is an appeal to the lord-warden, and from him to the duke and his council. Issues are frequently directed by the vice-warden to be tried in the stannary courts, which are held at the end of every three weeks (except in the stannary of Foymore, in which there is scarcely any business for the court), before the steward of each stannary and a jury, for determining on all civil actions arising within the stannaries, in which either the plaintiff or defendant is a privileged tinner; but the decision of each of these courts is subject to an appeal to the vice-warden, and from him to the superior authorities. Henry VII., on confirming their ancient privileges, granted that no new laws affecting the miners should be enacted by the duke and his council, without the consent of twenty-four persons, called stannators, six being chosen out of each of the four stannaries, or mining districts, of Foymore, Blackmore, Tywarnhaile, and Penwith and Kerrier. The stannators for Foymore are chosen by the mayor and corporation of Lostwithiel, those for Blackmore by the mayor and corporation of Launceston, those for Tywarnhaile by the mayor and corporation of Truro, and those for Penwith and Kerrier by the mayor and corporation of Helston; they are some of the principal gentlemen of property in the mining districts: on assembling, they elect a speaker, and their meeting is called a stannary parliament. These parliaments have been convened occasionally by the lord-warden, as the circumstances of the times have required new laws, or the revision of the old; the last met at Truro, in 1752, and continued by adjournments until September 11th, 1753. The stannary prison is at Lostwithiel, where the ancient records of the stannaries were kept previously to their being burned during the parliamentary war. The amount of the annual revenue of the duchy, in 1814, was £22,000, of which, £8,500 arose from the tin duty in this county, and £3,500 from rents of manors, fines, &c. The tin duty, before the late continental war, amounted to nearly £14,000 per annum.

The climate is remarkably salubrious, the southern coast, especially towards the Land's End, being, on account of the superior mildness of the air, much resorted to by invalids in the winter season. The surface of the county is hilly, and a large portion of it is occupied by uncultivated heaths and moors. The moors extend from near Blisland on the west, to near Northill on the east, about ten miles, and from near Davidstow on the north, to near St. Neots on the south, about twelve miles, lying in the four hundreds of Lesnewth, East, West, and Trigg; they abound with picturesque hills, and tors composed of immense masses of granite. The height of the principal elevations in the county, according to Col. Mudge's observations, is as follows: Brown Willey, by far the highest, is one thousand three hundred and sixty-eight feet above the level of the sea at low water; Carraton hill, one thousand two hundred and eight feet; Kil hill, one thousand and sixty-seven feet; Henborough, one thousand and thirty-four feet; and Cadonborough, one thousand and eleven feet. The rivers and smaller streams, owing to the inequalities of the surface, and to the many springs, are very numerous. The most considerable lakes, or pools, are, the Lo pool, about two miles long and a furlong wide, between the town of Helston and the sea, noted for excellent trout; and Dosmery pool, in the parish of Alton, about a mile in circumference, formed by the union of the waters from the surrounding hills. The high grounds, through which the great roads chiefly pass, present a dreary aspect; but there is much beautiful scenery near the southern coast, particularly at East and West Looe, Fowey, and Polperro, and on the banks of the Lynher, near Trematon castle, and Nottarbridge. Falmouth bay and Mount's bay are considered equal in beauty to any spot in Great Britain. The banks of the Tamar, in the neighbourhood of Calstock, Cothele, Pentillie, &c., abound with fine scenery. The surface of the ground in many parts of the mining district has been greatly disfigured, particularly by the stream-works of successive ages. Some of the most remarkable and interesting scenes occur along a bold line of broken coast, bounded by the Atlantic ocean and the British channel, where, amidst a great variety of striking objects, may be enumerated the magnificent groups of granite rocks at the Land's End, Cape Cornwall, and Castle Treryn, the rocks of schistus at Tintagel, and the stupendous rocks near Portreath, with a lofty perforation called Tabbin's Hole. The rocks of serpentine at Kynan's Cove, near the Lizard Point, exhibit a variety of picturesque forms. The interior of the county also presents some remarkable objects in the rude masses of granite, in various fantastic shapes, which appear above the surface. The soil is various, the prevailing kinds being the black growan, or gravelly: the shelfy, or slaty; and loam, differing in colour, texture, and degree of fertility. The first abounds in all the higher grounds, and occupies a considerable part of the area of the county, the substratum being granite, frequently in a decomposed state. This soil is not generally so fertile as the others, but is particularly well suited to the culture of potatoes; and in some parts, where the growan is mixed with a large portion of loam, the land is remarkably productive. The shelfy, or slaty, soil takes its name from the rock schistus, or soft slate, on which it lies, and of which, with a mixture of light loam, it is composed. There are three extensive and very fertile districts in which it prevails, viz., on the banks of the Alan, the Fowey, and the Fal. The loamy or alluvial soils of various descriptions, more or less mixed with clay, which is their substratum, are very fertile, and occur in many parts of the county, chiefly in the valleys and on the banks of the rivers. The serpentine soil, or that which covers the serpentine rock on Goonhilly downs, is noted for the production of that remarkable plant, the erica vagans, which is peculiar to Cornwall. Some of the high grounds on the north coast are covered to the depth of many feet with sea sand, which is composed of very minute fragments of sea shells, or coral, and appears to have been deposited by the spray of the sea at a remote period. The sea has considerably encroached upon the coast, within the last sixty years, in the hundreds of Stratton and Lesnewth, especially near Bude harbour, where the waves are rapidly wasting the sand hills. The substratum which prevails in the greater part of the county is that species of stratified rock usually called slate, or schistus, but known in the mining district by the name of killas; this, varying in substance and in colour, is found in every part of Cornwall, with the exception of those spaces which are occupied by the granite, or moorstone, the serpentine, and a few others of small extent. Of the granite there are four considerable districts: the first is nearly bounded by the church-towns of Northill, St. Neots, Blisland, St. Breward, and St. Clether; the second by those of Llanlivery, Roach, St. Denis, St. Stephens, St. Austell, and St. Blazey; the third by those of Constantine, Crowan, Redruth, and Stithians; the fourth occupying the western extremity of the county, from St. Paul and Zennor to the Land's End; and four small spots, one of them between Calstock and Callington, another east of Redruth, a third west of Breage, and St. Michael's Mount. In the southern part of the district of Meneage the substratum is serpentine, except a small portion of green-stone, being a species of trap, in the parish of St. Keverna. There are also three narrow veins of what is called iron-stone, or iron-stone, two of them bounding the granite of the Land's End toward the east and west, the third bounding the granite in the neighbourhood of Redruth, to the north-west. Some thin beds of limestone occur alternately with the slate near Padstow, and in the parishes of Carantoc and Lower St. Columb; and there are some isolated strata of limestone between Liskeard and the Tamar. Beds of clay of various colours are also found in several parts.

Some districts produce an abundance of corn, particularly that part extending from Endellion to St. Columb on the north coast, that called Meneage, the neighbourhoods of Burian and St. Germans, the lands near the Fawy, and a great part of the hundred of Stratton; but the fertility of these districts scarcely compensates for the barrenness of other parts of the county. The crops commonly cultivated are wheat, barley, and oats, including the naked oat, called in Cornwall pillis, or pill-corn, from the Cornish word piles, bald, which brings the same price as wheat; its chief use is in making gruel for calves, and as food for poultry. The manures are sea-sand, sea-weed, and damaged pilchards; the sand being well adapted for manure, from the abundant mixture of pulverized shells and coral, is conveyed into the interior in great quantities, sometimes to the distance of twenty miles. Potatoes have been cultivated to a great extent in Cornwall longer than in other parts of the kingdom: in the vicinity of Penzance the land produces two crops of them in the year; and an acre has been known to yield three hundred bushels (Winchester measure) of the early kidney potatoes, at the first crop, and at the second six hundred bushels of apple potatoes: a large quantity is sent to London, Plymouth, and Portsmouth. There are numerous orchards in all the southern parts of the county, in some parts of the hundred of Stratton, and in that part of the hundred of East which borders on the Tamar. The parishes of Calstock and Stoke-Climsland abound also in cherry orchards. Owing to the cooling effect which the sea breezes produce upon the atmosphere, the harvest is later here than in the midland counties. Nearly a fourth part of the surface of the county, from one hundred and fifty thousand to two hundred thousand acres, consists of unenclosed waste lands, which are appropriated to no other purpose than as a scanty pasture for an inferior breed of sheep, and for goats, throughout the year; and about ten thousand acres to the summer pasture of cattle and sheep. Many of the valleys are well wooded, particularly in the south-eastern part of the county, and in the vicinity of Lostwithiel and Bodmin; and there are extensive plantations at Tregothnan, Clowance, Tehidy, Port-Eliot, Carclew, &c.: the principal landowners having of late directed their attention to planting, the face of the county, in the course of twenty or thirty years, will present extensive woodland scenery, both useful and ornamental. Much of the waste land in the mining district has been rendered more valuable by assigning on lease, for ninety-nine years, determinable on three lives, to the operative miners, portions of about three acres each, at an annual rental of ten shillings, on condition that they build a cottage and cultivate the land. It is worthy of observation, that the common sea-rush, which is very abundant on the northern coast, is planted there, as the only means of arresting, by the spread of its fibrous roots, the progress of the moving heaps of sand. Several plants indigenous to the south-eastern parts of Europe grow wild in this county. The Devonshire breed of cattle, more or less mixed, prevails throughout Cornwall; those of the larger sort, which are very numerous, are sold annually to graziers and contractors: the native cattle are very small and hardy, black, short-horned, and thick-boned; draught oxen are much used. Several mules, too, are bred and employed in the mining district, where also are many goats, these animals being much more numerous in Cornwall than in any part of South Wales. The Cornish choughs, once so abundant, and so well known as having afforded an armorial device to many of the Cornish gentry, have become rather scarce.

Cornwall has been celebrated for the produce of its tin mines from very remote antiquity. Strabo, Herodotus, and other ancient writers, relate that the Phoenicians, and after them the Greeks and the Romans, traded for tin to Cornwall and the Scilly islands, under the name of the islands Cassiterides, from a very early period; and Diodorus Siculus, who wrote in the reign of Augustus, gives a particular account of the manner in which the tin-ore was dug and prepared by the Britons. At what period the coinage of the tin obtained within the earldom of Cornwall was first established, is not certain, but it was practised so early as the reign of King John. In the reign of Edward I. it was first ordered, for better securing the payment of the duty to the earl, that all tin should be brought to certain places appointed for that purpose, to be weighed and stamped, or, as it is usually termed, coined; and that no tin should be sold until this stamp had been affixed. The quantity raised annually from the Cornish mines has varied with circumstances: the average annual quantity raised in the years 1799, 1800, and 1801, was sixteen thousand eight hundred and twenty blocks; each block weighing about three hundred and a quarter, and about six blocks and a sixth making a ton: in 1811, the quantity produced was fourteen thousand six hundred and ninety-eight blocks; in 1824, twenty-eight thousand three hundred and ten; in 1825, twenty-four thousand four hundred and seventy-nine; and in 1826, twenty-five thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven. At the commencement of the present century, according to Dr. Berger, there were twenty-eight tin mines then in operation in Cornwall, of which seven were in the parish of St. Agnes, four in that of Wendron, three in Gulval, and two each in Lelant, Redruth, and Perran-Zabuloe; besides which there were thirteen mines producing tin and copper, of which four were in the parish of Redruth, four in Gwennap, three in St. Agnes, and two in St. Neot's; and one mine worked for tin and cobalt in Madron. Drakewall's tin mine, on Hingeston down, in the parish of Calstock, is said to be the oldest mine now wrought, having been in operation about one hundred and sixty years. The principal tin mines are, Huel-Vor, in the parish of Breagne; Poldice, in the parish of Gwennap; Huel-Reeth, in the parish of Lelant; and Beam, in the parish of Roche: tin-ore is also found in beds usually thought diluvial; the most extensive deposits of this description occurring at Carnon, in the parish of Feock; Pentewan, in the parish of St. Ewe; and the Gorse and Fore moors, in the parishes of Roche and St. Columb. The mineral rights of tin in the duchy manors were, about fifteen years ago, sold for a term of years. The tin-ore has always been smelted in the county: in the year 1705 a patent was obtained for smelting it in iron furnaces. Soon afterwards reverberatory furnaces were introduced; and the blowing-houses, in which the metal had before been smelted, fell into disuse. For some purposes, however, particularly for fixing the grain of the scarlet dye, the tin smelted in blowing-houses is esteemed more valuable than the other, and it bears a higher price: the smelting establishments are principally at St. Austell's, Hayle, Huel-Vor, Penzance, Porheath, and Truro.

The working of copper mines was not carried on in this county to any great extent until the close of the seventeenth century, since which the quantity of ore raised has been gradually increasing, so that, in the year 1824, were obtained one hundred and ten thousand tons of ore, producing eight thousand four hundred and seventeen tons of copper, of the value of £743,253; in 1825, one hundred and eighteen thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight of ore, producing nine thousand one hundred and forty of copper, of the value of £798,790; in 1826, one hundred and twenty-eight thousand four hundred and fifty-nine of ore, producing ten thousand four hundred and fifty of copper; of the value of £755,358. The average depth of the mines is about one hundred fathoms, but Dolcoath mine, in the parish of Camborne, which is the deepest, is about two hundred and thirty fathoms, being one hundred and eighty fathoms below the level of the sea. At Botallack and Huel-Cock, in the parish of St. Just, the workings extend beneath the ocean, the noise of which is distinctly heard by the workmen. About the year 1800 there were forty-five copper mines in operation, of which eleven were in the parish of Gwennap, six in that of St. Agnes, five in that of Camborne, four in that of Gwinear, four in that of St. Hillary, three in each of the parishes of Germoe, Crowan, and Illogan, and two in St. Neots, the remainder being scattered singly in other parishes. Besides these were the mines already described as being worked both for copper and tin; a mine in Gwinear, for copper and silver; and one in Camborne, for copper and cobalt. The most productive copper mines in 1813 were, one near Hayle, one near St. Austell, one in the parish of Camborne, four in Gwennap, one in Crowan, one in St. Agnes', and one in Calstock; the two first were the most profitable, it being calculated that the one near St. Austell yielded about £2000 a month, and that near Hayle about half as much: the Huel-Damul mine, in the parish of Gwennap, in the course of about seven years, yielded a profit to the proprietors of about £230,000: the monthly expense of working Dolcoath mine is about £4000; and that of the Consolidated mines £6000. There are about one hundred and twenty steam-engines employed in drawing the water, rubbish, and ore out of the mines, and in working the apparatus for crushing the ore: the steam power in operation at the Consolidated mines, in the parish of Gwennap, is equal to that of two thousand five hundred horses; there are several engines of four hundred and sixty horse power each. Copper-ore is said to have been first smelted in Cornwall at Polruddan, in the parish of St. Austell: about the year 1754, some gentlemen of Camborne erected furnaces for smelting the ore at Entrall, in that parish; but, for the convenience of importing coal, the works were removed to Hayle, where are now the only copper smelting-houses in the county: in these about six thousand tons of ore are smelted annually; but the greater part is still shipped to be smelted in Wales.

The produce of the lead mines is inconsiderable; the ore is chiefly found at Huel Rose, in the parish of Newlyn, and Huel Penrose, in the parish of Sithney. Gold-ore has never been found in sufficient quantities to have been regarded as an object of profit. Some portion of silver was obtained so early as the reign of Edward I.: of late years the principal silver mines have been, one in each of the parishes of Cubert, Gwinear, and Calstock; of these, the only one now worked is the Calstock mine, which about the year 1814 yielded a profit of £5000. Other minerals of less importance, which are occasionally objects of commerce, are, cobalt-ore, found at Huel-Sparnon, near Redruth; antimony-ore at North Downs, in the parish of St. Agnes; and manganese-ore in the neighbourhood of Calstock. There are iron-foundries at Perran wharf and Hayle; manufactories for gunpowder at Kennall Vale, in the parish of Stythians, and at Coscawes, in the parish of St. Gluvias; for paint and colours at Penryn; and for the preparation of oxyde of arsenic at Perran-Arworthal. The ores are found in veins, of which the prevailing direction is from east to west, being crossed by other veins extending from north to south: most of the productive mines are situated near the union of the slate and granite strata. The ores are not found indiscriminately throughout the county, but lie chiefly in fields, or districts: these are, first the "Eastern," near Calstock; secondly, the "St. Austell," in the parish of St. Blazey; thirdly, the "Gwennap and Redruth," in the parishes of Gwennap, Redruth, St. Agnes, Stythian, Kenwyn, and Kea; fourthly, the "Camborne," in the parishes of Camborne and Illogan; fifthly, the "Huel-Vor," in the parishes of Crowan, Breagne, Germoe, and Gwinear; and sixthly, the "Western," extending along the north coast from Lelant to the Land's End: in each of these there are several mines, but there are also some in the intervening tracts. The mineral rights of copper, lead, &c., in the duchy manors were sold, about the year 1812, for a term of thirty-one years. The mines are private property, and are let during a term of years for a pecuniary consideration, varying in amount from one-twelfth to one-thirtieth of the produce. A debenture is allowed by government on Norway timber and coal consumed in the mines. The Cornish slate is a considerable article of commerce: the principal quarries are those on the southern coast, those between Liskeard and the Tamar, those in the parishes of Padstow and Tintagel, and the celebrated quarry of Delabole, or Dennybal, in the parish of St. Teath, the produce of which is held in the highest esteem, and is shipped in large quantities from Port-Isaac, about five miles distant, both coastwise and to the continent: this remarkable quarry was described by Dr. Borlase, about sixty years ago, as being three hundred yards long, one hundred yards wide, and forty fathoms deep; the quartz crystals found in it are of great brilliancy. There is a great quantity of stone in various parts of the county suitable for building; it is principally taken from the porphyry dykes, or courses, which traverse both the granite and slate strata, in a direction from east to west; the granite, or moorstone, which abounds on the surface of the moors, has of late years been exported for the erection of bridges and other public buildings. An abundance of felspar clay, resulting from the decomposition of granite, is found in the parishes of Roche, St. Stephen, and St. Denis, and is shipped, chiefly at the neighbouring port of Charlestown, for the manufacture of china and fine earthenware. A yellow sandy clay, which from its resisting intense heat is called fire-clay, found near Lelant, is sent to Wales for laying the bottoms of copper furnaces.

The abundance of fish on the coast, besides supplying a great portion of food to the inhabitants, once furnished an important article of commerce, but of late years has greatly declined: the most esteemed fish, such as the turbot, sole, piper, dory, red mullet, whiting, mackarel, &c., are still caught. The London market is said to be chiefly supplied with mackarel, in the early part of the season, from the fisheries at Newlyn. But the most important branch of the Cornish fishery is that of herrings and pilchards, particularly the latter, which are peculiar to these coasts, the opposite coasts of Brittany, and those of the south of Ireland. The pilchard trade had become so extensive before the late continental war, that sixty thousand hogsheads, caught in St. Austell's bay, were exported from Fowey in one year. During the war this fishery almost wholly declined, so that in 1808 and 1810 there was no trade coastwise. In 1811 it revived a little, in consequence of the exportation of pilchards to the West Indies. Of late years a great quantity has been sold for manure, the oil being first extracted. The chief pilchard fisheries at present are in St. Austell bay and Mount's bay, on the south coast, and at St. Ives and New Quay on the north coast. Good oysters are found in great abundance in the creeks of the Hele.

Cornwall has few branches of manufacture, except such as relate to the smelting and preparation of its metallic ores: there is a carpet-manufactory at Truro; and coarse woollen cloths are made at Truro and Perran-Arworthal. The principal articles of export are tin, copper, and fish; to which may be added slate, granite, china-stone, china-clay, and potatoes. The principal imports are coal, timber, iron, hemp, and other articles of consumption in mining and fishing, besides a considerable quantity of grain and flour, grocery, and various manufactured goods. With respect to the state of the harbours, the mouths of nearly all the tide rivers on the northern coast have been nearly choked with sand cast up by the surge, or drifted in by the north-westerly winds.

The principal rivers are the Tamar, the Lynher or Lyner, the Tide or Tidi, the Leaton, the East Looe, the Duloe, the Fawy, the Fal, the Hele or Heyl, and the Alan or Camel. The Tamar rises in the parish of Moorwinstow, about three miles from the Bristol channel, and, after receiving the Tavy on the east, and the Lynher creek on the west, constitutes the fine harbour of Hamoaze; then, after forming two large creeks on the west, and one on the east, it falls into the English channel, between Mount-Edgcombe and the lands of Stonehouse and St. Michael's island, in Elymouth Sound: its course is about forty miles, nearly south, in which it receives numerous small rivers, and forms from the sea up to its source (excepting only for the space of about three miles) the boundary between this county and Devonshire. The Lynher rises about eight miles west of Launceston, and flows south-south-east, near Callington, to Noddetor, or Notter, bridge, where it becomes navigable, and spreads into the Lynher creek; four miles further it falls into the Tamar, after a course of about twenty-four miles. The Tide, or Tidi, rises on the south side of Carraton hill, near Liskeard, and becomes navigable two miles above St. Germans, below which town it is called St. German's creek, which forms a junction with the Lynher creek. The Leaton rises about four miles north-east of Liskeard, and, passing near that town, falls into the sea, after a course of twelve miles. The East Looe river rises in the parish of St. Cleer, and, becoming navigable at Sand-place, falls into the sea between East and West Looe, after a course of ten miles; the West Looe river rises in the parish of St. Pinnock, and becoming navigable at Trelawn-wear, falls into the East Looe river near its mouth. The Fawy rises in the parish of Alton, near the hill called Brown Willey, and becomes navigable (at high water) at Lostwithiel, three miles below which it joins the Leryn creek, and forms a wide and deep haven; two miles further it passes the town of Fowey, and falls into the sea after a course of twenty-six miles. The Fal rises about two miles west of Roach hills, and a mile below Tregoney its waters begin to spread, and form Lamorran creek, which is joined by Maples, or Mopas road, formed by the junction of Truro and St. Clement's creeks: two miles below this junction it reaches Falmouth harbour, which is four miles long, and upwards of a mile broad, and on the eastern side has fourteen fathoms of water; on the western side it has three creeks. At the bottom of this harbour the Fal opens into the sea, between Pendermis castle and St. Maw's and Anthony point, its channel being there nearly a mile broad. The river Hele rises on the hills in the parish of Wendron, becomes navigable (at high tide) at Gweek, and, being joined in the latter part of its course by several small creeks, forms Helford haven, within a mile below which it falls into the sea, after a course of twelve miles, with an estuary of about a mile broad. The Alan, or Camel, rises about two miles north of Camelford, and becomes navigable at Polbrock: flowing by Padstow, where it is about a mile broad, it falls into the sea about two miles below. An act of parliament was passed, in 1774, for making a navigable canal from Bude harbour to join the river Tamar, in the parish of Calstock; and another in 1769, for making a navigable canal, to be called the Polbrock canal, from Guinea port, near Wade bridge, to Dunmeer bridge, in the parish of Bodmin, with a collateral cut to, or near, Ruthern bridge, in the same parish.

The great mail-coach road from London to Falmouth, Penzance, &c., enters Cornwall at Poulston bridge, one mile and three quarters from Launceston, and passes through that town, Bodmin, Truro, the borough of Michell, and Penryn. The road to Penzance branches off between Truro and Penryn, at the village of Perranwell, and joins the turnpike road from Penryn to Helston, six miles from the latter town, through which and Marazion it passes to Penzance. The great road from London to the Land's End, by way of Devonport, enters Cornwall at Tor-point, and passes near St. Germans, through Liskeard, Lostwithiel, St. Austell, and Gram-pound, to Truro, where it joins the other great road. The mail-coach roads are very good; there is little travelling on the cross roads.

Cornwall abounds with rude monuments of its aboriginal inhabitants, much resembling those found in Ireland, Wales, and North Britain, consisting of large unwrought stones placed erect, either singly or in circles, or with others laid across; and barrows and tumuli; the numerous circles of erect stones are generally termed Dawns-mén, the stone dance. There are also several circular enclosures of stone, or earth, within which are rows of seats, having formed amphitheatres, originally designed for the exhibition of various sports, and where, in later times, the Cornish plays were acted: these are called rounds, or Plan an guare, the place of sport. Tumuli and barrows, the latter commonly called by the British name of cairns, are found in all parts of the county. Another kind of rude stone monument, most probably sepulchral, is found in many places, vis., the cromlech, which consists of a large flat stone, laid horizontally upon several others fixed upright in the ground, and is provincially called the quoit, or the giant's quoit. Those ancient instruments of mixed metal, commonly called celts, have been found here more abundantly than in any other part of the kingdom. Several artificial caves, or subterranean passages, have been discovered, consisting of long galleries running in various directions, formed of upright stones with others laid across. In the year 1749, a great number of gold coins, believed to be British, were found in the middle of the ridge of Carnbré hill. In several parts of the county may be seen rude upright stones of granite, with inscriptions of a date anterior to the Norman Conquest, and some of them coeval with the time of the Romans. The other Roman antiquities consist for the most part of coins, which of late years have been discovered in abundance in the western part of the county; and of spear-heads, swords, and other weapons of mixed metal, which have frequently been found in the ancient mines and stream-works. The situation of any of the Roman stations has not been ascertained. Ancient roads, or fragments of them, are visible in various parts of the county: one of these, believed to be British, traverses the hills, with barrows at intervals along its line, from the Land's End towards Stratton and the north of Cornwall, passing near the great British station of Carnbrê. Two Roman roads enter the county from Devonshire, one of which was a continuation of the great road from Dorchester and Exeter; the other appears to lead from Torrington and the northern part of Devonshire towards Stratton. Several of the Cornish churches retain traces of Saxon, or early Norman, architecture, some of them exhibiting curious specimens; the most considerable of which appears in the church of St. Germans, anciently the cathedral of the bishoprick of Cornwall, which was founded in 614, and annexed to the see of Crediton, in the county of Devon, in 1031: most of these churches appear to have been rebuilt in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries: the towers are extremely well constructed, and those of St. Austell and Probus are highly ornamented. In the churches of St. Kew, St. Neot, and St. Winnow, are considerable remains of ancient painted glass. Several others contain richly ornamented screens, rood-lofts, pulpits, &c. Of the ancient fonts, many are in the grotesque Saxon style. There is a great number of sepulchral monuments of the sixteenth century, consisting of large slabs of slate, with effigies carved in bas-relief. Before the Reformation there were about twenty religious houses in Cornwall, including two Alien houses, and one preceptory of the Knights Hospitallers; there were also eleven colleges, and seven ancient hospitals: the monastic remains are few, and, excepting those of St. German's priory, not remarkable. Small chapels, or oratories, erected over wells or springs to which extraordinary properties have been attributed, abound in most parts of the county, the greater part of them in ruins; and in every part of it, are ancient stone crosses, not only in the churchyards, but also on the moors, and in other solitary situations. There are also, particularly in the narrowest parts of the county, from St. Michael's Mount to the Land's End, remains of several rude circular buildings on the summits of hills, of very remote antiquity, and still denominated castles; besides several cliff castles, formed by stone walls running across necks of land from cliff to cliff on the sea coast. Of more regular fortresses the principal remains are those of the castles of Launceston, Carnbrê, Tintagel, Trematon, and Restormel, all of high antiquity, and the first believed to be of British origin. St. Catharine's castle at Fowey, and those of Pendennis and St. Mawes, were built in the reign of Henry VIII., and resemble other castles, or blockhouses, erected by that sovereign for the defence of the southern coast. The most perfect specimen of ancient domestic architecture is Cothel House, erected in the reign of Henry VII. Ancient camps and earthworks are here particularly abundant, the greater part of them being nearly round or oval. In many places along the coast, a single vallum runs across from the edge of one cliff to that of another, with a ditch on the land side. There are considerable remains of a vallum called the Giant's Hedge, which appears to have been originally about seven miles and a half in length, extending in an irregular line from the river Looe, a little above the town of West Looe, to Leryn.

Of peculiar customs still observed, the following are the most remarkable. The lighting of bonfires on the eve of St. John the Baptist's day, and on that of St. Peter's day; the custom among the reapers of dressing up the last handful of corn, and parading about with it; and that of saluting the apple-trees at Christmas, which prevails also in Devonshire; to which may be added, the Furry at Helston, and the Bodmin riding, described in the account of those places. The Cornish were formerly much addicted to sports and pastimes, especially to the miracle-play, wrestling, and hurling; the practice of wrestling, after that particular mode, still prevails here more generally than in any other part of England. The miracle-plays having been composed in the Cornish language, a dialect of the ancient British, have not survived its extinction: that language was generally spoken until the time of Henry VIII., when, by the introduction of the English Liturgy, it gradually fell into disuse, and towards the close of the last century it had entirely ceased to be spoken.

CORNWELL, a parish in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (W.) from Chipping-Norton, containing 97 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7.4.2., and in the patronage of the Crown.

CORNWOOD, a parish in the hundred of ERMINGTON, county of DEVON, 5 miles (N. E. by E.) from Earl's Plympton, containing 1057 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £33.4.7., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, contains three stone stalls. The ground is hilly, with several small mountain streams encompassing the parish, the river Yealm running through it, and the Erme separating it from the adjoining parish of Harford. A charity school is supported by subscription, aided by an endowment of £10 per annum, left by the late vicar, the Rev. Duke Young, who also bequeathed £20 per annum for medical assistance to poor people not receiving parochial relief. Cattle fairs are held on the first Monday in May, and the fourth Monday in September.

CORNWORTHY, a parish in the hundred of COLERIDGE, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Totness, containing 607 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. Charles Barter. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. An ancient priory for seven nuns of the order of St. Augustine, said to have been founded by the ancestors of the family of Edgecombe, and valued at the time of the dissolution at £63 per annum, formerly stood here: two arched gateways that belonged to it still remain. The parish, mentioned as a borough in old records, contains several acres of good productive orchard ground. The river Harborne, separating it from Ashprington, on the north, falls into the Dart, which then forms the line of separation from Stoke-Gabriel, for a short distance, making it a kind of peninsula. At Tuckerhay, a hamlet in this parish, is a flax-manufactory. There is a school for poor children, male and female, founded in 1609, by Dame Elizabeth Harris, and endowed by her with land producing about £25 per annum. Sir John Peters bequeathed a small sum from the great tithes of the parish, to be distributed to poor people not receiving parochial relief.

CORPUSTY, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 6 miles (W.N.W.) from Aylsham, containing 451 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 12. 8½., endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and is sequestrated. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CORRIDGE, a township in that part of the parish of HARTBURN which is in the western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 11 miles (W. by S.) from Morpeth, containing 27 inhabitants.

CORRINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of BARSTABLE, county of Essex, 3 miles (E.) from Horndon on the Hill, containing 235 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £22. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. R. Stephenson. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a tower apparently Norman, with two tiers of plain round arches; at the upper end are some pierced windows, and a low wooden spire. This parish is situated between Tilbury Fort and Canvey Island, and is bounded on the south by the Thames.

CORRINGHAM, a parish comprising the villages of Great and Little Corringham, in the wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Gainsborough, containing 479 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Corringham in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CORSCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of BEAMINSTER-FORUM and REDHONE, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 3½ miles (N. E.) from Beaminster, containing 632 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £21. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Munden. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a neat modern structure, erected about one hundred and fifty years since. The village is situated on the north side of a hill, and commands extensive views over the county of Somerset to the Bristol channel, and the mountains of Wales. The court-house, belonging to John Disney, Esq., lord of the manor, and now occupied as a farm-house, is nearly encompassed by a moat, over which there was formerly a drawbridge.

CORSE, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of WESTMINSTER, county of GLOUCESTER, 5½ miles (E. by N.) from Newent, containing 446 inhabitants.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 2. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. This parish is beautifully situated, and has recently been improved by the enclosure of upwards of one thousand three hundred acres of land, which anciently abounded with wood, and was called "Corse Lawn."

CORSENSIDE, a parish in the north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5½ miles (N.E. by N.) from Bellingham, containing 487 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £250 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Francis Tweddell, Esq. The church, which formerly belonged to Haly-stone priory, is a small ancient edifice, inconveniently situated at the north-west end of the parish. The river Reed passes through the centre of the parish, the soil on its banks being of a light gravelly nature, and the best in the vicinity. Limestone and coal are found here; and in the western part of the parish a lead mine was formerly worked.

CORSHAM, a parish in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, 4 miles (S.W. by W.) from Chippenham, containing 2727 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated in the king's books at £10. 16., and in the patronage of P. Methuen, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a large structure, consisting of a nave, three aisles, and a chancel, with a tower and spire in the centre, and a chapel separated from the north aisle by a richly carved screen. There are two places of worship for Independents, one for Baptists, and a disused meeting-house, formerly belonging to the Society of Friends. Corsham, or, as it is sometimes named, Corsham Regis, from King Ethelred's having had a villa here, is a considerable village, having a separate jurisdiction, the bailiff of the manor, who is chosen by the tenants from among themselves, being vested with the power of sheriff and coroner within the same. Before the Conquest, it was a lordship belonging to Tostig, Earl of Northumberland, and at the time of the Norman survey it was held by the Crown; but in the reign of Henry III. it was possessed by that sovereign's brother, Richard, Earl of Cornwall, who, as well as his successors, granted and procured for it many important and peculiar privileges, which were confirmed in later times, some of them being still enjoyed by the inhabitants. Here was anciently an Alien priory, a cell to the monastery of Marmonstier, in Touraine. During the last century, Corsham was noted for its manufacture of woollen cloths, which has been entirely discontinued; though, with a view to the revival of its disused market, Mr. Methuen built, in 1784, a market or court-house, in the centre of the village, which consists principally of one long street of well-built houses, the situation being flat, dry, and salubrious. At the south end is an hospital for six poor aged women, erected in 1688, to which a free school was formerly attached: it is under the government of a master, who occupies an adjoining lodge, and who is appointed by the Earl of Radnor, as descendant of the foundress, Lady Margaret Hungerford, relict of Sir E. Hungerford, Knt., who also bequeathed land producing £20 per annura for a school. Edward Hasted, Esq., the historian of the county of Kent, was master of this hospital, and died there in 1812. Sir Richard Blackmore, a physician and minor poet, was a native of this place. A neat free school-house, for poor children of both sexes, has recently been erected, at the expense of Paul Methuen, Esq., the present lord of the manor. Fairs for cattle are held on March 7th and September 4th.

CORSLEY, a parish comprising Great and Little Corsley, in the hundred of WARMINSTER, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.N.W.) from Warminster, containing 1609 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Bath. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a bequest yielding £9 per annum, for the instruction of children.

CORSTON, a parish in the hundred of WELLOW, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Bath, containing 368 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 3. 9., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The river Avon bounds the parish on the north-east: cornua ammonis, and various petrified shells, abound in the quarries here.

CORSTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of MALMESBURY which is in the hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Malmesbury, containing 171 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to All Saints, exhibits some portions of early English architecture.

CORTON, a hamlet in the parish of PORTISHAM, hundred of UGGSOMME, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 6 miles (S. W.) from Dorchester. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, which has long been desecrated, and converted into a barn.

CORTON, a parish in the hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N.) from Lowestoft, containing 375 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is partly in ruins, the porch and the lateral walls of the nave being nearly overspread with ivy, but divine service is still performed in the chancel; though, from its beautiful tower, still perfect, and which, from its elevated position, serves as a land-mark for mariners, and its extensive ruins, there is reason to presume that it was a structure of much magnificence: the remains of another church, or chapel, still visible at a place called the Gate, together with old ruins and foundations discovered in many parts, lead to the inference that the village of Corton was in former times much larger than it is at present, and probably the resort of fishermen at the period when the mouth of Yarmouth harbour extended nearly to this place. Coins, fossils, &c., have been found within the base of the cliff, which borders on the North sea, on its being undermined by the tide; and a stratum of oak, several feet thick, and extending in length more than two hundred yards, was exposed to the view, after a severe storm in 1812. About the same time, a part of the pelvis, or haunch bones, of the mammoth, now in Mr. Sowerby's museum, London, together with other antediluvian remains, were found half a mile northward of the place.

CORTON, a township in the parish of BOYTON, hundred of HEYTESBURY, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Heytesbury. The population is returned with the parish.

CORTON, a hamlet in the parish of CLIFFE-PYFARD, hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, county of WILTS, 5 miles (N. E.) from Calne. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, now demolished.

CORTON-DENHAM, a parish in the hundred of HORETHORNE, county of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N.) from Sherborne, containing 469 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £13. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of E. B. Portman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. Some workmen, in 1723, discovered a Roman urn in the vicinity, containing about two quarts of coins, in good preservation, of the emperors, from Valerian and Galienus to Probus.

CORTON-HACKET, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, county of WORCESTER, 5 miles (N. E.) from Bromsgrove, containing 187 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Northfield, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a small curious edifice, with a bell gable, having some decorated and ornamented portions in the later style of English architecture.

CORYTON, a parish in the hundred of LIFTON, county of DEVON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Tavistock, containing 258 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 9., and in the patronage of T. W. N. Newman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

COSBY, a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Leicester, containing, with Little Thorpe, 883 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 15., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Thomas Pares, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

COSFORD, a hamlet in the parish of NEWBOLD upon AVON, Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Rugby, containing 55 inhabitants.

COSGROVE, a parish in the hundred of CLELEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Stony-Stratford, containing, with a portion of the hamlet of Old Stratford, 559 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £14. 11. 3., and in the patronage of J. C. Mansell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. This parish is situated on the borders of Buckinghamshire, the Buckingham canal passing on its southern side, and there joining the Grand Junction canal, which enters the county here, by crossing the Ouse near its conflux with the Tow. A mineral spring, named St. Vincent's or Finche's well, exists in this parish.

COSMUS (ST.) and DAMIAN in the BLEAN, a parish in the hundred of WHITSTABLE, lathe of St. Augustine, county of KENT, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Canterbury, containing 438 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Master of Eastbridge Hospital. The church is dedicated to St. Cosmus and St. Damian. There are four parcels of land within this parish which are reputed to be within the ville of Christ Church, the inheritance belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.

COSSAL, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of BROXTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Nottingham, containing 317 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Wollaton, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The Nottingham canal proceeds through this parish to the northward, in a serpentine direction; and the river Erewash runs on the west side, separating it from Derbyshire. In the village is an hospital, founded by the ancient family of Willoughby, for four old men and four old women, who have coal, clothing, and two shillings per week each: there is a small bequest for a free school.

COSSINGTON, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCORE, county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Mountsorrel, containing 237 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £17. 7. 6., and in the patronage of T. Babington, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The parish is bounded on the west and on the south by the rivers Soar and Wreake, near which latter is a large oblong tumulus, three hundred and fifty feet long, one hundred and twenty broad, and forty high, and very steep, extending due north and south, called "Shipley hill," supposed to be the monument of some Danish king.

COSSINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WHITLEY, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Bridgwater, containing 268 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £13. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Hobbs. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The village is one of the neatest in the county, the cottages being fitted up in a tasteful style, and the gardens ornamentally laid out.

COSTESSY, a parish in the hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Norwich, containing 824 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund. Here is a handsome Roman Catholic chapel, with pointed arched windows and painted glass, erected by Edward Jerningham, Esq.

COSTOCK, or CORTLINGSTOCK, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, county of NOTTINGHAM, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Nottingham, containing 341 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. William Beetham. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. Costock is situated in a vale running east and west, and extending to the summit of a hill on each side, lying north and south, with a small brook at the bottom, dividing it into two nearly equal parts.

COSTON, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 162 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £16. 6. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

COSTON, a parish in the hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Wymondham, containing 65 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Norfolk. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

COTE, a joint hamlet with Aston, in the parish and hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bampton. The population is returned with Aston.

COTES, a township in the parish of ECCLESHALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 241 inhabitants.

COTES de VAL, a hamlet in the parish of KIMCOTE, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Lutterworth, containing 7 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, but it has long since been destroyed.

COTGRAVE, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (S. E. by E.) from Nottingham, containing 779 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consisting of two consolidated mediocrities, the first being rated in the king's books at £10. 7. 3½., and the second at £9. 14. 9½., in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, and in the patronage of Earl Manvers. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty octagonal spire. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Nottingham and Grantham canal passes through the parish, and the Fosse-road proceeds along its eastern boundary. Limestone is plentiful, and gypsum is occasionally found here. There is a small bequest for teaching poor children, and for bread for the poor, the school-house having been erected by a gift from a person unknown. A court, called the "Court of St. John of Hierusalem," which was anciently held at Shelford, under the prior of St. John of Jerusalem, and then styled the "Master and Lieutenant's Court of Shelford," is held here, and has a common seal: its jurisdiction extends over the extra-parochial liberty of Brewhouse-Yard, Kneighton, Owthorpe Tollerton, Hoveringham, Gedling, Barnby in the Willows, Stanford, Ruddington, Rempstone, Normanton upon Soar, Flintham, Hickling, Willoughby, Normanton on the Wolds, Cotgrave, Whatton, Aslackton, Scarrington, Carcolston, Carlton, and Ratcliff: all wills within the above places are proved in this court, and charters of exemption from toll throughout the king's dominions are granted to the tenants in each of these manors.

COTHAM, a hamlet in the parish of KEELBY, eastern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 9 miles (N. W. by W.) from Great Grimsby. In the reign of Stephen, Alan Muncels, or Munceaux, built here a Cistercian nunnery, in honour of the Virgin Mary, in which, at the suppression, were a prioress and twelve nuns, whose revenue was estimated at £46 per annum.

COTHAM, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, 4½ miles (S.) from Newark, containing 74 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £7. 18., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Portland. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a small dilapidated building.

COTHELSTON, a parish in the hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, county of SOMERSET, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Taunton, containing 108 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Kingston, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty. Cotelston hill is one thousand two hundred and fifty feet above the level of the sea, commanding an extensive view over eleven counties: on the summit is a round tower of great antiquity. The old manor-house, formerly the residence of the Stawells, who held the manor from the period of the Conquest until it was alienated to the family of its present possessor, still exists, but is inhabited by a farmer. A curious and very ancient custom prevails in this manor, certain tenements being held by the payment annually of so many bushels of rye, on Martinmas-day, at the manor-house; from which practice the tenants are called "Rye Renters." Limestone strata of blue lias run north and south through the parish; and some indications of copper having been observed, an attempt at mining was made, but it was soon discontinued.

COTHERIDGE, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTON, county of WORCESTER, 3½ miles (W.) from Worcester, containing 277 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £5. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. H. R. Berkeley. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

COTHERSTON, a township in the parish of ROMALD-KIRK, western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 8½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Barnard-Castle, containing 706 inhabitants. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. A free school on the National system has been established for fifty children, of whom twelve are annually clothed. The village is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Tees, contiguous to which are the remains of a castle that formerly belonged to the Fitz-Hughs, lords of the manor, but was destroyed in one of the devastating inroads of the Scots.

COTLEIGH, a parish in the hundred of COLYTON, county of DEVON, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Honiton, containing 239 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Rev. William Michell.

COTNESS, a township in the parish of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHIRE, East riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (S. E.) from Howden, containing 29 inhabitants.

COTON, a parish in the hundred of WETHERLEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Cambridge, containing 228 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £6. 12. 11., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Catharine Hall, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Dr. Andrew Downes, Greek Professor at Cambridge, and translator of the Apocrypha, died here in 1627.

COTON, a township in the parish of HANBURY, northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 6½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Uttoxeter, containing 42 inhabitants. William Wollaston, author of a learned work entitled "The Religion of Nature Delineated," was born here, in 1650; he died in 1724.

COTON, a joint liberty with Hopton, in that part of the parish of ST. MARY, STAFFORD, which is in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 5½ miles (E. by S.) from Stone. The population is returned with Hopton.

COTON in the ELMS, a township in the parish of LULLINGTON, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, 6½ miles (S. by W.) from Burton upon Trent, containing 285 inhabitants. There is a trifling bequest, made in 1773, by Thomas Wagstaff, for which five poor boys are educated.

COTTAM, a joint township with Lea, Ashton, and Ingol, in the parish of PRESTON, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Preston. The population is returned with Lea.

COTTAM, a chapelry in the parish of SOUTH LEVERTON, North-clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 8 miles (E. by S.) from East Retford, containing 74 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

COTTENHAM, a parish in the hundred of CHESTERTON, locally in that of Northstow, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6½ miles (N.) from Cambridge, containing 1488 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £36. 15., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The dairies, which are numerous in this parish and neighbourhood, are famed for producing excellent cheese. The adventurers' land, chiefly enclosed from the old river Ouse and the common adjoining, was sometimes subject to inundation, but, in consequence of late improvements, this has been in a great measure prevented. A branch of the old Ouse passes near the village, and meets the river Cam below Streatham. It was to this village that Geoffrey, abbot of Crowland, sent the monks who first established a regular course of academical education at Cambridge: in 1676 two-thirds of it were destroyed by fire. A charity school was founded by Mrs. Catherine Pepys, in 1703, who gave a house for a schoolmaster, and £100 to purchase land, directing the rent to be paid as a salary for teaching sixteen poor children; and, in 1728, Mrs. Alice Rogers augmented this endowment with £10 per annum, for five more, and the same sum annually for apprenticing poor children, a bequest for the same purpose having been previously made, in 1671, by Mr. Moreton, who gave a moiety of an estate in the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn: in 1715, Mrs. Jane Bingham gave £15 per annum for the like use. This is the birthplace of Archbishop Tenison, author of several theological works, who died in 1715.

COTTERED, a parish in the hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Buntingford, containing 410 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Broadfield annexed, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £20. 8. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Misses Jones. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

COTTERSTOCK, a parish in the hundred of WILLYBROOK, county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (N. N. E.) from Oundle, containing 159 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Glapthorn united, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Westmorland. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, with its tower, is an interesting edifice, exhibiting portions in every style of English architecture, and some remains of stained glass in the fine tracery of the windows: it anciently had a college for a provost, twelve chaplains, and two clerks, founded in 1336, by John Gifford, clerk, a canon in the cathedral church of York; three stone stalls still remain in the chancel. In 1658, Clement Bellamy bequeathed land, producing about £5 per annum, for two exhibitions to two poor scholars at Cambridge, and for apprenticing poor children.

COTTESBACH, a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by W.) from Lutterworth, containing 118 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Marriott. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

COTTESBROOK, a parish in the hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Northampton, containing 297 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £26. 0. 10., and in the patronage of Sir J. Langham, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints. An hospital for two widowers and six widows was founded by Sir James Langham, in 1651, and endowed with fifty-three acres of land in Sibbertoft, as specified in a deed enrolled in Chancery at that period. A cell of Premonstratensian canons existed here, foundations of which have been dug up, the site appearing to have been surrounded by a moat.

COTTESFORD, a parish in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (N.) from Bicester, containing 140 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

COTTESMORE, a parish in the hundred of ALSTON, county of RUTLAND, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Oakham, containing, with the chapelry of Barrow, 602 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £25. 16. 3., and in the patronage of Sir Gerard Noel, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The Oakham canal passes through this parish, in which limestone is obtained.

COTTINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of CORBY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from Rockingham, containing, with the township of Middleton, 839 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £23. 7. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In an ancient record it is stated that a house for leprosy persons existed here in the time of Henry III.

COTTINGHAM, a parish (formerly a market town) in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing, with a part of the township of Willerby, 2479 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Skidley annexed, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £300 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester, as impropiator of the rectory, which is rated in the king's books at £106. 13. 4. The church, dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin, is a spacious handsome edifice, built in 1273, with a light and beautiful tower rising from the centre: within are several elegant monuments, particularly those of the family of Burton, and in the chancel is an ancient tombstone, without date, to the memory of the founder, Nicholas de Stuteville. There are places of worship for Independents and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. Leland, in his Collectanea, states that William d'Estoteville, or Stuteville, being then sheriff of Yorkshire, entertained King John here, and obtained from that monarch, in the year 1200, permission to hold a market and fair, and to embattle and fortify his residence. This noble mansion, called Baynard castle, continued for ages a distinguished monument of feudal grandeur, but it was destroyed by fire in 1541, and only the ramparts and ditches are visible. In the 15th of Edward II., Thomas, Lord Wake, began to establish here a monastery for Augustine canons, which, about the year 1324, was removed to the extra-parochial liberty of Newton, or Howden-price: its revenue, at the dissolution, was estimated at £178. 0. 10.: there are no remains. The village, which is very agreeably situated, is large, and contains several highly respectable dwelling-houses; there are two breweries and a carpet-manufactory. A considerable portion of the land in the parish is appropriated to the cultivation of vegetables and other horticultural produce, for the market at Hull, which place is also, in a great measure, supplied with milk and butter from this neighbourhood. The market and one of the fairs have been discontinued, but a fair is held annually on the festival of St. Martin. A free school is principally supported from a bequest of land, producing about £40 per annum, by Mr. Mark Kirby, in 1712, for which twenty children are instructed. There are various minor benefactions for the poor, including a dole of £10 per annum, left by Mr. Robert Mills, for distribution at Christmas. The parish officers, in 1819, assigned about twelve acres of land, the proceeds of which were previously applied toward the repairs of the church, to twenty poor men, each of whom has erected a cottage, for which he pays annually an acknowledgment of two shillings. Adjoining the ancient road called Keldgate are some intermittent springs, which will sometimes flow copiously after remaining quiescent for several years.

COTTINGWITH (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of AUGHTON, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, 8½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Pocklington, containing 308 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A trifling bequest has been made for the instruction of children.

COTTINGWITH (WEST), a township in the parish of THORGANBY, wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, East riding of the county of YORK, 9½ miles (S. E.) from York. The population is returned with the parish. Four poor children are educated for £3. 10., being a portion of the produce of town lands.

COTTLES, an extra-parochial liberty with Little Chalfield, in the hundred of BRADFORD, county of WILTS, 3½ miles (W.) from Melksham. The population is returned with Great Chalfield.

COTTON, a township in that part of the parish of SANDBACH which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 2½ miles (E. by N.) from Middlewich, containing 81 inhabitants.

COTTON, a township in that part of the parish of WEM which is in the Whitchurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, containing 458 inhabitants.

COTTON, a chapelry in the parish of ALVETON, southern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, 5½ miles (N. E.) from Cheadle, containing 439 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of George Whieldon, Esq. The chapel was built in 1795, at the sole expense of the late Thomas Gilbert, Esq., who also endowed it, and left the payment of the repairs a perpetual charge upon his property. There are extensive quarries of limestone, worked by the Trent and Mersey Canal Company. Cotton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

COTTON, a parish in the hundred of HARTISMERE, county of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Mendlesham, containing 527 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £15. 10. 2½., and in the patronage of the Rev. P. Eade. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A bequest from an unknown donor produces about £9 per annum, for the instruction of children.

COTTON, or COTTAM, a chapelry in the parish of LANGTOFT, partly within the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, and partly in the wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Great Driffield, containing 16 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Langtoft in the Cathedral Church of York, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Langtoft.

COTTON, a township in that part of the parish of HOVINGHAM which is in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, 8 miles (S. by E.) from Helmsley, containing 112 inhabitants.

COTTON (ABBOT'S), a township in the parish of CHRISTLETON, lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Chester, containing 17 inhabitants.

COTTON (EDMUND'S), a township in the parish of CHRISTLETON, lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 4½ miles (E. by S.) from Chester, containing 85 inhabitants. It derives its name from Edmund de Cotton, who formerly possessed it.

COTTON-FAR, a hamlet in the parish of HARDINGSTONE, hundred of WYMERSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, ½ a mile (S.) from Northampton, containing, with Paper Mills and Delapree Abbey, 356 inhabitants. An hospital, dedicated to St. Leonard, for a master and leprous brethren and sisters, is stated to have been founded here by William the Conqueror, which was under the superintendence of the mayor and burgesses of Northampton: its revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £12. 6. 8.

COUGHTON, a hamlet in the parish of WALFORD, hundred of GREYTRER, county of HEREFORD, 2½ miles (S. by E.) from Ross. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, now in ruins.

COUGHTON, a parish in the Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Alcester, containing, with the hamlet of Sambourn, 926 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £9. 10. 7½., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir Charles Throckmorton, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

COULDSNOUTH, a joint township with Thompson's Walls, in the parish of KIRKNEWTON, western division of GLENDAL ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7½ miles (W. by N.) from Wooler, containing, with Thompson's Walls, 44 inhabitants.

COULSDON, a parish in the first division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, county of SURREY, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Croydon, containing 516 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £21. 16. 5½., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist.

COULSTON (EAST), a parish in the hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, county of WILTS, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Westbury, containing 99 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket.

COULSTON (WEST), a joint tything with Baynton, in the parish of EDINGTON, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, county of WILTS, containing, with Baynton, 168 inhabitants.

COULTON, a parish in the hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the chapelries of Finthwaite, Haverthwaite, and Rusland, and the townships of East Coulton, West Coulton, and Nibthwaite, and containing 1627 inhabitants. East Coulton is $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.E.), and West Coulton 5 miles (N. by E.), from Ulverstone. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Landowners, who pay their quotas to the minister's stipend. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. This parish is bounded on the east and south by the lake Windermere, and the river Leven, which issues from it, and on the west by the lake Conisterton and the river Crake. There is a meeting-house for the Society of Friends. The parochial school is endowed with fifty acres of land given by Adam Sandys, Esq., besides a small bequest from Bartholomew Pennington.

COUND, a parish in the hundred of CONDOVER, county of SALOP, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Much Wenlock, containing, with the chapelry of Cressage, 799 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £33, and in the patronage of John C. Pelham, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The river Severn runs through the parish.

COVENTRY, an ancient city, and a county of itself, locally in the county of Warwick, 10 miles (N. E.) from Warwick, 18 (S. E.) from Birmingham, and 91 (N. N. W.) from London, on the road to Holyhead, containing, exclusively of those portions of the parishes of the Holy Trinity, St. John the Baptist, and St. Michael, which are without the city, 21,242 inhabitants. In ancient records this place is called Coventre and also Conventrey, from the foundation of a convent by Canute, of which St. Osburg was abbess; in 1016, when it was burnt by Edric, the traitor, who having invaded Mercia, destroyed many towns in Warwickshire. On the site of this convent, Leofric, Earl of Mercia, and his countess Godiva, in the reign of Edward the Confessor, erected a monastery, which they munificently endowed, and decorated with such a profusion of costly ornaments, that, according to William of Malmesbury, the walls were covered with gold and silver. About this time Leofric, at the intercession of his countess, granted the citizens a charter conferring various privileges and immunities, the same being commemorated, in the south window of Trinity church, by portraits of the Earl and Countess, with a poetical legend. Leofric died in 1057, and was interred in the monastery which he had founded. Shortly after the Norman Conquest, the lordship of Coventry became vested in the earls of Chester, by marriage with the grand-daughter of Leofric. In the contest between Stephen and the Empress Matilda, the Earl of Chester taking part with the latter, his castle of Coventry was occupied by the king's forces: the earl besieged it, but the king came in person to its relief, and repulsed the earl after an obstinate conflict. In 1141, Robert Marmion, the inveterate enemy of the Earl of Chester, took possession of this monastery, from which he expelled the monks, fortified the church, and cut deep trenches in the adjoining fields, concealing them only with a slight covering: on the earl's approach to dislodge him, Marmion drew out his forces, but, forgetting the exact situation of the trenches, his horse fell with him to the ground, and in this situation his head was severed from his body by a private soldier. In 1355, the city was surrounded with walls three miles in circuit, three yards in thickness, and six yards in height, strengthened with thirty-two towers, and containing twelve principal gates, each defended by a portcullis. In 1397, Richard II. appointed this town for the decision, by single combat, of the quarrel between the Dukes of Hereford and Norfolk; and magnificent preparations were made on Gosford Green for this encounter, which, however, was prevented by the banishment of the combatants; a measure which ultimately caused the deposition of the king. In 1404, the Duke of Hereford, who had become Duke of Lancaster, by the death of his father, John of Gaunt, on his return from exile, having succeeded to the crown by the title of Henry IV., held a parliament here in the great chamber of the priory, which, from the exclusion of all lawyers, was called Parliamentum Indoctorum. In 1411, the Prince of Wales, afterwards Henry V., was arrested at the priory by John Horneby, mayor of the city, probably for some tumultuous excess, the particulars of which are not recorded. The city, with a district of four miles around it, was severed from Warwickshire, and erected into a county of itself, under the designation of the "City and County of the City of Coventry," by charter of Henry VI., in 1451; and in 1459 the same monarch held a parliament in the chapter-house of the priory, which, from the number of attainders passed against the Duke of York and others, was, by the Yorkists, called Parliamentum Diabolicum. In 1465, Edward IV. and his queen kept the festival of Christmas at Coventry; and three years after, the Earl of Rivers and his son, who had been seized by a party of the northern rebels at Grafton, were beheaded on Gosford Green. In the war between the houses of York and Lancaster, Richard, Earl of Warwick, marched with all his ordnance and warlike stores into this city, where he remained for a short time, during which Edward IV., on his route from Leicester, attempted to force an entrance; but being repulsed, he passed on to Warwick, and thence to London, where having gained a battle in which the Earl of Warwick was slain, he returned to Coventry, and deprived the citizens of their charter, for the restoration of which they were compelled to pay a fine of five hundred marks. In 1472, severe enactments were passed by the magistrates against women of immoral character, who were publicly exhibited in carts on the market days. Henry VII., on his route from Bosworth Field in 1475, was received here with every demonstration of congratulation and respect.

In the early part of the sixteenth century, Coventry became the theatre of religious persecution: the Bishop of Chester, coming to examine persons accused of heresy, condemned seven to the stake, which sentence was executed in the little park: in 1554, Mr. Hopkins, sheriff for the city, was confined in the Fleet prison, on a charge of heresy, but was liberated after great intercession, and fled the kingdom; and in the following year Mr. Lawrence Saunders, Robert Glover, A.M., and Cornelius Bungey, were burnt for their religious tenets. In 1565, Queen Elizabeth visited the city; and in 1566, Mary, Queen of Scots, was conducted to this place, where she was detained a prisoner; and in 1569, on her removal from Tutbury castle, she was for some time at the Bull Inn, in the custody of the Earls of Shrewsbury and Huntingdon. In 1607, the city suffered considerable damage from an inundation, which entered two hundred and fifty-seven houses, washing away furniture and utensils of various kinds: the flood rose to the height of three yards, and, after remaining for three or four hours, suddenly subsided; clusters of white snails were afterwards found in the houses and in the trees, supposed to have collected prior to the influx of the water, which, though observed at the distance of nearly a mile from the town, was so instantaneous in its approach, as to preclude all means of precaution. King James, attended by a large retinue of the nobility, visited the city in 1617, on which occasion a cup of pure gold, weighing forty-five ounces, and containing £100, was presented to him by the corporation, which his Majesty ordered to be preserved with the royal plate for the heirs of the crown. During the parliamentary war, Charles I., having erected his standard at Nottingham in 1641, sent orders to the mayor and sheriffs of Coventry to attend him at that place; but the majority of the citizens embraced the cause of the parliament, and a party having obtained possession of the magazine in Spon tower, which the Earl of Northampton had directed the aldermen to secure for the royalists, kept it for Lord Brooke, who removed it to Warwick castle. The parliamentary party in the city, having been reinforced with four hundred men from Birmingham, held it against the king, who sent a herald to demand entrance, which being refused, some cannon were planted in the great park and on Stivichall hill, which played upon the town, but without effect. Finding the citizens resolved to defend their gates, and learning that Lord Brooke was approaching with his army from London, the king drew off his forces, and the city was now regularly garrisoned by the parliament, and further preparations made for its defence. The women were employed to fill up the quarries in the park, that they might not afford any shelter to the royal troops; and for this purpose they assembled in companies, by beat of drum, and marched in military array, with mattocks and spades, headed by an amazon who carried an Herculean club on her shoulder, and conducted from their work by another, who discharged a pistol as a signal of dismissal. On the Restoration of Charles II., that monarch was proclaimed by the mayor and aldermen, attended by a vast concourse of the inhabitants, with the most triumphant acclamation: the greatest rejoicings took place, and the public conduits of the city were made to flow with wine; a deputation was sent to present to him a basin and ewer, and fifty pieces of gold, and to surrender all the king's lands. In 1662, the Earl of Northampton, with a large retinue of the neighbouring gentry, and a detachment of the county troops, was sent with a commission from the king to make a breach in the walls, as a punishment to the inhabitants for shutting their gates against his father; but the earl so far exceeded the limits of his commission as to leave only a few fragments of them remaining: of the gates, which were only dismantled, there are some yet standing; the Bastille, Swanswell, and Cook-street gates, are the most entire.

The city is pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence, bounded on the north-east by the river Shirburn and the Radford brook, which, running from north to south, unite within the town. In the more ancient part, the streets, with the exception of that part of the High-street called the Cross-cheaping, or the market-place, are generally narrow, partially paved, and lighted partly with oil and partly with gas: many of the houses are in the style of the sixteenth century, built of timber frame-work and brick, with the upper stories projecting, and present a dark and sombre appearance, occasionally enlivened by an intermixture of others of more modern structure, of which several are spacious and handsome: the suburbs have within the last few years been greatly extended, several new streets have been formed, and ranges of handsome houses erected: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from conduits made by the corporation, and by water-works under the superintendence of two public companies. The public library, established in 1791, has a proprietary of about two hundred members, and is well regulated by a committee: the theatre, a neat and conveniently arranged building, is opened occasionally; and assemblies and concerts take place periodically at St. Mary's and Drapers' Halls: the environs are pleasant, abounding with interesting scenery, and with some agreeable promenades. The barracks, erected in 1792, on the site of the old Bull Inn, are a handsome range of building, fronted with stone, and ornamented with the king's arms over a window above the principal gate-way: the establishment is for a field officer and fifteen subalterns, and comprises a riding-house, an hospital, and stabling for one hundred and eighty-eight horses. The making of caps was the principal trade of the town prior to the year 1436, when the manufacture of woollen and broad cloth was introduced, and continued to flourish till the end of the sixteenth century: at this time Coventry was celebrated for a peculiar kind of blue thread, which, from the permanence of its colour, obtained the appellation of "Coventry true blue." About the beginning of the eighteenth century, striped and mixed tammies, camlets, shalloons, and calimancoes, were manufactured to a considerable extent, to which succeeded the throwing of silk, the weaving of gauzes, broad silks, and ribands, and the manufacture of watches. The weaving of ribands forms at present the staple trade: a great quantity is exported; an immense number of pieces are sent off weekly for the supply of the wholesale dealers in London, and a considerable quantity is, by means of travelling agents, distributed to every town in the kingdom. In 1808 there were two thousand eight hundred and nineteen silk and riband looms in the city alone, exclusively of those in the adjacent villages; but since that time the number has considerably increased. The trade, though at present greatly depressed, affords employment to nearly sixteen thousand persons in the city and suburbs; and, from the introduction of the French looms and machinery, an infinite variety in the pattern, and an elegance in the texture, have been attained, which give a distinguished superiority to the ribands manufactured here. The manufacture of watches, for which Coventry was for many years so celebrated, has of late been rapidly declining. The situation of the town is peculiarly advantageous for trade, being central to the ports of London, Liverpool, Bristol, and Hull, and having, by means of the Oxford and Coventry canals, which form a junction at a short distance to the north, a direct communication with the manufacturing districts of Lancashire and Yorkshire: the canal office is a small but handsome building, with a portico of the Grecian Ionic order. The market, which is on Friday, is held in various parts of the town; for corn, in the Cross-cheaping, now a spacious area enlarged by the removal of a middle range of old houses, by which it was divided, and in which was the ancient cross, one of the most beautiful in the kingdom, taken down in 1771; for cattle, in Bishop-street; for pigs, in Cook-street; and for butter, eggs, and poultry, in an area behind the mayor's parlour, where a market-house has been erected. Fairs for three days each are held on April 21st, August 16th, and October 21st, for cattle and merchandise; to these fairs are attached courts of pie-powder, and the corporation are entitled to the same tolls as are taken at Smithfield market, in London. The great shew-fair takes place on the Friday after Corpus Christi day, and continues for eight days, on the first of which the commemoration of Lady Godiva's procession is occasionally revived, by a representative obtained for that purpose: this ceremony has its origin in a tradition that the citizens being greatly oppressed by the severe exactions imposed on them by Leofric, his countess undertook to intercede for their relief, but was apparently frustrated in her suit by a promise of exemption only upon the condition of her riding naked through the city on horseback; it is further recorded in the traditionary legends of the city, that, having obtained her husband's permission, and trusting for concealment to the length of her hair, and to the discretion of the inhabitants, who were ordered, upon pain of death, to shut themselves up in their houses, she performed the task, and obtained for the city a charter of "freedom from servitude, evil customs, and exactions." The tradition also records that a tailor, who disobeyed the injunction, was instantly struck blind; and a figure, called Peeping Tom, carved in wood, and placed in a niche at the corner of a house in High-street, is still preserved in memory of this event, which, whether real or fictitious, is closely interwoven with the history of the place.

The city received its first charter of incorporation from Edward III., in 1344: in 1384, Richard II. ordered the sword of state to be borne behind the mayor in civic processions, as a mark of disgrace, for his not having duly administered justice in the execution of his office, which order that monarch revoked in 1392. Under the charter of Edward III., confirmed in succeeding reigns, and extended in that of James I., the government is vested in a mayor, recorder, two sheriffs, a steward (who must be a barrister), a coroner, two chamberlains, two wardens, ten aldermen, a superior council of thirty-one, and a second council, or grand inquest, of twenty-five members, assisted by a town-clerk, sword-bearer, mace-bearer, and subordinate officers. The mayor, sheriffs, steward, and coroner, are chosen annually by the council of thirty-one, in the council-chamber in St. Mary's Hall, and sworn into office on All Saints' day: the aldermen are elected by the same body, from the grand inquest, as vacancies occur: the mayor, recorder, and aldermen, are justices of the peace, and have exclusive jurisdiction within the city and county of the city. The city is divided into ten wards, each under its respective aldermen, and comprises thirteen fraternities, or trading companies, the numbers of which, with the exception of the Drapers' company, who still retain their hall, have been greatly reduced. The freedom is obtained only by a servitude of seven years to one trade within the city and liberties. Among the privileges enjoyed by the freemen is that of depasturing cattle upon the "Lammas Grounds," a tract of three thousand acres, appropriated to that use from Lammas to Candlemas by especial grant. The corporation hold quarterly courts of session, at which the mayor, assisted by the steward, presides: these courts are held by adjournment in the mayor's parlour, on the last Friday in every month; they have power to try capital offenders, but this they generally delegate to the judge travelling the midland circuit. A court of record has been held by prescription from a very remote period, the date of which is certainly anterior to the reign of Henry VI., for the recovery of debts to any amount, at which the mayor and sheriffs preside; and a county court is held monthly by adjournment, in the mayor's parlour, where also either the mayor, or some of the city magistrates attend daily, to decide on affairs of police.

The city first exercised the elective franchise in the 26th of Edward I., but there were partial intermissions until the 31st of Henry VI., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the freemen not receiving alms, of whom the number is about three thousand: the sheriffs are the returning officers. The county-hall, in which the sessions and other courts are held, is a neat modern building faced with stone, and ornamented with pillars of the Tuscan order, rising from a rustic basement, and supporting a handsome cornice in the centre of the front: adjoining is the gaoler's house, a neat brick edifice; and behind it the prison, which has been recently rebuilt. St. Mary's Hall, appropriated to the larger meetings and civic entertainments of the corporation, is a beautiful and magnificent structure in the later style of English architecture: it was originally built by the master and wardens of St. Mary's Guild, in the fourteenth century, and subsequently enlarged and beautified for the use of the corporation: the exterior, with its richly decorated windows, and elaborately groined archway, has an imposing grandeur of effect; the interior, which is replete with the richest ornaments of the decorated style, comprises a splendid banquet-hall, adorned with well painted portraits of several of the sovereigns, who have been entertained within its walls; the windows, of which the tracery is gracefully elegant, are ornamented with painted glass: at the upper end is a fine piece of tapestry, elegantly worked in compartments; and on the north side is a small recess, with a beautiful oriel window, above which the original carved roof is still entire : the council-chamber is fitted up in the ancient style, and retains, among its ornaments, many relics of feudal grandeur. The Drapers' Hall, nearly adjoining, is a neat building, with a stone front of the Tuscan order, of chaste and pleasing design.

Coventry forms a diocese jointly with Lichfield, of which the seat was fixed in this city from 1102 till 1188, when it was removed to Lichfield : the diocese comprehends the whole counties of Derby and Stafford (excepting the parishes of Broom and Clent in the latter), the greater part of Warwickshire, and nearly half of the county of Salop, and comprises five hundred and fifty-seven parishes. Of the cathedral, once a sumptuous and magnificent structure, formerly the Benedictine monastery founded by Leofric, of which at the dissolution the revenue was £731. 19. 5., only the slightest vestiges are discernible, in the mouldings of arches and outlines of windows and doors worked in with the materials of a modern building, which has been erected on the site of one of its ancient towers, and some indistinct remains of what are supposed to have been the conventual buildings. The city comprises the parishes of St. Michael, the Holy Trinity, and St. John the Baptist, the last having been constituted a parish by act of parliament in 1734, all in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. The living of St. Michael's is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £26. 15. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is a splendid structure, principally in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty tower of four stages, panelled and ornamented with niches in which were finely sculptured figures, and surmounted by a lofty and finely proportioned octagonal spire, the whole height being, from the base of the tower, three hundred feet, exactly equal to the length of the church : the interior is finely arranged, and derives great beauty from the loftiness of its elevation, and the delicacy of the piers which support the roof ; the clerestory windows of the nave form a noble range of large dimensions, and are ornamented with ancient stained glass : the chancel, which is of earlier date, was formerly a chapel erected in 1133, to which the nave and aisles were subsequently added ; it deviates from a straight line, and forms an angle with the line of the nave, which sensibly offends the eye. The living of the parish of the Holy Trinity is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown : the church, which is of earlier date than the more recent part of St. Michael's, is a venerable cruciform structure in the later style of English architecture, with a well proportioned tower rising from the intersection, and surmounted by a handsome octagonal spire : the proportions of the interior are more massive than those of St. Michael's ; and, though less elaborate in its details, this church preserves throughout a consistent unity of design : the oak roof is divided into panels, decorated with gilded mouldings ; the pulpit is of stone similarly ornamented. The living of St. John's is a rectory not in charge, endowed with £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation : it is always annexed to the head-mastership of the free school, and includes also a lectureship for the second master, the former taking two-thirds and the latter one-third of the income. The church, formerly a chapel erected in honour of our Saviour, upon ground given by Isabel, queen-mother of Edward III., is an interesting structure, quadrangular in the lower part, and cruciform in the upper ; from the centre rises a square embattled tower, with circular turrets at the angles, and supported on four finely clustered piers and arches of singular beauty : the interior is characterised by a simple grandeur of style, which more than compensates for the want of elaborate embellishment. To the south of the city was the monastery of the Grey friars, the brethren of which were famous for their skill in the representation of religious dramas : it was originally founded in 1234, and the church was built in 1358, for which Edward the Black Prince granted the friars permission to take stone from the quarries in his park at Cheylesmere : the monastery was destroyed at the dissolution ; all that remains is the very beautiful steeple of the church, consisting of an octagonal tower, with a pierced parapet, from which rises a lofty and finely proportioned octagonal spire ; to this a body is now being annexed by subscription among the inhabitants, aided by a grant from the parliamentary commissioners. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics.

The free grammar school was founded, in the reign of Henry VIII., by John Hales, Esq., who endowed it with lands at that time of the value of two hundred marks, but which now produce an annual income of £900, of which the head-master receives two-thirds and the second master the remainder ; it is under the management of the corporation, by whom the masters are appointed : there are three exhibitions of £10 each, and two of £5 each per annum, to either of the Universities ; two fellowships in St. John's College, Oxford ; and one fellowship and one scholarship in Catharine Hall, Cambridge, belonging to this establishment. The schoolroom is the remaining part of a church which anciently belonged to the hospital of St. John, built in the reign of Henry II., the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £83. 3. 8. ; it is a spacious room, lighted with windows in the decorated style, with rich tracery, and fitted up with the ancient carved seats, removed from the choir of the church belonging to the monastery of the White friars : the western end, taken down to widen the street, has been rebuilt in an appropriate style, and ornamented with two handsome turrets. Sir William Dugdale, the celebrated antiquary, and Archbishop Secker, received the rudiments of their education at this school. The Bablake Blue-coat school, occupying one side of the quadrangle of the Bablake hospital, was founded, in 1566, by Mr. Thomas Wheatley, ironmonger, and mayor of the city, in consequence of an accidental acquisition of wealth, by the delivery of barrels of cochineal and ingots of silver in mistake for steel gads, which he sent his agent to purchase in Spain. The original endowment, increased by subsequent benefactions, produces £340 per annum, which is applied to the clothing, maintenance, and instruction of twenty-six boys, who receive a small sum as an apprentice-fee on their leaving school ; they are nominated by the corporation, who are trustees. A charity school, for clothing and instructing forty girls, of which number six are maintained in the house for the last year, and qualified for service, is supported by subscription. The National school, also supported by subscription; for an unlimited number of children of both sexes, is a large handsome building of brick, in the antique style, having the master's house in the centre, and on each side of it a large schoolroom, supported on brick columns and groined arches, affording a sheltered area for a playground. Another school, situated in Cow-lane, for clothing and instructing forty children, has an endowment in land, with a house for the master, given by Mr. W. Baker, and augmented by subsequent benefactions: there is also a Lancasterian school, supported by subscription; and there are Sunday schools connected with the church and the dissenting congregations. Bond's hospital was founded, in 1506, by Mr. Thomas Bond, draper, who endowed it with lands for the maintenance of ten poor men and one woman: the number of pensioners, in consequence of the improvement of the income, has been increased to forty-eight, who receive each a weekly allowance of six shillings; thirteen of them are resident in the hospital, and have each an apartment, firing, and washing, free of expense. The building, occupying one side of the Bablake quadrangle, is an ancient edifice of timber frame-work and brick, in the Elizabethan style, but much of its original character has been destroyed by repairs and alterations. The Grey friars' hospital, so called from its proximity to a monastery of that order formerly existing here, was founded in 1529, by Mr. William Ford, who endowed it for five aged men and one woman; from the increased amount of the income, there are at present eighteen women in this establishment, who receive a weekly allowance of 2s. 6d., with additional advantages: the buildings, which form a long and narrow quadrangular area, almost darkened by the projection of the upper stories, are in the style of domestic architecture prevailing in the reign of Elizabeth; the timber frame-work, richly carved, and decorated with cornices and canopies over the central windows and doorways is, as perfect as when first erected, and these beautiful almshouses are deservedly admired as the most entire and elegant specimen of the kind in the kingdom. The house of industry occupies the site, and includes the remains, of an ancient monastery of Carmelites, founded in 1342, by Sir John Pulteney, lord mayor of London, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £7. 13. 8.: part of the arched cloisters, beautifully groined, the refectory, and dormitory, are still remaining, with the beautiful entrance gateway, richly groined and ornamented with three canopied niches in front; to these remains has been added a large and handsome brick building, well adapted to the purpose: the management of this establishment, which is also a comfortable asylum for the aged poor, is vested in a body of guardians. The corporation have at their disposal funds to the amount of £3000 per annum, for distribution among the poor, arising chiefly from Sir Thomas White's donation of £1400 in the reign of Henry VIII., exclusively of considerable sums to be lent for nine years to apprentices of good character, on the expiration of their indentures; in this loan natives of Leicester, Northampton, Nottingham, and Warwick, participate. At Allesley, about a mile distant, is a petrifying spring, not much used. William Macclesfield, created Cardinal by Pope Benedict XI.; John Bird, Bishop of Chester, who was deprived of his see in the reign of Mary; Humphrey Wanley, the antiquary; and Nehemiah Grew, the botanist, were natives of this city; and Dr. Philemon Holland, the translator of Camden's Britannia, resided here for the greater part of his life. Coventry gives the title of earl to the family of that name.

COVERHAM, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W. by W.) from Middleham, comprising the townships of Agelthorpe, Caldbridge, Carlton, Carlton-Highdale, Melmerby, and West Scrafton, and containing 1170 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. S. Hardcastle. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The river Cover runs near this village, over which there is a bridge of one arch, and near it are the remains of a priory of White canons, founded in the thirteenth century, at Swainby, in the parish of Pickhall, and removed hither soon afterwards: its revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was valued at £207. 14. 8. A school, in which between twenty and thirty children are educated, is endowed with a bequest of a messuage and lands by John Constantine, in 1724, producing £23 per annum.

COVINGTON, a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Kimbolton, containing 139 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 1. 8., and in the patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

COWARNE (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Bromyard, containing 134 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Ullingswick, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford.

COWARNE (MUCH), a parish in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Bromyard, containing 585 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £14. 19. 7., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

COWBIT, a parish in the wapentake of ELLOE, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Crowland, containing 511 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, and in the patronage of the Devises of Mrs. Miller. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was, with the cemetery, consecrated in 1486, by Bishop Russell. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In 1712, Joseph Andrew endowed a school with £12. 10. per annum, arising from a bequest of land.

COWDEN, a parish in the hundred of SOMERDEN, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 9 miles (W.) from Tonbridge-Wells, containing 683 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. 11½., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Harvey. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, is a small building, with a handsome spire. One of the four principal heads of the Medway, which rises at Gravelley hill, in Sussex, directs its course eastward along the southern side of this parish, and separates it from the county of Sussex. Iron-ore is found in the parish. A fair is held on the 2nd of August, for oxen and pedlary. There is a trifling endowment for the support of five almshouses.

COWDON (GREAT and LITTLE), a parish partly in the middle, but chiefly in the northern, division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, East riding of the county of YORK, containing 146 inhabitants. Great Cowdon is $14\frac{1}{2}$ miles, and Little Cowdon $12\frac{1}{2}$, (N. E.) from Kingston upon Hull. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese, of York, rated in the king's books at £2. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church has long been swallowed up by the sea, and the parish is commonly considered a township partly in the parish of Aldborough, but chiefly in the parish of Mappleton.

COWES (EAST), a hamlet in the parish of WHIRPINGHAM, liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile (S. E. by E.) from West Cowes. The population is returned with the parish. This village is situated on the eastern side of the mouth of the river Medina, and owes its origin to a fort, or blockhouse, erected by Henry VIII., for the defence of the harbour, of which no traces are discernible. Here is a custom-house, where vessels arriving in the harbour pay the government duties.

COWES (WEST), a sea-port and chapelry in the northern division of the parish of NORTHWOOD, liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Newport, and 86 (S. W.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. This place owes its origin to the erection of a small castle on the western bank of the river Medina, which commands the entrance of the harbour: this fortress, which was built in the reign of Henry VIII., is a small edifice with a semicircular battery mounting eleven pieces of heavy ordnance, and contains accommodation for a captain and a company of artillery. From the excellence of the harbour, in which ships may find shelter in stormy weather, and from which they may sail out either to the east or west, as the wind may serve, Cowes has become a populous and flourishing town; and, from its advantageous situation for ship-building, a private dock-yard has been established, in which several men of war have been built for the royal navy. The town is pleasantly and romantically situated on the declivity of an eminence rising from the mouth of the river Medina, by which it is separated from East Cowes. The streets are narrow, and the houses in general inelegant, but, rising above each other from the margin of the river to the summit of the acclivity on which they are built, they have a pleasing and picturesque appearance from the opposite bank, and are seen with peculiar advantage from the sea, of which they command interesting and extensive views. The excellence of its beach, the pleasantness of its situation, and the salubrity of the air, have rendered it a fashionable place for sea-bathing, for which purpose several respectable lodging-houses have been erected for the accommodation of visitors, and numerous bathing-machines are ranged on the beach, to the west of the castle: the environs abound with elegant mansions and marine villas, the grounds being laid out with exquisite taste. In addition to the amusements which the town affords, there are frequent opportunities for aquatic excursions. The Yacht club, consisting of His Majesty and about sixty noblemen and gentlemen, established here for many years, celebrate their annual regatta generally in August or September, on which occasion more than two hundred yachts and other vessels are assembled, forming a spectacle truly splendid and magnificent. An extensive trade is carried on in provisions and other articles for the supply of the shipping: the principal exports of the island are wheat, flour, malt, barley, wool, and salt, large quantities of which are shipped for France, Spain, Portugal, and the Mediterranean shores. The number of vessels belonging to this port in 1829 was one hundred and fifty-one, averaging thirty-nine tons' burden; in 1826, nine British and four foreign vessels entered inwards from foreign ports, and nine British and two foreign vessels cleared outwards. Packets sail daily to Southampton and Portsmouth, and passage boats to Newport and Ryde. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Carisbrooke. The chapel, erected in 1657, and consecrated in 1662, is on the summit of the hill on which the town is situated. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

COWFOLD, a parish in the hundred of WINDHAM and EWHRST, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, 7 miles (S. S. E.) from Horsham, containing 822 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

COWGROVE, a tything in the parish of WIMBORNE-MINSTER, hundred of BADBURY, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 2 miles (W.) from Wimborne-Minster, containing 638 inhabitants.

COWICK, a chapelry in the parish of ST. THOMAS the APOSTLE, EXETER, hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, 1 mile (S. W. by S.) from Exeter. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket. A Benedictine monastery, a cell to the abbey of Bec in Normandy, was established here by William, son of Balwine, in the time of Henry II., but there are not any remains of it.

COWICK, a township in that part of the parish of SNAITH which is in the lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S. E. by E.) from Snaith, containing 905 inhabitants. There is a small endowed school.

COWLAM, a parish in the wapentake of BUCKROSE, East riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Great Driffield, containing 33 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £11. 11. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. F. F. Bowes. The church contains a curious ancient font. From numerous foundations discovered here, it is probable that Cowlam was once a large town.

COWLEY, a hamlet in the parish of DRONFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Dronfield, with which the population is returned. Here is a sulphureous spring.

COWLEY, a parish in the hundred of RAPSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Cheltenham, containing 273 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £9. 1. 10½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Ermin-street traces the southern boundary of this parish.

COWLEY, a parish in the hundred of ELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by E.) from Uxbridge, containing 349 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of E. Hilliard, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. Barnard Dognall, in 1761, bequeathed four acres of land, producing £10 per annum, for the parish clerk, on condition of his keeping the church free from dust, and the churchyard from weeds and other annoyances.

COWLEY, a parish in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Oxford, containing 472 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. James. There was anciently a preceptory of the Knights Templars in this parish.

COWLEY, a township in the parish of GNOSALL, western division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (E.) from Newport, containing 498 inhabitants.

COWLING, a parish in the hundred of RISBRIDGE, county of SUFFOLK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Clare, containing 790 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. There are fairs on the 31st of July and the 17th of October.

COWLING, a joint township with Burrel, in that part of the parish of BEDALE which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bedale. The population is returned with Burrel.

COWLING, a township in the parish of KILDWICK, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWGROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S.W.) from Skipton, containing 1870 inhabitants, who are chiefly employed in the cotton manufacture. A school is endowed with about £16 per annum, arising from land bequeathed by Hugh Smith, in 1665.

COWPEN, a township in the parish of HORTON, eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (E.S.E.) from Morpeth, containing 1765 inhabitants. Here are extensive coal mines.

COWPEN-BEWLEY, a township in the parish of BILLINGHAM, north-eastern division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Stockton upon Tees, containing 132 inhabitants.

COWSBY, a parish in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.E.) from Thirsk, containing 91 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Allerton and Allertonshire, belonging to the Bishop of Durham, rated in the king's books at £5. 11. 0½., and in the patronage of Thomas Alston, Esq. Here is an hospital for decayed tenants, supposed to have been founded by Lord Crewe.

COWSHUISH, a tything comprising the hamlet of Toulton in the parish of KINGSTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, county of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from Taunton. The population is returned with the parish.

COWTHORN, a township in the parish of MIDDLETON, PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (N.N.W.) from Pickering, containing 32 inhabitants.

COWTHORP, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Wetherby, containing 120 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 15. 10., and in the patronage of T. Starkie, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

COWTON (EAST), a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (N.E. by E.) from Catterick, containing 338 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £4. 6. 10½. The patronage is attached conditionally to the Mastership of Kirkby-Ravensworth Hospital, or otherwise in the patronage of the Wardens and Hospitaliers. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A free school established here has an annuity of £27 from Kirkby-Ravensworth school fund.

COWTON (NORTH), a township in that part of the parish of GILLING which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E.) from Catterick, containing 270 inhabitants.

COWTON (SOUTH), a chapelry in that part of the parish of GILLING which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from Catterick, containing 148 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Gilling. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. On the moor between this and North Cowton was fought the famous battle of the Standard, in 1138, between the English and the Scotch, when the latter were defeated with the loss of eleven thousand men: the spot is still called Standard Hill, and the holes into which the slain were thrown, the Scots' Pits.

COXFORD, a hamlet in the parish of EAST RUDHAM, hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Fakenham. The population is returned with the parish. William Chene founded a priory at Rudham, in the reign of Stephen, which was subsequently removed to this place. Among other grants, the prior obtained license, in the 11th of Henry III., to hold a fair annually on the festival of the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr; and in the 3rd and 15th of Edward I. a free market on Monday, and a fair on the eve and day of St. Matthew the Apostle; were granted. The annual revenue, in 1428, amounted to £222. 12. 8.; but at the dissolution it was only estimated at £153. 7. 1. A small vessel, containing some Roman coins, is stated to have been found among the ruins in 1719.

COXHALL, a joint township with Buxton, in that part of the parish of BUCKNILL which is in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Knighton. The population is returned with Buxton. Here are traces of an ancient circular camp.

COXHOE, a township in the parish of KELLOE, southern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Durham, containing 132 inhabitants. Coal is obtained in this neighbourhood to a considerable extent; there are also limestone quarries, and a good seam of clay for making earthenware.

COXLIDGE, a township in that part of the parish of GOSFORTH which is in the western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Newcastle, containing 633 inhabitants. A place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and a Sunday school were built in 1819. There are several collieries in the township. In 1800, the grand stand for the Newcastle race-course was erected here, near which is a reservoir for the supply of that town with water, which is raised by a windmill pump.

COXWELL (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of FARRINGTON, county of BERKS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W.) from Great Farrington, containing 306 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 7. 11., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. Limestone and fossil remains are met with here. There are the remains of a religious establishment in this parish, formerly built by the abbots of Beaulieu, to whom the manor was granted by King John in 1204, now used as a barn: the adjoining farmhouse was occupied by the monks. On Badbury hill is an ancient circular encampment, supposed to be Danish. The Rev. David Collier, in 1724, imposed a charge of eight bushels of barley on lands in Little Coxwell, for teaching two poor children; and the sum of £3. 10. is paid to a schoolmaster for instructing three children; besides which, the Rev. John Pynsent, in 1705, bequeathed land, producing about £20 per annum, for apprenticing the children of labourers of this parish and Coleshill: there is likewise a curious bequest from the Earl of Radnor, in 1771, charging his lands with an annuity of £45, to be applied to the apprenticing of the children of poor persons of Coleshill and this parish, so often as the vicar of Coleshill shall be absent from the parish more than sixty days in any one year, and shall accept any other preferment with cure of souls.

COXWELL (LITTLE), a chapelry in that part of the parish of FARRINGTON which is in the hundred of FARRINGTON, county of BERKS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Great Farrington, containing 271 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. The remains of a camp, apparently in the form of a square, are visible here, the double ditch on the western side being nearly entire; and there are also, in an enclosed field of about fourteen acres, two hundred and seventy-three pits, called Cole's Pits, excavated in the sand and varying in depth, supposed to have been the habitations, or hiding-places, of the ancient Britons.

COXWOLD, a parish in the wapentake of BIRD-FORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Birdforth, and the townships of Angram-Grange, Byland cum Membris, Coxwold, Newborough, Oulston, Thornton with Baxly, Wildon-Grange, and Yearaley, and containing 1447 inhabitants, of which number, 348 are in the township of Coxwold, 5 miles (N.) from Easingwold. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, and in the patronage of G. Wombwell, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a small ancient structure, said to have been erected so early as 700, with an octagonal tower: the chancel was rebuilt in 1777, by the Earl of Fauconberg: there is some stained glass in the windows, and within are many handsome monuments of the Belasyse family. A free grammar school was founded, in 1603, by Sir John Harte, alderman of London, who endowed it with £36. 13. 4. per annum, charged on certain lands in this county: only a few boys are instructed in writing and arithmetic, paying a small quarterage also. An hospital for ten poor men was founded, in 1696, by Thomas, Earl of Fauconberg, the endowment of which consists of a rent-charge of £59, and is divided among ten poor persons, only two of whom reside in the hospital, which comprises a chapel, with a small chamber above, and two apartments on each side: an hospital for eight poor women was also established here, which has long since gone to decay. There is a fair on the 25th of August. Sterne wrote his Tristram Shandy and some other works at Shandy Hall, near this place, where he resided about seven years.

COZENLEY, a township in the parish of KIRKBY-MALZEARD, lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Ripon, containing 579 inhabitants.

CRABHALL, a joint township with Blacon, in that part of the parish of the HOLY TRINITY, CHESTER, which is in the higher division of the hundred of WIRBALL, county palatine of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Chester. The population is returned with Blacon.

CRACKENTHORPE, a township in the parish of BONGATE, or ST. MICHAEL, APPLEBY, East ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Appleby, containing 134 inhabitants. At a place called Chapel-hill are the ruins of a chapel, dedicated to St. Giles. On the road from this place to Kirkby-Thore, and to the southward of the ancient Roman road, are traces of a quadrilateral camp; and further on is a small outwork, called Maiden-hold. In digging for clay at Machel's Bank, three urns containing calcined bones and ashes were found covered with similar relics; and in another pit, fifty yards from the former, a large quantity of ashes and bones, without any urn, was also discovered.

CRACO, a township in the parish of BURNSALL, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and Ewcross, West riding of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (N.) from Skipton, containing 179 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CRADLEY, a parish in the hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, comprising the townships of East and West Cradley, and containing 1459 inhabitants, of which number, 739 are in the township of East Cradley, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Ledbury. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. The church is dedicated to St. James.

CRADLEY, a chapelry in that part of the parish of HALES-OWEN which is in the lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, county of WORCESTER, 2 miles (N.W. by N.) from Hales-Owen, containing 1696 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lord Calthorpe, the Rev. Mr. Gisborne, and W. Wilberforce, Esq. The chapel, a modern structure, pleasantly situated on the brow of a hill, commanding an agreeable prospect, has lately received an addition of two hundred free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £75 towards defraying the expense. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. A National school for boys and girls is supported by charitable contributions. The river Stour runs on the north and north-western sides of the chapelry, and separates it from Staffordshire. A mine of coal has been worked upon its banks, but is now discontinued. Beautifully situated in a woody spot, amid pleasing walks, and on the banks of a large pool, or artificial lake, is Cradley Spa, where warm and cold baths have been erected: the water is impregnated with sulphate of soda, magnesia, &c., and is greatly used by invalids during the summer: an attempt was formerly made to manufacture salt here. In a large wood, called Cradley Park, are vestiges of the moat of an ancient building. The chapelry is hilly, and the vicinity abounds with pleasing and picturesque scenery.

CRADLEY (WEST), a township in the parish of CRADLEY, hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Ledbury, containing 720 inhabitants. A charity school is supported by subscriptions amounting to about £20 per annum.

CRAIKE, a parish in the south-western division of Strocton ward, county palatine of DURHAM, though locally in the wapentake of Bulmer, North riding of the county of York, 3½ miles (E. by N.) from Easingwold, containing 538 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Durham, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school is supported by charitable donations amounting to about £4. 10. per annum. Egfrid, King of Northumberland, in 685, gave this place, with land extending three miles round it, to St. Cuthbert, the founder of a monastery here, every vestige of which has for ages been removed. There are remains of a castle of remote and uncertain date, converted into a farm-house.

CRAKEHALL, a joint township with Elmer, in that part of the parish of TOPCLIFFE which is in the wapentake of BIRDFOORTH, North riding of the county of York, 6½ miles (N.N.E.) from Boroughbridge. The population is returned with Elmer.

CRAKEHALL, a township in that part of the parish of BEDALE which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of York, 1¼ mile (N.W. by W.) from Bedale, containing, with Rands-Grange, 550 inhabitants. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The village forms a spacious quadrangle, enclosing an extensive and pleasant green, ornamented with stately trees.

CRAKEMARSH, a township in the parish of UTTOXETER, southern division of the hundred of TORMONSLow, county of STAFFORD, 2½ miles (N. by E.) from Uttoxeter, with which the population is returned. Crake-marsh is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CRAMBE, a parish in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of York, comprising the townships of Barton le Willows, Crambe, and Whitwell on the Hill, and containing 522 inhabitants, of which number, 152 are in the township of Crambe, 6½ miles (S.W. by S.) from New Malton. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

CRAMLINGTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW, NEWCASTLE, which is in the eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTH-UMBERLAND, 8½ miles (N. by E.) from Newcastle, containing 330 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir M. W. Ridley, Bart., and C. Lawson, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The village, which is situated on a pleasant slope, commanding a fine sea-view, has gradually risen to its present improved state from the period of opening the adjacent collieries, the coal from which is conveyed by a rail-road to the river Tyne, near Howden Pans. Sir M. W. Ridley, Bart. has provided a schoolroom here, with a house and garden for the master.

CRANAGE, a township in that part of the parish of SANDBACH which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 3½ miles (E.N.E.) from Middlewich, containing 433 inhabitants. Thomas Hall, Esq. erected two schoolrooms here, one of which he endowed with £10 per annum, for ten boys, and the other with £4 per annum, for ten girls, all of them being partly clothed. In the reign of Henry VI. a bridge of stone was erected across the river Dane, at the expense of Sir John Nedham, but a few years ago it gave place to the present structure, which is built of wood, from a design by Mr. Harrison, of Chester.

CRANBORNE, a market town and parish, comprising the tythings of Alderholt, Beveridge, and Farewood, and the hamlet of Crendall, in the hundred of CRANBORNE, and the tythings of Blagdon and Monck- ton up Wimborne, in the hundred of MONCKTON up WIMBORNE, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 30 miles (N.E. by E.) from Dorchester, and 92 (W.S.W.) from London, and containing 1823 inhabitants. This place, which is of great antiquity, derives its name from the Saxon Gren, a crane, and Burn, a river, either from the tortuous windings of a stream, which, rising in the parish, falls into the Stour, or from the number of cranes that frequented its banks. In 980, Ailward de Meaw founded here a Benedictine monastery, dedicated to St. Bartholomew; but in 1102 the abbot retired with his brethren to Tewkesbury, where Robert Fitz-Hamon had founded a magnificent abbey, to which the original establishment became a cell. The old manor-house, from having been embattled, was called the castle, and was the occasional residence of the king, when he came to hunt in Cranborne Chase, an extensive tract reaching almost to Salisbury: the chase courts were regularly held in it, in which was a room, called the dungeon, for the confinement of offenders against the chase laws.

The town is pleasantly situated at the north-eastern extremity of the county, in the centre of a fine open expanse of champaign land: the houses are in general neat and well built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. Riband-weaving formerly flourished here, but has declined, and the majority of the labouring class are employed in agriculture. The market is on Thursday: fairs are held on August 24th and December 6th, for cheese and sheep. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and is divided into the liberties of the tything, the priory, and the borough, for which a constable, tythingman, and bailiff, are appointed respectively. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £1000 private benefaction, and £2700 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and formerly the conventual church of the priory, is an ancient structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early style of English architecture, with a large and handsome tower in the later style; the pulpit is of oak, richly carved, and supported on a pedestal of stone: there are some remains of stained glass in the large window of the south aisle, representing the Virgin Mary and the heads of some of the Saints. An almshouse for three single persons was founded and endowed by Thomas Hooper, Esq., who also gave a rent-charge of £6 for the steward. On Castle hill, to the south of the town, is a circular fortification, consisting of two deep trenches and ramparts, and including an area of six acres, in which is a well; and in the environs are numerous barrows, of which some have been opened and found to contain urns with bones. The learned Bishop Stillingfleet was born here, in 1635, and died in 1699. Cranborne gives the title of viscount to the Marquis of Salisbury.

CRANBROOKE, a market town and parish in the hundred of CRANBROOKE, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 14 miles (S. by E.) from Maidstone, and 48 (S.E. by E.) from London, containing 3683 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Crane-broke, derives its name from its situation upon a brook called the Crane. When the manufacture of woollen cloth was introduced into England by Edward III., it was principally carried on in the Weald of Kent, and Cranbrooke, situated in the centre of that district, became, and continued to be for centuries, a very flourishing town, and the principal seat of the clothing trade, by the removal of which into the counties of Gloucester and Somerset, within the last fifty years, its trading importance has been almost annihilated. The town consists chiefly of one wide street, extending three quarters of a mile in length, from which a smaller street branches off at right angles: it is indifferently paved, and partially lighted, contains some well-built, houses, and is well supplied with water. The trade is now principally in hops, which is carried on to a considerable extent. The market, formerly on Saturday, and considerable for corn, hops, &c., has, within the last few years, been altered to Wednesday; there is also a cattle market on every alternate Wednesday: the market-house, a neat octagonal building supported on double columns at the angles, and surmounted by a cupola, was erected by William Coleman, Esq., a great benefactor to the town. The fairs are on May 30th and September 29th, for horses and cattle; the latter is also a great hop fair.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £19. 19. 4½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £1100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a spacious handsome structure in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower: in the year 1725, one of the columns giving way, a part of the church fell down; it was repaired at an expense of £2000. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Huntingdonians, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded, in 1574, by Simon Lynch, Esq., and endowed by Queen Elizabeth with land producing at present about £140 per annum, which has been augmented by subsequent benefactors to £300 per annum: the management is vested in thirteen trustees, including the vicar. A writing school was founded, in 1573, by Mr. Alexander Dence, who endowed it with a house for the master, a schoolroom, and the interest of £160; of this sum, £60 was expended in the enlargement of the premises, the interest of the remainder only being available to the payment of the master. A National school for the instruction of an unlimited number of boys and girls is supported by subscription. In the hamlet of Milkhouse-street, are the remains of an ancient chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity. There are several mineral springs in the vicinity, the properties of which are similar to those of Tonbridge-Wells. Sir Richard Baker, author of the English Chronicles, was born in this parish, about the year 1568. The celebrated William Huntington, late minister of Providence chapel, Gray's Inn Lane, London, and founder of a sect called "Huntingtonians," holding high Calvinistic principles, was born at a place called "The Four Wents," in this parish: he died July 1st, 1813, aged 69, and was interred in the burial-ground of Jireh chapel, Lewes, Sussex. He wrote and published eighty-one separate works, most of which went through several editions during his lifetime; and, added to six volumes of Letters, &c., published since his death, his works extend to thirty-four volumes 8vo.

CRANFIELD, a parish in the hundred of REDBORNE-STROKE, county of BEDFORD, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Ampthill, containing 1153 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £33. 2. 1., and in the patronage of the Rev. James Beard. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A school is supported by charitable donations amounting to about £15 per annum. A mineral spring rises in the parish, but it is very little resorted to. Cranfield gives the inferior title of baron to the Duke of Dorset.

CRANFORD, a parish in the hundred of ELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 2½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Hounslow, containing 288 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Dowager Countess of Berkeley. The church is dedicated to St. Dunstan. The river Colne runs through the parish, and is crossed by a bridge at the village, called Cranford-bridge.

CRANFORD (ST. ANDREW), a parish in the hundred of HUXLOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (E. by S.) from Kettering, containing, with the parish of Cranford St. John, 515 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £9. 9. 7., and in the patronage of Sir G. Robinson, Bart.

CRANFORD (ST. JOHN), a parish in the hundred of HUXLOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Kettering. The population is returned with Cranford St. Andrew. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

CRANHAM, a parish in the hundred of CHAFFORD, county of ESSEX, 2½ miles (E. S. E.) from Hornchurch, containing 289 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints. This parish was formerly known by the names of Bishop's Ockington and Cravenham.

CRANHAM, a parish in the hundred of RAPSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, 2½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Painswick, containing 321 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with that of Brimpsfield, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe. The church is dedicated to St. James. There are manufactories for earthenware in the parish.

CRANLEY, a parish in the second division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, county of SURREY, 7½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Godalming, containing 1182 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £20. 18. 1½., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Wolfe. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a large and handsome edifice in the ancient style of English architecture, having a richly ornamented chapel, enclosed with curious and elegant lattice-work at the termination of each aisle. At Vacharie are foundations, encompassed by a moat, of the ancient baronial residence of the lords of Shire. Cranley gives the title of viscount to the Earls of Onslow.

CRANMORE (EAST), a parish in the hundred of FROME, county of SOMERSET, 4½ miles (E.) from Shepton-Mallet, containing 68 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Doulting, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. James. The district which now comprises East and West Cranmore was exempted from all suit and service to the hundred courts, and raised into a liberty by Henry I. The inhabitants bury at West Cranmore.

CRANMORE (WEST), a parish forming, with the parish of Evercreech and the chapelry of Chesterblade, a detached portion of the hundred of WELLS-FORUM, county of SOMERSET, 3½ miles (E.) from Shepton-Mallet, containing 270 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Doulting, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

CRANOE, a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Market-Harborough, containing 101 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Earl of Cardigan. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

CRANSFORD, a parish in the hundred of PLOMESGATE, county of SUFFOLK, 2½ miles (E. N. E.) from Framlingham, containing 294 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. C. Chevallier. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CRANSLEY, a parish in the hundred of ORLINGSBURY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Kettering, containing 250 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £8. 5., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. C. Rose, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

CRANTOCK, a parish in the hundred of PYDER, county of CORNWALL, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from St. Michael, containing 389 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mr. Buller and others. The church is dedicated to St. Cadock, a corruption of St. Carantocus: in the time of Edward the Confessor it was made collegiate for Secular canons, who continued till the dissolution, when its annual revenue of £89. 15. 8. was divided amongst the dean, nine prebendaries, and four vicars choral. This parish is bounded on the north by the Bristol channel, and has a small harbour at the mouth of the river Gannel.

CRANWELL, a parish in the hundred of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. W.) from Sleaford, containing 155 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir John H. Thorold. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. A school is supported by charitable donations amounting to about £3 per annum.

CRANWICK, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSBOROUGH, county of NORFOLK, 6 miles (S. E. by E.) from Stoke-Ferry, containing 70 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Methwold annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 9. 7., and in the patronage of H. S. Partridge, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small ancient building of flint, having at the west end a tower of similar materials, supposed to have been erected by King Harold, one of whose freemen possessed a moiety of this place in the time of Edward the Confessor. The river Wissay bounds the parish on the north.

CRANWORTH, a parish in the hundred of MITFORD, county of NORFOLK, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Watton, containing 331 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Letton consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 18. 6½., and in the patronage of T. T. Gurdon, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CRASSWALL, a chapelry in the parish of CLODOCK, hundred of EWTASLACY, county of HEREFORD, 5 miles (S. E.) from Hay, containing 374 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Brecon, and diocese of St. David, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Oxford. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. About the close of the reign of King John a monastery was founded here, probably by Walton de Lacy, for a prior and ten religious of the order of Grandmont in Normandy: at the seizure of Alien priories it was valued at 40s. per annum, and granted, in the 2nd of Edward IV., to God's House, now Christ's College, Cambridge. There is a fine stone quarry in the neighbourhood.

CRASTER, a township in the parish of EMBLETON, southern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (N. E.) from Alnwick, containing 146 inhabitants. The village, which is called Craster Sea Houses, is situated on the coast of the North sea.

CRATFIELD, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, 5½ miles (W. S. W.) from Halesworth, containing 717 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Laxfield, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 7. 11., and in the patronage of Lord Huntingfield. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is an endowed Sunday school in this parish, also a school supported by charitable donations amounting to £8. 8. per annum.

CRATHORNE, a parish in the western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 3½ miles (S. S. E.) from Yarm, containing 330 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £10. 11. 10½., and in the patronage of Godfrey Wentworth and Robert Chaloner, Esqrs. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient structure; in the chancel is the figure of an armed knight lying cross-legged, with the arms of Crathorne on the shield, and near it is a mural monument of a member of the same family. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Roman Catholics. Thomas Baxter, in 1769, gave £100, now producing, with other subscriptions, £13. 6. per annum, which is applied to the education of twenty poor children. Here are a linen-manufactory and an extensive bleaching-ground. At a short distance from the village is a mineral spring.

CRAWCROOK, a township in the parish of RYTON, western division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 9½ miles (W.) from Gateshead, containing 308 inhabitants. Coal is obtained in this township. Miss Simpson, of Bradley Hall, endowed a school with £25 per annum, for teaching twenty-six children; and another has been established by Lady Ravensworth, who annually contributes £20 for the education of girls.

CRAWFORD-TARRANT, a parish in the hundred of BADBURY, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 3½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Blandford-Forum, containing, with Preston, 76 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, and in the patronage of E. B. Portman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Richard Poor, successively Bishop of Chichester, Salisbury, and Durham, founded, about 1230, an abbey of Cistercian nuns, in honour of the Blessed Virgin and All Saints; at the dissolution, its revenue was estimated at £239. 11. 10.

CRAWLEY, a township in the parish of EGLINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9½ miles (W. N. W.) from Alnwick, containing 23 inhabitants. It was anciently called Crawlawe, from Caer-law, a fortified hill. Crawley tower, a Roman structure, stands on an eminence near an old and strong intrenchment, which is thought to be the Alauna Amnis of Richard of Cirencester, though some place this station at Alnwick, and others at Glanton: it commands a fine view of the vale of Whittingham, with the river Breamish, from its source to Horton castle; and no less than seven British and Saxon fortifications may be discerned within four miles round this spot.

CRAWLEY, a hamlet in the parish of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 1½ mile (N. W. by N.) from Witney, containing 221 inhabitants.

CRAWLEY, a parish in the hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. W.) from Winchester, containing, with the chapelry of Hunton, 476 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated in the king's books at £35. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Crawley is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

CRAWLEY, a parish in the hundred of BUTTINGHILL, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, 9½ miles (N. by W.) from Cuckfield, containing 334 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £6. 15., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of James Clitherow, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is partly in the decorated and partly in the later style of English architecture, and has lately received an addition of ninety free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £17 toward defraying the expense. Fairs for horned cattle are held on May 8th and September 29th.

CRAWLEY (HUSBORN), county of BEDFORD.—See HUSBORN-CRAWLEY.

CRAY (FOOT'S), a parish in the hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 12½ miles (S. E.) from London, containing 221 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £8. 3. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small plain building, supposed to be of high antiquity. This parish probably derived its name from Fot, or Vot, its proprietor in the time of Edward the Confessor, and from the river Cray, which runs by the eastern end of the village, there turning a mill, and then directing its course towards North Cray. A National school was established in 1815, for which the Rev. Francis Wollaston left £200 five per cents.; and Benjamin Harence, Esq., in 1817, gave land whereon a school-house had been previously erected by subscription; from seventy to eighty children of both sexes are taught at this school, which is supported by contributions in aid of the original bequest.

CRAY (ST. MARY'S), a parish in the hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 2 miles (S. by W.) from Foot's Cray, containing 874 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Orpington, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church contains several ancient brasses and some memorials of the Mannings. A charity school was established here in 1710, for the education of six children; and Sir Thomas Dyke, in 1816, erected another, with a residence for the master and mistress, extending its benefits to the children of Orpington; it is supported by a rent-charge upon estates at Hunton, bequeathed in 1715 by Catherine Withens, which, with a weekly contribution of two-pence paid by each pupil sent from Orpington, produces an annual income of £80 to the master and mistress, who also receive an allowance of £5 a year, coal, &c.: about one hundred children are instructed upon the National system. "The Crays," so called from the river Cray, which runs through it, is reckoned one of the most beautiful tracts in Kent, and produces a vast quantity of birch; it comprehends four parishes, with as many villages, distinguished by their prefixes, of which St. Mary's Cray was the most considerable, and had the privilege of a market so early as the reign of Edward I.; but the market-house having been destroyed by a tempest in 1703, the market has never since been held.

CRAY (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 1 mile (N. by E.) from Foot's Cray, containing 245 inhabitants. The living is a rectory with Ruxley, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £13. 9. 9½., and in the patronage of

T. W. Coventry, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. In 1771, the Rev. William Hetherington, and Elizabeth Hetherington, gave a tenement for a school, in support of which the latter bequeathed £100 in 1776, which, with other donations for the same purpose, produce about £11. 11. per annum; in 1777, the former left £200 for repairs and other uses, which, with additions since made, yields an annual dividend of £12. 8. From these funds £10 a year is paid to a mistress for teaching an unlimited number of young children, who, on attaining the age of seven years, are admitted into the National school at Bexley, the master and mistress of which receive from this charity £5 per annum each, with an allowance of 20s. a year for books and rewards. This parish is pleasantly diversified with villas and well cultivated domains, of which Mount Mascall and Vale Mascall claim distinction; in the grounds of the latter the river Cray forms a cascade much admired for its picturesque beauty. In 1723 a subterraneous fire broke out, and the inhabitants for several days afterwards employed themselves with wagons in conveying water from Bexley, for the purpose of quenching the flames.

CRAY (ST. PAUL'S), a parish in the hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 1½ mile (S.) from Foot's Cray, containing 364 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £12. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Viscount Sidney. The church is dedicated to St. Paulinus. In 1729, Richard Chapman bequeathed a rent-charge of £2 towards endowing a school, in furtherance of which the Rev. Thomas Kingsman, in 1752, left £50 three per cents., producing annually about £1. 10., which sums are paid to a schoolmistress for teaching six girls. The river Cray runs through this parish.

CRAYFORD, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of LESSNESS, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 13 miles (E. by S.) from London, containing 1866 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £35. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Thomas Austen, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Paulinus, is a spacious modern structure, adorned with an elegant altar-piece; it stands on an eminence at the upper end of the village, which consists of an irregular street, branching off to the left of the road from London to Dartford. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Crayford is so called from Creccanford, an ancient ford on the river Creccan, now Cray, which here flows in two streams, having upon its banks several extensive establishments for printing calico, and a large mill for making iron hoops. One of the archbishops of Canterbury, who formerly had possessions here, procured a weekly market on Tuesday, and a fair on our Lady's Nativity; the market has long been disused, but an annual fair is still held on the 8th of September. In the immediate vicinity of Crayford some antiquaries have placed the Roman station Noviomagus, near which a great battle was fought, in 457, between Hengist the Saxon and the British king Vortimer, which ended in the secure establishment of the kingdom of Kent under the rule of the former. In this parish are many ancient caves, of which some are from fifteen to twenty fathoms deep, increasing in circumference from the mouth downwards, and containing several large apartments, supported by pillars of chalk: it is conjectured that they were used as places of security for the wives, children, and moveable goods of the Saxons, during their wars with the Britons. The manor-house, which was built and occupied by Sir Cloudesley Shovel, is moated, and is now occupied by a farmer.

CREACOMBE, a parish in the hundred of WITHERIDGE, county of DEVON, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from South Molton, containing 40 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £4. 18. 9., endowed with £700 private benefaction, and £900 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Karslake. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

CREAKE (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of BROTHERCROSS, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S.E. by S.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 618 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £33. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Earl Spencer and the Bishop of Norwich alternately. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, besides which there was formerly one dedicated to St. Michael, also parochial. At Lingerscroft, between Creak and Burnham, Sir Robert de Hereford, in 1206, founded a church, and subsequently a chapel and hospital, dedicated in 1221 to St. Bartholomew, in which he placed a master, four chaplains, and thirteen poor lay brethren: this foundation soon afterwards acquired the distinction of a priory, and in the 15th of Henry III. was elevated into an abbey: that monarch also confirmed the grant of a fair previously made, changing the period to the eve and festival of St. Thomas the Martyr; in the 14th of Edward I. the abbot claimed the right of holding four fairs annually at Creak. In consequence of the death of the abbot, and there being no convent to elect another, the abbey was deemed dissolved, and its possessions were granted, in the 22nd of Henry VII., to the Countess of Richmond, by whom they were given to Christ's College, Cambridge. In 1815 a school-house was erected here, upon land given for the purpose by a charitable individual. There are four cottages appropriated for the benefit of the poor.

CREAKE (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of BROTHERCROSS, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 728 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £22, and in the patronage of H. Goggs, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. In the neighbourhood is a Saxon fortification, the way leading from which is called Blood-gate, from the dreadful slaughter made there in a battle between the Saxons and the Danes.

CREATON (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Northampton, containing 492 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £11. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. Mr. Beynon. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. In 1825, six cottages, for the accommodation of aged widows, were built on a piece of waste land in the village, by the Rev. Thomas Jones, late curate of the parish. In this parish are the remains of Holmby House, where Charles I. suffered imprisonment.

CREATON (LITTLE), a hamlet in the parish of SPRATTON, hundred of SPELBOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Northampton, containing 106 inhabitants.

CREDENHILL, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Hereford, containing 199 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £17. 19. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. Edmund Eckley. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. On the summit of a steep and lofty hill, the declivity of which is well wooded, are the remains of an ancient and almost inaccessible camp, having an outer and an inner trench, enclosing an area of nearly forty acres: from its irregular form some have attributed this work to the Britons, while others, with greater probability, suppose it to have been constructed by the Romans, for the defence of their adjacent station at Kenchester, the Magna Castra of Antoninus: the view from it is one of the most extensive and beautiful in the county.

CREDITON, a borough, market town, and parish, in the hundred of CREDITON, and extending also into that of West Budleigh, county of DEVON, 8 miles (N. W.) from Exeter, and 180 (W. by S.) from London, containing, with the tythings of Bradley, Canon-Fee, Fulford, Knowle, Rudge, Town, Uford, Uton, and Woodland, 5515 inhabitants. This place, which takes its name from its situation on the river Creedy, was for many years the seat of a diocese, of which a collegiate church, founded here in 905, and dedicated to the Holy Cross, became the cathedral. In the reign of Canute, Levinus, Bishop of Crediton, prevailed upon that monarch, with whom he had great influence, to annex the see of St. Germans to that of Crediton, the united see having been removed to Exeter, by Edward the Confessor, in 1050. A chapter, consisting of a dean and twelve prebendaries, was still maintained in the old collegiate church, under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £332. 17. 5.: the church, with some lands belonging to it, was granted to the governors of the free school in the reign of Edward VI. In the reign of Edward I. this borough sent members to a parliament held at Carlisle; and, in 1310, Bishop Stapleton obtained for it the grant of a weekly market and two annual fairs. Towards the middle of the sixteenth century, the opponents of the Reformation assembled their forces at Crediton, but were compelled to withdraw by Sir Peter Carew, who was sent against them with a superior force. In 1644, Charles I. reviewed his troops in this town, which was subsequently possessed by the army under Sir Thomas Fairfax: in 1743 a fire destroyed a considerable part of it, and a similar calamity occurred in 1769.

Crediton is pleasantly situated in a vale on the banks of the river Creedy, and within three quarters of a mile of the river Exe, with which the Creedy unites between this place and Exeter: it is divided into two parts, east and west, of which the former, containing the church, is the more ancient, and the latter the more extensive; and consists principally of one main street, nearly a mile in length, roughly paved, and containing low cottages at each extremity, with a few well-built houses in the centre, in which is also a range of shambles: it is amply supplied with water. Assemblies and concerts take place periodically, during the winter, in a good assembly-room, conveniently fitted up for the purpose. The principal branch of manufacture is that of serge, which is sent to Exeter to be finished for exportation; dowlas, long ells, and flannel, are also manufactured here, but not to a great extent: it is in contemplation to bring the road to Barnstaple through the town, within a short distance of which it now passes. The market, which is very well attended, is on Saturday; and on the Saturday preceding the last Wednesday in April is a large market for cattle, in which more than one thousand head are frequently sold. Fairs for cattle are held, in the eastern division of the town, on May 11th and September 21st; and in the western division on the 21st of August, unless it happen on Friday, Saturday, or Sunday, in which case it is postponed till the following Tuesday; this fair continues for three days, on the first of which a great number of cattle is sold. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session every month; and its local affairs are under the superintendence of a portreeve, bailiff, and constables, chosen annually by a jury at the court leet of the lord of the manor, the bailiff for the year preceding being invariably appointed to the office of portreeve.

The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £30, and in the patronage of twelve lay governors, incorporated by charters of Edward VI. and Elizabeth, by whom the church is kept in repair. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is a spacious and magnificent cruciform structure, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre; it was erected, or rather rebuilt, in the reign of Henry VII., and is a fine specimen of the later English style of architecture, which at that time was in its highest perfection. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The grammar school was founded by Edward VI., and further endowed by Queen Elizabeth, who by her charter provided for the gratuitous instruction of four boys, to each of whom forty shillings are annually given; the school, which is open to all boys of the parishes of Crediton and Sandford, on the payment of £5 per annum, is under the management of the twelve governors, who appoint the master, to whom they pay a salary of £30 per annum, and nominate the four free boys: there are three exhibitions, of £6. 13. 4. each, to either of the Universities, tenable for five years, belonging to this school; and annexed to the mastership is the perpetual curacy of Kennerley. The Blue-coat school, founded about the year 1730, by subscription, and since endowed with various benefactions, was incorporated with an English school in 1814, and placed under one master, in a house erected, in 1806, by the trustees of Sir John Hayward's charity; the annual income of these united schools is £116. 12.: about one hundred and fifty children are instructed on Dr. Bell's system, eighty of them being also clothed. A mathematical school was founded, in 1794, by Mr. Samuel Dunn, who endowed it with £600 stock, now in the four per cents.; in this school twelve boys are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and in navigation and land-surveying, if required. Almshouses with small endowments were founded by Mr. Humphrey Sparway, in 1557, and by Mr. John Davie, in 1620. Near the church are some slight remains of the episcopal palace, and of the chapel of St. Lawrence, anciently connected with one of the prebends of the collegiate church: in North-street is an ancient building, said to have formed part of the dean's house, in a portion of which, supposed to have been the refectory, the ancient ceiling is still preserved. Winifred, Archbishop of Mentz, and legate under several of the popes, who was eminently successful in promulgating the doctrines of Christianity among the Mercians, and suffered martyrdom in the year 354, was a native of this place.

CREECH (EAST), a tything in the parish of CHURCH-KNOWLE, hundred of HASILOR, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Wareham. The population is returned with the parish.

CREECH (ST. MICHAEL), a parish forming, with the parish of Lyng, which includes the Isle of Athelney, a distinct portion of the hundred of ANDERSFIELD, locally in the hundred of Taunton and Taunton-Dean, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Taunton, containing 812 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £16. 18. 9., and in the patronage of E. Cresswell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Henry Stodgel, in 1701, and Ann Seager, in 1741, bequeathed a rent-charge of £2 each for teaching poor children. The navigable river Tone runs through this parish, and is crossed by a bridge at the village.

CREED, a parish in the western division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile (S.) from Grampound, containing, with the whole of the chapelry of Grampound, part of which is in the parish of Probus, 947 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Sir Christopher Hawkins. The church is dedicated to St. Creed. There is a small chapel of ease at Grampound, in a ruinous condition. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Fal; and in the neighbourhood are vestiges of two ancient intrenchments, each enclosing about one acre.

CREEKSEA, a parish in the hundred of DENGIS, county of ESSEX, 2 miles (N. W. by W.) from Burnham, containing 152 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, to which the vicarage of Althorne was united in 1811, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £9. 8. 10., and in the patronage of J. Robinson, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a ferry over Crouch river to Wallisea island, from the south side of the parish, where the marshes are protected from inundation by strong embankments, about nine feet in height.

CREETING (ALL SAINTS), a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Needham-Market, containing 271 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with which the rectories of Creeting St. Mary and Creeting St. Olave are consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is demolished. The Stow Market and Ipswich navigation passes along the south-western boundary.

CREETING (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Needham-Market, containing 167 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with the rectories of Creeting All Saints and Creeting St. Olave, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 14. 2., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. Here was formerly a cell to the abbey of Bernay, in Normandy, the revenue of which, at the suppression of Alien establishments, was applied towards the endowment of Eton College.

CREETING (ST. OLAVE), a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Needham-Market, containing 35 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with the rectories of Creeting All Saints and Creeting St. Mary, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 17. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$. The church has been demolished.

CREETING (ST. PETER, or WEST), a parish in the hundred of Stow, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Needham-Market, containing 169 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 2. 6., and in the patronage of George Paske, Esq.

CREETON, a parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Corby, containing 51 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 15. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CREIGHTON, a township in the parish of UTTOXETER, southern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Uttoxeter, with which the population is returned.

CRENDAL, a hamlet in the parish of CRANBORNE, in that part of the hundred of CRANBORNE which is in the Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 2 miles (E.) from Cranborne, with which the population is returned. Potter's clay is dug here, and a considerable quantity of earthenware is made from it.

CRENDON (LONG), a parish in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Thame, containing 1212 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £800 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Duke of Marlborough. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious edifice with a tower rising from the centre. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A school is supported by donations producing from £5 to £6 per annum. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of needles. Walter Giffard, Earl of Buckingham, and his countess, in 1162, built and endowed the abbey of Nuttley for regular canons of the order of St. Augustine; it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. John the Baptist, and, at the dissolution, possessed a revenue valued at £495. 18. 5.: the remains have been converted into a farm-house; part of the cloisters is still discernible, and round the cornice of an ancient room is the Stafford knot, repeatedly labelled in black letter, with the motto En lui Plaisance.

CRESLow, a parish in the hundred of COTTESLOW, county of BUCKINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Aylesbury, containing 5 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £3. The church, which was dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is desecrated, and the inhabitants attend divine service at Whitchurch.

CRESSAGE, a chapelry in the parish of COUND, hundred of CONDOVER, county of SALOP, 4 miles (N.W. by N.) from Much Wenlock, containing 295 inhabitants.

CRESSING, a parish in the hundred of WITHAM, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Braintree, containing 489 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £7. 15. 5., and in the patronage of Andrew Downs, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Cressing Temple, anciently a commandery of the Knights Templars, was given by King Stephen, with the advowson of the church, in perpetual alms to that order; on its dissolution these possessions passed to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, and reverted to the crown at the general suppression.

CRESSINGHAM (GREAT), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Watton, containing 400 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the curacy of St. George, and the rectory of Bodney united, and a royal peculiar, in which the rector exercises jurisdiction, rated in the king's books at £17. 18. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is composed of flint and freestone, with a tower at the west end, and is ornamented in many places with the letter M, surmounted by a crown, also an erect sword, with a crown on the point, supposed to be memorials of the victory of the patron saint; the nave and chancel are separated by a screen curiously painted and carved, behind which are six stalls, similar to those in collegiate churches. About a mile from the village, in a field called Stone-close, stood the parochial chapel of St. George, previously the chapel of a hermit, in right of which the rector holds a fair annually on the 12th of August, for horses and toys.

CRESSINGHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (W.) from Watton, containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Baker. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

CRESSWELL, a township in the parish of WOODMORN, eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Morpeth, containing 303 inhabitants. The village is situated on the coast of the North sea, and is inhabited chiefly by fishermen.

CRESSY HALL, a chapelry in the parish of SURFLEET, wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Spalding. The population is returned with the parish.

CRESWELL, an extra-parochial liberty, in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Cheadle, containing 12 inhabitants.

CRETINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of LOES, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Framlingham, containing 375 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

CREWE, a township in the parish of FARNDON, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Malpas, containing 47 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Dee.

CREWE, a township in that part of the parish of BARTHOMLEY which is in the hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Sandbach, containing 297 inhabitants. A charity school was founded in 1729, pursuant to the will of Thomas Leadbeater, Esq., who bequeathed £30 for the erection of a school-house, and £120 for the maintenance of a master.

CREWKERNE, a market town and parish in the hundred of CREWKERNE, county of SOMERSET, 10 miles (S. W. by S.) from Ilchester, and 132 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 3434 inhabitants. This place, being a royal manor, anciently enjoyed many privileges, and in the reign of Henry II. was exempt from taxation. The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile valley, watered by branches of the rivers Parret and Axe, and sheltered by hills richly planted; it consists of five principal streets, diverging from a spacious market-place, in the centre of which a large and commodious market-house has been erected: the houses are in general well built and of handsome appearance, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. Sail-cloth, stockings, and dowlas, are manufactured here. The market, which is well supplied with corn, is on Saturday: the fair is on the 4th of September, for horses, bullocks, linen-draperies, cheese, and toys. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a spacious cruciform structure, in the decorated style of English architecture, with a lofty and highly enriched tower rising from the intersection, crowned with battlements and ornamented with angular turrets: the interior is finely arranged, the windows are large and filled with rich tracery, and the piers and arches which support the tower are lofty and of graceful elevation; behind the altar is a small room, formerly the confessional, having a door at each end. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded, in 1449, by John de Combe, Precentor of the cathedral of Exeter, who endowed it with lands now producing £300 per annum: there are four exhibitions, of £5 per annum each, to any college at Oxford, founded by the Rev. William Owsley, who gave a rent-charge of £20, which, from want of applications, has been for some time accumulating for the augmentation of the exhibitions. A charity school is supported by subscription; and there are two almshouses, one of which, for six aged men and six aged women, was, in 1707, endowed with a rent-charge of £29, by Mrs. Mary Davis.

CRICH, a parish comprising the township of Crich, in the hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, the township of Wessington, in the hundred of SCARSDALE, and the hamlet of Tansley, in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, and containing 2961 inhabitants, of which number, 2024 are in the township of Crich, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Alfreton. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 10. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant. The Lord Chancellor, by reason of lunacy, presented in 1801. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a tower surmounted by a spire, and contains several ancient monuments of the Dixie family. There are two places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, one at Crich, the other at Tansley. This place, which is situated on an eminence commanding extensive prospects, was, not long since, an inconsiderable village, and rose into importance from the establishment of a cotton-manufactory at Frichly, in 1793: in 1810 it received the grant of a market, which was discontinued on the decline of the manufactory; fairs for cattle are held on April 6th and October 11th. Several of the inhabitants are employed in the adjacent quarries, which produce limestone of a superior quality, a considerable quantity being sent to London and Manchester; here are also kilns for burning it: the manufacture of stockings is carried on to a limited degree. The Cromford canal passes along the western side of the parish, and through a tunnel at its north-western and southern extremities: from the latter point a railway runs northward to within a short distance of the village. In 1825, an infant school was established in the parish. Crich is evidently a place of some antiquity, coins of Adrian and Dioclesian having been found in an adjacent lead mine, whence it is conjectured that lead was first obtained here by the Romans: at the period of the Norman survey, "Leuric had a lead mine at Cric," which is still wrought to a small extent. The manor of Wakebridge, in this parish, which formerly belonged to Darley abbey, still enjoys the privilege of exemption from king's duty on lead-ore, the mine of which is considered the richest in the county. About one mile north of the village is Crich cliff, a lofty hill, upon the summit of which an observatory was erected in 1789; it is principally composed of limestone, and contains mines of lead-ore, which were formerly more productive than at present.

CRICK, a hamlet in the parish of CAERWENT, upper division of the hundred of CALDICOTT, county of MONMOUTH, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Chepstow. The population is returned with the parish. The road leading from this village to Caerwent was evidently a Roman way, the foundations being plainly discernible; on each side lie large stones covered with moss, which appear to have formed part of the old causeway.

CRICK, a parish in the hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Daventry, containing 968 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £32. 13. 1½., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. A school was endowed upwards of fifty years ago, by William Henfray, with a bequest of about £10 per annum, for the education of twelve poor children. Richard Rayson, in 1806, bequeathed £15 a year for teaching twenty children free; and Elizabeth Heygate, in 1822, left £10 in trust, that the interest should be applied for a Sunday school: the schoolmaster to whom these several sums are paid has the use of a schoolroom, house, and garden. The Grand Union canal, in its course through this parish, passes under an arch, or tunnel, one thousand five hundred and twenty-four yards in length; and the Roman Watling-street traces the entire western boundary.

CRICKET (ST. THOMAS), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, county of SOMERSET, 4½ miles (W. by S.) from Crewkerne, containing 75 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 17. 6., and in the patronage of Lord Bridport. The church is dedicated to St. Thomas.

CRICKET-MALHERBIE, a parish in the hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (S.) from Ilminster, containing 73 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 3., and in the patronage of Mrs. Pitt. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

CRICKLADE, a borough and market town, in the hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, 4½ miles (N. by W.) from Salisbury, and 83 (W. by N.) from London, containing, with the township of Whidhill, 1506 inhabitants. This place, which is of great antiquity, is by some antiquaries supposed to have derived its name from the British Cerigwldd, signifying a country abounding with stones; and by others from the Saxon Cræcca, a brook, and Lædian, to empty; the small rivers Churn and Rey here discharging themselves into the river Isis. It is thought by Dr. Stukeley to have been a Roman station, from its situation on the Roman road which connected Corinium, now Cirencester, with Spina, now Spene. About the year 905, Ethelwald, opposing the election of Edward the Elder to the throne, collected a large body of troops, consisting principally of East Anglians, and advanced to this place on a predatory excursion, from which he retreated with his plunder before Edward, who was marching to attack him, had reached the town. In 1016, the town was plundered by Canute the Dane. Since the Conquest, Cricklade has not been distinguished by any event of historical importance. The town is situated in a level tract of country, on the south bank of the Isis, which has its source in the vicinity, and consists principally of one long street: a fund of £160 per annum, arising from an early bequest, which has been for a long time misapplied, is about to be appropriated to the paving of it; it is but indifferently supplied with spring water. An attempt to introduce the manufacture of pins has recently been made, but without success. The Thames and Severn canal passes to the north of the town. The market is on Saturday, but has greatly declined, owing to the proximity of Cirencester: the fairs have been discontinued, except a small pleasure fair, which is still held on the 29th of September. The county magistrates hold a meeting here on the first Saturday in every month: a bailiff and other officers are appointed by a jury at the court leet of the lord of the manor, who holds a court every third week, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Cricklade is a borough by prescription, and exercised the elective franchise from the reign of Edward I., but with various intermissions till that of Henry VI., since which time it has uninterruptedly continued to return two members to parliament: in consequence of notorious bribery, the elective franchise was, in 1782, extended to the five adjoining divisions, viz. Highworth, Cricklade, Staple, Kingsbridge, and Malmesbury. The right of election is vested in the freeholders, copyholders, and leaseholders for not less than three years, within the borough, and in the freeholders of the five divisions: the number of voters is about one thousand two hundred; the bailiff is the returning officer.

Cricklade comprises the parishes of St. Sampson and St. Mary, both in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury. The living of St. Sampson's is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £18. 11. 10½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Winchester: the church is a spacious and ancient cruciform structure, with a handsome square tower rising from the intersection, crowned with a pierced parapet and pinnacles, and highly ornamented with niches and pedestals: the south porch was formerly a chapel built by one of the Hungerford family; and towards the east is another porch, with large battlements, having in the centre the figure of a lion couchant: the interior is of corresponding character. The piers and arches which support the tower are lofty and of graceful elevation; and the interior of the tower, which is open to a considerable height, is decorated with numerous escutcheons, among which are the cognizances of the earls of Warwick, one of whom contributed largely to the building of the church: a stone cross, which formerly stood in the principal street, was removed into the churchyard, when the old town-hall was taken down. The living of St. Mary's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £4. 14. 0½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £1900 royal bounty, and in the alternate patronage of the King and the Bishop of Salisbury: the church is a very ancient structure; the chancel is separated from the nave by a circular Norman arch, and the interior contains many vestiges of its original character: in the churchyard is a handsome stone cross of one shaft on a flight of steps; the head is richly ornamented with small sculptured figures in canopied niches. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. There was formerly a free school, founded and endowed by Robert Jenner, Esq., citizen and goldsmith of London; but the endowment has been lost, and the building converted into tenements for paupers: in each of the parishes is a National school for girls; and there are Sunday schools for both sexes, supported by subscription. Among the several bequests for charitable uses is one of a hundred acres of land in the neighbourhood, now producing £125 per annum, of which £15 is appropriated to the apprenticing of poor children, and the remainder distributed among the poor. In the parish of St. Mary are the remains of the priory of St. John the Baptist, founded in the reign of Henry III., now converted into a residence for the poor: there was also an hospital, dedicated to the same patron, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was £4. 10. 7.; some land belonging to it, in the parish of St. Sampson, is still called the Spital.

CRIDLING-STUBBS, a township in the parish of WOMERSLEY, lower division of the wapentake of OS-GOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (E.) from Pontefract, containing 96 inhabitants.

CRIGGLESTONE, a township in that part of the parish of GREAT SANDALL which is in the lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 3½ miles (S. by W.) from Wakefield, containing 1265 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Here are two tanneries and several malt-kilns.

CRIMPLESHAM, a parish in the hundred of CLACK-CLOSE, county of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (E.) from Downham-Market, containing 279 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

CRINGLEFORD, a parish in the hundred of HUMBLEYARD, county of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Norwich, containing 150 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Albert. Within the parish was anciently a free chapel, dedicated to St. Ethelred, to which pilgrims used to resort in great numbers. Cringleford derives its name from the gravelly ford, which has been superseded by a stone bridge, separating the liberties of Norwich from the rest of the county.

CRIPTON, a tything in that part of the parish of WINTERBOURN-CAME which is in the hundred of CULFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 3½ miles (S. by E.) from Dorchester, containing 20 inhabitants.

CRITCHELL (LONG), a parish in the hundred of KNOWLTON, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 6½ miles (W. S. W.) from Cranborne, containing 108 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with which the rectory of Moor-Critchell was united in 1774, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £12. 13. 8½., and in the patronage of Charles Sturt, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a tower at the west end, with a massive buttress on its north side, in which there is a niche, and beneath it three shields much defaced. Long Critchell, which received its distinguishing appellation from its greater length in comparison with the adjoining parish of Moore-Critchell, is divided into two tythings, called Critchell-Gouis and Critchell-Lucy, so called from their ancient lords.

CRITCHELL (MOORE), a parish in the hundred of BADBURY, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 6 miles (S. W. by W.) from Cranborne, containing 267 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united in 1774 to that of Long Critchell, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £10. 9. 7. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small ancient fabric, having at the west end an embattled tower, with a porch of modern erection: it had a chantry well endowed with certain messuages and land, one hundred sheep, and twelve hogs, by John de Bridport, in the 2nd of Edward III., for a chaplain to pray daily for his soul.

CROBOROUGH, a joint township with Blackwood, in the parish of HORTON, northern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, 5½ miles (W.) from Leek. The population is returned with Blackwood.

CROCK-STREET, a hamlet partly in the parish of COMBE ST. NICHOLAS, eastern division of the hundred of KINGSBURY, and partly in the parish of DONYATT, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Ilminster. A considerable quantity of coarse earthenware is made at the potteries in this hamlet.

CROCKERN-WELL, a hamlet partly in the parish of BISHOP-CHERITON, and partly in that of DREWS-TEINGTON, hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, 7 miles (S. W.) from Crediton. The hamlet is divided into three parts, and abounds with beautiful scenery. Here was formerly a chapel, but there are no remains of it.

CROCKERNE-PILL, a hamlet in the parish of EASTON in GORDANO, hundred of PORTSBURY, county of SOMERSET, 5½ miles (N. W.) from Bristol. The population is returned with the parish. This hamlet, which had its rise in the seventeenth century, is chiefly inhabited by mariners, who are principally engaged in piloting vessels to and from Bristol, and down the channel, under the regulations of the company of merchant adventurers of Bristol: it is situated on the banks of the Avon, near the junction of that river with the Severn.

CROFT, a parish in the hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Leominster, containing, with the township of Newton, 119 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the perpetual curacies of Elton and Yarpole united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £7. 11. 3., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. James Keville. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. At Castle Parke, on an eminence to the north-west of the village, is Croft Ambrey, an ancient British camp, with a double ditch and rampart.

CROFT, a joint township with Southworth, in the parish of WINWICK, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Newton in Mackerfield. The population is returned with Southworth.

CROFT, a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 6½ miles (E. by N.) from Hinckley, containing 297 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. Robert Thomas Adnutt. The village is situated on a granite rock rising from the edge of a brook which falls into the Soar, and continuing in a ridge northward, until it terminates in a remarkable conical hill that is conspicuous for many miles round.

CROFT, a parish in the Marsh division of the wapentake of CANDLESHEOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Wainfleet, containing 483 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £23. 7. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Monson. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a trifling bequest for the benefit of the poor.

CROFT, a parish partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York, East riding, but chiefly in the eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding, of the county of York, comprising the townships of Croft, Dalton upon Tees, and part of Stapleton, the remaining portion of the last being in the parish of St. John Stanwick, and containing 647 inhabitants, of which number, 367 are in the township of Croft, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Darlington. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £12. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, exhibits specimens of the various styles of English architecture. The village is situated on the banks of the Tees, half a mile to the west of which is a sulphureous mineral spring, the water of which is used both for drinking and bathing; commodious baths were fitted up about fifteen years ago. Certain lands are held in this place by the owner presenting on the bridge, at the coming of every new bishop of Durham, an old sword, pronouncing a legendary address, and delivering the sword to the bishop, who returns it immediately. A charity school, in which twenty-five children are instructed, is supported by a small bequest from Lady Crew, and by voluntary contributions, the whole amounting to about £25 per annum.

CROFTON, a township in the parish of THURSBY, ward and county of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Wigton, containing 65 inhabitants.

CROFTON, in the parish of ORPINGTON, hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Foot's Cray. This is said to have been once a parish, and the village to have been destroyed by fire.

CROFTON, a township in the parish of DIDDLEBURY, hundred of MUNSLOW, county of SALOP, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ludlow. The population is returned with the parish.

CROFTON, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of TITCHFIELD, Portsdown division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Fareham. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Rood.

CROFTON, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of York, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Wakefield, containing 459 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £10. 0. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small cruciform structure in the later English style, with a low central tower.

CROGDEAN, a township in the parish of KIRK-WHELPINGTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, containing 6 inhabitants.

CROGLIN, a parish in LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Kirk-Oswald, containing 348 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of H. Chaytor, Esq. and others. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The river Croglin bounding it on the south, gives its name to this parish: veins of coal extend through it, and there are quarries of limestone and red free-stone, besides a species of porphyry, or bastard marble. The land is chiefly mountainous, with a remarkable lofty eminence, named Croglin fell. In a deep vale on the north side of the river is the village, near which are the remains of an old border fortification, termed Scar-romanwick. The school, built by subscription in 1724, is endowed with the interest of £50, given in 1723 by the Rev. J. Hunter, then rector, and an allotment of twenty-four acres, appropriated on the enclosure of waste lands pursuant to an act passed in 1808, yielding about £24 per annum; thirty-five children are taught.

CROKEHAM, a hamlet in that part of the parish of THATCHAM which is in the hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Newbury. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, which has been demolished.

CROMER, a parish (formerly a market town) in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 21 miles (N.) from Norwich, and 130 (N. N. E.) from London, containing 1023 inhabitants. This place, originally of much greater extent, included the town of Shipden, which, with its church and a considerable number of houses forming another parish, was destroyed by an inundation of the sea. It is situated on a high cliff, on the north-eastern coast of the North sea, commanding a fine view of Cromer bay, which, from its dangerous navigation, is by seamen called the "Devil's Throat." The town was formerly inhabited only by a few fishermen, but, from the excellence of its beach, the salubrity of its air, and the beauty of its scenery, it has become a bathing-place of some celebrity: there are still some remains of the walls with which it was anciently surrounded; and a fort and two half-moon batteries were, during the last war, erected upon a commanding eminence for its defence: the houses are in general badly built and of mean appearance, but those near the sea are commodious and pleasantly situated, and there are several respectable inns for the accommodation of visitors; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs. There are a circulating library and a subscription news-room; and a regatta is annually celebrated. The coast between this place and Yarmouth being extremely dangerous, it has been found necessary to erect within that short distance not less than four lighthouses, of which that at Cromer, three quarters of a mile to the east of the town, is built of brick coated with Roman cement; it is three stories high, and has a revolving lantern, twenty-four feet in circumference, lighted by twenty-one patent lamps with highly polished metallic reflectors, presenting every other minute a brilliant light, which may be distinctly seen from all points: a life-boat, constructed on Great-head's principle, and Captain Manby's apparatus for preserving the lives of shipwrecked mariners, are in constant readiness, and have often been used with success. Several vessels discharge their cargoes of coal and timber on the beach: lobsters and crabs of superior flavour are taken in great numbers, and sent to the different markets. Many attempts have been made to construct a pier, but the works have invariably been washed away by the sea. The market, formerly held on Saturday, has been discontinued; but a fair, chiefly for toys, is held on Whit-Monday. The county magistrates hold a meeting here every fortnight.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 4., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, was built in the reign of Henry IV.; it is a handsome structure of freestone and flint, in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles: the western entrance, the north porch, and the chancel, though much dilapidated, are fine specimens of the later style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A National school for an unlimited number of children of both sexes is supported by subscription.

CROMFORD, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, 15 miles (N.) from Derby, containing 1242 inhabitants. This place, which is pleasantly situated on the river Derwent, was an inconsiderable village prior to the year 1776, when Sir Richard Arkwright, having purchased the manor, erected mills, and established a cotton-manufactory of very considerable extent. Since this period it has greatly increased, and is now a flourishing place: it consists chiefly of dwellings for the persons employed in the factories, which are neat and commodious; of these many are built round an open space in which a small customary market is held on Saturday; the others are chiefly in detached situations. The cotton-manufactory affords employment to more than one thousand persons, including a proportionate number of children, who are not admitted into the factory till they have been for a certain time at a school supported by the proprietor for their instruction: there is also a manufactory for hats, and one for gingham, on a small scale, and a paper-manufactory, in which about forty persons are occupied: a great quantity of lapis calaminaris is made here, of which from one hundred to four hundred tons are exported annually. In the neighbourhood are extensive mines of lead and calamine, also quarries of marble and limestone. The Cromford canal, communicating with the Erewash canal near Langley bridge, and the Cromford and Peak Forest railway afford every facility for the conveyance of minerals, coal, and limestone to various parts of the kingdom. The chapel, a small neat building, begun by Sir Richard Arkwright, and completed by his son, Richard Arkwright, Esq., who endowed it with £50 per annum in perpetuity, was consecrated in 1797. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Richard Arkwright, Esq. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. There are day and Sunday schools, founded and supported by the Arkwright family, for the instruction of the children employed in the factory. Almshouses for six poor widows were founded, in 1651, by Dame Mary Talbot. Cromford is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CROMHALL (ABBOT'S), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, locally in the lower division of the hundred of Thornbury, county of GLOUCESTER, 2½ miles (N.W. by W.) from Wickwar, containing, with the tything of Lygon-Cromhall, 703 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £16. 9. 2., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Oriel College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is partly in the early and partly in the later style of English architecture. The prefix to the name of this parish arises from its having belonged to the abbot and convent of St. Augustine, in Bristol, to which society it was given by Lord Berkeley, in 1148. A coal mine has been lately opened in the neighbourhood.

CROMHALL (LYGON), a tything in the parish of ABBOT'S CROMHALL, upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 4¼ miles (N.W.) from Wickwar. The population is returned with the parish. This place derives its distinguishing name from having anciently belonged to the family of Lygon.

CROMPTON, a township in the parish of OLDHAM cum PRESTWICH, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4¼ miles (S.E.) from Rochdale, containing 6482 inhabitants.

CROMWELL, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, 5½ miles (N.) from Newark, containing 184 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £13. 2. 3½., and in the patronage of the Duke of Newcastle. The church is dedicated to St. Giles.

CRONDALL, a parish in the hundred of CRONDALL, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, comprising the tythings of Ewshott, Dippenhall, Crondall with Swanthorpe, and Crookham, and containing 1894 inhabitants, of which number, 470 are in the township of Crondall with Swanthorpe, 3 miles (W.N.W.) from Farnham. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £22. 5. 7½., and in the patronage of the Master and Brethren of the Hospital of St. Cross, Winchester. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a large ancient structure, partly in the Norman style. The Basingstoke canal passes through this parish. At Badley Pound farm, a mile south of the village, a beautiful Roman Mosaic pavement, twelve feet square, was discovered a few years since, and is still preserved: foundations of buildings, with some coins and other remains of the Romans, have since been found there, as well as in a contiguous field; and at Turksbury hill are the remains of a Roman encampment. The Dean and Chapter of Winchester are lords of the manor, and hold a court leet annually at the manor-house. A National school, erected by voluntary contributions, is partly supported by a bequest from Elizabeth Oliver, in 1802, of £37. 3. per annum. There is another school, founded in 1818, by Henry Maxwell, Esq., with an endowment of £1238. 15. 2. three per cents., for teaching the poor children of the parish.

CRONTON, a township in the parish of PRESCOT, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Prescot, containing 358 inhabitants. A trifling endowment for teaching children was bequeathed by Margaret Wright.

CROOK, a joint township with Billyrow, in the parish of BRANCEPETH, north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Bishop-Auckland, containing 228 inhabitants. Crook is a scattered village, partly extending into the adjoining township of Helmington Row.

CROOK, a chapelry in the parish and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Kendal, containing 227 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the landowners in the parish. The chapel, an ancient building with a tower, stands in the centre of the chapelry, which is very extensive. The Society of Friends have a meeting-house and burial-ground near How. There is a woollen mill at the hamlet of Crook-Mill, where also the turning of bobbins is carried on. In the mountainous part of this district is a vein of lead, containing barytes, similar to that used in the manufacture of Wedgwood's jasper vases.

CROOKDAKE, a joint township with Bromfield and Scales, in that part of the parish of BROMFIELD which is in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Wigton. The population is returned with Bromfield.

CROOKHAM, a tything in the parish and hundred of CRONDALL, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Odiham, containing 623 inhabitants.

CROOKHOUSE, a township in the parish of KIRK-NEWTON, western division of GLENDAL ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Wooler, containing 18 inhabitants.

CROOM (EARL'S), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, 2 miles (N. E. by E.) from Upton upon Severn, containing 186 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 1½., and in the patronage of the Rev. Charles Dunne. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is an old building in the Norman style.

CROOM-D'ABITOT, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Pershore, containing 129 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Pirton, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of the Earl of Coventry. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was rebuilt in 1763: it is a neat edifice in the later style of English architecture.

CROOM-HILL, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Upton upon Severn, containing 18 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Courts leet and baron are held annually.

CROPREDY, a parish comprising the chapelry of Mollington, which is partly in the Burton-Dasset division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, but chiefly in the hundred of BLÖXHAM, county of OXFORD, and the chapelries of Bourton, Claydon, and Wardington, and the hamlet of Prescott, in the hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Banbury, and containing 2395 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £26. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Walter Calcott founded a free school, and endowed it with an annuity of £13, for teaching forty children; two others are educated for a rent-charge of £2, given by John Ditchfield in 1708. The river Cherwell and the Oxford canal pass through this parish.

CROPSTON, a township in the parish of THURCASTON, western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Mountsorrel, containing 98 inhabitants.

CROPTHORN, a parish in the middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Pershore, containing, with the chapelry of Netherton, and the hamlet of Charlton, 687 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £14. 17. 3½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. A school is endowed with about £10 per annum, bequeathed by Mary Holland, in 1740.

CROPTON, a township in the parish of MIDDLETON, PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Pickering, containing 321 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. An estate forming part of the parish charity lands, producing about £23 per annum, has been appropriated to the support of a school in which twelve children are educated. There are various tumuli within the township, thought to be British, and a high mount called Cropton Castle, at the base of which are distinct traces of a Roman road, and near it vestiges of a Roman camp.

CROPWELL (BISHOP), a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 8 miles (E. S. E.) from Nottingham, containing 392 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, rated in the king's books at £5. 3. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Prebendaries of Oxton in the Collegiate Church of Southwell. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The old Fosse-road and the Grantham canal pass through this parish.

CROPWELL-BUTLER, a chapelry in the parish of TYTHBY, southern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Nottingham, containing 489 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

CROSBY, a township in the parish of CROSS-CANNONBY, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Maryport, containing 200 inhabitants. There is a school in the village, endowed by John Nicholson with £10 per ann. for teaching twenty children of Birkby, Crosby, and Cross-Cannonby.

CROSBY, a township in that part of the parish of BOTTESFORD which is in the northern division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 146 inhabitants. A school is partly supported by charitable donations amounting to about £2. 10. per annum, for the education of children belonging to this and the adjoining township of Brumby and Scunthorpe.

CROSBY, a township in that part of the parish of LEAK which is in the wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Thirsk, containing 39 inhabitants.

CROSBY upon EDEN, a parish in ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Brunstock, High Crosby, Low Crosby, and Walby, and containing 419 inhabitants, of which number, 184 are in the township of Low Crosby, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Carlisle. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £3. 11. $5\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a small ancient building, situated in the village of Low Crosby. Joseph Jackson, in 1773, bequeathed £40 for the education of four children, and in 1803 a schoolroom was built by subscription. The southern part of the parish forms a gentle slope to the river Eden. A fine red freestone is obtained in the neighbouring quarries. In the time of Henry I. a cross was erected on the spot now occupied by the church, to which the inhabitants resorted for prayer. The military road from Newcastle to Carlisle passes through this parish, and a portion of the site of the Picts' wall is also discernible in it.

CROSBY (GREAT), a chapelry in the parish of SEPHTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Liverpool, containing 674 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £1000 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rector of Sephton. The chapel was rebuilt in 1774. The village is in a very thriving state, from being much resorted to for sea-bathing. A grammar school was founded, in 1618, by John Harrison, a native of this place, citizen and merchant of London, with an endowment of £50 a year for a master and an usher, besides £8 for repairs: the school-house is a good building of freestone, and the school is under the direction of the Merchant Taylors' Company in London: there is also a charity school for boys and girls, founded under the will of Catherine Halsall, with an endowment of £18 per annum.

CROSBY (HIGH), a township in the parish of CROSBY upon EDEN, ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Carlisle, containing 136 inhabitants.

CROSBY (LITTLE), a township in the parish of SEPHTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Liverpool, containing 359 inhabitants. At Harkirk, in this township, a number of Saxon and other ancient coins was discovered in 1611.

CROSBY (LOW), a township in the parish of CROSBY upon EDEN, ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Carlisle, containing 184 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on the line of the military road from Newcastle to Carlisle.

CROSBY-GARRETT, a parish in EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, comprising the townships of Crosby-Garrett and Little Musgrave, and containing 273 inhabitants, of which number, 193 are in the township of Crosby-Garrett, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Kirkby-Stephen. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £19. 4. $4\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Richard Bunn, L.L.D., and Mrs. Coulston. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a spacious edifice in the ancient style of English architecture. A charity school was founded in 1629, and a schoolroom has been since erected by subscription: it is endowed with about £12 per annum, arising from a sum of £40 bequeathed by Thomas Wilson in 1767, and from various other benefactions. This parish consists of two detached portions, the chapelry of Soulby lying between them: it has the river Eden on the north-east, and on the south-west a lofty verdant hill, termed Crosby Fell, at the foot of which the village is situated, in a deep and romantic valley.

CROSBY-RAVENSWORTH, a parish in WEST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Orton, containing, with a portion of Birkbeck Fells, 863 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £7. 19. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Hon. F. G. Howard. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, a handsome structure with a square tower, was rebuilt in 1814: near it stands the ancient manorial mansion, a tower building embosomed in trees, and formerly moated. A school was founded and endowed by the Rev. William Willan, in 1630; the schoolroom was rebuilt, in 1784, by William Dent, Esq., who, in conjunction with others, raised the income to about £30 per annum, for which twenty-five children are educated and supplied with books. A great quantity of limestone is obtained in the parish, and several hogs are fattened in it, the hams being noted for a peculiarly fine flavour. The village is situated in a valley through which runs the small rivers Birkbeck and Lyvennet; at Black Dub, where the latter has its source, Charles II., with his Scottish army, halted in 1651. A little higher up, on the eastern side, is a heap of stones, called Penhurrock, probably a tumulus raised by the Britons. Tradition records the ancient existence of a friary here, but there are no remains except the names Monk-garth, Monks' barn, and Monks' bridge.

CROSCOMBE, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of WHITESTONE, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Shepton-Mallet, containing 742 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £12. 6. $10\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Miss Elizabeth Wylie. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Near it stands an ancient cross, fourteen feet high. There are manufactories for woollen goods and stockings in the village, at which a market, granted by Edward I., was formerly held, but it has fallen into disuse: a fair is held annually on Lady-day. A small river runs through the parish, and turns several mills in its course. In the vicinity are vestiges of a Roman encampment, called Masbury Castle.

CROSS (ST.), county of SOUTHAMPTON. — See WINCHESTER.

CROSS-HANDS, a hamlet in the parish of OLD SODBURY, lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Chipping-Sodbury, with which the population is returned. The petty sessions for the division are held here alternately with Badminton and Chipping-Sodbury.

CROSSLAND (NORTH and SOUTH), a chapelry in the parish of ALMONDBURY, upper division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Huddersfield, containing 1583 inhabitants. The chapel was lately erected at the expense of £2321. 4. 1., granted by the commissioners under the act passed in the 58th of George III., for building additional churches, and contains three hundred and twenty-two free sittings. The manufacture of woollen cloth is extensively carried on here; and there is a scribbling-mill in the neighbourhood. A rent-charge of £3 was given by Godfrey Beaumont towards the support of a school; and in 1749, Sir John Lester Kaye, Bart., gave land for the erection of a schoolroom, which has since been rebuilt.

CROSTONE, a chapelry in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Halifax, with which the population is returned. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £3300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Halifax. This place derives its name from an ancient cross, which has fallen to decay.

CROSTHWAITE, a parish comprising the chapelries of Borrowdale, Newlands, and Thornthwaite, and the townships of Braithwaite and Coledale, or Portingscale, in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, and the chapelry of St. John Castlerigg with Wythburn, the town of Keswick, and the township of Under Skiddaw, in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N. by W.) from Keswick, and containing 4087 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £50. 8. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £300 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. Kentigern, an ancient fabric, was roofed with slate in 1812, having been previously covered with lead. Adjoining the churchyard is a free grammar school, founded and endowed prior to 1571: the income is about £100 per annum, of which £65 is paid to the master, and £30 to the usher, for teaching one hundred and twenty children; the remainder is applied for repairing the school-house, which was built at the expense of the inhabitants. Near the source of the Derwent are two saline springs, in great repute among the inhabitants. This parish produces copper and lead ores, with plumbago, or black lead, and abounds with numerous interesting objects, for a description of which see KESWICK.

CROSTHWAITE, a parochial chapelry in the parish of HEVERSHAM, KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Kendal, containing, with the hamlet of Lyth, 781 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £630 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Inhabitants and the Vicar of Heversham. Crosthwaite contains several hamlets, and the small but pleasant village of Church-town, near which, and in the centre of a picturesque and fertile vale, stands the chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, which was rebuilt about 1813, at the expense of the inhabitants: the ancient structure had parochial privileges granted, in 1556, by the diocesan, on account of its great distance from the mother church. George Cocke, in 1665, gave £60 for the building and maintenance of a school: the schoolroom was erected by subscription, and the endowment is about £37 per annum, arising from the foregoing gift, the interest of £300 left by Tobias Atkinson in 1817, and the sum of £13 appropriated out of the general charities; there are about thirty free scholars. Here are a paper-manufactory, a corn-mill, and a malt-house. Lyth is a distinct constablewick on the south side of this extensive chapelry, and is bounded on the south-west by the mountainous ridge called Lyth Fell, or Whitbarrow Scar. At the hamlet of Raw, in Lyth, there are several limekilns, and at Pool-bank a manufactory of wood-hoops. In Lyth-moss several large trees have been discovered beneath the surface.

CROSTON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the chapelries of Becconsall with Hesketh, and Tarleton, and the townships of Bispham, Bretherton, Croston, Mawdesley, and Ulnes-Walton, and containing 5831 inhabitants, of which number, 1367 are in the township of Croston, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Chorley. The living comprises a rectory and a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £31. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Mrs. Master. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, stands in a valley upon the margin of the river Yarrow, and was rebuilt in 1743, at an expense of £1834, which was defrayed by a brief. In the churchyard the Rev. James Hiet, in 1660, built a school-house, and endowed it with £400, producing about £15 a year, appropriated to the free education of thirty-six poor children. A school of industry was established by subscription in 1802, in aid of which Elizabeth Master, in 1809, bequeathed £200; the annual income, amounting to £14, is applied to the instruction of thirty girls. Croston was anciently one of the most extensive and valuable benefices in the county: for many ages the limits of the parish remained unaltered, but, at various periods since, it has been divided by authority of parliament into six entire and independent parishes, viz., Croston, Hoole separated in 1642, Chorley and Rufford in 1793, and Tarleton and Hesketh with Becconsall in 1821. The market has fallen into disuse; but there is a cattle fair on the Monday before Shrove-Tuesday.

CROSTWICK, a parish in the hundred of TAVERHAM, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Coltishall, containing 136 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £2. 17. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

CROSTWIGHT, a parish in the hundred of TUNSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from North Walsham, containing 84 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Sir R. Kerrison, Knt. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CROUCH-END, a hamlet in the parish of HORNSEY, Finsbury division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 5 miles (N. by W.) from London. The population is returned with the parish (which see).

CROUGHTON, a township in that part of the parish of ST. OSWALD, CHESTER, which is in the higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Chester, containing 27 inhabitants. The Ellesmere canal passes through this township.

CROUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Brackley, containing 376 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £15. 3. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Viscount Ashbrook. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Dr. John Friend, the learned author of a "History of Physick," was born here, in 1675.

CROWAN, a parish in the hundred of PENWITH, county of CORNWALL, 6 miles (N. by W.) from Helston, containing 3973 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 9. 2., and in the patronage of Sir J. St. Aubyn, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Crewenne. A charity school was founded, in 1730, by the family of St. Aubyn, and endowed with the interest of £100.

CROWBOROUGH, county of STAFFORD. — See CROBOROUGH.

CROWCOMBE, a parish (formerly a borough and market town) in the hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, 7 miles (N. E. by N.) from Wiveliscombe, containing 600 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £32. 14. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Robert Harvey, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is an ancient edifice, built of hewn stone, having a tower formerly surmounted by an octagonal spire, which was struck down by lightning in 1725: the interior was neatly fitted up in 1534, with well-carved oak; and the north aisle, a handsome addition to the original structure, was built by the Carews, who have their place of sepulture underneath, there being several fine monuments to different members of that family. Elizabeth Carew, in 1668, bequeathed £400, directing a moiety thereof to be appropriated to the instruction of fifteen boys; and, in 1766, a rent-charge of £12 was devised by Thomas Carew, in aid of this charity, the annual income of which is about £40. Another school was endowed, in 1716, by Dr. Henry James, who left £100, producing now about £10 a year, for teaching eighteen girls: there is also a Sunday school, supported by voluntary contributions. Crowcombe was formerly of greater importance than it is at present: it was a borough, and the inhabitants being incorporated, enjoyed various privileges: a portreeve is still annually chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor. A market, now disused, existed so early as the reign of Henry III.; fairs are held on the first Friday in May, Monday after August 1st, and October 31st, for cattle and drapery. A cross, in good preservation, stands at the entrance to the village, and fragments of another are visible in the churchyard. Near the court-house there is a spring which ebbs and flows with the tide. Some veins of copper have been found in the sides of the Quantock hills.

CROWELL, a parish in the hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Tetsworth, containing 159 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Miss Wykeham. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Crowell is situated at the foot of the Chiltern hills: the Roman Ikniel-street passes through the parish.

CROWFIELD, a chapelry in the parish of CODDENHAM, hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Needham-Market, containing 345 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Coddennham, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CROWHURST, a parish in the first division of the hundred of TANDRIDGE, county of SURREY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Godstone, containing 214 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, and in the patronage of George Ruck, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. George.

CROWHURST, a parish in the hundred of BALDELOW, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Battle, containing 340 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of J. C. Pelham, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. George, is principally in the later style of English architecture.

CROWLAND, or CROYLAND, a parish (formerly a market town) in the wapentake of ELLOR, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 51 miles (S. S. E.) from Lincoln, and 89 (N.) from London, containing 2113 inhabitants. During the Octarchy this place was the retreat of St. Guthlac, who in the reign of Cenred, eighth king of Mercia, retired from the persecution of the pagan Britons into a hermitage, near which Ethelbald, in 716, founded a Benedictine monastery to the honour of St. Mary, St. Bartholomew, and St. Guthlac, endowing it with a considerable sum of money, and with "the whole island of Croyland, formed by the four waters of Shepishea on the east, Nena on the west, Southea on the south, and Asendyk on the north, with a portion of the adjoining marshes, and with the fishery of the Nene and Welland." This monastery, which, from the marshy nature of the soil, was built upon an artificial foundation of piles, having been destroyed by the Danes in 870, was rebuilt by King Edred, in the year 948; in 1091 it was by an accidental fire reduced to a heap of ruins, from which, under the influence of its abbot, who granted a plenary indulgence to such as should contribute to its restoration, it was again rebuilt in 1112, but was destroyed, by a like cause, about forty years afterwards; it was a third time restored, with increased splendour, and continued to flourish till the dissolution, at which time its revenue was £1217. 5. 11.: the conventual buildings, which from neglect were gradually falling to decay, were almost entirely demolished during the parliamentary war, when the monastery was occupied as a garrison: the remains are highly interesting, consisting chiefly of the western piers of the eastern portion, in the Norman style, and of some portion of the nave and aisles of the abbey church, in which the south piers and arches, and part of the clerestory, are remaining, the western part of which is partly Norman, and partly in the early and later styles of English architecture: the north aisle of the nave has been restored, and is now used as the parish church. The town, which is accessible only by artificial roads, consists of four principal streets, separated by water-courses, and communicating with each other by means of an ancient triangular stone bridge of singular construction, erected in the reign of Edward II., and consisting of one principal and finely groined arch, from which diverge three pointed arches over the streams Welland, Nene, and Catwater: it is in the decorated style of English architecture, and on one side is a mutilated figure of Ethelbald, in a sitting posture, holding a globe in the right hand. The principal employment of the inhabitants is agriculture, the feeding of cattle, and the management of the dairy: a great number of geese and wild fowl are sold for the neighbouring markets, and an extensive fishery is carried on, for the privilege of which £300 per annum, formerly paid to the abbot, is now paid to the crown: the soil, under the influence of an efficient system of irrigation, has been greatly improved, and much of the land, formerly unprofitable from the morasses with which it was overspread, has been converted into rich pastures and fruitful corn-fields: the engines employed in draining the water from the fens are of considerable power, and are set in motion by wind; one of them, which has twelve sails, throws up forty tons of water every minute. The market formerly held here has been removed to Thorney, in the county of Cambridge; but a fair is held annually, commencing on the festival of St. Bartholomew, and continuing for twelve days.

The living is a rectory not in charge, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, and in the alternate patronage of T. O. Hunter and James Whitsed, Esqrs. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew and St. Guthlac, though consisting only of the north aisle of the nave of the abbey church, is a commodious and very handsome edifice, chiefly in the later style of English architecture, with a low massive tower; the west front, which is highly enriched, is ornamented with several statues of kings and abbots, among which are those of St. Guthlac and St. Bartholomew, and of King Ethelbald, the first of whom was interred in a small stone building near the abbey, probably his abode while leading the life of an anchorite, from which circumstance, perhaps, originated its modern names, "Anchorage House" and "Anchor Church House;" the interior contains an ancient font, divided into compartments, a cylindrical stoup, and some well-executed screen-work; the roof is finely groined, and the windows are large, and decorated with elegant tracery. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Between the river Welland and the marshes is a causeway, on which, at the distance of two miles from the town, is St. Guthlac's pyramid; and in the neighbourhood are many stone crosses.

CROWLE, a parish (formerly a market town) in the western division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 35 miles (N. N. W.) from Lincoln, and 164 (N. by W.) from London, containing 1729 inhabitants, and, including the chapelry of East Toft, 1961. The town is situated in the north-west extremity of the Isle of Axholme, near the river Don, and within a mile of the Stainforth and Keadby canal, which passes it on the north. The market, formerly on Saturday, has been discontinued; but from March till the end of May a market for sheep and cattle is held every alternate Monday, and there are fairs on the last Monday in May and November 22nd, for cattle, flax, and hemp. The county magistrates hold here a petty session for the division; and constables are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stowe, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 10., and in the patronage of Mrs. Egremont. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a very ancient structure, of which the original character is concealed by repeated alterations and repairs. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A charity school, for teaching poor children reading, writing, and arithmetic, is partly supported by subscription, and by an endowment of £60 per annum arising from various bequests; there are thirty children in the school. In 1747, the body of a woman was found in an erect position in the peat moor, near the town, at the depth of six feet beneath the surface; from the sandals on the feet it appeared to have been there for several centuries; the hair and nails were entire, and the skin, though discoloured, was soft and apparently sound.

CROWLE, a parish partly in the upper division of the hundred of HALFESHIRE, but chiefly in the middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, 5½ miles (S. by E.) from Droitwich, containing 461 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Harrison, M.A. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. On entering the parish from Worcester, there is a beautiful range of hills, forming an amphitheatre, and commanding extensive prospects. Crowle Court, the interior of which clearly shews it to have been a religious house, is a very ancient edifice, surrounded by a deep moat. In the neighbourhood are considerable quarries of a blue stone, which burns into excellent lime.

CROWLEY, a township in that part of the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH which is in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 6½ miles (N.) from Northwich, containing 149 inhabitants.

CROWLEY (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3½ miles (E. by N.) from Newport-Pagnell, containing 775 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £27. 10., and in the patronage of Miss Duncombe. The church is dedicated to St. Firmin, to whom a monastery is mentioned in Domesday-book as having been founded here before the time of Edward the Confessor, which was in existence after the Conquest.

CROWMARSH-GIFFORD, a parish in the hundred of LANGTREE, county of OXFORD, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (E.) from Wallingford, containing 230 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £12. 6. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of C. Turner, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

CROWNTHORPE, a parish in the hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wymondham, containing 103 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 12. 6., and in the patronage of Lord Wodehouse. The church is dedicated to St. James.

CROWTON, a township in the parish of WEAVERHAM, second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Northwich, containing 455 inhabitants.

CROXALL, a parish comprising the township of Oakley, in the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, and the chapelry of Catton, in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Tamworth, and containing, with a part of the parish of Edinghall, 305 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a school on the Madras system, supported by subscription. The river Meuse flows through this parish, and the Tame touches upon its boundary. Croxall is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

CROXBY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of WALSLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Caistor, containing 67 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CROXDALE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ST. OSWALD, DURHAM, which is in the southern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Durham. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Cross. There is a private Roman Catholic chapel at the hall.

CROXDEN, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of TORMONSLow, county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Uttoxeter, containing, with the township of Great Yate, and a portion of the chapelry of Calton, 273 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £2. 11. 10. per annum and £137. 16. private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Macclesfield. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. Gervase, Lord Pierrepont, in 1715, bequeathed a rent-charge of £5 for the education of twelve poor children. Bertram de Verdun, in 1176, gave the monks of Auney, in Normandy, a piece of land at Chotes, or Chotene (probably Cotton), to build a Cistercian abbey, which three years afterwards was removed to Croxden, where he and all his family were buried, and also King John's heart; it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and at the general dissolution had an abbot and twelve religious, whose revenue was valued at £103. 6. 7.: the remains of this once stately and sumptuous edifice, situated near the Derbyshire border, exhibit good specimens of the early style of English architecture.

CROXTETH-PARK, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Prescott, containing 30 inhabitants.

CROXTON, a parish in the hundred of LONGSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Caxton, containing 225 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £14. 8. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir G. W. Leeds, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. James. A school has been recently built by Sir G. W. Leeds, Bart., for children of Croxton, Eltisley, and the adjoining parishes, which is endowed with £6 per annum bequeathed by John Leeds, Esq., in 1705.

CROXTON, a township in that part of the parish of MIDDLEWICH which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 1 mile (N. N. W.) from Middlewich, containing 53 inhabitants. The Grand Trunk canal passes through this parish.

CROXTON, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing, with the hamlet of Yarborough, 87 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. Upon a lofty eminence about half a mile westward of the village are remains of a large intrenchment, called Yarborough Camp, supposed to be a Roman work, from the coins found in the area and near its site.

CROXTON, a chapelry in the parish of FULMONDESTON, hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Fakenham. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

CROXTON, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSHOE, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N.) from Thetford, containing 246 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CROXTON, a township in the parish of ECCLESHALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Eccleshall, containing 683 inhabitants.

CROXTON (SOUTH), a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 8½ miles (N.E. by E.) from Leicester, containing 316 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The church is dedicated St. John the Baptist.

CROXTON-KEYRIAL, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (S.E.) from Grantham, containing, with Beskaby, 527 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 14. 7., and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The church, dedicated to St. John, is in the later style of English architecture, with a tower rising from the centre. William Smith, in 1711, bequeathed land producing about £5 per annum for the endowment of a free school. Croxton abbey, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, was founded in 1162, by William Porcarius de Linus, for Premonstratensian canons, whose revenue, at the dissolution, was valued at £458. 19. 11.: one of the abbots was physician to King John, whose bowels were interred in the church.

CROYDON, a parish in the hundred of ARMINGFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Caxton, containing, with Clapton, 368 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Clapton consolidated, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Gape. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

CROYDON, a market town and parish in the first division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, county of SURREY, 9½ miles (S.) from London, containing 9254 inhabitants. This place, called by Camden Cradeden, and in ancient records Croindene and Croiden, derives its present name from Croie, chalk, and Dune, a hill, denoting its situation on the summit of an extensive basin of chalk. By some antiquaries it has been identified with the Noviomagus of Antonine; and the Roman road from Arundel to London, which passed through that station, may still be traced on Broad Green, near the present town. At the time of the Conquest it was given to Lanfranc, Archbishop of Canterbury, whose successors had for several centuries a residence here, which is said to have been originally a royal palace. During the war between Henry III. and the barons, in 1264, the citizens of London, who had taken up arms against their sovereign, after having been driven from the field at Lewes, retreated to this town, where they endeavoured to make a stand; but part of the royal army, then stationed at Tonbridge, marching hither, attacked and defeated them with great slaughter. The archiepiscopal palace, which in 1278 was in its original state, built chiefly of timber, was enlarged by Archbishop Stafford, and subsequently improved by his successors in the see, of whom Archbishop Parker, in 1573, had the honour of entertaining Queen Elizabeth and her court for several days in this palace; which, having afterwards fallen into a state of dilapidation, was alienated from the see by act of parliament, and sold in 1780: the remains are now occupied by the proprietor of a calico-manufactory, who has converted the gardens into bleaching-grounds. With the produce of the sale, and other funds vested in the see of Canter- bury, was purchased, in 1807, for about £25,000, Addington park, three miles and a half from Croydon, with a noble mansion built by the late Alderman Trecothick, on the site of an ancient edifice said to have been a hunting-seat belonging to Henry VIII.: this mansion, which has been considerably enlarged and improved, is now the residence of the archbishops.

Croydon is pleasantly situated on the borders of Bansted downs, and near the source of the river Wandle, a small stream abounding with excellent trout, which, in its course through Beddington, Carshalton, and Mitcham, is considerably increased, and falls into the Thames at Wandsworth. The town consists principally of one long street, and is tolerably well paved, lighted with gas, and watched, under the direction of commissioners appointed by an act passed in the 10th of George IV. for its general improvement: the houses are mostly substantial and well built, and many of them are handsome and of modern structure; the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water. There is a theatre, but it is seldom opened. The barracks, at the entrance into the town from Mitcham, were erected in 1794, as a temporary station for cavalry during the preparation of troops for foreign service: they form a neat range of building, originally consisting of six wings, three of which were taken down in 1827, and contain complete accommodation for three troops of cavalry, with an hospital for thirty-four patients, infirmary, stabling for twelve horses, a store-room for one thousand sets of harness, with field equipments, riding-house, and other requisite offices: they are at present the depôt of the royal wagon train, established here in 1803; and, in addition to their previous accommodation for cavalry, contain sheds for three hundred carriages, and saddlers', smiths', and wheelwrights' shops, in which is made a variety of implements and carriages for the service of the troops in and out of the field. Within the distance of a mile east by north of the town is Addiscombe House, formerly the residence of the first Lord Liverpool, which in 1809 was purchased by the Honourable the East India Company, for the establishment of their military college, previously formed at Woolwich common, for the education of cadets for the engineers and artillery, but since 1825 open to the reception of cadets for the whole military service of the company, with the exception of the cavalry: there are generally from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and fifty students, under the inspection of an officer of high rank in the company's service, assisted by an officer of distinction in his Majesty's corps of engineers or artillery, to whom is entrusted the examination of the cadets previously to their obtaining commissions: there are fourteen professors and masters employed in the several departments of instruction; and two public examinations take place annually, at which the chairman and deputy-chairman of the Court of Directors preside, assisted by some of the superior officers of the state. Under the auspices and patronage of the Hon. the Court of Directors, this establishment has obtained a rank equal to that of any military institution in the kingdom; and the services performed in India, by which many of the officers educated at Addiscombe have distinguished themselves, bear honourable testimony to its claims to that high reputation which it has already acquired. The buildings which have been at various times added to the original mansion; for the completion of the college, and for its adaptation in every respect to the intended purposes, have cost the proprietors more than £40,000.

The trade is principally in corn: the calico-printing and bleaching, which were formerly carried on extensively, have materially declined; there is a large brewery, which has been established more than a century. An iron rail-road from Wandsworth passes through the town to Merstham, near Reigate; and a branch communicating with the Grand Surrey canal, near the Thames, affords a facility of water carriage. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on July 6th for cattle, and October 2nd for horses, cattle, sheep, and pigs; at the latter, which is also a large pleasure fair, a great quantity of walnuts is sold. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, of whom those acting for the division hold a petty session weekly: a head constable, two petty constables, and two head-boroughs, are appointed at the court leet of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who is lord of the manor. A court of requests, for the recovery of debts under £5, is held every alternate week, under an act passed in the 47th of George III., the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundred of Wallington. The summer assizes for the county are held here and at Guildford alternately. The town-hall was erected in 1807, at an expense of £10,000, defrayed by the proceeds of the sale of waste lands belonging to the parish: it is a neat stone edifice surmounted by a cupola, comprising in the upper part a convenient court for the trial of civil causes at the assizes, with rooms for the judges, sheriffs, and grand jury, and for holding the court of requests; and in the lower part, a court for criminal causes, and an area which, except when the assizes are held, is appropriated to the use of the corn market. The prison was erected by subscription among the inhabitants, on the site of the old town-hall: it is a large and substantial building, of which the lower part, containing several rooms, is used as the town gaol, and for the confinement of prisoners during the assizes, and the upper part let for warehouses: behind it is a house occupied by one of the beadles, who has the care of the prisoners: near the town-hall is a convenient edifice for the butter and poultry market.

The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £21. 18. 9., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was begun by Archbishop Courteney, and completed by Archbishop Chicheley: it is a spacious and elegant structure of freestone and flint, in the later style of English architecture, having a lofty square embattled tower with crocketed pinnacles: within are some interesting monuments to the memory of Gundall, Whitgift, Sheldon, and other archbishops whose remains were interred here; of these, the monument to Archbishop Sheldon, from the excellence of the sculpture for the period of its execution, has been erroneously attributed to a foreign artist: the finely painted windows of the church were wantonly destroyed during the Commonwealth. Two new chapels have been erected, partly by grant and partly by a loan of £7000, to be repaid by instalments, from the parliamentary commissioners; one near Croydon common, in the later style of English architecture, with a small campanile tower, containing one thousand two hundred sittings, four hundred of them free, for the erection of which the commissioners granted £3500; and one at Beaulieu Hill, Norwood, also in the later style of English architecture, with four turrets, containing one thousand and five sittings, of which six hundred and thirty-two are free, and toward the erection of which the commissioners granted £3000. The livings are perpetual curacies, in the patronage of the Vicar of Croydon. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free school, for ten boys and ten girls, was founded and endowed in 1714, by Archbishop Tenison; the income arising at present from the endowment, part of which is in houses and land, and part vested in the three per cent. consols., is £130 per annum: the children are taught by the master and his wife, who have a joint salary of £50 per annum, and a house which, with two schoolrooms, was erected in 1792, at an expense of nearly £1000, on a piece of land adjoining the old school-house, which, having become unfit for the purpose, was let by the trustees: a National and a British school are supported by subscription. The Society of Friends have a large establishment, removed to this place, in 1825, from Islington, where it had existed for more than a century, supported by subscription, for the maintenance and education of one hundred and fifty boys and girls. A free school originally founded and endowed by Archbishop Whitgift, in conjunction with the hospital of the Holy Trinity, is now the parish charity school.

The hospital of the Holy Trinity was founded and endowed by that primate, in 1596, for a warden, schoolmaster, chaplain, and any number above thirty and not exceeding forty, of poor brothers and sisters, not less than sixty years of age, of the parishes of Croydon and Lambeth, who were to be a body corporate and have a common seal; it is under the inspection of the Archbishop of Canterbury, as visitor: the income arising from the endowment, in land and houses, originally not more than £200 per annum, has increased to £2000 per annum: there are thirty-four brothers and sisters now in the hospital. The building, occupying three sides of a quadrangle, in which is a small chapel, is a handsome specimen of the style of domestic architecture prevailing at the time of its foundation: the schoolroom is at present occupied by the children of the National school. Davy's almshouses, for the reception and maintenance of seven aged men and women, were founded in 1447, by Elys Davy, citizen and mercer of London, who endowed them with lands and tenements in the parish, now producing about £130 per annum: the premises were rebuilt about sixty years since. The Little almshouses, containing originally nine rooms, were erected principally with money given by the Earl of Bristol, in consideration of lands enclosed on Norwood common; they have been enlarged by the addition of fifteen apartments, erected at the expense of the parish, for the residence of the poor. A school of industry for female children is supported by subscription: the chapel belonging to the archiepiscopal palace has been appropriated to its use. In 1656, Archbishop Laud gave £300, which sum having been invested in the purchase of a farm and in the funds, produces £62 per annum, which, according to the intention of the donor, is applied to the apprenticing of poor children. Henry Smith, Esq., of London, in 1627, left lands and houses producing £213 per annum, of which about £150 is distributed among the inmates of the Little almshouses: there are various other charitable bequests for the relief of the poor. On a hill towards Addington is a cluster of twenty-five tumuli, one of which is forty feet in diameter; they appear to have been opened, and, according to Salmon, to have contained urns: and on Thunderfield common is a circular encampment, including an area of two acres, surrounded by a double moat. In 1719, a gold coin of the Emperor Domitian was found at Whitehorse farm, in this parish, where also, within the last four or five years, a gold coin of Lælius Cæsar, in good preservation, and several others, were discovered; and in digging for a foundation in the town, in 1791, two gold coins of Valentinian, and a brass coin of Trajan, were found.

CRUCKTON, a township in the parish of PONTESBURY, hundred of FORD, county of SALOP, 4 miles (S.W. by W.) from Shrewsbury, containing 377 inhabitants.

CRUDWELL, a parish in the hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, 4 miles (N.N.E.) from Malmesbury, containing, with the tything of Eastcourt, 570 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £17. 5. 2½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Hardwicke. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a large and handsome edifice in the Norman style of architecture; on one side of the nave the columns are short and massive, while on the other side they are lofty and light. A free school, founded by John, Lord Lucas, is supported by donations of about £6 per annum. Near this place runs the old Fosseway to Cirencester.

CRUMPSALL, a township in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2½ miles (N. by W.) from Manchester, containing 910 inhabitants. In 1785, two cottages were erected by John Bowker and John Taylor, for the purpose of a school, which are now let for £22 per annum, £13 of which is paid in support of St. Mark's charity school, Cheetham. Humphrey Chetham, founder of Manchester college, or Blue-coat hospital, was born here, in 1580.

CRUNDALE, a parish in the hundred of WYE, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 8 miles (S.W. by S.) from Canterbury, containing 250 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Sir J. Filmer, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Rev. Richard Forster, in 1728, bequeathed a house and land, now producing £5. 16. per annum, which is applied to teaching eight children. At Crundale Green considerable remains of a Roman sepulchre were discovered in 1703, in which were several skeletons, urns, and other vessels, both of earthenware and glass, with some coins, trinkets for females, &c., supposed to have existed so early as the second century.

CRUTCH, an extra-parochial district, in the upper division of the hundred of HALFESHIRE, county of WORCESTER, 2 miles (N.) from Droitwich.

CRUWYS-MORCHARD, a parish in the hundred of WITHERIDGE, county of DEVON, 5½ miles (W.) from Tiverton, containing 652 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £21. 11. 8., and in the patronage of Beauvis Wood, Esq. and another. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, was struck by lightning in 1689, which rent the steeple and melted the bells.

CRUX-EASTON, a parish in the hundred of PASTROW, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6½ miles (N.N.W.) from Whitchurch, containing 74 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £12. 12. 6., and in the patronage of R. G. Temple, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is also a chapel of ease, called New chapel. Here was the celebrated grotto constructed by nine sisters, daughters of Edward Lisle, Esq., and commemorated by Pope; it has been suffered to go to ruin, the shell only remaining.

CUBBERLY, a parish in the hundred of RAPSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, 5½ miles (S. by E.) from Cheltenham, containing 237 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of Henry Elwes, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, contains some curious monuments. There is a place of worship for Baptists. One of the principal sources of the river Thames, called the Seven Springs, is in this parish.

CUBBINGTON, a parish in the Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 5 miles (N.E. by E.) from Warwick, containing 614 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Chandos Leigh, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A National school was established in 1821, and a bequest by John Glover, in 1762, of £250, for educating poor children, and one by Hannah Murcott, in 1775, of £100, for the establishment of a charity school, are applied towards its support; all the poor children of the parish may receive free instruction.

CUBERT, a parish in the hundred of PYDER, county of CORNWALL, 5½ miles (W.N.W.) from St. Michaels, containing 322 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Stabback. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. This place is situated on the coast of the Bristol channel: it was visited in 1564 with the pestilence, which carried off a very large portion of the inhabitants.

CUBLEY, a parish in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Ashbourn, containing 439 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Marston-Montgomery annexed, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £13. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. A fair is held here on the 30th of November.

CUBLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Aylesbury, containing 259 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Rector and Fellows of Lincoln College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

CUBY, a parish in the western division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile (N. by E.) from Tregoney, containing, with the borough of Tregoney, 1175 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with Tregoney, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Cleveland. The church is dedicated to St. Keby. An hospital for decayed housekeepers was founded here, in 1646, by Hugh Boscow, who endowed it with lands now producing £30 per annum, and which are expected to yield a much larger income on the expiration of the present leases.

CUCKFIELD, a market town and parish in the hundred of BUTTINGHILL, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, 25 miles (N. E. by E.) from Chichester, and 40 (S.) from London, on the road to Brighton, containing 2385 inhabitants. This place is situated on a pleasant eminence, nearly in the centre of the county, and is handsomely built of freestone, of which there are excellent quarries in the neighbourhood: the pathways in the town are laid with bricks of a very firm and durable quality, formed of red clay, which is found within the distance of four miles, where also are strata of pipe-clay of peculiar whiteness: the inhabitants are supplied with water from springs. The market is on Friday: fairs are held on May 28th, Whit-Thursdays, September 16th, and November 29th, for horses and cattle. The county magistrates hold petty sessions for the division at the court-house. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £20. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a large and handsome structure, in the decorated style of English architecture, with a square tower surmounted by a spire covered with shingles, which, from its elevated situation, has been frequently injured by lightning. There is a place of worship for Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded in 1528, and endowed by Edward Flower, Esq., of London, and the Rev. William Spicer, of Balcomb, in this county, with the manor of Redstone, in the parish of Reigate, and other estates, for the instruction of the sons of parishioners of Cuckfield and Balcomb; the master's salary is £28 per annum: there are at present not more than five or six scholars on the foundation, though more than fifty pupils receive a classical education on payment of a quarterage to the master.

CUCKLINGTON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Wincanton, containing, with Clapton-Forms, 320 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Stoke-Trister united, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £12. 19. 4½., and in the patronage of John Phelps, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a small school, in which four poor children are educated, endowed with land producing £1. 5. a year, the bequest of Thomas Knight, in 1722. A license for a market on Tuesday, and a fair annually on the eve, day, and morrow of the festival of All Saints, and the seven succeeding days, was granted in the 32nd of Edward I., to Henry de Ortiaco, or L'Orti, lord of the manor, but both have been discontinued.

CUCKNEY, or NORTON-CUCKNEY, a parish in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Worksop, comprising the townships of Holbeck, Langwith, and Norton, and containing 1435 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 8. 6½., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Earl Manvers. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A market and a fair were formerly held, but both have been long discontinued. There are some large worsted and cotton mills, which give employment to a number of children from the Foundling Hospital, in London. There is also a mill for polishing marble.

CUDDSDEN, a parish in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Oxford, comprising the chapelries of Denton and Wheatley, and the hamlet of Chippinghurst, and containing 1328 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, annexed to the bishoprick of Oxford, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £17. 0. 5. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A school is endowed, by a bequest from Dr. Moss, a late bishop of Oxford, with £1500 three per cent. stock, for the education of one hundred and fifty poor children of Cuddesden, Wheatley, Denton, and Chippinghurst, the produce of which, with contributions, amounts to about £100 a year: twelve poor girls are also educated at the expense of the Bishop of Oxford, who has a palace here, which was rebuilt by Bishops Paul and Fell, the old palace, erected by Bishop Bancroft, having been burnt down, in 1644, to prevent its falling into the possession of the parliament.

CUDDINGTON, a parish in the hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Aylesbury, containing 547 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Had-denham, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The river Teme runs on the north-west of the parish, in which there are quarries of stone.

CUDDINGTON, a township in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Malpas, containing 247 inhabitants.

CUDDINGTON, a township in the parish of WEAVERHAM, second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Northwich, containing 282 inhabitants.

CUDDINGTON, a parish in the second division of the hundred of COPTHORNE, county of SURREY, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile (N. N. E.) from Ewell, containing 117 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £7. 12. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$. The church, which was dedicated to St. Mary, has been demolished. The celebrated palace called Nonsuch, built by Henry VIII., was situated here.

CUDHAM, a parish in the hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 7 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bromley, containing 683 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £13. 2. 2., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. A grant for a weekly market here was made by Henry III.

CUDWORTH, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Ilminster, containing 144 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Cudworth in the Cathedral Church of Wells, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

CUDWORTH, a township in the parish of ROYSTON, wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnesley, containing 487 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school has been endowed by a bequest from William Poppleton, in 1747, of £50 for the erection of a schoolroom, and £300 to support the master; the income is £12. 12. per annum, for which seventeen children are educated.

CUERDALE, a township in the parish and lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Preston, containing 166 inhabitants.

CUERDEN, a township in the parish and hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Chorley, containing 569 inhabitants. Petty sessions for the division are held on Mondays, once in five weeks, alternately with Chorley, Leyland, Penwortham, and Rufford. A school was erected by Andrew Dandy, in 1673, who bequeathed a rent-charge of £5 towards the support of a master: arrears on this annuity have increased it to £6 per annum, for which twenty poor children are educated at a trifling charge; five are instructed gratuitously in the same school from a bequest of £5 a year by Samuel Crooke.

CUERDLEY, a township in the parish of PRESCOT, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Warrington, containing 321 inhabitants.

CULBONE, otherwise KILNER, a parish in the hundred of CARHAMPTON, county of SOMERSET, 9 miles (W. by N.) from Minehead, containing 45 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £3. 18. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord King. The church is dedicated to St. Culbone. This parish is bounded on the north by the Bristol channel, and exhibits the most romantic scenery; the village, from the steepness of the surrounding hills, was, until within the last few years, scarcely approachable, except on foot.

CULCHETH, a township in the parish of WINWICK, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Newton in Mackerfield, containing 2163 inhabitants. In 1727, Henry Johnson bequeathed £612. 6. for educating and clothing children; there are also two small bequests of £10 each, made in 1691 and 1702, for six children.

CULFORD, a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURN, county of SUFFOLK, 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Bury St. Edmund's, containing 291 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with those of Ingham and Timworth consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of R. B. De Bevoir, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The navigable river Lark runs through the parish.

CULGAITH, a chapelry in the parish of KIRKLAND, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 8 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Penrith, containing 257 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Kirkland. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints.

CULHAM, a parish in the hundred of DORCHESTER, county of OXFORD, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Abingdon, containing 359 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage not in charge, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Paul. Here is a small endowed school.

CULLERCOATS, a township in the parish of TYNEMOUTH, eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by W.) from Tyne-mouth, containing 536 inhabitants.

CULLINGWORTH, a hamlet in the parish of BINGLEY, upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Keighley. The population is returned with the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of worsted is carried on here. A school having a small endowment was built by subscription in 1780, in which from thirty to forty scholars are educated at a moderate charge.

CULLOMPTON, a market town and parish in the hundred of HAYRIDGE, county of DEVON, 12 miles (N. E. by N.) from Exeter, and 166 (W. by S.) from London, containing 3410 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from being situated on the river Culme, or Columb, was held in royal demesne during the Oortarchy. A collegiate church was founded here, at a very early period, by one of the Saxon monarchs, which was annexed by William the Conqueror to the abbey of Battle, in Sussex. In 1278, the inhabitants obtained the grant of a market from Edward I., which was confirmed by his successor in 1317, with the addition of an annual fair. The town is pleasantly situated in an extensive vale, surrounded by a large tract of level country, and consists of one principal street, roughly paved, from which some smaller streets diverge: the houses are in general neat and well built, and several of them retain evident vestiges of ancient magnificence: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water, and the environs abound with pleasant walks. The principal articles of manufacture are broad and narrow woollen cloth, kersey-mere, and serge, which afford employment to several hundred persons, and are still increasing: on a stream between the river and the town are two flour-mills, a paper-mill, and a mill for spinning yarn; there are other manufacturing establishments in the parish, also four tanneries. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are on the first Wednesdays in May and November, which are large marts for bullocks and sheep. The county magistrates hold here monthly a petty session for the division: a high constable is chosen alternately in this parish and that of Kentisbear adjoining, who presides over both parishes; and six petty constables are annually appointed by the parishioners, three for the town, and three for the rest of the parish.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £47. 4. 2., and in the patronage of Henry Skinner, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is an elegant and spacious structure in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty square tower, strengthened with highly enriched buttresses, and crowned with pierced battlements and crocketed pinnacles: opening into the south aisle is a beautiful chapel, erected in 1528, in the richest style of that period, by Mr. John Lane, whose remains are deposited in it: the roof of the nave and aisle of the church is of oak, richly carved and decorated with gilding. There are places of worship for Baptists, Brianites, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. A National school for two hundred children of both sexes is supported by subscription. A fund of nearly £100 per annum, arising from land purchased with a donation from George Spicer, Esq., in 1624, is appropriated to the apprenticing of poor children; and £54. 10. per annum, arising from land purchased with a donation from John and Henry Hill, Esqrs., is distributed in clothing to poor aged men: there are also several other charitable benefactions, by means of which £100 is annually distributed among the poor. At Langford-Barton, in this parish, are the remains of an ancient chapel.

CULMINGTON, a parish in the hundred of MUNSLOW, county of SALOP, 5½ miles (N. by W.) from Ludlow, containing 569 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £18. 9. 2., and in the patronage of the Rev. Mr. Johnstone. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Courts leet and baron are held occasionally.

* CULMSTOCK, a parish in the hundred of HEMROCK, county of DEVON, 7 miles (N. E.) from Cullompton, containing 1357 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £16. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains a handsome stone screen with a doorway enriched and canopied with foliage. There are meeting-houses for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists. Fairs for cattle are held on the 21st of May, and the Wednesday before September 29th. Here is a small endowed school.

CULPHO, a parish in the hundred of CARLFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (W. by N.) from Woodbridge, containing 55 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 8. 1½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £700 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of B. G. Dillingham, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph.

CULVERLANDS, a tything in the parish and hundred of FARNHAM, county of SURREY, 1½ mile (S. S. E.) from Farnham, containing, with Tilford, 457 inhabitants.

CULVERTHORPE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of HAYDON which is in the wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Sleaford, containing 61 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

CULWORTH, a parish in the hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, 7½ miles (N. E.) from Banbury, containing 581 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of Mrs. Grace Greenwood. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A school-house was built by Mrs. Danvers, and in 1795 was endowed with an annuity of £65 by Martha and Frances Rich; from seventy to eighty children are instructed gratuitously.

CUMBERLAND, the extreme north-western county, is bounded on the east by the counties of Northumberland and Durham; on the south-east by Westmorland and Lancashire, being partly separated from the former by Ullswater lake and the river Eamont, and from the latter by the river Dudden; on the west by the Irish sea; and on the north by Scotland, from which it is separated by the Solway Firth, and the rivers Liddel and Sark: it is situated between 54° 6' and 55° 7' (N. Lat.), and between 2° 13' and 3° 30' (W. Lon.), and contains one thousand four hundred and seventy-eight square miles, or nine hundred and forty-five thousand nine hundred and twenty acres: the population, in 1821, amounted to 156,124. Cumberland, or, according to the Saxon orthography, Cumbra-land, signifying the land of the Cumbrians, derived its name from having been inhabited, at the time of the Saxon conquests in Britain, by a remnant of the ancient Britons, called Cambri, or Cumbri. At the time of the Roman invasion it was, according to Whitaker, occupied by the Volantii, or Voluntii (people of the forests), a tribe of the Brigantes, whose territory was not subjugated by the Romans until the reign of the Emperor Vespasian. It was also called Caerlelyl-schire, or Caerlielleshire, from its chief town Caerlelyl, now Carlisle. On the first division of the island by the victorious Romans, this county was included in the province of Britannia Inferior; and on the second, in the northern district, which they named Valentia. During the Saxon Octarchy it formed part of the kingdom of Northumberland. About the middle of the tenth century Cumberland was ceded to the Scots, from which period it was sometimes under the dominion of their monarchs, and sometimes under that of the English kings, till the year 1237, when it was finally annexed to the crown of England by Henry III. The earliest event of importance which historians concur in authenticating, with respect to this province, is the conquest of the whole kingdom of Northumberland by the Danes under Halfden, in the year 875, who, however, were soon expelled. The accounts given by the English and Scottish writers respecting other historical transactions are contradictory and uncertain, up to the period when King Athelstan obtained at Bruningfield, or Brunford (a corruption of the Saxon Brunan-burh), a victory over the king of Scotland, and his ally, the king of Northumberland, whereby he acquired possession of Cumberland and Westmorland; but these counties were ceded to the Scottish king by his successor Edmund, by treaty; and it was agreed that the heir apparent of Scotland should possess Cumberland, as before, rendering homage for it to the king of England: accordingly Indulph, son of King Malcolm, was proclaimed Prince of Cumberland. The insurrectionary inhabitants having shortly afterwards set up an independent sovereign, named Dunmaile, apparently of British origin, King Edmund marched against them in 945, laid waste their territory, and restored it to Malcolm on the condition of his firm alliance. About the year 1000, King Ethelred invaded Cumberland, because the Scottish prince had refused to pay his quota of the contributions levied for prosecuting the war against the Danes. In the early part of the eleventh century, Othred, Earl of Northumberland, in alliance with the Danes, began to commit depredations in this county, but was defeated by Malcolm, after a desperate engagement, near Burgh upon the Sands: the Danes and Northumbrians afterwards made an irruption, and were defeated by Duncan, grandson of Malcolm, who had been invested with the principedom of Cumberland. Canute, having ascended the English throne, summoned the Scottish prince to do homage, which the latter refused, on the plea that he was not the lawful sovereign of England: Canute, in consequence, marched northward with his army in 1033, but it is very uncertain whether an engagement or an accommodation ensued, so little are the contradictory statements of the ancient historians to be relied on. Duncan succeeded to the crown of Scotland in the next year; and after his murder, Malcolm, his son and heir, finding himself unable to resist the usurper Macbeth, retired with his brother Donald Bain to his principality of Cumberland, and, having remained there some time, repaired subsequently to the English court. In the year 1053, Edward the Confessor gave Cumberland and the other northern counties to Siward, Earl of Northumberland, who thereupon invaded Scotland, defeated Macbeth, and placed Prince Malcolm on the throne.

Shortly after the Norman Conquest, a war broke out between King William and Malcolm of Scotland, who had granted an asylum to the English refugees. In 1069, or the following year, the Scottish monarch passed through this county, which then belonged to him, and ravaged Tees-dale; Gospatrick, Earl of Northumberland, retaliated in Cumberland, where his soldiers committed the most wanton cruelties. About this period the Conqueror bestowed the county on Ranulph de Meschines, who allotted it among his followers, dividing it into eleven baronies, the lords of which granted numerous manors to their dependents, most of which, having passed through various hands, continue to be held under such baronies as still exist; but on William's return from Scotland, in 1072, he revoked the grant, and gave the earldom of Chester in its stead. William had just then concluded a peace with the king of Scots, to whom a tract of land between Cumberland, Stainmore, and the Tweed, was ceded in lieu of this county.

VOL. I.

When William Rufus was at Carlisle, in 1092; as he came back from Scotland, he gave orders for rebuilding the city (which had lain in ruins since its destruction by the Danes two centuries before), and for erecting a castle: these works advanced but slowly, for when Henry I. was there, thirty years afterwards, he ordered more money to be disbursed for their completion. David, King of Scotland, took possession of Carlisle and all the fortresses in Cumberland and Northumberland, except Bambrough castle, in the year 1135, for the Empress Matilda; tidings of this having reached Stephen, he marched with his army towards the north, but a treaty being shortly after concluded, Carlisle was given to David, and some time after the county of Cumberland. In 1138, the king of Scots occupied that city with a strong garrison; and in the same year, on the 25th of September, Alberic, the pope's legate, arrived, and found him attended by the barons, bishops, and priors of Scotland. David being defeated the following year in the battle of the Standard, near York, fled to Carlisle, where he was joined by his son three days afterwards. In 1142, a dispute arose between the Scottish prince, Henry, and Ralph, Earl of Chester, respecting the county of Cumberland, the latter claiming it as his inheritance under King William's grant to Ranulph de Meschines, but it was agreed that the earl should have the honour of Lancaster in lieu, and espouse one of Henry's daughters. The English and Scottish monarchs again took up arms, in 1149, Stephen lying at York, and David at Carlisle, but they both retired without coming to an engagement. In the following year a league was entered into against Stephen, at the latter city, between King David, Henry Plantagenet (afterwards Henry II. of England), and the Earl of Chester, on which occasion Henry was knighted by the king of Scotland, and swore that when he came to the throne he would confirm to him and his heirs the territories which the Scots possessed in England. In 1152, David, and his son Henry (who died in that year), met John, the pope's legate, at Carlisle: in the next, or the following year, the king expired in that city, and was succeeded by his grandson, Malcolm IV. When Henry II. ascended the English throne, disregarding the oath made to David, he demanded the counties of Cumberland and Northumberland of Malcolm, who, being unable to withstand against so powerful an adversary, yielded them in the year 1157, receiving in lieu a confirmation of the county of Huntingdon. During the contest between Henry II. and his son, William (surnamed the Lion), King of Scotland, availing himself of so favourable an opportunity to recover possession of Cumberland, invaded it in 1173, and laid siege to Carlisle; but on hearing that Richard de Lucy, the justiciary and regent during the king's absence in France, was advancing with a large army, he raised the siege. William again invaded Cumberland in the following year, and regularly invested Carlisle: during the siege, which lasted some months, Liddell castle and other fortresses were captured by the Scots; the garrison, being at length reduced to great extremities, agreed to surrender the castle at Michaelmas, if not previously relieved, but before that period arrived, William was made prisoner at Alnwick. King Henry, in order to assist the Scottish king in subduing Roland, a rebellious subject in Galloway, stationed himself at Carlisle with a strong force, in the year 1186. Eight years afterwards, William demanded Cumberland and the other English possessions, which had been held by the ancestors of Richard I., but the statements of the historians of that period are greatly at variance regarding his having been put in possession of them. Prince Alexander succeeded to the throne of Scotland in 1214, and two years after, during the war with the barons, he invaded Cumberland, pillaged the abbey of Holme-Cultram, and besieged Carlisle, which was surrendered to him on the 8th of August, by order of the barons. He then repaired to Louis, the Dauphin of France, who was in possession of the greater part of England, and received from him and the barons of his party a recognition of his claim to the counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, and Westmorland, for which he did homage.

Soon after the accession of Henry III. a general pacification ensued, and Carlisle was given up to the English in 1217: it was then agreed that the sovereignty of Cumberland should remain with Alexander, but Henry appears to have retained firm hold of it, for in 1235 and 1237 the Scottish monarch demanded that county and those of Northumberland and Westmorland, as his lawful inheritance; however, at a conference held at York in the last mentioned year, he was induced to relinquish his claim, and to accept in lieu lands then of the yearly value of £200. The Scottish dominion over the northern counties of England thus finally ceased, but the feuds between the two kingdoms raged with unabated violence for more than three centuries, during which Cumberland was seldom long exempt from the horrors of invasion, or the cruelties and depredations of border warfare. Life and property could only be preserved by a most vigilant system of watch and ward, and the construction of numerous fortresses; almost every gentleman's residence, particularly on the sea-side, or near the border, had its fortified tower, sufficiently capacious to afford refuge to the inhabitants of the domain, and in some parishes the church towers were so constructed as to serve this purpose. The border service and laws were instituted in the reign of Edward I.; the former, for the purpose of keeping a strict watch, establishing beacons, and regulating the musters in time of war; the latter, for the punishment of private rapine and murders committed by individuals of either nation on the other, in time of peace. A Lord Warden of the Marches, whose authority was partly civil, and partly military, was appointed on each side of the borders; the first English Lord Warden having been appointed in 1296. The English borders were divided into three districts, called Marches, the Eastern, Middle, and Western, Cumberland being included in the last. The wardens held courts, but offenders were frequently executed without trial. On the attempt of Baliol, who had been acknowledged King of Scotland, to emancipate himself from the English yoke, Edward I. immediately seized on Penrith, Salkeld, and the other manors belonging to the crown of Scotland, which became the object of contention in subsequent wars, but were never afterwards restored. The Scottish troops, commanded by the Earl of Buchan, made an inroad into Cumberland, in 1296, and invested Carlisle, before which they remained four days, and burned the suburbs; but meeting with the most vigorous resistance from the inhabitants, they raised the siege and retreated. The same army, in its career of devastation, arrived at Lanercost on the 8th of April, and burnt the priory, but retired on receiving intelligence that the English forces were advancing. In October of the following year, William Wallace entered Cumberland with his victorious army, and summoned Carlisle, but finding that the garrison resolutely held out, he marched forward, and laid waste the Forest of Inglewood, and the whole of Allerdale, as far as Cockermouth. Shortly after the battle of Falkirk, in 1298, in which the Scots under Wallace were defeated, King Edward proceeded with his army to Carlisle, and there held a parliament on the 15th of September. Two years afterwards, about Midsummer, he set out on a new expedition against Scotland, and, passing through that city, marched with his army to the western border. In the year 1306, Robert le Brus, Earl of Carrick, having been crowned King of Scotland, Edward ordered his army to assemble at Carlisle on Midsummer-day, to accompany his son to that kingdom; he had been for some time in Northumberland, and arrived at Carlisle with the queen about the end of August, where they stayed till the 10th of September. On the 12th of March following, the court removed to Carlisle, where the parliament was then sitting. The king, though daily declining in health, did not relax in his efforts against Scotland, and ordered all his vassals to assemble at Carlisle on the 8th of July; he quitted that city on the 28th of June, being then in so weak a state as to be unable to travel more than two miles a day, and reached Burgh on the Sands on the 5th of July, where he expired two days afterwards. An express having been sent to Prince Edward, he reached Carlisle on the 11th, and two days afterwards received the homage of almost all the principal men in the kingdom. He then returned into Scotland, but having abandoned the vigorous prosecution of the war against that nation, he arrived at the above-mentioned city in the month of September.

In the year 1311, two inroads were made into Cumberland by Robert le Brus, King of Scotland, who ravaged Gilsland; during his second incursion he stayed three days at Lanercost with his army, and imprisoned several of the monks, but set them at liberty before his departure. In the autumn of the year 1314, Edward le Brus, brother of the Scottish monarch, attended by Sir James Douglas, advanced into England as far as Richmond in Yorkshire, after the battle of Bannockburn, and on his return burnt Kirk-Oswald. About Christmas the Scots made another inroad into Gilsland, and exacted large tributes from the inhabitants. The following year, King Robert le Brus again devastated the county and invested Carlisle, which was so obstinately defended by its governor, Andrew de Hercla, that the siege was raised on the eleventh day, when the garrison sallied out on the besiegers, and made some of them prisoners. The whole country from Carlisle to York was at this time overrun, and there was no safety for the inhabitants but in the principal fortified towns; the western part of Cumberland was also ravaged during this invasion, the monastery of St. Bees pillaged, and the manor-houses of Cleator and Stainburn destroyed. The Scots under James Douglas and Thomas Randolph laid waste Gilsland and other parts of Cumberland in 1319: three years afterwards, England was again invaded by Robert le Brus, who burnt Rose castle (the bishop's palace), plundered the abbey of Holme-Cultram, in which the remains of his father had been deposited, laid waste all the western side of Cumberland, as far as Dudden sands, and entered Lancashire; on his return he encamped near Carlisle, and there remained five days. Edward II. retaliated upon Scotland, but was compelled to retire in consequence of the scarcity of provisions, and a dysentery which raged in his army; whereupon Le Brus again entered Cumberland, and lay with his army for five days at Beaumont, whence he sent forth detachments to ravage the surrounding country.

Shortly after the accession of Edward III., in 1327, the lords Ufford and Mowbray were sent with a reinforcement to Lord Lucy, the governor of Carlisle; in July, the Earl of Murray and Lord Douglas entered England with a large army, and marched through Cumberland, devastating the country. Edward Baliol having, in 1332, made an attempt to recover his father's crown, after narrowly escaping assassination at Annan, fled to Carlisle, where he was hospitably received by Lord Dacre, the governor. The following year that nobleman's estates in Gilsland were ravaged by Lord Archibald Douglas, who stayed four days with his army in Cumberland. When Edward III. was in Scotland, at the close of the year 1334, he sent Edward Baliol and the Earls of Oxford and Warwick to defend Carlisle against the Scots; large reinforcements having joined them from the northern counties, they made a successful incursion into Scotland, and returned to that city: the next year, on the 11th of July, the king quit- ted it with his army, on his way to Scotland. The Scots entered England at Arthuret in 1337, and, marching eastward, destroyed and sacked about twenty villages: during a subsequent invasion in the same year, they surrounded Carlisle, and fired the suburbs, with the hospital of St. Nicholas; they also burnt Rose castle, and pillaged the surrounding country. Five years after this they invaded Gilsland, and, having penetrated as far as Penrith, burnt that town, with several of the villages in its neighbourhood. Carlisle and Penrith were again burnt by them in 1345. In the next year, David le Brus invaded Cumberland in person, and took Liddell castle by assault; the Scots then plundered the monks of Lanercost of their money and jewels, and, after committing great destruction, marched by way of Naworth to Ridpath.

Although a truce had been established between the two nations, the borderers continued their hostilities. In the summer of 1380, the Scots laid waste the forest of Inglewood, and having surprised the town of Penrith during the time of the fair, they slew a great number of the people, and carried off several prisoners, besides a large booty; for which, however, they paid very dearly, as they became infected with a pestilence then raging, of which vast numbers of the inhabitants of Scotland died. On their return, they made an attempt on Carlisle, and set fire to one of the streets by discharging burning arrows, but were deterred from prosecuting the siege by a report that a numerous army was coming to the relief of the city. Three years after this, the abbot of Holme-Cultram paid a large sum of money to the Earl of Douglas, to prevent the monastery from being burned. The Scots, assisted by the French, invaded Cumberland in 1385, ravaged the estates of the Lord of Greystock and the Musgraves, and made an unsuccessful attack on Carlisle. Two years after this, the Earls of Douglas and Fife, with other Scottish noblemen, invaded Cumberland, devastated the country, surprised Cockermouth, where they remained three days, and carried off Peter Tilliol, sheriff for the county; during this inroad another attack was made on Carlisle, and the suburbs burnt. In 1388, the Scots entered Gilsland, and, on Lord Dacre's demesne, barbarously set fire to some houses, in which they had shut up more than two hundred decrepid persons, women, and children. No further mention is made of this county till the year 1461, when an army of Scots, in the interest of Henry VI., besieged Carlisle, and burnt the suburbs. In 1522, the Duke of Albany marched to the borders with a large army, and approached within four miles of Carlisle, with an intention to besiege it; but having received intelligence that it was well defended, and in every respect prepared for a siege, he retired, and made proposals to Lord Dacre for a truce. The next year, Lord Maxwell, having made an inroad into Cumberland, a skirmish took place, in which, after a sharp conflict, he overcame his opponents, and returned with three hundred prisoners to Scotland. Nicholas Musgrave and others, having excited an insurrection in 1537, besieged Carlisle, but were repulsed by the inhabitants, and afterwards defeated by the Duke of Norfolk, who ordered seventy-four of their officers to be hanged on the walls of that city; Musgrave, however, escaped. Lord Maxwell, Lord Warden of the Marches, passed the Eske in 1542, and burnt some houses on the borders. The battle of Solway-moss was fought soon afterwards, in the parish of Kirk-Andrews, when the Scots, notwithstanding their superior numbers, were defeated by the English army, commanded by Sir Thomas Dacre, who took above a thousand prisoners, among whom were two hundred noblemen, esquires, and gentlemen. In the year 1569, Lord Scrope, the Lord Warden, held Carlisle against the Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland, who were then in open rebellion; these noblemen advanced from Northumberland as far as Naworth, but, after a conference with Leonard Dacre, finding that their cause was hopeless, disbanded their forces in the month of December. Early in the following year, Dacre, who laid claim to the baronies of Gilsland and Greystock, having raised from among the tenants of those baronies a force of two thousand infantry and six hundred cavalry, garrisoned Naworth and Rockcliffe castles. Lord Hunsdon was sent against him, and on the 20th of February approached Naworth, but instead of investing the castle, passed on towards Carlisle; Dacre thereupon made a sally with one thousand five hundred foot and six hundred horse, and attempted to intercept Hunsdon's progress, but was repulsed, and fled with his cavalry to Scotland; Lord Hunsdon proceeded to Carlisle, and immediately took possession of Naworth, Rockcliffe, and Greystock castles for the queen.

The last hostile inroad, prior to the union of the two kingdoms, was immediately after the accession of James I., when a party of Scots, amounting to between two and three hundred, entered Cumberland, and penetrated as far as Penrith, committing various depredations. James, who was then at Berwick, on his way to London, immediately despatched the governor, Sir William Selby, against them, with a detachment of the garrison, who soon defeated these freebooters, and sent all the prisoners he took to the castle of Carlisle. As the two countries were now united under James VI. of Scotland and I. of England, and frontier garrisons were no longer necessary, the king reduced those at Carlisle and Berwick; he also took active measures for ensuring the peace of the borders, and appointed George Clifford, Earl of Cumberland, Lord Warden of the Marches. In order to abolish as much as possible the distinction between the two kingdoms, he ordered that the counties of England and Scotland, which had been called the Borders, should be styled the Middle Shires, and thus described them in his proclamation. He soon after banished the Græmes, or Grahams, a numerous clan, occupying what was called the debateable ground, near the river Eske, who had long been an annoyance both to their own countrymen and the inhabitants of Cumberland; they embarked at Workington, some being sent to the Netherlands, but the greater number to Ireland, and, in 1606, there was an assessment on the county to defray the expense of their removal: some of them having returned from exile, the king issued a proclamation for apprehending them in 1614. For some time after the accession of James, outrages and robberies continued to be perpetrated on the borders; as a further check to them, the king issued several special commissions, under which various regulations were adopted. All persons, "saving noblemen and gentlemen unsuspected of felony or theft, and not being of broken clans," in the counties lately called the Borders, were forbidden to wear any armour, or weapons offensive or defensive, or to keep any horse above the value of fifty shillings, on pain of imprisonment. Slough-dogs, or blood-hounds, for pursuing the offenders through the mosses, sloughs, or bogs (who thus acquired the name of moss-troopers), were ordered to be kept at the charge of the inhabitants of certain districts; and Lord William Howard maintained a small garrison at Naworth, in order to check their marauding, enforcing the laws against them with the utmost severity; his great grandson, the Earl of Carlisle, was not more lenient, but they were not finally extirpated until the reign of Queen Anne.

Carlisle and Bewcastle were garrisoned in 1639, in consequence of the commotions in Scotland: in the month of June of the following year, the Scottish army being daily expected to enter Cumberland, necessary precautions were taken; orders were issued for keeping strict watch, and for preparing the beacons. The garrison at the former place was kept up till the month of October, 1641, when, in pursuance of a treaty with the Scots, it was disbanded. Soon after the commencement of the war between Charles I. and the parliament, at the end of 1642, the northern counties associated and raised forces for the king, but Cumberland was not often the scene of action: during the following year, the troops levied in this county distinguished themselves in Lancashire, under the command of Col. Huddleston. The royalists had an army in Cumberland and Westmorland in 1644, which was joined by Prince Rupert, after the battle of Marston Moor; and in that year a force was first raised in this county for the parliament, which menaced Carlisle, but, being pursued by the posse comitatûs towards Abbey-Holme, quickly dispersed and fled. At this period the Marquis of Montrose, being hard pressed by the Earl of Calendar, retreated from Scotland to that city; a skirmish took place in the town on the 17th of May, when Montrose retired to the castle, where he was besieged; but it does not appear to have been surrendered, as the earl, five days afterwards, was employed in the siege of Morpeth. After the capture of York, in July, Sir Thomas Glenham, with the garrison, retired to Carlisle, where he assumed the command; and about the end of September, Sir Philip Musgrave and Sir Henry Fletcher, being defeated near Great Salkeld by the Scottish army under General Lesley, escaped with difficulty to the same place: as Lesley did not then stay to invest it, the townsmen were enabled to lay in a stock of provisions; but after the storming of Newcastle, in October, he returned with part of his forces and laid siege to the city. About the end of February, it being found necessary to put the garrison and inhabitants on short allowance, they experienced the most severe distress; but nevertheless held out till all hopes of relief had vanished by the fatal issue of the battle of Naseby, and did not surrender till the 25th of June, 1645, when the most honourable terms were granted them. In the month of October, Lord Digby and Sir Marmaduke Langdale were defeated by Sir John Brown, governor of Carlisle, at Carlisle sands, and, their forces being dispersed, were obliged to take refuge in the Isle of Man. Carlisle had been garrisoned by the Scots from the time of its capture by General Lesley, but on the general evacuation of fortified towns by the Scottish garrisons, it was relinquished in February 1647. An army was raised in Scotland for the service of the king, in 1648, under the Duke of Hamilton, and, about the end of April in the same year, Sir Thomas Glenham and Sir Philip Musgrave surprised Carlisle: shortly after that event, a force of about three thousand infantry and seven hundred cavalry, raised in Cumberland and Westmorland, assembled, under the command of Sir Marmaduke Langdale, upon a heath five miles from that city, where they were joined by five hundred cavalry from the bishoprick of Durham. General Lambert, who commanded the parliamentary army in the north, took Penrith on the 15th of June, and established his head-quarters there for a month; detachments from his army captured Greystock, Rose, and Scaleby castles. Langdale retreated towards Carlisle, on which the citizens, dreading the recurrence of a famine, petitioned Sir Philip Musgrave not to admit his army within the walls. The Duke of Hamilton arrived there early in July, and superseded Musgrave, conferring the command of the garrison on Sir William Levingston: his forces, which were quartered in the neighbourhood of the city and at Wigton, having joined those under the command of Langdale, at Rose castle, making together a body of about twelve thousand men, he marched to the south; on his approach, General Lambert quitted Penrith, on the 15th of July, and retreated into Westmorland.

Cumberland was much harassed and plundered by General Munroe, who followed the Duke of Hamilton out of Scotland with six thousand men, both on his march to the south, and in his way home after the battle of Preston. Sir Philip Musgrave, returning about this time with his forces to Carlisle, was refused admittance by the governor. Cocker-mouth castle was besieged by a body of five hundred Cumberland royalists, in August 1648, and relieved on the 29th of September by Lieutenant-Colonel Ashton, who had been despatched from Lancashire by Cromwell for that purpose. On the 1st of October, Carlisle was surrendered to Cromwell, and garrisoned by eight hundred infantry and a regiment of cavalry: a garrison, consisting of six hundred infantry and one thousand two hundred cavalry, was afterwards established there for the purpose of suppressing the insurrections of the moss-troopers. The county was at this time in a deplorable state; people of the highest rank had scarcely bread enough for their consumption, and no better beverage than water; many died on the highways for want of sustenance, and there were thousands of families in a state of utter destitution: parliament ordered a collection to be made for their relief, but it proved very inefficient.

In the month of November, 1715, a large force under the command of Mr. Forster, who had received a general's commission from James Steuart, entered England, marched to Brampton, where they proclaimed him, and, advancing to Penrith, took possession of the town, the posse comitatûs, amounting to twelve thousand men, fleeing at their approach. This county was once more the scene of military operations in 1745, when the young chevalier, as he was styled, made an attempt to regain the crown, which had been forfeited by his grandfather: the van-guard of his army entered Cumberland on the 8th of November, near Longtown, and encamped the next day within four miles of Carlisle, which was garrisoned by the militia of Cumberland and Westmorland; the main body having joined them on the 10th, they summoned the town, but the siege was not commenced till the 13th, two days after which it surrendered. A garrison having been left there, the advanced guard marched on the 21st to Penrith, on their route to the south, and the next day, Charles arrived there with the remainder of his army. He proceeded as far as Derby, but, after holding a council of war, made a hasty retreat towards the north, followed by the Duke of Cumberland. The main body of the Highland army reached Penrith on its retreat, on the 17th of December, and a skirmish took place on the following day between the rear and a part of the duke's forces at Clifton. On the 20th the Highlanders quitted Carlisle, after leaving a garrison in the castle, and fled towards Scotland; the Duke of Cumberland arrived before the place the next morning, but, being obliged to wait for cannon from Whitehaven, did not erect his batteries till the 28th, two days after which the city was surrendered at discretion. In 1778, during the American war, a daring attempt was made on the port of Whitehaven by the famous Paul Jones; but one of his men having deserted, gave timely notice to the inhabitants of his intentions, who were thus fully prepared to repel the attack.

Cumberland is chiefly in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, which include also part of Westmorland, but that part of Allerdale ward which is above the river Derwent is in the deanery of Copeland, archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, and in the province of Canterbury: it comprises the deaneries of Allendale and Carlisle, and part of that of Cumberland, the remainder being in Westmorland. It contains one hundred and four parishes, of which thirty-eight are rectories, twenty-nine vicarages, and thirty-seven perpetual curacies. For civil purposes it is divided into four districts, called wards (a term peculiar to the border counties), which have always borne the same appellation; Allerdale (above and below Derwent), Cumberland, Eskdale, and Leath wards. It comprises the city of Carlisle, the borough and market town of Cocker-mouth, and the market towns of Alston Moor, Bootle, Brampton, Egremont, Hesket-Newmarket, Keswick, Kirk-Oswald, Longtown, Maryport, Penrith, Raven-glass, Whitehaven, Wigton, and Workington. This county returns six members to parliament; two knights of the shire, two burgesses for Carlisle, and two for Cocker-mouth, at which latter place the election of the county members takes place. It is in the northern circuit: the assizes and the spring and summer quarter sessions are held at Carlisle, where stands the county gaol and house of correction; the autumnal session at Penrith, and the Epiphany session at Cocker-mouth. There are fifty-five acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1829, amounted to £57,898, and the expenditure to £55,920, of which £43,783 was applied to the relief of the poor.

The manufacture of calico and gingham was first established at Dalston, and soon extended to Carlisle and Penrith, where there are large cotton works. The cotton-printing is chiefly carried on at Carlisle, and the population has, in consequence, greatly increased. At Cleator, Egremont, and Whitehaven, sail-cloth is manufactured on an extensive scale, and coarse woollen cloths and blankets at Keswick. Coarse earthenware is made at Dearham and Whitehaven, and bottles are manufactured at the Ginns. There are iron-foundries at Carlisle, Dalston, and Seaton near Workington: paper-mills at Cocker-mouth, Egremont, and Kirk-Oswald; and several yards for ship-building at Maryport, Whitehaven, and Workington, as well as every kind of manufacture for the supply of the shipping.

The climate is extremely salubrious, the county being throughout remarkable for the longevity of its inhabitants. The surface is much diversified; the northern and western parts are generally level, and do not afford any interesting scenery, except in the courses of the several rivers. The eastern and south-western parts are chiefly occupied by mountains, many of which are of considerable height: between these and the level district are lower ranges of smooth hills, most of which are denominated fells. The mountainous tract which forms the eastern boundary is a long continued range of mountains and hills, none of them picturesque, the summits being for the most part very little broken. The numerous mountains in the south-west part of the county present a great variety of grand and picturesque forms, and are interspersed with lakes of considerable extent, and highly cultivated valleys, in many parts well wooded; forming altogether some of the most remarkable and beautiful scenery in the kingdom. The principal mountains are Black-Comb, Skiddaw, Saddleback, Bow-fell, Grasmere-fell, Helvellyn, Hardknot, Wry-nose, High-pike, Pillar, Sca-fell, and the Screes, of which several are very rugged and precipitous. The principal elevations, as computed from the observations made in the course of the trigonometrical survey of the kingdom, are as follows :—Sca-fell (high point), three thousand one hundred and sixty-six feet ; Sca-fell (low point), three thousand and ninety-two ; Helvellyn, three thousand and fifty-five ; Skiddaw, three thousand and twenty-two ; Bow-fell, two thousand nine hundred and eleven ; Cross-fell, two thousand nine hundred and one ; Pillar, two thousand eight hundred and ninety-three ; Saddleback, two thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven ; Grasmere-fell, two thousand seven hundred and fifty-six ; High-pike, two thousand one hundred and one ; Black-Comb, one thousand nine hundred and nineteen ; Dent-hill, one thousand one hundred and fifteen. The largest of the lakes is Ulswater, which for about six miles forms the boundary between Cumberland and Westmorland : its whole length somewhat exceeds eight miles, and, its breadth being in no part quite a mile, it has much the appearance of a wide river : its scenery is remarkably beautiful and picturesque ; the most prominent feature of it is the mountain Helvellyn, which, with some lower ones, being seen over Patterdale, with sharp peaks, are said to resemble the Alpine forms more than any others in this country. The same mountain is also the most conspicuous amongst the rugged and barren masses seen from the lake of Thirlmere, or Leatheswater, which is long and narrow, like Ulswater, but of smaller dimensions, and is situated at the entrance of the small but beautiful vale of St. John's. Amongst the finest scenery is the Vale of Keswick, containing the lakes of Derwentwater and Bassenthwaite, or Broad-water, connected by a small stream. The borders of Derwentwater, consisting of fine oak woods and rich enclosures, over which are seen the mountain Skiddaw at the northern extremity, and Borrowdale at the southern, present a great variety of magnificent and beautiful scenes, a considerable addition to which is made in rainy seasons by the Lowdore waterfall, the height of which is two hundred feet. Borrowdale itself, a narrow valley, bounded on each side by steep rocky mountains, presents a great diversity of picturesque scenery, among the most remarkable objects of which are the conical hill called Castle-Cragg, and the immense and singularly detached rock, called the Bowder-stone. The lake of Buttermere lies a short distance north-west of Borrowdale, surrounded by rugged mountains ; and a little further northward lie Crummock-water and Lowes-water, connected with each other and with Buttermere by a small stream. At the western extremity of this group of mountains are those called Hard-knot, Wry-nose, Sca-fell, and the Screes ; the three first form the eastern boundary of Eskdale, and, as seen from its opposite extremity, present one of the finest of the Cumberland views ; the precipitous side of the Screes forms the southern boundary of Wast-water, and, by descending quite into the lake, gives its scenery a peculiar character. Besides the lakes already mentioned, the principal are Ennerdale-water and Devock lake. There is also a number of smaller lakes, or tarns, as they are provincially termed. The lakes abound with trout, and with the giviniad, or schelly, as well as pike and other fish : there are char in Ulswater, Crummock-water, Buttermere, and Ennerdale-water, and abundance of carp in Tarn-Wadlin. Among the mountains are several interesting waterfalls, the principal of which are, Stock-Gill Force ; Rydal Waterfalls ; the Force, on the river

Brathay, above Skelwith bridge ; Lowdore cascade, near the south-east corner of Derwentwater, one of the most magnificent scenes in England ; Barrow cascade ; Scale Force ; and Airey Force.

The soil may be classed under four different heads : first, rich strong loam, which covers but a small portion of the county, and produces excellent crops of grain. Second, dry loams, which occupy a larger portion of it than any other, and prevail, not only in the lower districts, but on the steep sides of the mountains, and even their summits are sometimes covered with a dry sound earth, producing green sward and a little heath. It is estimated that one-half of the lower district is covered with this valuable soil, which is well adapted to the culture of turnips, artificial grasses, and the various species of grain, and for breeding and feeding the best kinds of stock, particularly sheep. Third, wet loam, generally on a clay bottom, the fertility of which varies greatly, as it depends on the depth of the soil, and the nature of the clay beneath ; although unsafe for sheep, cows for the dairy may be kept upon it with advantage, and young cattle and horses bred ; it is also well suited to the culture of wheat, oats, clover, and ray-grass. Fourth, black peat earth, which prevails on the mountainous districts bordering on Northumberland and Durham, and occasionally on commons in the lowlands, in some places only a few inches thick, reposing on a bed of white sand. The crops commonly cultivated are barley, oats, peas, turnips, and potatoes ; those less commonly cultivated are beans, cabbages, carrots, and flax : the artificial grasses are red and white clover, common hay seeds, with a little rib-grass, and ray-grass. The land is ploughed by horses yoked abreast, and guided by the ploughman with cords ; oxen are never employed for this purpose : the swing plough, in which no improvement has been made, is used in this and all the northern counties. The carts are drawn by a single horse, three of them, and sometimes more, being driven without difficulty by a man or a boy : the women are frequently employed in the labours of the field. This county, until lately, did not produce much more corn than was sufficient for the consumption of its inhabitants, but since the large enclosures which have been made within the last five and thirty years, considerable quantities of flour and oatmeal have been sent coastwise to other parts of the kingdom : the chief exports are from Whitehaven, but smaller shipments of flour and oatmeal are also made from Maryport and Ravenglass. Wheat is chiefly grown in the north-west part of the county ; Gilsland also, in the north-east, is a corn district, where the turnip and barley system is very prevalent. The north-east, south-east, and southern parts of the county are chiefly appropriated to grazing, and a great deal of butter is sent in firkins to distant markets. Cranberries grow in great profusion on the moors, and form an article of trade : besides those which are sent in barrels to the metropolis, the sale is very extensive at Longtown and other markets. The fisheries are of some importance, a great quantity of cod being taken on the coast ; there are herring-fisheries at Allonby, Maryport, and Whitehaven, the last on a very extensive scale. There are valuable salmon-fisheries in the Eske, Eden, and Derwent ; the produce is sent from Carlisle and Bowness to London, to which place the char taken in the lakes is also forwarded, having been first potted at Keswick.

The pearls, still occasionally found in the muscles of the lrt, were once highly esteemed.

Copper was formerly exported to a large amount, and a considerable quantity of silver extracted from the mines; lead and coal are now the most valuable subterranean productions. The principal lead mines are those at Alston Moor, discovered and worked by Francis Radcliffe, the first earl of Derwentwater; upon the attainder of the third earl, they were vested in Greenwich Hospital, with the manor and his other estates: the number of mines held under that establishment, in the year 1814, amounted to one hundred and two. Lead mines have been worked with tolerable success for some years on Cross-fell, in the parish of Kirkland, and there are three in operation at Newlands, but they are not profitable. The principal collieries on the coast are at Whitehaven and Workington, the former being by far the most extensive in the kingdom, and there is one at Scalegill, worked only for inland sale. Howgill on the west, and Whingill to the east, of Whitehaven, are the largest collieries; there are three entrances to the former, and four to the latter, called Bear-mouths, or Day-holes, by which both men and horses descend to the bottom. Thwaite pit, which in the year 1816 was one hundred and fifty fathoms in depth, and King pit, which was one hundred and twenty, both in Howgill, are the deepest pits that have yet been sunk; the former was at that period one hundred and twelve fathoms below the sea; the greatest distance to which workings had then been carried in a direct line from the shore was one thousand yards. The first steam-engine for raising water at Whitehaven was erected early in the last century, at the Ginns; the first for raising coal was used at George pit, in Whingill colliery, in 1787; others were soon afterwards erected for the same purpose. Howgill and Whingill have each two steam-engines for pumping water, and three for raising coal: these collieries produce, on an average, about two hundred and twenty-five thousand tons annually. The coal was formerly conveyed from the works to the sea-side in packs on horseback, but, about the year 1720, small wagons were introduced; in 1813, the wagon-ways, which were before of wood, were laid with cast-iron, and on the Howgill side, a self-acting inclined plane was constructed, two hundred and ninety yards long, with a perpendicular altitude of one hundred and fifteen feet. About nine hundred persons are employed in the works at Whitehaven. The next colliery in point of extent on the coast is at Workington, which affords employment to four hundred persons; there are four pits now in operation from sixty-five to ninety-five fathoms in depth, and six steam-engines are at work in this colliery.

At Crowgarth, in the parish of Cleator, and Bigrigg, in the parish of Egremont, there are iron mines. Some years ago a considerable quantity of a ferruginous sort of limestone was sent from the parish of Arlochden to the iron-works at Carron; and a black stone, called Catsalp, raised at Braithwaite, in the parish of Dean, was used in the iron works at Seaton, for the purpose of making pig-iron: upon the sea-shore near Harrington iron-stone is collected, and a few hundred tons annually sent to Ulverstone. The celebrated mine of wad, or black lead, is at the head of Borrowdale (under which place an account of it is given). Limestone is very abundant in various parts of the county, and near the sea-coast is burnt in great quantities for exportation, particularly at Overend, near Hensingham, and at Distington, from each of which places about three hundred and fifty thousand Winchester bushels are annually sent to Scotland. At All-hallows, Brigham, Cleator, Hodbarrow in Millom, Ireby, Plumbland, Sebergham, Uldale, &c., there are limeworks for inland consumption, and the barony of Gilsland is supplied from the parishes of Castle-Carrook, Denton, and Farlam. Gypsum, or alabaster, abounds in the parishes of Wetherall, St. Cuthbert, and in St. Bees, on the sea-coast, about a mile from Whitehaven, whence five or six hundred tons are annually exported to Dublin, Glasgow, and Liverpool, where it is principally used in the composition of stucco. There are several quarries of excellent freestone, both red and white, in the neighbourhood of Whitehaven, where a great deal is shipped for Ireland, Scotland, and the Isle of Man. At Ivegill and Barngill, near that port, there are quarries for grindstones, which are also exported in considerable quantities; and in the townships of Bassenthwaite, Borrowdale, Buttermere, Cockermouth, and Ulpha, are quarries of excellent blue slate.

The cattle are small, with long horns, but the Galloway breed is sometimes intermixed, particularly along the coast from Whitehaven to Carlisle: the native breed is not distinguished by any particularly good qualities, little attention being paid to its improvement, but it appears better adapted to this county than any other kind: the Galloway polled cattle also thrive well. The dairies are generally small; the butter which they produce is of excellent quality; the cheese, however, is very indifferent, being mostly made of skimmed milk. The sheep (except the Herdwicks, a breed peculiar to the mountainous district, known as Hardknot, Sca-fell, Wry-nose, &c.) are descended from a race with black faces and coarse wool, but, by crossing with some other kind, many of them have acquired a large portion of white on their faces and legs; they have thick, rough, hairy legs, and coarse long wool. The management of sheep is very similar all over the county; during the summer the flock is turned on the commons and allowed to range at large; in Autumn they are driven in and saved, when the old sheep are turned loose again, but on the first appearance of snow are brought to the enclosures and daily foddered with hay. Swine are bred in considerable numbers, as every farmer fattens one or more of them, and most labourers rear and feed a pig; their weight is from fifteen to twenty stone.

The Eden and the Derwent are the principal rivers: the former rises in Westmorland, and enters this county about a mile south of Edenhall, flowing by Kirk-Oswald, Warwick-bridge, Carlisle, and Rowcliffe; at a short distance from the latter place it falls into the sea, its course through Cumberland being about thirty-five miles. The Derwent rises in Borrowdale, five miles south-west from Derwentwater, and, after feeding that lake, flows on to Bassenthwaite water, which it also feeds, then passes by Cockermouth (where it is joined by the Cocker), and Workington, near which it runs into the sea; its course from Derwentwater being about twenty miles. The other rivers are the Bleng, the Calder, Caldew, Cocker, Croglin, Dudden, Eamont, Ellen or Elne, Enn, Esk, Gelt, Greeta, Irt, Irthing, Kershope, Kingwater, Levon, or Line, Liddell, Lowther, Mite, Nent, Petterell, Sark, Tees, Tyne, Wampool, and Waver. A ship canal connects Carlisle with the Solway Frith at Bowness, and a rail-road is about to be commenced from Carlisle to Newcastle upon Tyne.

The main roads are remarkably good, limestone having been employed in their construction; but the cross roads are usually narrow and bad. The great road from London to Glasgow enters the county at the bridge over the Eamont, near Penrith, passing through Carlisle and Longtown, and four miles beyond the latter place runs into Scotland, crossing the Sark to Springfield and Gretna-Green. The road from Carlisle to Edinburgh branches off at Longtown, and crosses the borders a little beyond Kirk-Andrews. That from Carlisle to Newcastle passes through Crosby to Brampton, and about six miles further on enters Northumberland. The road from Carlisle to Cockermouth, Workington, and Whitehaven, runs through Wigton, thence by Cockbridge to Cockermouth, and, in the direction of Great and Little Clifton, proceeds to Workington; at Little Clifton it turns off through Distington and Moresby to Whitehaven.

Although remains of early Norman architecture are to be seen in many of the churches of Cumberland, few of them are entitled to particular notice, except the nave and south transept of Carlisle cathedral (the style of which is plain and massy), and the churches of Aspatria and Torpenhow: the great arch and south doorway of the former are profusely adorned with braids and chevron mouldings, and some of the original small round-headed windows are still remaining in the north wall of the nave and of the belfry. The great arch in Torpenhow church is enriched with chevron mouldings: the ornaments of the capitals of the half pillars on each side are very singular, consisting of an assemblage of grotesque heads and human figures with interlaced arms. The great arches and the doorways of Bridekirk, Irthington, Isell, and Kirk-Bampton churches are in the same style, but less decorated; there is a bas-relief of indifferent execution within the arch of the north doorway of the latter, representing three grotesque figures, one of which is an abbot. Kirkclinton is a complete Norman church, not having undergone any alteration. Warwick church is in the same style, and very plain. The great west door of the church of St. Bees is ornamented with grotesque heads and chevron mouldings; and the churches of Bromfield, Burgh on the Sands, Dearham, Edenhall, Grinsdale, and Great Salkeld, have doorways with circular arches and Saxon ornaments. The remains of the churches of Holme-Cultram abbey and of Lanercost priory exhibit specimens of the earliest English architecture of the middle and latter part of the twelfth century, having the pointed arch united to the massy pillars of the Norman style. The east end of the church of St. Bees, now dilapidated, and the aisles of the choir of Carlisle cathedral, are early English with lancet-shaped windows and slender shafts between them; the east end of Egremont church, and the remains of Seton priory, are in the same style. The large clustered pillars in the choir of Carlisle cathedral, the capitals of which are much enriched with sculptured foliage, are the work of the latter part of the thirteenth century: the roof of the choir, and the east end of it, which was rebuilt in the reign of Edward III., after the church had been partially destroyed by fire, and a fine window at the east end of the south aisle of Brigham church, are the only remains of ecclesiastical architecture of the fourteenth century in this county. The only example of later English architecture occurs at the west end of Abbey-Holme church, where there are two niches, the arches and pinnacles of which are ornamented with crockets. There are some remarkable churches on the borders of Scotland, which have hitherto been little noticed; the towers of two of these, Newton-Arlosh, near the western coast, and Burgh on the Sands, near the Solway Firth, appear to have been very strong, and capable of affording protection to the inhabitants of the villages upon any sudden invasion. The tower of the church of Burgh on the Sands is strongly fortified, the walls on three sides being from six to seven feet thick. The tower of Great Salkeld church was also strongly fortified: at the entrance from the nave is a massy grated iron door, lined with oak; the chamber on the ground-floor is vaulted, like those of Newton-Arlosh and Burgh on the Sands. The Augustine monks had a priory at Carlisle, and another at Lanercost; the Benedictines had priories at St. Bees and Wetherall, both cells to the abbey of St. Mary at York, and nunneries at Armathwaite and Seton; the Cistercians had abbeys at Calder and Holme-Cultram; the Black friars had a convent in Carlisle; and the Grey friars had one in the same city, and another at Penrith. The churches of Greystock and Kirk-Oswald were collegiate. At Carlisle there was an hospital for thirteen lepers, dedicated to St. Nicholas, and at Wigton an hospital and free chapel, dedicated to St. Leonard.

A great trackway, probably of British construction, extended from the banks of the Eamont to Carlisle, nearly in the line of the present turnpike road; and the Maiden-way, from Kirby-Thore to Bewcastle, seems to have been another British road. The principal Roman way, called the larger road of Severus, may be traced very distinctly in the neighbouring county of Northumberland, but disappears at Foulton, near the borders: it soon after becomes visible at Willowford, in Cumberland, to the south of the works of Severus and Adrian. On approaching the Irthing, the road descends the steep bank to the river, and ascends on the other side; between High House and Walbours it is very conspicuous, but a little way beyond the latter, where the ground has been ploughed, it is completely lost for some miles; on approaching Watchcross, it is again discerned in the direction from Cambeck fort towards High Crosby, as if bearing for Stanwix, and soon afterwards finally disappears. A second Roman road, and one of the most considerable in the north, crosses the county from Westmorland to the Roman wall, in the line of a great British trackway, passing the Eamont on the spot traversed by the present turnpike road, and proceeding, in the same direction due north, to the stations at Plumpton-wall and Carlisle: it approaches the former within two hundred yards, being in that part at least twenty-two feet broad, passes the wall at Stanwix, and runs by the village of Blackford to Longtown on the Eske, where another large road branches off to the north-east, bearing evidently for the station at Netherby, and thence to a Roman post at the junction of the Eske and Liddell; after passing these rivers it may be traced to Castle-Over, which was originally a British, and afterwards a Roman, city. The principal road, having crossed the Eske at Longtown, runs through the centre of Solway moss, passes the Sark at Barrowslacks, and through the Procestrium of the Roman camp at Burrens, in its course to the northern vallum. A third road, called the Maidenway, may be traced among the moors on the eastern border of the county: it leaves the Roman road at Kirby-Thore, passes between Crossfell and Kirkland, crosses Blackburn, and, running within two miles west of Alston-Moor, enters Northumberland, bearing for Whitley castle, a well known station in that county, and thence to Carvorran: it passes the Roman wall at Deadwater, and, re-entering Cumberland, proceeds towards the station at Bewcastle, which it leaves a little to the left; then, under the name of the Wheel causeway, crossing the Kirksop, enters Scotland. No less than three Roman roads diverge in different directions from Ellenborough, the station above Maryport; one of these is very distinct two or three miles beyond Allonby, and again near Old Mawburgh, and, where last seen, evidently points for Bowness. A second military way from the same station has been traced with more certainty to the Roman town at Papcastle, near Cockermouth. The third crosses the road from Crosby to Cross-Cannonby, traverses Allerby, passes over Outerside common, through Baggray, Bolton pasture, and Shaking bridge, and by Red Dial to the station at Old Carlisle, which it leaves to the left, and, from the village beyond Thursby, proceeds in a direct line towards Carlisle cathedral. A Roman road, which connected the stations of Ambleside and Plumpton-wall, is visible at Kirkstone hill, and again at Gowbarrow-park-head, near Ulswater; it runs thence between two hills, called Mill-fells, to the camp at Whitbarrow, near the eighth milestone on the turnpike road from Keswick to Penrith, which was a station between the two Roman towns: it crosses this road in a direction from south-west to north-east, and was entire a few years ago upon Greystock low moor, till it was converted into a modern road leading to Greystock; then, after having made an inclination to the left, it continues in a straight line towards Blencow, and is still visible in a field two hundred yards north of Little Blencow, pointing at Couch-gate: leaving Kulbarrow to the south, it runs through Cow-close and over Whitrigg, becomes again visible at the edge of the road on Fair-bank, in Low-street, and through the enclosures, to the south gate of the station at Plumpton-wall. A Roman road came from the station at Brougham, through Stainton to Whitbarrow, which was a post of some consequence. Another of these roads passed in a direct line through the Town-head and Wood-end estates, in the parish of Egremont, the Cleator hall property, and close by the village of Cleator; the estate of Todholes, and part of that of Warth, in the parish of Cleator; across the parish of Arlochden, and the township of Frisington; the parish of Lamplugh, close by Lamplugh-Cross, and Street-gate, whence it approached Cockermouth in a straight line: this road is eighteen feet wide, and formed of cobbles and freestone.

The celebrated wall, constructed by the Roman legions, which crosses the northern part of this county, commences on the west side of a small stream, called Poltross-Burn, at the distance of about two miles from the station at Carvorran, in Northumberland, but is only seen occasionally as a green bank until it reaches the station at Burdoswald, a little to the west of which the face of the wall appears in some places to the height of about three feet and a half, consisting of five courses of hewn stone, one of which is nine inches thick, and the others eight. A great deal of the wall was laid open in 1807 and the following year, when Banks-Fell was enclosed, and the lower parts of several of the watch towers were discovered at Banks-head, but it was destroyed for the sake of the materials, except in a few places, where some of the lower courses of stone, serving as the foundations of some modern fences, have been preserved. At Hare Hill, half a mile north of Lanercost priory, a part of it remains, ten feet in height, and fifteen in length, but no further traces are to be seen above ground, till within about a mile of its termination on the Solway Firth, where a piece, several hundred yards in length, and about three feet high, is standing at Kirkland, with a hedge on it; the facing stones, however, have been removed. In following the course of the wall from Northumberland through this county, the station of Burdoswald, one of the most remarkable on the whole line, first occurs, its northern side being formed by the wall, so that the garrison could enter the country beyond by sallying out at its northern gate: the ditch, gates, and rampart, enclose a square of five or six acres, within which are the remains of several buildings: the turrets on each side of the south gate are still visible. Six miles and a quarter further on is Castlesteads, or Cambeck-fort, about four hundred yards south of the wall; the situation is convenient, owing to its proximity to the river, an advantage of which the Romans always availed themselves. Three miles west of this is Watchcross: the next station is at Stanwix, just opposite to Carlisle. Burgh on the Sands, about four miles and a half from Stanwix, was the Axelodunum of the Romans; urns, altars, and inscriptions of that people have been frequently found there. These stations were placed much closer together on the west than on the east side of the wall; most probably with the view of preventing the incursions of the Irish.

The castle of Carlisle, which stands at the north-west angle of the city, is of an irregular form; it was originally erected by William Rufus, but parts of it are of much more recent date, considerable additions and repairs having been made in the reigns of Richard III., Henry VIII., and Elizabeth. Egremont castle, which was built by William de Meschines, soon after the Conquest, is in a very dilapidated state, the gateway being the only part remaining. Cockermouth castle, the greater part of which is in ruins, does not appear to be older than the fourteenth century, though it has been referred to a much earlier period. The castle which stands within the site of the Roman station at Bewcastle is a plain square tower, apparently of great antiquity, but nothing certain is known of its founder, or the period of its foundation. Naworth castle, which is in a very perfect state, was erected in the reign of Edward III., when Ralph, Lord Dacre, obtained the king's license to castellate the mansion: it is chiefly in the style of the early part of the sixteenth century, and built round a court of irregular form. At the south-east angle stands a tower, evidently part of the original edifice; the upper story
